The editor has selected and annotated about one-sixth of the Russian writer's letters, and attempts "to avoid long chronological gaps between letters and to keep the proportion of letters in any given period in approximately the same ratio to the total selection that one would find in the whole correspondence." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"This selection of Gogol's letters . . . gives us a new primary source previously unavailable. Proffer has selected only those letters which are pertinent to [Gogol's] biography and his art. One accustomed to viewing Gogol as some mysterious essence will be disappointed: the letters reveal Gogol as a petty quarrelsome little man, but one who is essentially human. . . . As an artist, Gogol stands out primarily for his style. As a correspondent he is essentially bland. One is almost tempted to say boring. Proffer's translation is very precise and literal. However, the need for this kind of literalness seems questionable."

Choice 5:492 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by Clarence Brown

New Repub 158:38 Ap 20 '68 750w

"This scholarly one-volume edition . . . will be a disappointment to anyone but a dedicated student of the period. . . . A heavy religiosity as well as a morbid and pedantic tone prevail from the first letter to the last. . . . There is hardly any gossip worthy of the name, not a single love-letter and . . . very few jokes. . . . So we get all the familiar moans of the peripatetic 19th-century Russian literary man about the deplorable conditions in his native land, the impossibility of life abroad (except in Italy), the hardheartedness of publisher and censor, the shortcomings of his family and his own neurasthenia."

N Y Times Bk R p28 F 11 '68 240w

"[These letters] are of extraordinary interest. Through a fog of hysterical Christianity, anti-Semitism, and paranoia one sees an important writer in his various roles: explaining and defending his work, advising women about the education of their children, battling what he called the 'censor-Asians,' rebuking a friend with a Russian proverb, stalling off an editor."

New Yorker 44:176 Ap 27 '68 100w

"[This translation] contains a good selection of [Gogol's] best letters. They reveal clearly, as Professor Proffer remarks in his preface, 'how very much alike the Gogol of the 1820s and the Gogol of the 1840s were'. . . . The translation is faithful to the original, generally sensitive and readable . . . and the bibliography of works in English on Gogol . . . appears to be as the preface claims, the 'most comprehensive' of its kind. But in his annotating Professor Proffer has shown a tendency to lean over the reader's shoulder and breathe whimsical comments down his neck."

TLS p34 Ja 11 '68 1050w

GOHDES, CLARENCE, ed. Essays on American literature in honor of Jay B. Hubbell. 350p $8.50 Duke univ. press

810 American literature. Hubbell, Jay Broadus 67-25597

These essays are divided "into three categories: (1) those which reflect recent trends in 'American Studies' theory and research; (2) those which reflect the trend toward analytical criticism of single works of art; and (3) those which reflect Mr. Hubbell's own conviction that literary history is a chronicle of forms and movements in the literary expression of a time and place, in which the minor author is often as revealing as the major—or perhaps even more so." (Am Lit) Some of the "essays deal with Franklin, Irving, Poe, Mrs. Stowe, James, Tuckerman, Lafcadio Hearn, Kate Chopin, O. Henry, E. A. Robinson, Jack London, Vachel Lindsay W. C. Williams, Dashiell Hammett [and] Thornton Wilder." (TLS) Chronology of the life of J. B. Hubbell. Index.

"[This festschrift] is a miscellany, edited according to the highest standards of scholarship, of essays by other scholars in a broad field of interest but included only for their integrity and soundness. . . . It can be hoped that essays of such worth will find their way into subject bibliographies and indexes so that they will not be lost after they have served their primary purpose of offering tribute to the Dean of American Literature Scholarship."

R. E. Spiller

Am Lit 40:86 Mr '68 1150w

"An engaging book. . . . It is clear that Mr. Gohdes's first problem was to find room for all the scholars who wanted to pay their respects to the revered author of The South in American Literature [BRD 1955]. The result is that some of the essays are painfully cramped for space. Russell Nye's essay on Parkman, for instance, is so interesting, as far as it goes, that it might have been encouraged to go much farther. . . . Perhaps the most satisfactory piece in the book is Theodore Hornberger's account of Thomas Prince (1687-1758), the author of A Chronological History of New England (1735-1753)."

TLS p247 Mr 14 '68 190w

GOHDES, CLARENCE. Literature and theater of the states and regions of the U.S.A.; an historical bibliography. 276p $10 Duke univ. press

016.81 American literature—Bibliography. Theater—U.S.—Bibliography 66-30584

"Books or chapters from books, pamphlets, periodical articles, anthologies, and monographs dealing with the American literary cultural scene from the earliest times to 1964 are listed under the names of the 50 states, the dependencies, and principal regions. Each state or region has two separate sections—one on literature and one on theater—in which single items are arranged alphabetically by author, editor, or compiler. Excluded are listings of unpublished theses or dissertations as well as works dealing with individual authors. Only a limited number come from newspapers." (Library J)

"Mr. Gohdes modestly disclaims absolute accuracy in this compendium. . . . But errors are conspicuously absent. A major problem was the need to avoid duplication of listing. Some material is listed under Regionalism or even the Middle West which might with equal appropriateness have been included under the individual state headings. But the reader is warned about this editorial decision and is urged to consult various listings before abandoning his quest. . . . The work will be of inestimable importance to librarians hoping to build up their incomplete local and regional collections, and it will certainly stimulate interest in neglected fields and topics among researchers in literature and history." J. T. Flanagan

Am Lit 39:429 N '67 700w

"A useful preliminary checklist, by no means exhaustive for each locale, but a helpful supplement in Gohdes' earlier Bibliographical Guide to the Study of the Literature of the U.S.A. [BRD 1964]."

Choice 4:1364 F '68 110w

"This bibliography is an authoritative reference work, and, as such, is entitled to top billing in its field." L. A. Rachow

Library J 92:2145 Je 1 '67 150w

GOITEIN, S. D. A Mediterranean society; the Jewish communities of the Arab world as portrayed in the documents of the Cairo Geniza; v 1, Economic foundations [pub. under the auspices of the Near Eastern center, Univ. of Calif. Los Angeles]. 550p il $12.95 Univ. of Calif. press

915.6 Islamic countries. Jews in Islamic countries. Cairo Genizah 67-22430

This is the first of a projected "three-volume study of Mediterranean society during the High Middle Ages and is based primarily on the evidence of documents once stored in the Cairo Geniza. . . . Professor Goitein, who teaches Arabic at the University of Pennsylvania, . . . [describes] Jewish economic life, travel and communication, volume of trade, types of commodities, prices, trade organization, social status, and so on, under Islam." (Library J) Index of Geniza texts. General index.

"The [author] chooses to eschew the essentially interpretive role. . . . [He] is unwilling to use his own research as the basis for . . . sweeping generalizations about this period. . . . One can only admire [his] restraint. . . . As a purist, he has limited himself to the methodical, infinitely demanding quest for the memorabilia of daily life; for in that high assay lode he has correctly divined the authentic sap of history. . . . Two subsequent volumes in this project are scheduled, one dealing with 'The Community' of the non-Christian Mediterranean world, the other with 'The Individual and His Environment.'" H. M. Sachar Am Scholar 37:702 autumn '68 850w

"The concrete evidence of original documents, as against the generalities or obscurities of 'literature,' has heretofore not been available to any such extent, if at all, for the Muslim world. . . . The treasures of the Geniza made ready by Goitein for the use of historians will change medieval Islam studies." Franz Rosenthal
Ann Am Acad 378:189 J1 '68 550w
Choice 5:542 Je '68 250w

"Based on one of the richest archival sources available on medieval Islam. . . . The Geniza documents, most of which are written in the Arabic language and Hebrew script are of the most varied, including wills, deeds, contracts, accounts, bills of lading, inventories, letters, charms, children's exercise books, etc. They [were written between] . . . 950-1250. Skillfully used by Goitein, they throw a flood of light on the daily life of the medieval Jewish communities in Islamic lands. And since, as Goitein repeatedly stresses, the Jews lived in close proximity to and mingled freely with Muslims and Christian, . . . the picture he draws is also largely true for the wider world of Mediterranean Islam. . . . The book is replete with detailed information on business organization and practice." Charles Issawi
Commentary 45:88 My '68 1600w
Economist 228:36 Ag 10 '68 1400w

"Expanded to include the whole economic structure of the Mediterranean world, this book provides some startling insights into the open society of the 11th Century. There are appendixes on dates and nomenclature, coinage, weights and measures, partnerships, and exchange rates. No scholar who would wish to understand the attraction of the East for Crusaders and Pilgrims, and no economic historian of the Middle Ages, can afford to pass this book by. It is highly recommended for scholars, specialists, and informed readers." I. M. Berger
Library J 93:1135 Mr 15 '68 170w

GOLDBERG, MARIE WAIFE-. See Walfe-Goldberg, M.

GOLDEN, L. L. L. Only by public consent; American corporations search for favorable opinion. 386p $7.95 Hawthorn bks.

659.2 Public relations 67-27333
This analysis of the public relations practices of some American industries such as American Telephone and Telegraph Company [and] General Motors and Standard Oil of New Jersey, begins with "United States Steel and its confrontation with President Kennedy [in 1962]. . . . [The author,] public relations editor of Saturday Review, . . . [examines] not only the economic aspects, but the temper of the times and what each company did right and wrong in its public relations. . . . He concludes with an analysis of public relations, its use and misuse." (Library J)

"The author skims the surface of reality, accepting and using secondary published information instead of going behind the scenes, in fulfillment of the promise. This is no carefully researched social history. There is not even a bibliography. The book reads almost like a vanity volume, written to please a patron or maybe even a potential patron. . . . in any good book on this subject, motives of the men who control the corporation would need to be examined and laid bare and the interpersonal relations within the power structure evaluated. In this volume, trivia take the place of what should be in-depth treatment." E. L. Bernays

Ann Am Acad 378:207 J1 '68 490w
Choice 5:1008 O '68 180w

"A superb example of interpretative reporting. . . . Especially good are [the author's] brief biographies of the principals of each company, and his references to books published dealing with the firms. . . . This is truly an outstanding book. It belongs certainly in economic and journalism collections at the university level, and in public libraries." A. E. Brooks
Library J 92:4407 D 1 '67 130w

"For public relations men, Mr. Golden's is a guidebook on how companies deal with the press, with stockholders, and with the public, through use of corporate announcements, radio and TV programs, advertising, contributions to educational institutions, plant visitations, and so on. Since much is done in much the same way by each company, repetition is inevitable. The last chapter is a critique of public relations from the point of view of corporations on the one hand and reporters and editors on the other." J. A. Livingston
Sat R 51:80 Ja 13 '68 1150w

GOLDFARB, RONALD L., jt. auth. Crime and publicity. See Friendly, A.

GOLDHAGEN, ERICH, ed. Ethnic minorities in the Soviet Union; pub. for the Inst. of E. European Jewish studies of the Philip W. Lown School of Near Eastern and Judaic studies, Brandeis university. 351p $8.75 Praeger

301.451 Minorities. Russia--Race relations 67-20478

The eleven papers in this collection were originally presented at a symposium held in 1965. The authors "examine the economic, cultural, legal, and political aspects of the . . . policy of the Soviet Union toward its ethnic minorities and the . . . attempts of the latter to maintain their national consciousness. Covered are the Ukrainians, Belorussians, Armenians, Jews, and other Baltic, Central Asian, and Turkic peoples." (Choice)

"[The authors] come to the conclusion that, while all is not black and white, the Soviet Union has consistently pursued a policy of suppression of its ethnic minorities. . . . A book not without its implications for an adequate understanding of recent developments in Eastern Europe." V. S. Kearney
America 119:560 N 30 '68 100w

"Generally clearly written, but the heavy scholarly apparatus (tables, statistics, equations, multilingual footnotes) and the detailed, high level approach make this work primarily suitable for advanced students and scholars. No real integrative features, bibliography, or index. More current but less systematic and comprehensive than Walter Kolarz, Russia and Her Colonies [BRD 1953]."

Choice 5:1206 N '68 100w

"The essays vary greatly; not only in length (from 9 to 85 pages) but also in approach. . . . Unavoidably, there is some overlapping, though discussion of the topic from different angles is often illuminating. All of the essays are documented as fully as possible, and the authors attempt to clarify our Western concepts as far as they are applicable to such a different Eastern world. . . . [This] is recommended for specialists, and also has some reference value." H. H. Bernt
Library J 93:1155 Mr 15 '68 130w

GOLDING, WILLIAM. The pyramid. 183p $4.50 Harcourt
67-19198

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:482 Je '68 290w

Reviewed by Mary Hall
Christian Century 85:402 Mr 27 '68 1250w

Reviewed by John Thompson
Commentary 45:68 Ja '68 200w
Va Q R 44:cii summer '68 150w

Reviewed by Rachel Trickett
Yale R 57:444 Mr '68 800w

GOLDMAN, MARSHALL I., ed. Controlling pollution; the economics of a cleaner America. 175p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

333.9 Air—Pollution. Water—Pollution. Soil pollution 67-14340

This collection of writings "deals with economic aspects of water, air, and scenic pollution caused by the activities of producers and consumers, and the role of government in disputes over environmental quality." (Choice) Many of the chapters were first published as conference papers or appeared in such publications as The Saturday Review, The Current Digest of the Soviet Press (Columbia University) and Petroleum Today.

"The purpose of many of the articles appears to be that of motivating the reader to 'do something' about pollution. With the exception of Kneese's article [on water control in the Ruhr area] none of the papers was intended for publication in a scholarly journal. Consequently the book will probably be of little interest to the professional economist. Nevertheless, some of the papers provide interesting reading primarily because of the examples and observations on institutional matters, and because some of the many broad generalizations seem worthy of careful investigation." C. R. Platt

Am Econ R 58:629 Je '68 550w

"In compiling this collection of readings, Goldman has selected academics who have special ability to communicate good theory to unspecialized readers and popular writers who show unusual skill in generating enthusiasm for the topics. . . . The style is lively almost throughout. Strongly recommended for undergraduates studying these topics. Many graduate students, instructors, and researchers may find it a helpful stimulant to understanding and improving the numerous rigorous analyses available in professional journals."

Choice 4:1139 D '67 110w

"Especially interesting are the chapters on Pittsburgh, Lake Erie, and the Ohio River. The chapters are of varying quality and the book as a whole is repetitious, yet it is a good summary of the present state of the problem." Helen Jacob

Library J 92:3212 S 15 '67 110w [YA]

GOLDMAN, MERLE. Literary dissent in Communist China. 343p $7.95 Harvard Univ. press 323.44 China (People's Republic of China)—Intellectual life 67-17311

This study "analyzes the conflict between the Chinese Communist party and the intellectuals, particularly the writers, in the . . . 1940's and 1950's. [The author describes how] party leaders, through a series of thought-control campaigns, have tried to mold intellectuals along orthodox doctrinal lines. But these same leaders . . . have not wanted to stifle these qualities altogether. The result has been a pattern of permissiveness and pressure, as illustrated by the ill-fated 'Hundred Flowers' movement and the subsequent return to a policy of . . . regimentation. . . . [The author] is a member of the Harvard East Asian Research Center." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Tien-yi Li
Am Hist R 73:1598 Je '68 600w

Reviewed by R. W. Benjamin
Am Pol Sci R 62:588 Je '68 240w
Choice 5:350 My '68 300w

"[An] excellent book . . . [concerned with] the clash between the revolutionary writer and the party official. . . . According to [the author] China needs to cherish its small number of experts for their skill and creativity. At the same time the system demands a control by the Government and Party which would be impossible if intellectuals were given the freedom they ask for. Mrs Goldman's overall picture is of a struggle between an extreme and dogmatic party machine and creative individuals with liberal instincts." Martin Bernal

New Statesman 74:774 D 1 '67 1450w

"[A] superb and timely study of China's fighting, nonconforming revolutionary writers. With precision and insight [the author] has defined the inner-party differences over the position of intellectuals in a socialist state as they have developed since the 1920's. This is the most comprehensive and searching—and the most readable—of the recent books on the C.C.P.'s attempts at total ideological control. The unulating policy line of the party is meticulously documented. The reasons for the shifts, and their consequences in each phase, emerge clearly." M. C. Wright

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ja 28 '68 400w

"[This] exceptionally good book . . . [is] sensitive to the personal as well as the doctrinal aspects which inevitably come into a situation of conflict that involves its own type of heroism. . . . Mrs. Goldman portrays it very sympathetically, and at the same time with . . . admirable objectivity. . . . As one follows the record of these literary rebels, meticulously chronicled . . . one is inclined to respond sympathetically to [Mrs. Goldman's] conclusion . . . [that] 'writing a literary criticism is not a rebellious act, but in Communist China it can be an act of courage and fortitude'. . . . [Because the author considers] her writers ■ dissenters first and creators afterwards . . . one is given little idea of what her literary rebels have actually been defending in the concrete terms of poems and novels. But, given the volume and complexity of the debate about literature between 1940 and 1960, this limitation is almost inevitable." George Woodcock

Pacific Affairs 40:130 spring-summer '67 1800w

"It is absurd to assume, as does Mrs. Goldman in this study, that all the critics of Communist Party control were on the side of the angels simply because they did not like Chou Yang, the party's literary overlord until his overthrow last year. There is little to suggest that Hu Feng and Ting Ling, for example, enjoyed any great measure of popular support in their attempts to take over some of the bureaucratic structure for themselves and their friends. . . . [The author] if of course entitled to regard them as carrying the torch of freedom and human rights; it is a pity she has not made it clearer that not many people in China would see them that way. . . . [While this book] is obviously the product of some hard work, [with] . . . a deeper understanding the result would have been a lot more worthwhile."

TLS p1129 N 30 '67 600w

GOLDMAN, WILLIAM. No way to treat a lady. 182p $4.50 Harcourt 68-1279

Story set in Manhattan, about "a psychopathic strangler fond of assuming other personae . . . [and] of a lesser criminal who apes his methods, and of Detective Morris Brummell, 65th Precinct, who has to cope with the stranger, with love, and with . . . [a] Jewish Mother." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 28:34 Ap 15 '68 70w

"A perceptive and violent account of the days of a Manhattan strangler, and of the intelligent Jewish cop who is assigned to the case." M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1023 Mr 1 '68 40w

"Some people simply refuse to read paperback originals, and miss some excellent suspense novels thereby. . . . Rarely, an isolated non-series paperback reappears as a hard book, to be welcomed with loud acclaim when it's as good as [this one] published in 1964 by Gold Medal with the by-line of 'Harry Longbaugh'. . . . The reissue is apparently occasioned by the current Paramount film of the same name, starring Rod Steiger; but the novel more than deserves revival on its own merits. . . . Mr. Goldman has a fine ear for dialogue; his style is unbelievably economic, rich in adroitly-used narrative and typographical devices. In all, pretty dazzling." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 14 '68 250w

GOLDS, JENETTE. Catholics in college. See Trent, J. W.

GOLDSCHMIDT, WALTER. Sebei law. 303p 11 maps $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press 67-15561

340.09676 Law—Uganda
"An exposition of the customary law of . . . a small tribe in eastern Uganda. . . . The book begins with an explanation of the author's theoretical approach and a general introduction to the Sebei. It then . . . describes the three main areas of Sebei law: the Law of Affiliation (family law and succession); the Law of Violence (murder, witchcraft, personal injury, etc.); and the Law of Property (land, chattel, theft, contract, etc.)." (Choice) Glossary and index of native terms. Index.

"[This] volume merits high praise for its sensitive and stimulating interpretations. Gold-schmidt's account of the 'metaphysical infrastructure' of Sebei law and his commentary on the adjustment of pastoral institutions to a mixed economy are particularly rewarding. He presents a fascinating account of the relation between the collective unity of the clan and the individual character of private property . . . [and an] intriguing reconstruction of the first development of the symbols, rituals, and procedures of emergent territorial solidarity. Because of [his] sophisticated treatment of Sebei social relations, we are given more than an ethnography; we are given a constructive essay in the theory of solidarity." Leon Mayhew

Am J Soc 74:96 J1 '68 550w

'Goldschmidt (U.C.L.A.) draws exclusively on information obtained in 1954 and again in 1961-62 from research in the field. One of the particularly valuable features of this book is that it not only states abstract principles of law, but also recites actual cases and incidents to support and illustrate such principles. . . . It concludes with a highly interesting attempt to describe the metaphysical basis of Sebei law and to show how that law has adapted to changing conditions. . . . Of interest to anthropologists, Africanists, and students of jurisprudence."

Choice 4:1285 Ja '68 170w

GOLDSTEIN, ABRAHAM S. The insanity defense. 289p $6; pa $1.95 Yale univ. press

343.0973 Insanity. Law—U.S. Criminal law 67-24863

The author examines the extent to which "the mentally ill should be exonerated as not responsible for their crimes. . . . [He considers] the nature and the mind of man, responsibility and blame, free will and determinism, freedom and social obligation. . . . He ends his book with a cogent plea for retention of the distinction which the insanity defense marks out between the sick and the bad—for retention, that is, of the concepts of blame and responsibility in the criminal law, not so much on moral or philosophical grounds, but on utilitarian grounds." (Yale R)

"In the present book, an extremely able presentation supported by scholarly documentation and cases, [the author] advances a knowledgeable and thought-provoking evaluation of all aspects of the insanity defense. He maintains that . . . as a mechanism for preventive detention under existing procedures, [it] confronts the offender with the possibility of indefinite commitment to a mental hospital—an unattractive alternative to other possibilities the law allows. He also considers how the insanity defense at a trial affects the jury's verdict and the trial itself. . . . For law, university, and medical libraries." J. J. Marke

Library J 93:1495 Ap 1 '68 360w

"Goldstein, Professor of Law at the Yale Law School, presents a well-researched contribution to the scholarly literature on the insanity defense. However, perhaps because he is too intent on providing a balanced analysis, he fails to come to grips with the moral implications of psychiatric rhetoric, and the political implications of psychiatric methods of social control. This insufficiently critical stance leads him into some muddled thinking. . . . Although [he] is generally perceptive about the dilemmas that face law and psychiatry, when the problem he observes is too unpleasant, he prettifies it. The result is occasional gross inaccuracy. . . . [His] irresolute stand on the moral issues of this subject leads him to a confused and confusing conclusion." T. S. Szasz

Nat R 20:247 Mr 12 '68 800w

"The meat of the book is not its speculations on ultimate questions. Professor Goldstein writes an English prose which bridges, in language and in spirit, the legal and the academic cultures, but he is above all a legal scholar, and he is not to be engulfed. . . . His inspection of 'the gritty managerial detail' of the insanity defense is thorough and revealing, yet remarkably succinct and readable. . . . And he points to the related issues and processes which bulk larger in the law. . . . [Professor Goldstein's book] both blankets the field and reveals how small a field it is. But [it] is more than the definitive work on the insanity defense. It is also a deftly and sparely painted portrait of the modern criminal law, its procedures, problems, doctrines, and rationalizations."

Yale 57:XVI Mr '68 1250w

GOLDSTEIN, BERNARD R., ed. & tr. Ibn al-Muthannā's commentary on the astronomical tables of al-Khwārizmī. See Ibn al-Muthannā, A.

GOLDSTON, ROBERT. The Negro revolution. 247p il $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

909.174 Negroes—History 68-12088

A "picture of the whole of Negro history from ancient Africa to the present." (Library J)

Reviewed by G. M. Fredrickson

Book World p16 Ag 25 '68 320w [YA]

Reviewed by Marion Marx

Horn Bk 44:438 Ag '68 140w

"This [book] provides extensive explanation—and, therefore, depth, life, and passion—to commonly known but ignored facts. In so doing, moreover, the overall sweep of history is never sacrificed. Another of the book's strengths is that it takes a stand; it acknowledges and documents the brutality that Negroes have inherited in America. . . . Although younger readers would undoubtedly profit from the book, it is ideally suited to high school students because of the maturity of its vocabulary and discussions. This is primarily a readable synthesis of documented trends and patterns in Negro history, and, as such, it's a necessity, written with an excellence that denies any potentially prejudicial selectorial claims of holding enough material on that subject." S. E. O'Neal

Library J 93:2120 My 15 '68 210w

"As Goldston points out, [American racism] is compounded of 'feelings of fear, inadequacy, and self-hatred,' which are resolved by creating a mythic structure of 'derogatory beliefs' about others. In the instance, of course the 'others' were Negroes. But Goldston is no social psychologist, and [this book] is no tract. It is history that goes back to the beginnings of African slavery. . . . What Goldston is after is historical truth." Saunders Redding

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p5 My 5 '68 500w

"Although the title may indicate that this is a book about recent events in the black community, it is primarily a history of Negro protest. The background information about colonial policy and the slave trade is excellent: candid, analytical, and objective. Indeed, the book is impressive because of its combination of thoughtful probing and comprehensive treatment. Robert Goldston is the young people's Ashley Montagu, an explorer of myths and a revealer of motives. The bibliography, like the book itself, is for the serious reader." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 100w [YA]

GOLDSTON, ROBERT. Spain. 138p il maps $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

914.6 Spain 67-21248

The author of The Civil War in Spain (BRD 1967) presents "highlights of Spanish history [and] a . . . summary of recent political events, [and describes] outstanding contributions of Spaniards in art and literature, and the daily life in city and village." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The paradox of Spain is presented in proper perspective in this eminently readable history. . . . Students of current history will gain from [Mr. Goldston's] apt analysis of a country in transition an understanding of Spain's future role in the world, specifically in relation to the United States, the United Nations, and the Common Market of Europe." M. S. C.

Horn Bk 44:193 Ap '68 130w

"This excellent introduction to Spain and its people was prepared by an author who knows the country well. . . . Although there is less material than in the 'World and Its People' series book on Spain . . . the author's ability to characterize the people and to summarize the facts with clarity makes this book unusually good. . . . Grade seven and up." Charlotte Gallant

Library J 92:4622 D 15 '67 140w

GOLDTHWAITE, LUCY. All for one. See Schneiderman, R.

GOLLANCZ, VICTOR. Reminiscences of affection; with a foreword by Livia Gollancz. 287p il $7.50 Atheneum pubs.

B or 92

[68-87278]

The British publisher and author presents his observations and recollections as he describes his travels, friends, artifacts and family over a period of fifty years beginning with his courtship and marriage in 1917 and ending in 1967. "He was known throughout the English-speaking world for his boldness in issuing books against the common grain, and for his having established the Left Book Club in the 1930s." (Book World) Index.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 222:136 N '68 370w

"[The author] died in 1967 after a long and joyful life. His reminiscences have now been edited by his daughter Livia. . . . Over the years, Victor and his wife Ruth collected a variety of objects and artifacts, bits and pieces. These things—figurines, gouaches, a bird-in-the-box, ceramic animals, tondi—reminded the Gollanczes of their travels and of their friends, and they serve to give the book a kind of framework. . . . [The] accounts of journeys to Italy, particularly, show both an accurate observation and a relevant recollection." William Jovanovich

Book World p16 O 13 '68 500w

"The contributions to literary and musical criticism of the late Victor Gollancz are so often read that one feels, at once, that these 'bits and pieces' are a delightful revelation of people and places of the last war years. Always, this autobiography is an appreciation of Victor Gollancz's wife Ruth, who shared friends and places with him. . . . Libraries that have bought any of Mr. Gollancz's books will certainly add this one. If his works have not been considered before, this is the time to buy them all." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:3550 O 1 '68 110w

"The book is a work of pietas in the strictest sense—a labour of love and duty combined. . . . [but] it is not really a good thing to have issued, or one that will help the memory of V.G. . . . [In the bulk of the book,] eleven chapters written in 1966, . . . there is very little that is factual about either his political or his publishing experience. . . . Finally, there is a distressing Epilogue made up of the diary which he wrote, with great difficulty, and with his left hand, during the few months before his second stroke robbed him of all consciousness: of this I will only say that I found it painful reading and cannot accept the reasons (basically clinical), which the editor advances for its reproduction." Margaret Cole

New Statesman 75:272 Mr 1 '68 850w

Reviewed by F. Y. Blumenfeld
Newsweek 72:106B N 4 '68 650w
TLS p298 Mr 21 '68 500w

GOLLIN, GILLIAN LINDT. Moravians in two worlds; a study of changing communities. 302p $8.75 Columbia univ. press

284 Moravians, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania—History. Herrnhut, Germany—History 67-19653

"This book recounts the history of the two communities of the Moravian Brethren—Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and Herrnhut, Saxony—which were founded in the first half of the eighteenth century as communitarian settlements. . . . Adopting a sociological perspective, the author analyzes the differences in the rate and character of social change in these Old- and New-World settlements." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Gollin], a non-Moravian sociologist, has fruitfully brought the outlook and techniques of her discipline to bear on the extensive historical materials preserved by the Moravian Church in its Bethlehem archives. . . . [showing how] the interaction of similar religious ideals and institutions with different economic, social, and political conditions produced radically different results." T. E. Drake

Am Hist R 73:439 D '67 470w

Choice 5:88 Mr '68 250w

"Unfortunately, this study is marred by a great deal of confusion and a failure to accomplish the stated aims. It is difficult to understand why the author claims to have studied Herrnhut and Bethlehem from 1722 to 1850. In chapter after chapter [she] gives no consideration to events beyond the third quarter of the eighteenth century. When she occasionally ventures into the nineteenth century, her documentation is sparse, and her comments are mostly conjecture. . . . As a comparative study of two centers of the Moravian faith in the eighteenth century, this work has value. The author, unfortunately, has claimed to do more than her evidence supports and has tried to impose a pattern where none perhaps exists." G. E. Hartdagen

J Am Hist 54:630 D '67 600w

GOOD, PAUL. The American serfs. 188p $4.95 Putnam

339 Poverty. Southern States—Economic conditions
68-8320

This chronicle of poverty in the rural South shows what it is like to be desperately poor in the middle of an affluent society and investigates the forces that create and perpetuate that poverty. Bibliography.

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin
Best Sell 28:293 O 15 '68 360w

"Anybody who is interested in seeing the actual debilitating effects of being poor will benefit from [this book]. . . . Mr. Good talks with the people and records the dialogues in twenty-one chapters, whose titles themselves paint vivid pictures: 'The Graveyard on Dick Silver Hill,' 'Land Mismanaged to Catastrophe,' and 'Whatta Ya Mean: Get a Job?' The presentation is horrifying, but not maudlin. . . . Good forthrightly charges that the dominant factor influencing the Southern politician's aversion to fighting poverty is racism. . . . [He] does not offer specific remedies, but tries to make us too ashamed not to demand that Congress do something soon. . . . [His book] significantly adds to the recent literature on [this] topic and deserves to be read." Thomas Goldwasser

Sat R 51:47 N 16 '68 500w

GOODALL, JANE VAN LAWICK. See Lawick-Goodall, J. van

GOODE, RUTH, jt. auth. The magic of walking. See Sussman, A.

GOODMAN, JAY S. The Democrats and labor in Rhode Island, 1952-1962; changes in the old alliance. 154p $5 Brown univ. press

329.3 Labor unions. Democratic party. Rhode Island—Politics and government 67-26817

This revision of the author's doctoral dissertation is based on interviews with labor and political leaders. Their perceptions of "labor-party relationships are compared and analyzed. [Also discussed are] legislative recruitment, internal communication within a legislative party, the roles of legislative leaders and political executives in managing a legislative party, and the presence of cross-pressures on individual legislators associated with both the party and with labor." (Publisher's note)

"There are many difficulties with this effort. Perhaps the most important is the absence of a theoretical or operational definition of 'influence.' . . . The chapters presenting the interview data are rather disjointed affairs. . . . [Goodman] has the bothersome habit of presenting only raw figures in his tables and then using percentages in the text. . . . Despite all this, Goodman's book makes a substantial contribution to the study of state politics. He has some of the best material to be found on the relationship in a state legislature between the rank-and-file on the one hand and the party leadership (including the Governor) and interest groups on the other." V. M. Goetcheus

Am Pol Sci R 62:984 S '68 700w

"The subtitle indicates Goodman's belief that the coalition between organized labor and the Democratic party, which existed from 1932-56, will not be reestablished. He suggests that labor's future political activity will probably shift from party politics to community-oriented civic affairs. . . . A first-rate case study. . . . The documentation, in the form of notes, is thorough and up to date. Recommended reading for all serious students of politics and labor in contemporary America." Choice 5:263 Ap '68 190w

GOODMAN, JEROME D. The child mental status examination [by] Jerome D. Goodman [and] John A. Sours. 134p $4.95 Basic bks.

618.92 Child psychiatry. Mental tests
67-18208

The authors "review the literature and history of the child mental status examination, proceed to theory and practice, go on to a . . . procedure for securing the required data, and conclude with a protocol for a neurological play examination." (Choice) Index.

"Goodman and Sours (psychiatrists, Columbia) have attempted a formula for a mental status examination for children, a need long felt by practitioners. . . . But their stated goal of developing a flexible and objective international nosology, diagnostic method, and international classificatory system does not come off. What started out as an interesting venture deteriorates into cookbook directions for the child psychiatry trainee. The latter will undoubtedly find this systematized method for obtaining clinical data extremely helpful but he will have to be wary lest it stifle his virtuosity, personality, and experiential intuition." Choice 5:268 Ap '68 160w

"Excepting the section on how to conduct the interview, this monograph is too technical and medical for laymen. Recommended for medical and psychiatric libraries." Juliet Woodbury

Library J 92:1942 My 15 '67 130w

GOODMAN, PAUL. Hawkweed; poems. 185p $4.95; pa $1.95 Random house

811 67-22630

In his second volume of verse, written over a period of thirty years, the author "writes of love and war and sex, the urban scene, bureaucracy, the radiance of his small daughter, personal anguish, the natural and the beautiful, in a . . . variety of forms." (Publisher's note) Many of these poems have appeared in various literary periodicals. Index of first lines.

"[Goodman's] poetry is refreshing for what it is not. . . . In short, Goodman in middle age writes as one who has a public relation, a sturdy lover's quarrel, with society, governments and armies. Love, politics, social despair and hope are a package in his poetry. Sometimes he fails, particularly when the 'message' dominates the poem. . . . At other times, and frequently, there is a rugged and poetic fusion of the public and the private. . . . Hawkweed is a man and conscience speaking in verses less adroit than many can produce, but somehow larger than mere verse." Chad Walsh

Book World p6 D 24 '67 550w

"There are . . . haiku poems that lack the subtlety required by the form and a group, 'Sonnets' which I find bad simply because they are not molded in the tautness of the form. In the section, 'Making Love,' there are several poems . . . in which the theme of homosexuality is unashamedly avowed, but not with any Whitmanesque vitality or understanding. . . . Mr. Goodman, college professor, sociologist and psychologist, is obviously writing from a new morality based on his own experience and on his need to defy convention. While I feel that I understand the author's need for writing these poems, I am not certain why they were printed, since the loose forms are unable to carry the themes. At the risk of being called a 'weirdo,' I see no place for this book in any library." R. F. Cayton

Library J 92:2930 S 1 '67 250w

"The quality I find most refreshing in Goodman's poetry is his constant bearing down on the diamond-bright bedrock of experience, and his ability to transmit those rare invigorating moments of beauty of personal revelation. . . . Goodman's marginal poems are telling, often painful-to-read, footnotes to his public life. I'm constantly reminded of this, even as I chide at the evident scrappiness of so many of the poems." Laurence Liberman

Poetry 112:337 Ag '68 400w

"The poems themselves are likely to be most interesting to those who regard Goodman as a sympathetic seer and prophet. Indeed, he makes so much of the ideas of commitment and alienation, and their relevance to all the facts of life, that in the long run everything, whether purely private and personal or public and social, becomes of equal importance and therefore of equal insignificance. . . . The deliberate flatness of his language makes his poems the jottings of a social scientist." S. F. Morse

Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

GOODMAN, ROE, ed. Proceedings. See Conference on the mathematical theory of elementary particles, Dedham, Mass., 1965

GOODMAN, WALTER. The Committee; the extraordinary career of the House committee on un-American activities; foreword by Richard H. Rovere. 564p il $10 Farrar, Straus 351.7 U.S. Congress. House. Committee on Un-American Activities. Governmental investigations. Subversive activities 68-13010

From early investigations in the 1930s to Committee hearings in 1967, this book attempts objectively to describe "individual committee members and witnesses. The body of the book is composed of a chronological account of hearings and activities of the committee in context with their concurrent political and economic climates. Provided in the appendixes are chronologies of the committee chairmen and reports and hearings." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by F. K. Kelly
America 118:510 Ap 13 '68 750w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 221:135 Ap '68 320w

"In Walter Goodman the Committee has found a most admirable and spirited historian. . . . He regards the Committee as a disaster; but he does not make his book a crusade. One is particularly impressed by his understanding of the symbiotic relationship between the Committee and its witnesses. . . . [However], too often [Goodman] sacrifices pathos to comedy. He does not do full justice to the perfectly genuine wreckage which the Committee at various times made of the lives of people who had done no harm to anyone, or even to the perfectly genuine anguish it imported at times into the processes of American Government. One misses, too, a more systematic account of the deeper motives which produced and sustained the Committee in its dubious work. . . . In its own terms, however, The Committee is a first-rate historical study—exhaustive in research, cool in judgment, brilliantly perceptive and eminently readable. It is also a glorious piece of Americana." Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Book World p1 Mr 24 '68 1950w
Choice 5:1212 N '68 50w

Reviewed by M. A. Marty
Christian Century 85:622 My 8 '68 550w

Reviewed by Edwin Tetlow
Christian Science Monitor pB11 My 2 '68 900w

Reviewed by Robert Lekachman
Commentary 46:89 Jl '68 1400w

Reviewed by J. W. Carey
Commonweal 88:275 My 17 '68 1200w

"Mr. Goodman is a qualified, experienced journalist and editor. . . . [His comprehensive bibliography] includes many authors who have divergent opinions. This book is lucidly written and peppered with quips and original figures of speech. In the final chapter Mr. Goodman makes some opinionated predictions regarding the committee's future. Besides his commentaries, this book provides an up-to-date chronicle of almost every HUAC hearing since its inception in 1938. It is recommended for college and interested public libraries." Annette Hirsch

Library J 93:1002 Mr 1 '68 190w

Reviewed by W. A. Rusher
Nat R 20:862 Ag 27 '68 1750w

"[Goodman] appears to have succeeded not merely in rendering unnecessary any future history of the Committee but in convincing us, by his skill, patience and zest, that a history was necessary in the first place. Most of us were numbed by this institution a long time ago, and it is an extraordinary achievement of Goodman's to continually rouse us to a vivid sense of its life. . . . [His] chosen method is irony, the most workmanlike implement for a mind which moves through distaste for the executioner and detachment from the victim. . . . [His] sense of justice amounts to chivalry. . . . And yet there are problems. . . . [Goodman's] tone, I am afraid, is no longer adequate for our history. It can never be more than the refined expression of the very crude and philistine notion that the victim is usually guilty of something." Murray Kempton

New Repub 158:28 Ap 13 '68 3000w

Reviewed by Vern Countryman
N Y Rev of Books 11:16 D 5 '68 3900w

Reviewed by Telford Taylor
N Y Times Bk R p6 Jl 7 '68 1350w
New Yorker 44:146 Je 8 '68 230w

GOODMAN, WALTER—Continued

"[A] lively, sobering, definitive, hilarious and depressing study of America's peculiar institution. . . . Goodman will be damned by the entire right and some elements of the left for the plague he lays on both their houses; but he makes no secret of his own political position, which is staunchly liberal and libertarian. He brings to his unenviable task an insatiable taste for folly and a powerful analytic sense. . . . Goodman's central, thematic point is that the committee is no mere aberration in the body politic, but a mirror reflection of deep, established currents in American life and history." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:92 Mr 25 '68 950w

Reviewed by Herbert Mitgang
Sat R 51:35 Je 15 '68 700w

GOODRICH, LLOYD. Raphael Soyer; pub. for the Whitney mus. of Am. art. 77p il col il $6 Praeger

759.13 Soyer, Raphael

67-28775

"Raphael Soyer, whose twin brother, Moses, and younger brother, Isaac, are also artists, is a New Yorker who has been active on the American art scene for four decades. . . . The Whitney Museum recently held a full-scale retrospective exhibit of his work. . . . [This study by] the retiring director of the Whitney Museum was published in connection with that exhibition." (Library J) Bibliography.

"A sensitive reevaluation of the artist and his oeuvre. . . . Through his friendship and sensitivity [Goodrich] conveys the remarkable introspection which is surely Soyer's finest quality. The modest presentation . . . marks a welcome change from much contemporary art book bombast. Painting students will be greatly interested in Soyer's commitment to content and the human form as Goodrich traces the artist's life and painting from the early New York Depression scene to today's East Village milieu. Difficult to follow visually, though, as the paintings are not cited by number. The 65 illustrations of only fair quality, arranged chronologically, manage to convey the artist's personality in connection with the literate text. The lack of a representative selection of prints or mention of the equally famous brother Moses is a serious oversight."

Choice 5:335 My '68 170w

"The subjects of Soyer's paintings are women and New York's Lower East Side. He reflects in his work the changes on the Lower East Side, from the Bowery bums of the 1930's to the hippies of the 1960's. Mr. Goodrich reviews Soyer's career in a well-illustrated book that is recommended for public libraries and art collections." M. E. Landgren

Library J 93:1130 Mr 15 '68 150w

GOODWIN, DEREK. Pigeons and doves of the world; il. by Robert Gillmor. 446p $22.68 British information services

598 Pigeons

[68-95297]

"The book opens with a . . . study of the order Columbiformes—its plumage, feeding habits, social behavior, and so on. Mr. Goodwin describes each individual species physically in detail, and gives its feeding habits, nesting, calls, and distribution. The book contains line drawings and distribution maps of most species." (Library J)

"Goodwin's book is the first to summarize knowledge of the world's wild pigeons and doves. It will become the standard reference in its field. . . . The weakest point is the sketches which are highly diagrammatic. Several important references, especially from the American literature, have been missed, and there is a tendency to generalize observational detail from a few species to all pigeons. American readers will find the style terribly 'British' and at times wordy. Includes indices of English and scientific names."

Choice 5:750 S '68 180w

"Approaching the order as a whole permits Mr. Goodwin to make some interesting observations on specie development. . . . [He] consulted with the American Museum of Natural History in writing this book. It is highly technical, but nonetheless quite usable for the interested layman." Walter Harding

Library J 93:2679 Jl '68 140w

GOODWIN, MICHAEL. Pocket dictionary of collector's terms: il. by C. Dampier Freeman [Eng title: The Country life pocket dictionary of collector's terms]. 317p $6 Philosophical lib.

745 Art objects—Dictionaries

68-31927

This book "is divided by subject: pottery and porcelain, glass, silver and metals, bijouterie, furniture, and carpets, with an added list of craftsmen and manufacturers." (Library J) Bibliography.

"A great number of terms having to do with collecting are included, as well as American usages, many of them illustrated with line drawings. However, the definitions are short, usually two or three lines, often only one and rarely four or five; and the small drawings give only a vague impression of the object. This combination can result in misleading information. The book is not recommended for general library purchase." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:1612 Ap 15 '68 100w

"A portable book. . . . Drawings substitute admirably for wordy descriptions." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:62 My 18 '68 30w

GOPAL, RAM. Linguistic affairs of India. 270p $5.25 Asia pub.

913.34 Indic languages. India—Civilization. India—Intellectual life

This examination of multilingualism begins with a "survey of Indian languages and dialects and underlines the influence of Persian and, more recently, English on them. The part played by Sanskrit in the growth of modern Indian languages and of its value as an integrative force is [described]. . . . The author tries to find a lingua franca which would stand the test of acceptability by way of script and other factors. . . . He deals with the hurdles that Hindi, as a national language, has had to face in recent times. . . . He draws lessons from the experience of Switzerland, Canada and the U.S.S.R., . . . and offers suggestions for the linguistic integration of the nation." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Among the many problems which independent India has faced none is more complex than that of its multilingualism. . . . The problem is compounded by fierce local, ethnic, tribal, and caste loyalties and sentiments. . . . Ram Gopal is a well-known historian, biographer, and publicist. He has tried to discuss the issue of Indian multilingualism with calm objectivity. A reader conversant with linguistics will spot weaknesses in some of his reasonings. His book is more satisfactory as an essay in political science." Joseph Bram

Librarv J 92:2158 Je 1 '67 190w

"Using the comparative method [the author attempts to offer guidance to his own country]. . . . [However] the parallels are not really helpful. . . . It has been easy for the Russian language to become the common link between diverse regions and cultures for two reasons. First, Russian is the mother tongue of a ruling race; . . . and secondly, the Russian language has a living tradition, going back for many centuries. . . . By comparison Hindi has an uphill fight; relatively it is a local dialect. In its literary form it is a deliberate creation; and its vocabulary still requires artificial enlargement from Sanskrit. . . . Hindi has many competitors and bitter rivals, firmly entrenched. Mr Ram Gopal pleads for strong action, but does not gloss over the difficulties."

TLS p153 F 15 '68 300w

GORAN, MORRIS. The story of Fritz Haber. 212p il $4.95 Univ. of Okla. press

B or 92 Haber, Fritz. Chemistry—History

67-24615

An account of the life of the German physical chemist. "Haber will be remembered for two things: the synthesis of ammonia from nitrogen, an achievement which brought him the Nobel Prize in 1918; and the . . . part he played in the Germans' use of gas during World War I." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Beer

Am Hist R 73:1555 Je '68 500w

"An exasperating book. Goran has diligently interviewed many people, and presumably read hundreds of articles. . . . He recounts the significant facts about Haber's life and accomplishments, and even manages to give some insights into [his] complex personality. . . . But sloppy carelessness with words and ideas ruins whatever enjoyment the reader might otherwise have had. . . . A good biography of [Haber] is needed. This is not it."

Choice 5:364 My '68 200w

"Mr. Goran has written an objective, readable and informative biography, and one that is sympathetic to Haber. The comprehensive bibliography of Haber's publications provides an additional measure of his stature as a scientist. The book is recommended for college and large public libraries." R. J. Greene

Library J 92:4404 D 1 '67 170w

"Haber is an enigma, and reading this book makes him more of one. . . . One has the impression that Haber looked at the problem of Germany's winning the war in the same way as he looked at any other technical problem. There is little sign that Haber had any political or ethical sophistication when it came to the question of the role of scientists in war. . . . The book assumes no technical knowledge, yet reports on numerous scientists whose names have meaning mainly to fellow scientists. The author has found much detailed information about every phase and facet of Haber's life and achievements. Haber's life and frustrations and successes leave numerous unanswered questions. It is a disturbing book, easily read but not quickly forgotten." O. T. Benfey

Science 159:868 F 23 '68 550w

GORDENKER, LEON. The UN secretary-general and the maintenance of peace. 380p $8.50 Columbia Univ. press

341.13 United Nations—Officials and employees. Arbitration, International. Peace 67-15254

The author "traces the emergence of concepts of the office of the United Nations Secretary-General over the past twenty years as a result of the personal qualities and initiative of its three quite different occupants. . . . From his analysis of the techniques employed by the three Secretaries-General in maintaining or restoring peace in the major crises in which the United Nations has been involved, the author puts forward conclusions regarding the limitations of the office in matters of peace and security now and in the future." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by D. G. Bishop

Ann Am Acad 378:147 J1 '68 500w

"Gordenker has provided an excellent and extensive study of . . . the involvement in crises of Trygve Lie, Dag Hammarskjöld, and U Thant. . . . Discussed in detail are the idea of the office and the routine representational activities and political and general administrative functions of the Secretary-General. The book combines the advantages of specific works on peacekeeping, such as [A.] Burns and [N.] Heathcote's Peace-keeping by U.N. Forces [BRD 1964], and studies of the man and the office, such as [S.] Schwebel's older, more generalized The Secretary-General of the United Nations [BRD 1952]. Process orientation enhances its value, as does Gordenker's excellent scholarship. No bibliography but well footnoted, chiefly from U.N. documents."

Choice 4:1316 Ja '68 150w

"Professor Gordenker, of Princeton, has made a complete, thorough and detailed study of the office that satisfies stringent scholarly requirements. His style is clear enough, but lacking verve and exceptional quality. The book is suited to the collections of universities and larger colleges, and is a necessary purchase for comprehensive international studies curricula." W. E. Osgood

Library J 92:2788 Ag '67 110w

GORDON, CYRUS H. Forgotten scripts: how they were deciphered and their impact on contemporary culture. 175p il $6.95 Basic bks.

411 Cuneiform inscriptions. Hieroglyphics. Cryptography 68-22853

After explaining "methods of cryptanalysis and how they are applied to the decipherment of ancient writings. . . . [the author discusses] the unraveling of the ancient languages in turn—Egyptian, Old Persian, Sumerian-Akkadian, Hittite, Ugaritic, and Eteocretan." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book includes] Gordon's defense of his own highly controversial theory about the deciphering of . . . Minoan Linear A which he claims was used to write a West Semitic language. However, about the only people who accept this hypothesis are his own students and former students, of which the reviewer is not one. Nevertheless, in spite of the apologia pro sua vita, the book has value, since it not only gives a lucid and readable account of the decipherment of the majority of the Ancient Near Eastern Languages, but it also presents Cyprus Gordon's latest summary, in his own words, of his hypothetical identification."

A. R. Schulman

Library J 93:4558 D 1 '68 200w

"Generous acknowledgement of the contributions of others and a gift for literate explication are abundantly present in this book. . . . [The author] is too modest describing his own work. . . . [He] writes with pointed economy, and his book is a model of craftsmanship, containing superbly reproduced photographs along with excellent illustrations of ancient writing."

Alexander Coleman

N Y Times Bk R p20 S 22 '68 200w

"This tight, engaging, surprisingly personal book describes the software brilliance that in the eastern Mediterranean enriches the work of the spade. . . . [The author] tells us just how he deciphered Minoan, as one late, intimate link in a chain of even greater successes. . . . [This] Minoan (Linear A) chapter is a candid and engaging piece of autobiography."

Sci Am 219:162 N '68 650w

GORDON, DONALD. The golden oyster. 222p $4.95 Morrow

68-18584

"During World War II, RAF pilot Peter Grey and his flight observer, Ken Richards, spotted a torpedoed ship sinking with six million pounds worth of war booty off the coast of Libya. Twenty-five years later, they decide to go after the treasure but soon find that the Mafia, an ex-Gestapo lieutenant, and a mysterious Italian girl are giving them kill-or-be-killed competition." (Library J)

"[This novel] like the author's earlier Star-Raker [BRD 1962] is all tension and treachery. . . . Credible details, oceanographic and aeronautical, sustain incredible drama, which moves from radar tracking at sea level to underwater search in a deep-sea capsule and finally to escape aboard the seemingly doomed aircraft plane. Villains in the shape of frogmen, Mafia members, and ex-Gestapo officers are always in frenetic pursuit." Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:448 Ag '68 170w

"This thoroughly charming, but unrealistic novel has all the elements of a first-rate adventure. . . . The average adventure reader has the vicarious pleasure of diving, flying, fights nearing death, and romance. I loved every minute of it." Marilyn Gresser

Library J 93:2020 My 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:13336 S 15 '68 110w [YA]

"This slam-bang account of a Mediterranean treasure hunt is based on the true wartime jet-tisoning of a Nazi gold horde." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:34 J1 27 '68 30w

GORDON, GEORGE N. On-the-spot reporting: radio records history [by] George N. Gordon and Irving A. Falk; foreword by A. A. Schechter. 191p pl $3.95; lib bdg $3.64 Messner

334.54 Radio broadcasting—Juvenile literature. Reporters and reporting—Juvenile literature 67-21629

The authors discuss the growth of radio broadcasting, "its increasing impact on America's daily life, and its importance in times of war, national and international crises, and political struggles. . . . [In the concluding chapter] station WDAF, Kansas City, Missouri, is presented as a typical radio station of today. WDAF's activities are described, showing its staff coverage of tornado alerts, farm news, and general city-wide events. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"Interesting not only as history, this volume also serves as an introduction to a possible career in radio broadcasting."

Best Sell 27:392 Ja 1 '68 90w

"A thoroughly engrossing account of the history of radio and how it has helped record history. The book is enriched by extensive quotations from actual broadcasts and with comments from pioneers in this field, men such as Edward R. Murrow, Eric Sevareid, Robert Trout, Gabriel Heatter, Ted Husing, and others. . . . This book will be useful and popular supplemental reading for American history classes." J. N. Nerney

GORDON, G. N.—Continued

Library J 92:3864 O 15 '67 110w

"It's difficult to see this reminiscence of radio-news and special-events reporting appealing to anyone but those who worked in the field during the twenties, thirties and forties. It lacks clarity and anecdotal material necessary for young readers and is too superficial for most adults. More important, it suffers from the aura of press agency that is the curse of so much that broadcasters say about themselves."

N Y Times Bk R p28 F 4 '68 60w

GORDON, IAN A. The movement of English prose; foreword by Randolph Quirk. 182p $5.75 Ind. univ. press

828 English literature—History and criticism. English language—History 67-24520

"A consideration of the historical development of English prose as a means of expression [from Anglo-Saxon times to the twentieth century]. Though other aspects are given due weight, the emphasis throughout is on the structure of the English sentence. . . . [The author examines] the movement of prose within the utterance, the sentence, the paragraph, the major prose unit. . . . [and] the movement of English prose through time." (p. 10) Bibliography. Index.

"A superbly written and highly informative text complete with discussions. . . . [The author] insists on the primacy of the spoken language. . . . The text has historical overtones, of necessity, but its emphasis is upon prose as it relates to the history of ideas. Throughout the work, each change, shift, nuance of variation has been carefully explored, elucidated, and demonstrated. Solid scholarship with the added advantage of being highly enjoyable."

Choice 5:952 O '68 260w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
New Statesman 72:908 D 16 '66 330w

"A good brief orthodox study. It stresses the continuity . . . of such matters as stress and lexicon from as far back as King Alfred to as far forward as Churchill, but one finds the inevitable historical phases—Humanist Latinity, the Bible, the Baroque, Speech-Based Prose. Dealing with the prose of the modern novel, Mr. Gordon rightly adds a new system—the interior monologue, with its range of non-syntactic devices—to the four traditional instruments (dialogue, narrative, description, commentary)."

TLS p553 Je 23 '66 200w

GORDON, ROBERT AARON, ed. Toward a manpower policy; one of a series of books from the Res. program on unemployment, Inst. of Ind. relations, Univ. of Calif., Berkeley. 372p $8.95 Wiley

331.1 Unemployed. Labor and laboring classes—U.S. Industrial relations 67-19448

"A review and evaluation of manpower policy in the United States—its present status and directions for its future development. The papers have been contributed by authorities . . . in the academic government, trade union, and business worlds. Recommendations are made for the kinds of government and private action needed in the manpower field to reduce unemployment further. . . . The book considers, among other subjects, how manpower policy is related to . . . other economic goals, including full employment . . . price stability . . . rapid economic growth . . . and a more equitable distribution of income." (Publisher's note)

"In addition to an introduction by Professor Gordon, the book contains ten papers, the text of a Task Force report to the Secretary of Labor on the U.S. Employment Service, and comment by 18 discussants. . . . As with any symposium, the papers are somewhat uneven, and in some instances are overshadowed in terms of interest and challenge by the remarks of the commentators. . . . As a nation, [the U.S. is] groping toward a more comprehensive and 'active' manpower policy, which, as Lester C. Thurow shows in an excellent paper, potentially can lend support to the attainment of a variety of goals, such as economic growth, price stability, and the elimination of Negro-white income differences. In an essentially developmental phase of policy formation, a symposium such as this performs an extremely useful function, if only by raising many of the questions that need to be considered in policy decisions."

H. M. Douty

Am Econ R 58:300 Mr '68 900w

"Each year's conference [of a four-year program of study] resulted in a publication: Ross' Unemployment and the American Economy; Ross' Employment Policy and the Labor Market [BRD 1965]; Gordon's Prosperity and Unemployment; and the text under review. . . . This book is a valuable supplement to standard texts in the area of labor economics and personnel administration. It is recommended that the series to date be purchased."

Choice 5:528 Je '68 200w

GORDON, WILLIAM A. The mind and art of Henry Miller. 232p $5 La. state univ. press

813 Miller, Henry 67-12215

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by F. J. Hoffman

Am Lit 39:580 Ja '68 850w

Choice 5:48 Mr '68 190w

TLS p922 Ag 29 '68 850w

GORER, GEOFFREY. The danger of equality, and other essays. 265p $6.50 Weybright & Talley

301 Sociology. Culture 68-14096

This volume is based on articles and lectures written and published over the past fifteen years. Some of the material has been revised for this book. Topics covered are: Human societies; Phases of human life; Questions of sex; and Books and writers.

"Engagingly written. . . . Usually [the essays] deal with matters some distance removed from the well trod paths of contemporary anthropology, including subjects like national character, rock and roll in the welfare state, and the Kinsey report. A few are extremely thought provoking (i.e. the one that examines how power and other values are distributed in society and another on the uses of pornography) and are more relevant to today's society than many things undergraduates are likely to encounter."

Choice 5:1376 D '68 110w

"Mr. Gorer's incisive and penetrating observations on American and British life and culture regularly appear in a wide variety of the more serious publications. . . . [These] pieces range widely over topics of current interest and concern. [He] identifies two underlying themes: human social behavior is susceptible to systematic analysis; and comparative data of social anthropology are useful to the understanding of contemporary social problems. Mr. Gorer exhibits good humor and wit, and he writes with style. His book is recommended for scholars, specialists, and general readers." Harold Lancour

Library J 93:1494 Ap 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Brigid Brophy
New Statesman 72:831 D 2 '66 2050w

"[The subject of] class distinction . . . is one on which ratiocination is urgently necessary. . . . [but] even here Mr. Gorer's terminology tends to equate the psychoanalytic with the anthropological at precisely those points at which a rigid distinction is most needed, such as the guilt felt by the British governing classes. His views are readable and at times stimulating, but few people will be encouraged to find it stated on the first page that more than half these essays were written in response to specific invitations and that but for these he would probably never have considered paying careful attention to the topics in question. If the remainder of the book does not give a clear idea of just what would have qualified, it does continually leave the impression that its themes are too important to be dealt with in essays."

TLS p1203 D 29 '66 1000w

GOREY, EDWARD. The gilded bat. unp il $3
Simon & Schuster

808.7

66-22413

This satire "records the career of Mirella Splavtova, née Maudie Splaytoes, 'the reigning ballerina of the age.'" (Atlantic)

"The age, to judge by Mr. Gorey's sentimentally sinister, mordantly funny drawings, is 1900 to 1928, and the fashions of the period are skewered as mercilessly as the legend of Russian ballet." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 218:164 N '66 50w

"Everything comes to a point in Gorey, as though his figures were trying to pull themselves into a single line. . . . His work gives off an emanation of horror, a suggestion of the unnatural, a whiff of rot. This is not to be taken seriously, of course, but the frisson is supposed to be there, just under the laugh. . . . Gorey's characters, even more than his style and tone (although the characters are reflections of both), are responsible for the sense of déjà vu each new book brings. . . . The Bat, ostensibly about a ballerina (toe shoes being the logical extension of the Gorey pointed feet), is really about wings. We first see Maudie looking at a dead bird; her debut is in Bain d'Oiseaux. . . . Le Chauve-Souris Dorée is created for her; she is killed when a bird flies into the propeller of the plane she is in; her costume—the bat wings—are suspended as a tribute on the last page of the book. There is a tiny joke about classical ballet buried in all this, but it is hardly worth digging up." Gerald Weales

New Repub 155:32 N 26 '66 470w

"[This] undoubtedly will be sold as a children's book to the doting aunts and godfathers who presumably account for most children's book sales. These dotards will have difficulty in explaining the Lesbian joke drawn on page 8 to little Mary, or to her at-first-appreciative Mum once Mum starts reading the book aloud." Nathan Silver

New Statesman 74:597 N 3 '67 150w

GORKY, ARSHILE. Arshile Gorky; text by Julien Levy. 235p il col il $25 Abrams 759.13

66-18827

"This book features [about] 200 illustrations of Gorky's work (40 in color). . . . [Levy's introductory essay] outlines the significant aspects of Gorky's work and life." (Choice)

"Although this book cannot take the place of Harold Rosenberg's searching critical study of Gorky's work [Arshile Gorky, BRD 1962] or of Ethel K. Schwabacher's sensitive biography [Arshile Gorky, BRD 1958], it makes a useful supplement to them. . . . The reproductions are good in quality and the selection is well balanced, showing his early as well as his mature work and his drawings as well as his paintings."

Choice 5:616 J1 '68 100w

"Mr. Levy has presented an appreciative essay on Gorky's work and has interwoven documentary information on his life. The real worth of the book lies in the large and splendid illustrations. . . . [The] book is beautifully designed and . . . is highly and generally recommended for art collections where it will appeal to both the specialist in the field and the informed layman." W. J. Dane

Library J 93:2642 J1 '68 190w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway
Nation 207:663 D 16 '68 10w

"The present book, a homage to the artist by . . . Gorky's former dealer, . . . does attempt to establish—rather poetically and, sometimes, very effectively—the character of the artist and his work without recourse to art-historical imperatives. In the pursuit of this aim, Mr. Levy uses quotations from unusual sources—from Chekhov, for example, and from Shakespeare, I. A. Richards and James Joyce. . . . In the book, one can follow the course of [Gorky's] work, perfecting its influences, up to the superb authority and independence of the last paintings." J. R. Mellow

N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 31 '68 700w

GORKY, MAXIM. Chaliapin. See Chaliapin, F. I.

GORKY, MAXIM. Untimely thoughts; essays on revolution, culture and the Bolsheviks, 1917-1918; tr. from the Russian with an introd. and notes by Herman Ermolaev. 302p $6.95 Eriksson

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921
68-14973

These essays by Gorky were originally published from May, 1917 to July, 1918 "in the Petrograd newspaper, Novaya Zhizn (New Life), of which he was the editor. . . . Never before published in the United States, nor indeed in Russia since 1918, there are in all seventy-seven items, nearly all feature pieces. Not all are concerned with revolution; many deal with such related subjects as the Russian national character, the legacy of the Tsarist regime, World War I, and anti-Semitism. There are fifty-seven articles entitled 'Untimely Thoughts,' others have various titles, and two have none. A short story, 'A Nightmare,' is included." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Oleg Ivsky

Library J 93:2242 Je 1 '68 210w

"[This] appears to be an excellent translation by a distinguished Russian scholar at Princeton. . . . One reads 'Untimely Thoughts' now for . . . the instant picture of the Revolution, the astonishing collection of faits divers collected by a novelist who was always a vigorous journalist. He responds instantly to the news and talk and tales of the day. . . . There are terrible stories of murder, and bitter stories of the looting of art treasures and melodramatic tales of informers confessing. These last are not Gorky at his best. . . . But the virtue of these fragments is [that] . . . the sense of Russia as a character in itself moves in on the private character and gives it a startling significance." V. S. Pritchett

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 31 '68 900w

"The collection is something far better than just another anti-Bolshevik witness because of Gorky's simple, concrete, and honest prose." New Yorker 44:92 J1 13 '68 100w

"Gorky's articles against the war are classics of pacifist propaganda. . . . The reader will not fail to discern in these articles and essays what was constantly on the author's mind: his hatred of the old régime and his resultant allegiance to the Revolution; his disgust with the savagery of the Russian masses and with the behavior of his whilom Bolshevik friends who, once in the possession of power, began to apply the traditional despotic methods against all dissenters; and, most important, his deep conviction of the necessity to disseminate culture among the uneducated and semi-educated. . . . Professor Herman Ermolaev's introduction is an excellent survey of Gorky's political enthusiasms and vacillations." Max Nomad

Sat H 51:24 Mr 30 '68 1600w

GOROVITZ, SAMUEL, ed. Freedom and order in the university; ed. with an introd. by Samuel Gorovitz; essays by Paul Goodman [and others]. 218p $5.75; pa $2.95 Western Reserve univ. press 378.1 Colleges and universities. Academic freedom. Students—U.S.

66-28145

This report of a symposium in November 1965 at Western Reserve University concerns "the conflict between the desire for individual freedom and the need for social order, with particular emphasis on problems arising out of this conflict within the university. The introduction contains preliminary remarks about the issues and the essays and offers concrete suggestions about the implementation of freedom in universities. [The] contributors have had first-hand experience with the crisis at Berkeley. . . . Each of these [papers] receives comment from the other writers." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"At last, here are competent symposiasts—Paul Goodman, Walter P. Metzger, Sanford H. Kadish, John R. Searle, and Mortimer R. Kadish—to provide us with an exciting discussion of the arguments and proposals for the liberation of what Gorovitz, in his excellent introduction, calls 'the liberating university.' The book contains the dispute between those who advocate the greatest liberty (Paul Goodman's 'anarchy') and those who advocate greater liberty. . . . In spite of Mortimer Kadish's genuinely critical paper, the book's major weakness is that the symposium failed to provide a 'devils' advocate,' and so the speakers sometimes appear to attack straw men or windmills. Still, out of the variety of answers given, one can recognize the grave problems to which these scholars have addressed themselves. . . . The variety of valuable insights into each problem . . . leads the reader to realize that no simple solutions are forthcoming." D. H. Weiss

GOROVITZ, SAMUEL—Continued

J Higher Ed 39:178 Mr '68 600w

"In these discussions there is general distrust of the in loco parentis doctrine and a tendency to liberalize. . . . The contributors differ more widely over whether or not a university should seek to effect social change at the expense of teaching and research, one speaker recommending that student activism be channelled into community welfare work. Professor W. P. Metzger gives an illuminating comparison of the harmonious Lehrfreiheit and Lernfreiheit (freedom to teach and freedom to learn) of the 19th-Century German universities with the development of higher education in the United States. . . . Because the layman will find it difficult to thread his way through the intricate consensus and disagreements of the participants, these discussions are better adapted for professional reading." H. C. Whitford
Library J 92:3635 O 15 '67 280w

GOTTFRIED, MARTIN. A theater divided; the postwar American stage. 330p $7.50 Little 792.0973 Theater—U.S.

67-28225

The author, drama critic for Women's Wear Daily, believes that "the American theater, since the Second World War, has been split by two natural forces. These forces . . . have become so polarized that they have ceased to work as countervailing powers. . . . Of these forces, or wings, the left is liberal, moving toward change and involved with the new; the right is conservative, moving toward tradition and involved with the old. Because of the separation, neither wing is relating to the other except in extraordinary circumstances, and the result is a stultification of stage development." (p.3) Index.

Reviewed by J. M. Clum
Am Lit 40:269 My '68 250w

"[A] meticulous analysis of and a discerning comment upon the postwar American stage. . . . Mr. Gottfried presents a mass of information skillfully and clearly albeit somewhat subjectively. This work prickles with provocative ideas with which the reader may or may not agree, but unquestionably he will be stimulated to think. . . . The content is sometimes disturbing but the author's delightful way with words and his informal, personal, somewhat arrogant style of writing weaves a colorful thread of entertainment through his most profound remarks." Sister M. Gregory
Best Sell 27:435 F 15 '68 470w

"The first third of this study . . . is a theoretic analysis that is compromised by glib, arbitrary, and inexact writing. When he addresses himself to the specific problems of resident theaters, Broadway, comedy and playwrights, Gottfried offers some genuine insights. Much in this work may interest advanced students, but it is not recommended for any but the most inclusive theater collection."

Choice 5:516 Je '68 70w

"Too much of [this book] is devoted to stuffing specific plays and productions and personnel into one of the two pigeonholes. But [Mr. Gottfried] does have a point. . . . [However,] minor errors of fact aside. . . . he does the development of resident regional theaters and of theater as a whole a serious disservice by . . . his misinterpretation of the whole phenomenon he names, with capital letters, American Subsidy. . . . He badly underestimates the seriousness of deficits in resident theaters and badly overestimates the unanimity and malevolence of the agencies that have Subsidy to disperse. . . . The whole book shows evidence of haste in writing. Mr. Gottfried's style is incendiary. . . . But because the diatribes are directed against all sides, he achieves a curious kind of balance, and eventually a curious kind of indecision." Sandra Schmidt
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 14 '68 950w

"Many of the new theater groups, because of their repertory, fall into Mr. Gottfried's right wing of theater and some Broadway offerings fall into the left. I feel that Mr. Gottfried occasionally overargues his point, but his book will interest theatergoers and will provide readers with some understanding of the problems facing the American stage today." Paul Myers

Library J 92:4431 D 1 '67 150w

Reviewed by Alberta Hankenson
Library J 93:1824 Ap 15 '68 100w [YA]

GOTTLIEB, POLLY ROSE. The nine lives of Billy Rose. 290p Il $5.95 Crown

B or 92 Rose, Billy

68-19200

A biography of the late theater and night club figure written by his sister.

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson
Best Sell 27:478 Mr 15 '68 500w

"Too much of Mrs. Gottlieb's book is a brief for her side of the legal argument [concerning Rose's estate] in which she attempts to disparage the executors of the estate and others in Billy's life of whom she does not approve. She gives too much attention, too, to Rose's marital mishaps and to petty domestic details. She catches some of the color of a glamorous life in the theater, in night clubs, and in the world of entertainment, but on the whole she does not adequately catch all of the interest in the life of this busy showman." Paul Myers

Library J 93:542 F 1 '68 160w

"[Mrs. Gottlieb] obviously planned to write a hero-worshipping sort of book, but the unpleasant facts seep through her sentences, despite herself. Her version of Billy Rose not only shows him to be as depraved as [Earl] Conrad's [Manhattan Primitive, BRD 1968], but it becomes a more sordid study in moral squalor. . . . Gossip, dealing as it does with the intimacies of the private life of a celebrity, is essential to the biographer. . . . But globs of erotic anecdotes, irrelevantly splashed on the canvas with no attempt to relate them significantly to the character and his history, do strike me as having less to do with writing biography and more to do with writing pornography." Maurice Zolotow

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 17 '68 600w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman
Newsweek 71:78B F 5 '68 350w

Reviewed by Robert Hector
Sat R 51:59 Mr 23 '68 290w

GOTTMANN, JEAN, ed. Metropolis on the move; geographers look at urban sprawl; ed. by Jean Gottmann and Robert A. Harper. 203p maps $6.50; pa $3.45 Wiley

301.3 Cities and towns. Metropolitan areas 66-27895

Based on a conference held in 1964 at Southern Illinois University, this collection of papers concerns the functions of metropolitan communities. Gottmann "introduces the topic by outlining the history and problems. Four . . . urban geographers then present papers on the forces of urban sprawl, emphasizing fringe areas beyond city limits. The third section focuses attention on the economics of sprawl on the functioning city, while Part Four discussed the role of the skyscraper in cities as an alternative to sprawl. Finally, Part Five suggests how planning and education are necessary for the future." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The two editors have carefully focused attention on five vital functions of our metropolitan communities. . . . The text contains no maps or charts which would help orient the student new to urban geography. However, the dynamic writing will prove valuable to both the geography student and social scientist."

Choice 4:875 O '67 140w

"While written by geographers, [this book] contains much that will prove interesting to economists, sociologists, and political scientists. Teachers and students of the social studies will find it helpful as a guide to a better understanding of urban problems."

Social Studies 59:190 Ap '68 100w

GOUDGE, ELIZABETH. A book of peace. 311p $6.95 Coward-McCann

821.08 English poetry—Collections 68-17570

"The selections, most of which are poetry . . . are arranged under such headings as 'Peaceful Creatures,' 'The Peace of God,' and 'Wisdom of the Men of Peace.' The majority of the great poets are represented, but passages from the writings of Martin Luther King, Gandhi, Schweitzer, and others are also included." (Sat R) Index of authors. Index of first lines.

"[This] is a pleasant book, beautifully produced. . . . Inspirational and meditative, it should make an appreciated gift or bedside book."

Best Sell 28:16 Ap 1 '68 170w

"The quotations are from the 'establishment' not from the 'resistance' of the day. Reference and circulation departments will find this a book to add to their shelves, for here are the choicest significant words about peace from Alexander Carmichael to Dylan Thomas. Miss Goudge has chosen, for the most part, British authors and they are arranged with a fine sense of order and selected with the same kind of imagination and taste that she has shown in her Book of Comfort [BRD 1965] and Book of Prayer. . . . For large and small libraries." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:2472 Je 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 120w [YA]

GOULD, BEATRICE BLACKMAR, jt. auth.
American story. See Gould, B.

GOULD, BRUCE. American story; memories and reflections of Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould. 330p il $6.95 Harper
B or 92 66-21707

These memoirs go back to the authors' early years and marriage and their journalistic careers which culminated in a joint editorship of The Ladies Home Journal. The account carries through to their retirement from that magazine in 1962.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:570 N 30 '68 70w

"The joy of a happy though sometimes tempestuous marriage and working partnership pervades the book. . . . Occasional lapses into sentimentality are offset by their zest for living and Mr. Gould's sense of humor. Their book will provide leisurely reading for women, publishers, and Americans, middle-aged or older." Polly Anderson

Library J 93:2479 Je 15 '68 200w

"The meat of this story is [the Gould's] resuscitation of the dying Journal to the largest-paid-circulation magazine of their time. . . . The rest of their sociable and civilized tale, full of encounters with the fashionable and the famous, should provide escape for those old enough to be often chilled by the present and longing for the kind of world the Goulds lived in and made for themselves. Yet it has a curious irrelevance." Marya Mannes

N Y Times Bk R p6 Jl 14 '68 1000w

GOULD, JOHN. Birds of Australia; il. by John Gould; text by Abram Rutgers. 2v in 1 321p $15 Barnes & Noble

598 Birds—Pictures, illustrations, etc. Birds —Australia [67-5858]

This work consists of a selection of one-hundred-sixty color plates from the six-hundred plates which appeared in the original seven volume edition, published 1840-1848.

"This is only a fraction of the birds occurring in Australia. Rutgers' accompanying text is written for the amateur. The plates are well reproduced, but on rather poor quality paper, especially since two plates are printed on one sheet (front and back). There is one major publishing error in the review copy. The text concerning owls is repeated as the text for several different birds later (page numbers remain the same). Most worthwhile, as Gould was . . . a famous ornithological artist whose works are greatly sought after. Recommended for any college library where the budget is not too restricted."

Choice 4:1133 D '67 130w

"Two volumes from Gould's Birds of Europe [BRD 1967] were issued in 1966 and reviewed here . . . when the reviewer had cause to complain of the indifferent standard of reproduction of the plates. It is a pleasure to note a great improvement in this respect in [these volumes]. . . . The reproductions, more especially those in Volume I, can be described as almost very good except that there is a tendency for them to be slightly paler than in the original, possibly because of the reduction in size. . . . Cataloguers will take grave exception to the plates being un-numbered; to include them in the pagination of the text is a method which, in a more important work, would cause endless confusion. Mr. Abram Rutgers has prepared the text to accompany the plates with care. It is no easy matter selecting what to include in what amounts to little more than a glorified caption of 200 words or so."

TLS p990 O 19 '67 230w

GOULDEN, JOSEPH C. Monopoly. 350p $6.95 Putnam

338.8 American Telephone and Telegraph Company 68-15507

"This is the story of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company . . . how its primacy was achieved and is perpetuated and the things it is able to do because of its dominant position in the American economy." (p.9) Bibliography.

"This book, through the description of flagrant violations of the rights and interest of the telephone-using public, raises the issue of the adequacy of regulatory agencies in curbing the voracious appetite for profit of the monopolies at the expense of the general public. This problem of public regulation is especially significant when the company to be regulated is AT&T, a super-government in itself." A. J. Giunta

Best Sell 28:166 Jl 15 '68 650w

"It takes courage to tee off against a giant like AT&T but there has to be merit behind the 'exposé'. The errors in this book begin on page 1. . . . The basic trouble here is that a reporter, unsupported by financial and economic acumen, has seen fit to apply arbitrary—and often unjust and erroneous conclusions to the operations and past performance of one of America's best-managed and operated corporations. Moreover any importance the book might have held forth to researchers interested in its contents has been minimized by lack of an index." Paul Sarnoff

Library J 93:2858 Ag '68 290w

GOURHAN, ANDRÉ LEROI. See Lerol-Gourhan, A.

GOVER, ROBERT. J C saves. 191p $4.50 Trident press

68-26707

This sequel to One Hundred Dollar Misunderstanding (BRD 1962) and Here Goes Kitten (BRD 1964) "continues the misadventures of James Cartwright Holland and Kitten. JC has become public relations officer of Hook County and an informal superintendent of race riots. Kitten, renamed Odessa, is still prospecting for customers from the Paradise Hotel. The story is told in alternate chapters by the two protagonists, contrasting JC's views on race riots and Negro life with Kitten's scathing—and . . . colloquial—comments on his ignorance." (Library J)

"The satire, while broad, remains convincing until the last third of the book when Mr. Gover contrives a conversion by LSD for JC. [The author's] best book since One Hundred Dollar Misunderstanding. [this] is recommended for adult fiction collections in public libraries and for college libraries." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:2897 Ag '68 120w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:286 S 23 '68 260w

"All right, so America isn't perfect. But what has it done to deserve the author of 'One Hundred Dollar Misunderstanding' as a social reformer? After continuing the further adventures of Kitten, the black call girl and her honky customer, Mr. Gover concludes in a grave epilogue that 'after we complete the destruction of what America has been, there will be hope for us to become a society of human beings.' Goodness, you may as well expect to find a sermon under the pillow of Fanny Hill. . . . Kitten still talks like Uncle Remus, saying 'feets' and 'bathroom,' and J. C. is still trying to be hip. This time up, he takes LSD, blows his entire mind—and, from his cell in the asylum, plans to rebuild the U.S.A. With this kind of inspirational material, Mr. Gover could become the new Burt L. Standish. How about 'Kitten in Vietnam'? Or 'Kitten Meets Lady Chatterley's Lover'? Standish wrote at least 200 Frank Merriwell novels, so let's get those feets moving." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p31 Ag 25 '68 250w

Reviewed by T. G. Plate

Newsweek 72:84 Ag 26 '68 300w

GOWER, L. C. B. Independent Africa; the challenge to the legal profession. (Harvard univ. Law school. The Oliver Wendell Holmes lectures, 1966) 154p $3.95 Harvard univ. press

340.096 Lawyers. Law—Africa 67-20877

This "somewhat expanded version of the Holmes Lectures . . . [is an] exposition of the tasks facing lawyers and the law in English speaking Africa. The author first analyzes the basic legacies (common law, rule of law, indirect rule, etc.) which England bequeathed to her former colonies, then examines what has happened to these legacies since independence, and finally indicates what must be done to develop Africa's legal systems." (Choice) Index.

"An extremely readable and lucid exposition of the tasks facing lawyers and the law in the developing nations of English-speaking Africa. The generalizations and impressions of Professor Gower, . . . a law commissioner in Ghana, and on numerous occasions an advisor on African legal education, ought not to be dismissed lightly. . . . [He] contends that 'without strong legal professions these countries have little hope of solving their pressing problems or, indeed, of long-term survival as true democracies.' Although some Africanists might dispute this proposition, the author makes a strong case to support it. . . . This book offers an excellent short introduction to some of the basic problems of African law and should be of value not only to students of Africa but to African lawyers themselves." J. W. Salacuse

Ann Am Acad 375:229 Ja '68 650w

"[The author] is extremely frank and does not hesitate to point out the deficiencies of Africa's legal heritage and the failure of the new governments to reform it. An excellent short introduction to the basic legal problems of Africa."

Choice 5:263 Ap '68 140w

GRAEF, HILDA. God and myself; the spirituality of John Henry Newman. 206p $5.95 Hawthorn bks.

248.2 Newman, John Henry, Cardinal 67-24651

A study of "the central figure of the 'Oxford Movement' of the 19th Century, [who was] a dominant thinker first in the Church of England and later in the Catholic Church." (Library J)

"Concentrating on the inner life of the man for whom God and himself were the 'two only absolute and luminously self-evident beings,' Miss Graef traces the maturation of this theme from youthful fundamentalism and rigorism through Anglicanism to a Catholicism so far in advance of his time as to merit Rome's suspicion. . . . The importance of its subject coupled with Miss Graef's sensitive treatment make this book worth considering for public and academic libraries." J. K. Amrhein

Library J 93:83 Ja 1 '68 130w

"The book [Miss Graef] has produced is lively and readable and she has drawn not only on the familiar things. In particular she is to be thanked for reprinting in an appendix a piece on the Lives of the Saints, a marvellous ten pages of unflagging quintessential Newman."

TLS p672 Je 27 '68 380w

GRAF, LEROY P., ed. The papers of Andrew Johnson. See Johnson, A.

GRAHAM, AELRED. Conversations: Christian and Buddhist: encounters in Japan, by Dom Aelred Graham. 206p $4.95 Harcourt

261.2 Christianity and other religions. Buddha and Buddhism 68-24390

"In Zen Catholicism [BRD 1963], Dom Aelred Graham suggested that the Christian religion, particularly Catholicism, could be enriched by insights borrowed from the Eastern religions. Pursuing this idea, in the fall of 1967 he embarked on a journey that took him to the centers of the various Eastern religions . . . to investigate, firsthand, the ideas that lie at the heart of these religions. This book, the first fruit of that journey, consists of thirteen discussions held with representatives of the Buddhist faith in Japan." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"The [book is] disappointing. A verbatim transcription of a tape-recorded conversation is never good reading, but when the input consists of undifferentiated Christian and Buddhist sectarian opinion, and a good deal of name-dropping and what smacks of religious oneupmanship, then the total effect is confusion for the uninitiated and annoyance for the person seeking new and reliable insights. Father Aelred would have been better advised to save up his tapes until he got home and then edit them into something organized and really informative." D. J. Pearce

Library J 93:3790 O 15 '68 150w

"Of the 13 conversations two of the most illuminating take place with Westerners: one with Gary Snyder, an early American Zen student and one of the so-called founders of the hippie movement, now a resident of Tokyo; the other with a British psychologist, Dr. William H. Collins . . . [who] believed that the founder of Buddhism . . . was, in truth, a skilled 'physician' in the field of 'spiritual illness' whose curative methods have a special pertinence to-day. . . . It would not be fair to suggest that there are answers of a definitive nature in this timely book, nor is the material . . . of equal distinction and interest. . . . [though] later pages are filled with penetrating insights. . . . Throughout [the encounters] Dom Aelred maintains an admirable clerical cool. . . . There is never any fear that he is about to dart in with a clinching pro-Catholic point of view." N. W. Ross

N Y Times Bk R p44 N 3 '68 900w

GRAHAM, GERALD S. A concise history of Canada. (Studio bk) 192p 11 maps $7.50 Viking

971 Canada—History 68-16446

A Canadian-born professor of history "discusses the origins of the population, the country's geography and the harnessing of natural resources, the development of the machinery of government, and the emergence of an independent sovereign state with a voice in world affairs." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1358 D '68 250w

"Mr. Graham provides a more than adequate survey, in brief compass, of the salient political, economic, social, and cultural factors which have governed the historical development of the 'Dominion of the North.' Add to this a generous selection of well-chosen illustrations and you have a book which is recommended as one that should have great appeal to the general reader." L. S. Fallis

Library J 93:2488 Je 15 '68 170w

"Graham has produced a most admirable work of haute vulgarisation, working wonders within the limits of 30,000 words. . . . [He] does not think that geography is all and does not accept any version of the Turner frontier theory as explaining the existence of this country. . . . [He] deals admirably with the strength and weakness of New France. He admires the heroism of the Jesuits and seems to prefer Monseigneur de Montmorency-Laval to Parkman's hero, Frontenac. He sees the church as the institution that saved 'la nation canadienne', the parish priest as more important than the seigneur. . . . Professor Graham does not like Mackenzie King and it may be surmised that he thinks that Canadians (and others) took too seriously the international role of Mr. Lester Pearson. . . . Professor Graham ends on an optimistic note that he attributes to his own temperament, but it may well be justified."

TLS p479 My 9 '68 480w

GRAHAM, GERALD S. Great Britain in the Indian Ocean: a study of maritime enterprise, 1810-1850. 479p maps $12 Oxford

950 Indian Ocean. Great Britain—History. Naval 68-73217

This historical survey "ranges across the immense spaces of the area, from . . . Portuguese Africa to the . . . shores of Northern Australia. [The central theme] is the policing activities of the Royal Navy, hunting down pirates and slavers." (Choice)

"[This] work adds substantially to the scanty maritime literature of the Indian Ocean. . . . Graham brings scrupulous and comprehensive scholarship but not dullness to this big book. [He] gives us a wealth of information which makes the book interesting to read but difficult to digest. Undergraduate libraries will certainly want it."

Choice 5:542 Je '68 140w

"The major weakness of the book [is] its episodic quality, which I should say the author is frank to admit. The Indian Ocean is, after all, a series of regions inhabited by different peoples with different cultures. It lacks intrinsic unity. Nor does it seem to me that the operations of the Royal Navy in the first half of the nineteenth century were sufficiently strong or coherent to bind the region together. . . . Nonetheless, the book is highly useful and suggestive; it is a major contribution to the maritime literature of a vast area of which we still know too little." J. C. Perry
Pacific Affairs 41:467 fall '68 420w

"[This] is an uncommonly distinguished book, as magnificent in sweep and as artfully put together as it is felicitous in style and grounded in fresh research. . . . Without [his] fine feeling for climate and the ability to define distances, Professor Graham would not have succeeded so well in recreating the experience of officers and seamen in their debilitating and often fatal round of police work. He has few illusions about them. . . . It is a triumph of courage and skill to have compressed so much miscellaneous and often obscure activity, so many landscapes and personalities, into . . . closely linked sections. . . . The reward is a splendid synthesis which is unlikely to be replaced for years to come, full of wisdom, humour and vitality."
TLS p1141 O 10 '68 1100w

GRAHAM, HUGH DAVIS. Crisis in print; desegregation and the press in Tennessee. 338p pl $7.50 Vanderbilt univ. press

323.44 Negroes—Tennessee. Segregation. Journalism—Political aspects 67-21654

"I have traced the response of Tennessee's editors—and correspondingly, if somewhat cursorily, the response of her politicians and voters—to the desegregation crisis. The essential moderation of that response . . . [may be attributed to] Tennessee's pluralistic press . . . [which] fostered a civic environment better equipped to promote that give and take of ideas so essential to successful adjustment to social change." (p.307, 316) Bibliography. Index.

"[A] solid, sound piece of scholarship. [The author's] balanced and perceptive analysis draws a grid both enlightening and unsettling. Graham set himself a difficult task, the first such study in depth, but came equipped with credentials both practical and academic: a resident of Tennessee, Yale graduate, and reporter for the Nashville Tennessean. . . . [His] lucid style, concern for evidence (charts, graphs, and readable footnoting), and [his] cool tone disprove the proposition that scholarship must equal tedium."

Choice 5:183 Ap '68 150w

Christian Century 84:1527 N 28 '67 80w

"Through an examination of 150 newspapers, with emphasis on the major dailies, the author seeks to answer the question: 'How did the Tennessee press respond editorially to the initial decade of desegregation?' The result is a well-written and carefully researched book of interest to both historians of journalism and students of recent American race relations. . . . Graham concludes that 'the state's press . . . was centrally instrumental in guaranteeing that Tennessee, unlike Mississippi, would remain an open society.'" R. M. Dalfiume
J Am Hist 55:183 Je '68 550w

GRAHAM, LOREN R. The Soviet academy of sciences and the communist party, 1927-1932. (Columbia univ. Russian inst. Study) 255p $6.50 Princeton univ. press

506 Academy of sciences of the U.S.S.R. Communist party (Russia) 67-12346

This is "an examination of the Academy in the years of the first five-year plan. . . . The word 'science' in these pages includes the social sciences or humanities as well as the natural sciences and mathematics. Nevertheless, the greatest emphasis has been placed on the Soviet attitudes toward the natural sciences." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Bul Atomic Sci 24:39 My '68 40w

"Graham's lucidly argued, meticulously documented, and, on the whole, prudently conceived study gives an excellent summary of Russia's prerevolutionary scientific achievements and academic traditions, of the Communist party's views on science and its place in a socialist society, and Lenin's and Stalin's efforts to 'Bolshevize' the stubbornly resisting ivory tower of traditional Russian scholarship.

Several organizational charts; roster of the Academy's membership in 1932; most useful bibliography. . . . Recommended for courses on Soviet politics and the history of science."

Choice 5:252 Ap '68 190w

"[The] assistant professor at the Russian Institute, Columbia University, has written an interesting, informative, detailed and scholarly presentation indeed. . . . Recommended for specialists and informed readers." A. H. Pogany

Library J 93:1896 My 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by David Joravsky

Science 161:676 Ag 16 '68 1650w

"[This] book, though it contains a useful introduction by way of historical retrospect, is mainly concerned with the take-over of the Academy by the Soviet regime. The story . . . is told here for the first time in English. Mr. Graham, though unable to obtain direct access to party or academy archives in Moscow, was allowed to read an unpublished thesis based on them. Thanks to this, his work is both original and authoritative. It is also well balanced and well written."

TLS p843 Ag 8 '68 1700w

GRAHAM, PATRICIA ALBJERG. Progressive education: from Arcady to Academe; a history of the Progressive education association, 1919-1955. 193p $5.75 Teachers college press

370.973 Education—Experimental methods. Progressive Education Association 67-26480

This study traces the origins, purpose and decline of an organization founded in 1919 to alter the philosophy and pedagogy on which the American public school system was based. Index.

Reviewed by Louis Filler

Am Hist R 73:1671 Je '68 470w

"An extensive and thoroughly documented piece of historical research. . . . All facets of the Association's history are examined: financial difficulties, membership drives, publications and commissions, internal ideological conflicts, and consequent struggles by various leading members to shape and determine the direction of its influence upon American education. [Graham attempts] to establish the relationship of the Association to the progressive movement, and to define the struggle between the creative individualist wing of the Association with the social reconstructionist wing. . . . Numerous footnotes, several appendices, and an exhaustive bibliographic essay of references. Highly recommended for undergraduate students in education and history."

Choice 5:240 Ap '68 200w

"[Mrs. Graham tells the story] clearly and succinctly. The work is thoroughly researched and carefully documented. . . . The emphasis on narrative detail, however, is at the expense of analytical insight—characteristic perhaps of a doctoral dissertation, which this study was originally. Mrs. Graham stresses what might be called the 'let-freedom ring' side of progressive education; the emphasis is on child-centeredness, freedom, and creativity. This aspect of progressive education is already well known. She neglects the progressive's equal if not more intense concern with group activity and social adjustment." Sol Cohen
J Am Hist 55:173 Je '68 500w

Reviewed by G. M. Reagan

Social Studies 59:277 N '68 300w

GRAHAM, PETER, comp. The new wave; critical landmarks. 184p il $4.95 Doubleday

791.43 Moving pictures—Production and direction 68-23753

A collection of film criticism by French directors and critics who are part of a movement devoted to the experimental approach in movie-making. Contributors include Francois Truffaut, Alexandre Astruc, Gérard Gozlan, Claude Chabrol, J.-L. Godard, and Robert Benayoun. Most of the material in this book previously appeared in the film journals Cahiers du Cinéma and Positif. Bibliography.

"Attractive in format, and interesting.

[This collection] gives the origins and aestheticism of the new approach to film making which began just ten years ago. The contributions of the late André Bazin, greatest of French film critics, give distinction to the book." G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:4162 N 1 '68 90w

"Graham's anthology of the standard classics of the new French criticism . . . serves its function by bringing together some important pieces and making them accessible to those with no French or no time to seek them out in the original. Unexciting, perhaps, but useful after all."

GRAHAM, PETER—Continued

TLS p1082 S 26 '68 80w

GRAHAM, WINSTON. Night journey. 237p $4.95 Doubleday

68-10677

"A spy story set in 1940. An Austrian scientist [Robert Mencken], who has escaped from Hitler's invasion and settled in Britain with his sister, is asked by the British intelligence service to undertake a mission in Italy. The Italian naval representative is in the pay of the British and Dr. Mencken, the Austrian, is to act as his scientific advisor at a conference with German poison gas experts." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:446 F 15 '68 100w

"There are many obstacles—some violent, some mildly romantic—before the mission is completed successfully. Winston Graham is an experienced writer with a sure touch. This particular story has its own almost old-world charm and atmosphere—witness the concluding section which takes place on a train speeding through northern Italy into neutral Switzerland, the train journey which used to be so common a feature in this kind of novel. This book is perhaps not one for the spy-fiction reader who demands the latest in exotic gimmicks or soul-searching realism, but one for those searching for a straightforward adventure story." Norman Horrocks

Library J 92:4523 D 15 '67 240w

"Graham has polished an early and forgotten novel . . . and I'm glad he did. Fair warning; this isn't the subtle and complex novel of character that Graham is capable of in the 1960's, but simply a straightforward spy story of World War II, quietly understated and effective. Graham has rarely touched on espionage, but he has the gifts for it; this occasionally, especially in the titular journey on the Milan-Basle express, suggests early Hitchcock or Reed." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ja 28 '68 70w

TLS p1157 D 8 '66 30w

GRAM, MOLTKE S., ed. & tr. Kant: disputed questions; ed. with an introd. and new tr. by Moltke S. Gram. 313p $8.95; pa $2.65 Quadrangle bks.

142 Kant, Immanuel—Critique of pure reason 67-12355

This collection of previously published "papers by American, British and German philosophers has been brought together with a critical commentary by Mr. Gram in an attempt to shed light on three problems in Kant's philosophy: . . . the success of the argument in the Transcendental Deduction; the relationship between traditional metaphysics and Kant's critical idealism; and the distinction between synthetic and analytic judgments. The contributors are Lewis White Beck, Ernst Cassirer, Heinz Heimsoeth, Arthur O. Lovejoy, H. J. Paton, and Hans Vaihinger. The editor has translated from the German three essays that have not previously appeared in English." (Library J) Index.

"The editor's introduction to each disputed question (for some reason not listed in the table of contents) is a lucid summary of the debate and a contribution to it as well. . . . This volume is not an introduction to Kant but to Kant scholarship; it is for very advanced undergraduates only."

Choice 5:1141 N '68 160w

"A valuable introduction to recent Kantian scholarship beginning with Vaihinger's 1902 argument that the Critique of Pure Reason is a patchwork of discrepancies in a fundamental respect and continuing with Paton's rejection of the patchwork thesis. This fine contribution to Kantian studies should be in all philosophy collections of any consequence." A. D. Osborn

Library J 92:1835 My 1 '67 150w

GRAMET, CHARLES. Highways across waterways; ferries, bridges and tunnels. 160p il $4.50 Abelard-Schuman

624 Bridges—Juvenile literature. Tunnels—Juvenile literature 66-10565

This book is about "bridges over the water and tunnels beneath it. . . . Beginning with ferries, the author goes on to discuss stone and steel bridges and explains how the modern suspension bridge is built. Pictures of many famous bridges in the world are shown. There is also a chapter explaining how engineers have learned bridge failures." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

Reviewed by Francis Carmody

Best Sell 27:361 D 1 '67 80w

"This smoothly written book relates how man has fought to overcome the water barriers which impeded his movement. . . . Pertinent illustrations are profusely and effectively used to make the unfamiliar understandable. More appropriate for younger readers than [G.] Talese's excellent The Bridge [BRD 1965]." Oscar Wright

Library J 93:869 F 15 '68 120w

GRAMET, CHARLES. Your health and you; il. with drawings by Rey Abruzzi and with photographs. 192p $4.95; lib bdg $4.59 Lothrop

613 Physiology—Juvenile literature. Hygiene—Juvenile literature 67-18034

"Anatomy, physiology, diet, growth, sexual maturity, mental health, environmental health, preventive medicine, accidents, smoking, drugs, and alcohol are all covered or mentioned here. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"The language and style are suited for the young reader, but there is some doubt about the volume's interest value or worth as a textbook or simple book of information. [It] seems to be a simple compendium of anatomical information which follows in the ranks of countless others used in the schools."

Best Sell 28:112 Je 1 '68 90w

"In many instances the treatment of the topics is too vague, too rosy, too simplistic, and the discussion tends to ramble; e.g., when discussing food, the author interrupts himself for a few paragraphs on dental care. The latter is an important subject but it does not belong in the middle of a chapter on how food is digested. Physical exercise and mental health are very briefly and insufficiently dealt with. This is not, as the title suggests, a guide to healthful living, its total effect is that of an inadequate introduction to the spectrum of topics that the term health includes." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 93:2546 Je 15 '68 130w

GRAMONT, SANCHE DE. Epitaph for kings. 480p $6.95 Putnam

944 France—History—Bourbons, 1589-1789

67-29771

"This book attempts . . . to perform an autopsy on French society before the Revolution of 1789, which usually goes under the name of ancien régime. The events of 1789 are seen, not as the start of a revolutionary era, but as the end of the longest continuous form of government in French history. . . . The greater part of this book is concerned [with the eighteenth century]." (Introd) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Geoffrey Bruun

Book World p5 Mr 24 '68 650w

"[The author's thesis] is that the revolution was a result of 'a complexity of . . . events' and that 'the path of decline is strewn with clues.' The clues, every single one of them, must surely be included in these 428 closely written pages, packed with anecdote and quotation, some wittily apropos, some scurrilous. . . . Hammerblows of the American Revolution, the Marseilles plague, famines, financial crises, great writers, are all carefully explained. But what de Gramont has also done, and done superbly, is to allow us to 'listen to the French eighteenth century's many voices, which ring in the ears like surf in a seashell, alive, arresting, and present.'" Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '68 550w

Reviewed by Stanley Loomis

N Y Times Bk R p7 Mr 24 '68 800w

"[This] is an engrossing narrative rich in color, felicitous in style, and studded with brilliant vignettes of the men at the top: the last three Bourbon monarchs, their ministers, diplomats, and military commanders, the men of affairs and the philosophes. . . . [The book is] a popularization which, except for the last long section dealing with the Revolution, is reasonably up to date in its use of specialized studies. Fascinating as a story, it rests upon an interpretation that invites questioning. . . . Were the events of 1789 less the beginning of revolutionary change and more the end of an 800-year-old dynasty? Was the execution of Louis XVI 'the essential revolutionary act, the final scene in the drama of a dying society'? Hardly. The succession was indeed broken, but to subordinate revolutionary change to that rupture is to make an epic distortion which robs not only French history but modern European history of its meaning. The story is rich and interesting, but if it is read as history, the grain of salt must not be too far away.' Leo Gershoy

Sat R 51:38 Mr 23 '68 550w

Time 91:35 Mr 1 '68 750w

GRAND, P. M. Prehistoric art; paleolithic painting and sculpture. 103p maps $12.50 N.Y. graphic

709.01 Art, Primitive

67-28690

The "French prehistorian and a former student of the Abbé Breuil, is concerned [here] with art not archaeology: the objective is a description of 'the modes of expression' in prehistoric art and an analysis of the techniques employed and the compositions produced. She rejects all attempts to interpret the meanings and functions of Palaeolithic art by ethnological analogy or by any other means now available but she makes various interpretations of her own: the high stylization of African tribal art as a 'degeneration' from prehistoric naturalism, the prehistoric rock engravings of the 'art mobilier' as representing a 'frenzied expressionism' completely distinct from the art of the mural paintings." (Choice) Bibliography. Index of names and places.

"[The author's] presentation and critique of [André] Leroi-Gourhan's techniques and interpretations [Treasures of Prehistoric Art, BRD 1968] is one of the first available in English and she attempts, rather successfully, to reconcile his idea of a single continuous sequence in art forms with Breuil's two cycle theory. There are excellent illustrations. . . but it is sometimes difficult to relate them to the text. It is confusing that no dimensions are given and, although the site of the artifact is identified, the culture is not. At least one error is present. The writing is generally good and the introduction is excellent. Advanced undergraduate students may find the illustrations and knowledgeable descriptions interesting but libraries should probably purchase [Henri] Breuil's Four Hundred Years of Cave Art: The Art of the Stone Age by [Hans G.] Bandi et al [BRD 1962]; and/or [Paolo] Graziosi's Paleolithic Art before investing in this volume."

Choice 5:942 O '68 270w

Reviewed by Lee Ash

Library J 93:745 F 15 '68 100w

"[The author] dilates on some of the assumptions built into Leroi-Gourhan's rubrics and otherwise exposes the superficial objectivity of [The Treasures of Prehistoric Art]. But this is not the principal aim of [this] book. Unfortunately, it pretends to survey the field of Paleolithic art while the text is subordinated to pictures. . . . The reasonableness and nuance of Grand's critical discussion surpass by far the superficiality of the rest of the text and make one wish Grand would publish on a more professional level. As it stands, [this] is an addition not to the library of scholarship but to that of gift picture books." M. H. Levine

Science 161:150 JI 12 '68 700w

TLS p1336 N 28 '68 270w

GRANDE, FRANCISCO, ed. Claude Bernard and experimental medicine. See Claude Bernard and experimental medicine

GRANICK, DAVID. Soviet metal-fabricating and economic development; practice versus policy. 367p $8.50 Univ. of Wis. press

338.4 Russia—Industries. Metal industry and trade. Russia—Economic conditions. Russia—Commercial policy 67-12005

"In order to evaluate both the short-run and long-run effects of decisions and organizational traits developed between the late 1920's and middle 1930's. Professor Granick examines in detail the metal-fabricating industries during those . . . years and traces through the 1950's and into the early 1960's the effects of decisions made then." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Jack Baranson

Am Econ R 58:1028 S '68 950w

"In the first half of the book, Granick discusses positive investment in tangible capital, worker-training, and new technology. In Part II, he treats the organizational aspects of metal-fabricating development. Professor Granick relishes controversy, and specialists in Soviet economics will find the book most stimulating. Others should read it as a warning not to accept without question the conventional 'lessons' of Soviet economic development. . . . The book is a gold mine of information about the insights into technology and organization of Soviet industry. The final chapter, 'An Organizational Treatment of Soviet Industry,' is no exception. In it, however, Granick develops and tests two conflicting models of Soviet industry of the type used in organizational theory. I read this chapter twice and concluded that the models add practically nothing to the valuable insights and interesting conclusions presented. On the contrary, the models make it more difficult and tedious to follow the argument." M. G. Clark

Ann Am Acad 376:194 Mr '68 420w

"The book extends, amplifies, revises, and integrates material on technological choice, organizational policy, and the history of the metal-working industry published by Granick in various journal articles over the past 10 years. However, the book is not merely a collection of those articles, but rather a comprehensive and unique industry study that ranks with such standard works as [Mills Gardner] Clark's The Economics of Soviet Steel [BRD 1956] and [Holland] Hunter's Soviet Transportation Policy [BRD 1958]. As such, the book is intended for, and will be appreciated by, specialists and advanced students. While it should definitely be in research libraries serving these groups, it is not an appropriate choice for libraries serving a general undergraduate clientele."

Choice 4:723 S '67 160w

GRANIT, RAGNAR. Charles Scott Sherrington; an appraisal. 188p il pl $6 Doubleday

612 Sherrington, Sir Charles Scott. Nervous system 67-10486

The author "until recently director of the Nobel Institute for Neurophysiology in Stockholm and a 1967 Nobel Laureate in medicine, was a former student and personal friend of Sherrington. . . . As the subtitle indicates, this work is an appraisal, not a biography in the traditional sense." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The first full-length account of the professional life and achievements of one of the pioneers and most outstanding luminaries in the field of neurophysiology. . . . [Granit] comes uniquely qualified to his task. . . . There is, unfortunately, little of the personal life or nonprofessional activities of Sherrington whose long life (1857-1952) spanned years of dramatic changes and momentous historical events. However, the student with a minimal background and some interest in college-level physiology should enjoy this lucid, well written book which, sprinkled as it is with names and contributions of outstanding contemporaries of Sherrington, can also serve as an introduction to the recent history of neurophysiology. . . . Highly recommended for all college libraries."

Choice 5:336 My '68 170w

"Granit offers not only a fine portrait of a man but also a good and remarkably compact introduction to modern neurophysiology through a succinct review of its recent history. . . . [This] warm and sensitive biography of a great scientist and great man should prove rewarding to anyone fascinated by the history and progress of neurophysiology."

T. C. Ruch

Science 158:1035 N 24 '67 1200w

GRANQVIST, HANS. The Red Guard; a report on Mao's revolution; tr. by Erik J. Friis. 159p $5.95 Praeger

320.951 Communist party (China). China (People's Republic of China)—Politics and government 67-22289

"A Swedish newspaper and radio reporter stationed in Hong Kong . . . depicts Mao Tse-tung as an old man in a hurry; he has seen his revolution stagnate and take a materialistic rather than ideological direction. Willing to take any steps necessary to reverse this trend, Mao is now attempting to insure his dream of 'the absolutely just society, a society for the universal man,' by ruthless elimination of all opposition and renewal of the spirit of the revolutionary era. . . . The author examines the significance of increasing evidence of opposition to Mao, and provides a new assessment of the real importance of Defense Minister Lin Biao, the army, and the youthful Red Guard. Although critical of the fear-inspiring picture drawn by many Western authorities on China, he detects certain real dangers in China's ideology and international posture." (Publisher's note) The material in this book has been updated from Kinas Röda garde, originally published in Sweden in 1967.

GRANQVIST, HANS—Continued

Reviewed by R. W. Benjamin
Am Pol Sci R 62:588 Je '68 240w

"[This book] is not a close analysis of the Red Guard movement but a thin account of the Maoist Revolution. . . . [The author's] judgments are not original, and in some cases they are dubious, such as when he discounts the importance of a power struggle. His information is not new and not very significant. Scholars will find this book useless, and students will find it superficial. Perhaps the general reader would find it a readable summary."

Choice 5:263 Ap '68 180w

Christian Century 84:1135 S 6 '67 50w

"In this short and timely book, Hans Granqvist . . . lucidly describes the ideological and political causes of the Cultural Revolution in China and the creation of the Red Guard for its support in 1966. His analysis is based on visits to China in 1964 and 1966 and the other resources available to China watchers in Hong Kong. . . . A dispassionate, reasoned, and informed account such as this is an important contribution to American knowledge of events which must be viewed necessarily through foreign eyes. For political scientists, historians, and students of the area." Muriel Weins

Library J 92:2739 Ag '67 130w

Reviewed by Carol Tefft
Library J 92:3875 O 15 '67 80w [YA]

"Mr. Granqvist's book is as concrete and perceptive a study as we have in brief compass, but like any observer he brings his own feelings and his own responses to the scene. In appraising his stress on egalitarianism in China today, his readers should keep in mind the cultural and political setting within which Maoism has had to operate; the supreme authority is still the personal teaching of a great individual, a hero-sage who leads by concrete example."

J. K. Fairbank
N Y Rev of Books 10:27 Mr 28 '68 1250w

GRANT, CAMPBELL. Rock art of the American Indian; written and il. by Campbell Grant. 178p $12.95 Crowell

709.01 Picture writing. Petroglyphs. Indians of North America—Art 67-12402

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Am Lit 39:592 Ja '68 20w

Choice 5:42 Mr '68 250w

Reviewed by A. D. Krieger
Science 159:293 Ja 19 '68 550w

GRANT, DOUGLAS. The fortunate slave; an illustration of African slavery in the early eighteenth century. 231p $7.50 Oxford

B or 92 Job ben Solomon [68-12213]

This is the biography of Job ben Solomon, a slave owner in Africa who "was captured, sold as a slave, and sent to Maryland. Later rescued . . . he was brought to London, feted, presented at court, and returned to his homeland a free man. . . . In rounding out the story of Job's life Professor Grant describes Gambia, its people, its trade and the contest for its riches between the French and the English." (Library J)

"This book describes the confrontation of White and Black in an area better known than any other because the river Gambia was navigable for the representatives of the Royal African Company. Job's biography was written by a missionary friend, but the story is here continued from the company's records. In so doing the author provides a great deal of curious and recondite information, some of it rather ill-digested, about the period preceding the abolitionist crusade."

Economist 228:36 Ag 10 '68 440w

"At no point does Job come alive to the reader; Professor Grant regrets that the sources have few references to Job that would show him as an individual, what he thought, what his beliefs really were. This study . . . draws together scattered sources, carefully documents, and gives the reader in one place information that heretofore he might have found only in official archives, unpublished family papers and obscure accounts of early voyagers." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:4139 N 1 '68 220w

"Despite the scattered and limited sources at his disposal Professor Grant has contrived to reconstruct an instructive example of an eighteenth-century predicament."

TLS p1057 S 19 '68 750w

GRANT, IAN, ed. Great interiors; pref. by Cecil Beaton; phot. by Edwin Smith. 288p $22.50 Dutton

747.2 Interior decoration—History 67-18098

The British architect "begins his study with the mid-17th Century, divides his book into seven periods of approximately 40 years, and traces the changes and trends in interior decoration to the present decade. . . . [Individual contributors] sketch the background history of each period for the layman." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 118:613 My 4 '68 100w

"The non-technical text accompanies 240 superior photographs of interiors which, for the most part, are spectacular. A few of these rooms have been photographed many times, but many are of lesser known ones whose grandeur has survived or has been restored. There are a few American rooms, some of which seem like a forced intrusion. This volume is intended to be a 'gift book' and would be a luxury purchase for most libraries, but a luxury which could give pleasure to a number of readers."

Paul von Khrum
Library J 93:178 Ja 15 '68 140w

New Yorker 44:183 Ap 13 '68 200w

"[Edwin Smith] indulges a tendency to over-emphasize foreground detail. His photographs are of course splendid, and the raison d'être of this book. But they are not well related to the text; and, worse still, several are so closely juxtaposed in the page as to cause horrid confusions in the eye of the beholder. In a short introduction Mr. Ian Grant claims that the book is a search for three unities in interiors, namely overall architectural composition, scheme of furnishing and application of colour. But a good editor should also strive for a certain uniformity of treatment in his authors' contributions and an avoidance of overlapping. . . . The most rewarding chapters are Mr. Denys Hinton's on 'High Victorian' and Mr. Ashley Barker's on 'Fin-de-Siècle'. It is true these contributors are not re-treading well-worn themes. Neither is theirs the catalogue approach. They have on the contrary written readable essays, propounding some novel theories which stimulate the curiosity for further research."

TLS p1100 N 23 '67 650w

GRANT, JANE. Ross, The New Yorker and me. 271p il $5.95 Reynal & co. in assoc. with Morrow

B or 92 Ross, Harold Wallace 68-12154

The former wife of Harold Ross, the founder of The New Yorker Magazine, has written an account of their lives during the years 1919-1951.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:125 Ap '68 900w

Reviewed by Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 28:13 Ap 1 '68 750w

Reviewed by Joel Sayre

Book World p14 My 5 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 21 '68 800w

"Miss [Janet] Flanner's short introduction in a way says more about Ross and the early days of The New Yorker . . . than Miss Grant's chapters do, though her pages on the magazine's beginnings are certainly illuminating too. . . . The 'me' parts are distractions and the picture of Ross as a young man in Paris during the War is always half-obscured because of his relation to her. . . . In spite of the fact that Miss Grant made her living for many years by writing, there is very little literary quality—or even perception—in this book, and whatever explanation there is of The New Yorker's founder and editor in terms of life and his times comes in quotes from other writers—Philip Wylie, Janet Flanner, Rebecca West, Marc Connelly, E. B. White." K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:151 Mr '68 500w

"During [1919-1929] Jane and Harold seemed to be involved in some way with all the literati and near-literati in New York. . . . Alexander Woolcott is here, along with Heywood Brown, F.P.A. and scores of others of that rich and vanished era. Miss Grant throws them all in, sometimes a little indiscriminately, sometimes a little too cutely, but even so, she does manage to bring back the aura and turbulence of that wonderful period. . . . And, of course, she also provides a good view of the younger and less successful Ross only a first wife knew. . . . There is a very pleasant long footnote that interested readers and historians of the period, lay and professional will relish." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:542 F 1 '68 240w

Reviewed by Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R p22 J1 28 '68 350w

"Miss Grant concentrates more on the general pyrotechnics of the volatile era whose events she and Ross shared for nine years as husband and wife than she does on Ross the editor, whose methods and professional personality elude the reader still. But this is more a criticism of the title than of the book. Miss Grant is constantly, brightly, exuberantly entertaining as she recounts the fun and games of that rowdy and witty era." S. W. Little

Sat R 51:94 Ap 13 '68 200w

GRANT, JUDITH. A pillage of art. 224p il $5.95 Roy pubs.

733 Sculpture, Greek. Collectors and collecting 68-12417

"The collector's passion has often been colored by an obsessive fury and [the author dwells on the] historic pursuits [of Greek sculpture] that have marked the centuries from 81 B.C. to the 19th Century when Greek and Turkish laws were enacted to protect art treasures." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This is an excellent easily read book for one beginning the study of art through the ages. . . . Recommended for secondary school libraries but suitable for general collections." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:2996 S 1 '68 140w [YA]

Reviewed by F. G. Bratton

Sat R 51:34 S 21 '68 950w

GRANT, MADELEINE P. Alice Hamilton: pioneer doctor in industrial medicine. 223p il $4.75 Abelard-Schuman

B or 92 Hamilton, Alice—Juvenile literature. Occupational diseases—Juvenile literature 67-13612

A biography of the woman "who overcame the prejudices of the 1890's to become a doctor. The book details her interest in social justice and close affiliation with Jane Addams and Hull House, her notable pioneer studies in environmental sanitation, efforts to accomplish healthful working conditions in various industries, and her alliance with the unpopular post-World War I peace movements. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:18 Ap 1 '68 50w [YA]

"[This fine biography] shows that 'labor history' is more than the tale of strikes and unions. It is a tapestry of lives—of suffering, hardworking people, of those who used them, and those who cared about and for them." Bernard Weisberger

Book World p16 Ag 25 '68 220w

Horn Bk 44:334 Je '68 180w

"A very interesting biography. . . . The treatment is fictionalized but the author acknowledges as sources Dr. Hamilton's autobiography and interviews with her, her sister, and friends.

The resulting anecdotes add interest as do the excellent period photographs. Dr. Grant's admiration of her subject is evident but not excessive, and girls will empathize with this courageous, dedicated woman and enjoy reading her story." E. M. Guiney

Library J 93:1320 Mr 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by A. H. Raskin

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 28 '68 80w [YA]

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:33 Je 15 '68 90w

GRANT, MICHAEL. The climax of Rome; the final achievements of the ancient world, AD 161-337. 299p il maps $8.95 Little

913.37 Rome—Civilization. Rome—History—Empire, 30 B.C.-476 A.D. 68-25907

The author deals with the period of Roman history from the reign of Marcus Aurelius to the time of Constantine. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] overlaps in time with [the author's] earlier volume—The World of Rome' [BRD 1961]—which deals with the great period of the Republic and the Principate. . . . The relative space given to different aspects of Roman life, and indeed the attitude to the period implied by the use of the word 'climax,' is a trifle idiosyncratic. . . . Against the background of economic misery, political instability and intellectual decay, it seems odd to regard the period as climactic. . . . But any ideas from Dr Grant are always stimulating; as one would expect, the use of evidence from coins and iconography is excellent; and he gives as good a short account of late paganism—in particular sun-worship—as one will find anywhere."

Economist 228:50 J1 27 '68 200w

"[The author] points out that 'political and economic distress does not always prevent cultural and spiritual triumphs, and sometimes breeds them.' This thesis is expanded and documented. . . . Excellent material on the art of Roman reliefs and portraits is included. Recommended for schools with an interest in the period, most public, and all academic collections." R. C. Hilton

Library J 93:4139 N 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway

Nation 207:662 D 16 '68 20w

"Dr. Grant is a numismatist of outstanding eminence, and his book is largely a numismatist's history, making much of coins, which survive in abundance, and of coin-legends. . . . He possesses keen aesthetic sensibility; so that what he has to say about the brilliant portraiture and architecture of the period makes good reading. . . . He writes with good understanding, too of the thinkers, particularly of Plotinus; also of the novel and, indeed, of dualism and the various hideous metaphysical and theological perplexities of the age."

TLS p1074 S 26 '68 1200w

GRANT, PARKS. Handbook of music terms. 476p $16.50 Scarecrow

781.2 Music—Terminology 67-10187

This volume is intended for persons who make only a modest claim to musical knowledge. The "definitions are followed by synonyms and antonyms, where appropriate; pronunciations and variant spellings are indicated; foreign equivalents for the names of instruments are supplied." (Publisher's note)

"This new dictionary will be of principal value to public and high school libraries, but it will also be useful in college collections for the benefit of nonspecialists. Grant (University of Mississippi) has written an informal, reasonably nontechnical guide to the meanings in current use of English and Italian terms with a selection of French and German terms. . . . [The author's] definitions are simple and accurate for the most part, and they cover a suitable range for layman; musical examples are clear and well chosen. Notable is the excellent treatment of pronunciation for Italian. . . . No index or pictures."

Choice 4:1224 Ja '68 230w

"By my rough calculations, there are about 2200 main entries and perhaps one-fourth that many cross-references. . . . In those instances where brief definitions will suffice, the information is usually accurate and to the point. [Musical examples are frequent] and, indeed, sometimes are too long for the point made. . . .

GRANT, PARKS—Continued

More serious criticism must be made of entries such as 'musicology,' 'Baroque Period' (or any of the period discussions), 'tablature,' and 'notation.' Oversimplification, misinformation and wrong inferences too often characterize the information given. . . . The very real virtues of Grant's handbook are completely overshadowed by such defects, which lead one to suspect the book as a whole. The most serious omission is bibliography. The price seems exorbitant."

J. W. Pruett

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:720 Je '68
550w

"How to understand the technical comment in concert programs and record liners: pay the price of two or three concert, or records and consult the meticulously prepared Handbook of Music Terms. . . . Written con expresse and without condescension, every explanation is meaningful. . . . A model of its kind is the article on the Figured Bass: two pages of text, a one-and-a-half-page table, and a musical example." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:63 My 18 '68 70w

GRANT, ROBERT M. The early Christian doctrine of God. 141p $3.50 Univ. press of Va.
231 God. Trinity 66-22845

A professor of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago attempts to show the relationship between the thought of second-century Christian theologians and the New Testament "through the work of Origen of Alexandria (d. 254 A.D.). The first of the three chapters, on the doctrine of God the Father, locates the peculiarity of the Christian belief (as opposed to that of the Greek philosophers) that God is love. The second chapter traces the development of the doctrine of God the Son from the conviction that Jesus Christ was the Son of God to the conclusion that the Son of God must somehow be God himself and, specifically, must be the divine power through whom God made and saved the world. The third chapter, after a brief mention of the Holy Spirit, describes the ways in which Father, Son and Holy Spirit were understood to be one God." (Christian Century) Bibliography. Indexes to Biblical passages; Ancient writes and writings; Modern writers.

"A most significant book based on the Richard Lectures for 1965-66 which [Grant] delivered at the University of Virginia. His thesis is to show the continuity between the New Testament and the second century church fathers' affirmations concerning the Trinity. . . . [Second century apologists] accepted the Greek idea that God is an imperishable perfect ultimate cause, though they would not permit this concept to deny that God is love and that the Son at least suffers. From this Grant concludes that philosophy can be used as a language for interpreting the faith without distorting it. Well documented, concise and thoughtful analysis."

Choice 4:434 Je '67 190w

"Not intended as a magnum opus, the book stays close to the texts and thus provides a satisfactory introduction to the subject. Nonetheless, the very simplicity of the argument sometimes obscures the real complexity of the doctrine as held in the first three centuries. Since he omits any mention of later developments in the doctrine of God, Grant does not make his readers privy to the criteria by which he describes and judges the past. The result is a sort of historical naïveté. . . . Nonetheless, for its type the book is commendable." D. B. Evans

Christian Century 84:1630 D 20 '67 400w

GRANT, ULYSSES S. The papers of Ulysses S. Grant; ed. by John Y. Simon. 15v v 1, 1837-1861. 458p il $15 Southern Ill. univ. press
B or 92 U.S.—History—1815-1861 67-10725

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Hal Bridges

Am Hist R 73:1243 Ap '68 500w

Reviewed by R. N. Current

Ann Am Acad 376:190 Mr '68 500w

Choice 5:550 Je '68 100w

GRAUER, BILL, jt. comp. A pictorial history of jazz. See Keepnews, O.

GRAVEN, JACQUES. Non-human thought; the mysteries of the animal psyche; tr. from the French by Harold J. Salemsen. (The boundaries of knowledge, v 1) 223p il $5.95 Stein & Day

156 Psychology, Comparative. Animal intelligence 67-10324

The author "examines animal psychology, its evolution, and its tendencies. . . . Ranging from mutual help among animals, an outline of plant psychology, art and the animal, to the builder-animals, animals among themselves, and the secrets of orientation. . . . [The author cites] examples to illustrate the activities of the single animal and the animal group." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] ends with a conclusion. . . . that studying the 'language of the animals' will somehow train us to converse more readily with intergalactic aliens when we encounter them. Graven has attempted a popularization of animal behaviour in the great 'Gee Whiz' school of writing, but either the original French or the translation is a dismal failure. Worse, errors of fact abound like weeds. [The author] believes that animals can 'talk'; as proof, he offers (among other delights) the famous 'horses of Elberfeld' (Germany) whose 'abilities to calculate' amazed Europe about the turn of the century. The fact that the horses' abilities were soundly discredited as early as 1914, in Watson's test on comparative psychology, seems to have escaped Graven's attention."

Choice 5:520 Je '68 200w

"[An] unusual book, by [a] French science writer. . . . Graven from his considerable research and investigations cites many excellent examples to illustrate [his thesis]. . . . Throughout the text [his] writing is concise and detailed. This book will make a most meaningful contribution to the academic scene where, so far, little material of this nature has been published. Highly recommended for university and also large public library collections." D. S. Kalk

Library J 92:2793 Ag '67 200w

GRAVES, ROBERT, tr. The original Rubaiyyat of Omar Khayaam. See Omar Khayaam

GRAVES, ROBERT. Two wise children; pictures by Ralph Pinto. unp $2.75; lib bdg $2.73
Harlin Quist

66-10752

Only Bill knows that Avis can do magical things, like riding bareback on one foot, balancing a rake on her chin. "Bill warns her she will lose her magic if she profits by it in any way or lets adults know she possesses it. He lost his magic of knowing everything by letting his uncle and father use it at the race track. An accident to Bill forces Avis to expose and lose her magic, so the two are at last ordinary together. . . . Grades one to three." (Library J)

"Suspense lies in whether or not [Bill] can help Avis to preserve her [magical gift]. Ralph Pinto's sprightly black-and-white drawings wisely eschew the light fantastic and lend substance to a wispy tale. . . . [The book is] handsomely designed, from binding and size, to type choice and quality of paper." S. G. Lanes
Book Week p16 Ap 23 '67 200w

"A short pleasant fantasy, probably best for reading aloud. The page design and type leading make independent reading difficult before third grade. The pictures seem heavy with distorted faces that are somehow wrong for fantasy." Anne Izard

Library J 92:328 Ja 15 '67 100w

Reviewed by Alison Lurie

N Y Rev of Books 7:28 D 15 '66 90w

"It's a parable of childhood possibly, nice but quite carelessly made—the story has no form or shape and does not mount properly to climaxes. The illustrations have rather more panache." TLS p1225 D 14 '67 70w

GRAY, LEE LEARNER. How we choose a president; the election year; il. by Stanley Stamaty. rev ed 173p $3.50 St Martins

329 Presidents—U.S.—Election—Juvenile literature 68-11276

"New material in this edition includes critiques of the Electoral College of campaign expenditures. the role of TV in conveying a candidate's 'image' in presidential campaigns, plus 13 pages of excerpts from the federal Constitution. [Chronology of Presidential elections. Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index. For original edition see BRD 1964]. Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"Gray does a good job of gathering the facts and excitement of presidential politics, the big league of elections. . . . [She] is readable without being condescending. She uses real and hypothetical anecdotal material to excellent advantage. She [also] supplies a lively glossary of political jargon and terminology." R. C. Nelson

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 250w

Reviewed by M. R. Sive

Library J 93:2130 My 15 '68 50w

Reviewed by Marvin Kitman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p4 My 5 '68 240w

"Primarily enjoyable because of the casual way in which both public events and those behind the scenes are discussed, from the casting about for candidates early in the year, through the ballyhoo of campaign and convention, to the sober dignity of the inaugural ceremony." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 Ap 20 '68 80w

GRAY, PETER. The dictionary of the biological sciences. 602p $14.75 Reinhold

574.03 Biology—Dictionaries

67-24690

"The work contains [more than] 40,000 definitions, including botanical and zoological taxa down to families, mutant genes and their symbols, and organic compounds of biological importance. . . . An analytic arrangement has been adopted; entries are listed by roots wherever possible." (Science) Bibliography.

"The entering of abbreviations of genetic mutants clutters the text unnecessarily; the listing of mutants is itself questionable when one considers the magnitude of mutations. Likewise the listing, as separate entries, of more than 40 kinds of robins seems poorly justified. Such space might have been better used efficiently and effectively to include such important biologically used terms as homeostasis and entropy, and to be less cryptic in some definitions. . . . In spite of these limitations, there is considerable accuracy, and the type face and format are functional in facilitating quick reference. A shelf with this alongside other dictionaries in the field will provide a good lexicon of biology."

Choice 4:1224 Ja '68 140w

"There are few subjects I would include that are missing and the definitions are always adequate. In addition to entries for scientific terms Professor Gray includes many for common names of organisms with classification according to species. The only fault of the book is in its organization. Professor Gray lists all words derived from the same root under that root, generally with no cross-references. 'Metabolic' is thus found under '-bolic.' While he provides good reasons for this arrangement, it must be kept in mind that few people who consult a dictionary on a reference shelf bother to read the introduction first. Despite this idiosyncrasy, which hopefully will be corrected in future editions by more extensive cross-referencing, this is a highly useful book that probably will become a standard reference."

J. D. Buffington

Library J 92:4491 D 15 '67 190w

"Without question such a dictionary is needed. . . . An advantage of [the sometimes cumbersome analytic arrangement] is the attention called to derivation of words. Unfortunately, the typography and layout do not reinforce the organization. All headings are of the same size boldface type, and indentations are too inconspicuous to help the eye. The essence of a dictionary, however, lies in the quality of definitions. . . . What one finds here too often is, according to my sampling, some carelessness of detail and an imprecision of focus that may be misleading. . . . Gray has asked for corrections. It is to be hoped that this undoubtedly useful volume will have a long career and will gain precision in the course of its use." Dorothea Rudnick

Science 158:1442 D 15 '67 500w

GRAY, RALPH D. The national waterway; a history of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, 1769-1965. 279p il $8.95 Univ. of Ill. press

386 Chesapeake and Delaware Canal 67-12989

The author aims "to tell the story of the canal's origin, construction, and operation, and to give some estimate of its national significance. The financial problems to the parent company, its efforts at modernization of facilities and services, and the struggles leading to government acquisition are major elements of the book." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A well researched volume. . . . Although the title states that the story ends in 1965, Gray has only one chapter on post-1919 operations, which is more of an epilogue than a meaningful discussion of that period. . . . A useful addition to transportation history, the book is the only one on the canal."

Choice 5:550 Je '68 200w

"Gray says firmly that his purpose is to provide historical continuity, not analysis of economic impact. Even so, it seems a pity that he should provide information only on tonnage and tolls in tables constructed from sources which also included figures on expenditures. He argues that the economic and military contributions made by the canal were much greater than would be suggested by the rewards to its stockholders, who received cash dividends in only eleven years and a total of six cents on the dissolution of the company. The author's promise of a 'connected narrative' is admirably fulfilled. Particular attention is lavished on the project's pre-history. . . . Preservation of the company's records permits a full account of its operations. . . . [The two final chapters] serve to place the Chesapeake and Delaware in its new context as part of a national system of 'Deeper Waterways.'" Carter Goodrich

J Am Hist 55:134 Je '68 430w

"Although he must deal with economics in such a comprehensive survey, [Gray's] primary consideration is the history of the canal. Naturally the early years are more interesting than those after the government took over, and Mr. Gray has displayed loving care in his narrative of the 18th Century and 19th Century. His book is highly recommended for public, college and university libraries. . . . in appropriate areas high schools would benefit from it. It is a fine book for buffs." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:1896 My 1 '68 200w

GRAY, ROBERT. Children of the ark; the rescue of the world's vanishing wildlife. 120p il lib bdg $3.69 Norton

333.7 Rare animals—Juvenile literature. Wild life—Conservation—Juvenile literature

67-21737

The author describes over thirty species of land mammals, birds, and reptiles which are threatened with extinction. He also discusses the conservation efforts of zoos, game preserves, and organizations such as the World Wildlife Federation. Index. "Grades three to six." (Library J)

"Simply and eloquently, Gray tells of the fight—already lost on many fronts, apparently won on a few, in precarious balance on others—to save Earth's vanishing wildlife. If your child has never seen a Masked Bobwhite or an Ivory-Billed Woodpecker, he never will. Whether he will see a Green Turtle or an Everglades Kite or an Oryx Antelope is up to you and to him. This book should help. Text for 12 and up, but the many splendid pictures will appeal to the smallest children. Highly recommended." D. B. Whitman

Book World p20 Je 2 '68 190w

"Each species is introduced in a fictionalized episode incorporating natural history information, and an excellent photograph is given for each. An informative and interesting conservation plea." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:1799 Ap 15 '68 50w

GRAY, RONALD. Goethe: a critical introduction. 288p $7.50; pa $2.75 Cambridge

830.9 Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von

[67-10256]

"The first chapter summarizes Goethe's life. The rest of the book discusses the works, singly and in groups. Much attention is given to the poems; and there are two long chapters on Faust, Werther, Wilhelm Meister, Elective Affinities, and the Divan are given a chapter each; so are the dramatic works, the autobiographical writing, and the scientific work. . . . While Dr Gray takes account of earlier criticism he does also try to see Goethe's work entirely afresh, and to reappraise it." (Publisher's note) Chronological table of Goethe's life and works. Bibliography. Index.

GRAY, RONALD—Continued

"A highly readable, competent brief survey of the principal dramatic works and a small selection of the poetical writings of Goethe. Gray's readings are independent and framed in large part as a corrective to the exaggeratedly adulatory and complacent German opinion on the subject. He searches out those aspects of the dramatic works which would appear to be flawed by inconsistencies in motivation and failure of dramatic structure, and sometimes the interpretations are excessively literal-minded. Among the few useful introductions to the work of Goethe in English. . . . [this] should be included in college collections."

Choice 5:781 S '68 160w

"Style and content of the book seem to aim at the beginning Goethe student. . . . Although the many problems inherent in the major works are only surveyed, the student will find a short genesis of Faust, combined with an interpretive comparison with Urfaust. In total [the book] is well put together." J. W. Dyck

Mod Lang J 52:380 O '68 600w

"Dr. Gray proclaims that his book was written 'to provide a concise account of Goethe's works', and also 'to question an established reputation'. It does both, the second better than the first and at the expense of the first. . . . Dr. Gray conspicuously omits from his account Goethe's aesthetic theories and life-long interest in art. This is symptomatic of his literalistic and yet arbitrary approach. . . . His perception of detail is sharp, but he does not appear to see how poetry works as a whole. . . . Consequently the book is peppered with accusations of ambiguity, vagueness, inconsistency, perfunctoriness and inconsequentiality. . . . The plays are marginally the worst sufferers from this treatment. . . . and even in Goethe's prose fiction Dr. Gray repeatedly misses the point. . . . Nor is the book's overall trustworthiness for the first-year student and the 'general reader' enhanced by the politico-historical prejudices bared in Dr. Gray's earlier work. . . . and the small errors in the notes and index, although the chronological table is useful."

TLS p914 S 28 '67 950w

GRAY-WOLF. See Hofsinde, R.

GRAZIA, TED DE. See De Grazia, T.

GREAN, STANLEY. Shaftesbury's philosophy of religion and ethics; a study in enthusiasm. 296p $7.50 Ohio univ. press

192 Shaftesbury. Anthony Ashley Cooper. 3d Earl of 67-15457

A "survey of Shaftesbury's thought via the aesthetic mode of 'enthusiasm.' . . . The proposed source of this enthusiasm is . . . the early version of 'The Moralists' (1705) where 'the real basis for enthusiasm is in man's natural passion for the sublime and the beautiful.'" (Choice) Bibliography.

"The idea of 'noble enthusiasm' does reveal much of Shaftesbury's thinking in relation to the issues of his own times (deism, scepticism, atheism, the concept of nature, et al). However, the rather uncritical appraisal of the concept dialectically limits Grean from drawing forth sufficiently either Shaftesbury's notion of the autonomy of 'ethics' or the poetic imagination with which he operates. The 'genteel wit,' the humor, and the 'grace and beauty in that native liberty which sets us free from many inborn tyrannies' all are a part of Shaftesbury's enthusiastic faith which not only confirms the liberal, democratic culture of the western world but also (as Grean fails to indicate) exposes its naiveté. Recommended for studies in the Enlightenment."

Choice 5:786 S '68 200w

"[This] book will probably remain irreplaceable for students who are studying the history of philosophy. Yet, in the end, what has [Professor Grean] given us of Shaftesbury? An exact anatomy, but never a living portrait either of the man or the thinker. . . . An enthusiast cannot be explained by the analysis, however precise and painstaking, of his doctrine. . . . [The author's] presentation of the writer does little to allure the common reader. Few might deduce from this book that in the Characteristics has been neglected some of the most beautiful and most enjoyable English prose of the eighteenth century. In this case the style is not only the man, but the message as well. To obscure the artist in Shaftesbury is to obscure the thinker."

TLS p114 F 1 '68 1000w

GREEK ANTHOLOGY. Selections from the Greek anthology; tr. by Andrew Sinclair. 150p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

888 Greek poetry—Collections 68-10248

The translator has "chosen some 350 of the 4,150 epigrams [in the Greek Anthology]. . . . [It is] a personal selection of those epigrams of bite and wit which seem . . . to increase understanding of ourselves and of Greek civilization." (Translator's note) The selections were written between the 6th century B.C. and the 6th century A.D.

"This is not a representative but a limited collection. The chosen verse form is a simple rhyming trochaic, and the language is kept uniformly plain. The result is clarity if not always brevity. . . . The simplicity of the language is misleading, for even within the limits of Sinclair's selection it produces a false impression of uniformity. The form of Greek epigrams, and its vocabulary, are as important as the content. Here the differences of form are lost, while the content is enhanced. This is not the Anthology, but all the same, it is a modern, unsentimental and interesting collection." Averil Cameron

Class World 62:27 S '68 170w

"This translation is based on sound scholarship, but Mr. Sinclair obviously designed it primarily for reading and enjoyment. Recommended for most libraries." A. W. Propes

Library J 93:190 Ja 15 '68 150w

"Sinclair's version is sharply witty, always interesting and always competent, but it just fails to make the leap between admirable poetic translation and genuine original poetry. . . . The one convincing fire that warms him is erotic. It ought to be admitted that the combination of pedantic strictness, academic dust and sensuous erotic heat can be curiously moving, and that Mr. Sinclair's strengths and limitations exactly mirror the same qualities in many of his originals. His selection is very sensibly arranged chronologically; when this book is enlarged and reprinted as it deserves to be, it might be improved with short notes on the individual epigrammatists whose work has been translated."

TLS p512 Je 8 '67 550w

GREELEY, ANDREW M. The Catholic experience; an interpretation of the history of American Catholicism. 307p $4.95 Doubleday

282.73 Catholic Church in the U.S.—History 67-22445

The author "has written a sociological interpretation of the history of the American Catholic Church by examining the lives and works of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, first bishop of the Catholic Church in the United States; John England, leader of the 'immigrant church'; the volatile John Hughes; Isaac Thomas Hecker and Orestes Brownson, converts from Brook Farm and Transcendentalism; John Ireland, John Keane, James Gibbons and John Lancaster Spalding, representing the Americanizing trend in Catholicism; John Augustine Ryan and Charles E. Coughlin, reformers of the 1930's; Msgr. Reynold Hillenbrand of the Chicago liberals; and, finally, President John F. Kennedy." (Library J)

"The book is a combination of summarized secondary-source history and interpretation of the efforts to accommodate Catholicism to American life. The history is well told [and] interesting. . . . The interpretation is valuable because it brings the insights of a liberal of the present to the men and events of the American Catholic past, and also because it is a pioneer attempt in the interpretation of American Catholic history. . . . At times Greeley paints his 'bad guys' too darkly. He seems unable to appreciate the reasons why the anti-Americanizers held their point of view. . . . [He] desires that his book be taken seriously, and it certainly should be; but the absence of footnotes, bibliography and index makes this difficult. . . . Greeley has produced an informative introduction to American Catholic history for beginners and a thought-provoking interpretation for those with more background." Michael Morrison

America 118:297 Mr 2 '68 460w

"David O'Brien recently has made the case that American Catholic historiography just ain't what it used to be and counsels that its defensiveness should be shucked. Greeley does the peeling in this book. The thesis is simply stated: the Americanizers within American Roman Catholicism won the verbal and intellectual battles but lost the church power to the anti-Americanizer conservatives. . . . Admittedly not an academic work—no footnotes, no index—Greeley does offer a scholarly job working with some noticeable limitations. This book's audience will likely be limited to professors (especially in the disciplines of U.S. history, intellectual history of the U.S., American church history) and advanced students in these areas."

Choice 5:792 S '68 160w

Reviewed by W. W. Benjamin

Christian Century 85:555 Ap 24 '68 600w

"The author examines such topics as Cahen-slyism, secret societies, Henry George, Catholic education and the Cana Conferences. Students of religion, specialists, and informed readers will be interested." L. R. Etzkorn

Library J 92:3645 O 15 '67 130w

GREELEY, ANDREW M. The changing Catholic college, by Andrew M. Greeley with the assistance of William Van Cleave [and] Grace Ann Carroll. (Nat. opinion res. center. Monographs in social res) 226p $5.95 Aldine pub.

378.73 Catholic Church in the U.S. Colleges and universities—U.S. 67-27393

After putting the American "Catholic colleges in historical perspective. . . . [the author presents some] sociological data on Catholic higher education. . . . There then follow three chapters on 'rapid,' 'medium,' and 'low improvement' schools, each organized under the headings of administration, faculty and students. . . . [There is also a] discussion of the crucial relationship of religious orders and what they have become used to regarding as 'their' colleges. . . . A short sixth chapter presents the results for the rank-order correlations of several social and economic variables with the colleges' growth." (America)

"Such things ■ student backgrounds and expectations, faculty orientations, institutional objectives, diocesan climate, and endowment may be among the factors determining readiness for take-off; and such things as quality of leadership and a clear delineation of the relationship between college and religious community are likely to be crucial for precipitating either greatness or mediocrity. But certainly things are more complex than the reader is led to believe. As a useful overview of the dimensions that must be of special concern to those who would guide their changing Catholic colleges, this book is without question valuable. . . . But as an explanation of what has happened or is likely to happen, it leaves rather a lot to be desired." Robert Hassenger

America 118:196 F 10 '68 900w

"An eminently worthwhile and commanding study. Greeley not only succeeds in translating complex sociological data into readable prose but, unlike most sociologists, he injects a note of humanity into impersonal material which was, after all, originally abstracted from human experience. Furthermore, he employs ■ style of remarkable clarity and precision. Greeley deserves not only a hearing but this book should be read by administrators, faculty, students, alumni, parents of current and prospective students." Bruno Schlesinger

Critic 26:91 Ap '68 1500w

Reviewed by Robert Hassenger

Record 70:175 N '68 1600w

"The mode and measure of success is 'professionalism,' a word which appears repeatedly in the study, and of a decidedly worldly kind: academic, public relations, and financial skills. The paradox emerges that the more secular the leadership, the more successful will Catholic colleges be. The one thing that even the skillful presidents have been unable to do is make religion meaningful for today's students and provide a fresh rationale for the changing colleges. As a consequence, Father Greeley notes, the colleges 'may very well find themselves forced to face the question of whether there is anything at all in their religious atmosphere which justifies their existence as distinctive institutions.' Nevertheless, Father Greeley's heart seems to lie with that very professionalization which could mean the loss of all distinctiveness. . . . His own standards of judgment are thoroughly secular and so, apparently, are those of the successful presidents he describes." Daniel Callahan

Sat R 51:77 Mr 16 '68 850w

GREELEY, ANDREW M. Uncertain trumpet: the priest in modern America. 175p $3.95 Sheed

282.73 Catholic Church in the U.S. Clergy 68-13841

"Father Greeley of the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago . . . writes for his fellow priests about the situation of the American parish priest in the present age of renewal. He speaks to them . . . about maturity, professional standards, preaching, the liturgy, celibacy, authority, obedience, and spiritual and intellectual development. He warns them of dangers both from the radical 'new breed,' and the reactionary 'old breed' among priests and seminarians." (Library J)

"Uncertain Trumpet escapes being just another book about priests by introducing different functional aspects of priestly life in contemporary language. Accompanying the many indictments of the modern priest and his training is the author's faith that both will mature and the trumpet's call will again ring true." James Whitehead

America 118:236 F 17 '68 340w

Christian Century 85:52 Ja 10 '68 90w

"This outspoken, balanced book is essential for priests and those training and counseling them." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:83 Ja 1 '68 80w

GREEN, CHRISTOPHER. Negative taxes and the poverty problem; a background paper prepared for a conference of experts held June 8-9, 1966, together with a summary of the conference discussion. (Nat. com. on gov. finance. Studies of gov. finance) 210p $6.75: pa $2.50 Brookings

362.5 Economic assistance. Domestic. U.S.—Economic conditions. Income 67-19191

"This book explores major proposals for use of tax allowances to narrow the poverty gap; compares them to each other and to present programs; analyzes costs for programs with different tax rates, breakeven levels of income, and family sizes; describes alternative methods of administering and financing the plans; and evaluates the effects of minimum income guarantees on incentives to work and on the birth rate." (Introd) Bibliography. Index.

"[Green does not] take a clear position on ■ negative tax coupled with tax reform vs. ■ negative income tax system set up apart from the existing positive tax laws, yet surely this is an issue the proponents of negative income tax system will have to face squarely at some point. . . . [But he does] provide the reader with ■ clear grasp of the issues surrounding the idea of a negative income tax and the structure of alternative negative tax schemes. [This] will likely be [a] standard reference work for public finance specialists; [it] will be even more widely read if and when the world situation provides more leeway in the federal budget for new domestic programs." A. F. Ott

Am Econ R 58:258 Mr '68 1050w

"Though the conference participants are not identified with particular views summarized, nearly all shared Green's advocacy of a 'negative income tax' of some sort to alleviate poverty, to reduce the need for elaborate welfare programs with high administrative overhead, and (optionally) to achieve major income redistribution. . . . Green is remarkably capable of isolating difficult political and social questions: he has managed to produce 200 pages on poverty and possible governmental solutions without a single substantive reference to black people or the Viet-Nam War! In this sense, the book lacks attention to administrative and political matters that distinguishes [G. F.] Break's Intergovernmental Fiscal Relations in the United States [BRD 1967]. For undergraduates in history, sociology, and political science courses, Green's book is an excellent, readable introduction to technical problems, with some attention to possible effects of income maintenance on family planning and individual pride."

GREEN, CHRISTOPHER—Continued

Choice 5:528 Je '68 300w

J Pol Econ 76:1099 O '68 250w

GREEN, D. H. The Millstätter Exodus; a crusading epic. 467p il $22.50 Cambridge

830.9 Exodus (Middle High German poem) [66-17059]

This book is an analysis of an Early Middle High German epic poem of the twelfth century. Professor Green concludes "that the vernacular poet interpreted the biblical Exodus primarily in the light of its crusading implications for his audience, and that the common medieval association of Exodus with baptism and the Easter liturgy plays only a secondary role in the Millstatt work." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"Even though Green's erudition is evident everywhere, his style is most readable. Perhaps the book will serve the salutary effect of initiating a reappraisal of this genre which stands between the old epic and later courtly literature. . . . Belongs in any library where courses in German or comparative literature are offered."

Choice 4:1248 Ja '68 150w

"[Professor Green's thesis] is argued, at the risk of occasional prolixity, with a methodical precision and minute attention to detail which are entirely admirable. . . . [However] the great detail with which the connexion between the Exodus and the crusades is established is . . . disproportionate to the evidence of the Millstatt poem itself. . . . [The documentation is] thorough and methodical. . . . Professor Green has not only illuminated the vernacular epic, but also drawn attention to material of the greatest importance for all scholars interested in medieval historiography and in the ethos of the crusades. An index of references to the passages cited from the Millstatt Exodus would be a useful addition to a subsequent edition of the book, while some of the patristic and medieval theological works now exist in more recent editions than those of the Patrologia Latina quoted by the author."

TLS p972 O 12 '67 900w

GREEN, GERALD. To Brooklyn with love. 305p $5.95 Trident press

67-23587

Albert Abrams "takes his suburban children to show them Longview Avenue, the Brownsville street in Brooklyn where he grew up. . . . The main body of the novel is a throwback to Albert's youth [during the depression]; his love of the street and his love-hate relationship with his friends, the Raiders, who bully him because he gets 100s in school, wears glasses, and has weak ankles; his despair over his parents who overprotect him for the same reasons, and over his doctor-father's poverty and rages, his mother's too-fancy manners and diction." (Harper)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 118:623 My 4 '68 50w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:110 Ja '68 500w

Reviewed by Richard Conlin

Best Sell 27:423 F 1 '68 430w

Christian Science Monitor p5 F 29 '68 200w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:101 F '68 230w

Reviewed by M. S. Byam

Library J 92:4523 D 15 '67 100w

"Mr. Green has the power to touch us where it hurts. He knows the pain of a young boy ridden with guilt over his inability to help a failing father. He recovers for us the childhood sensations of isolation, rejection, and puzzlement at cruelty. And Mr. Green succeeds in creating one character [Dr. Abrams] whose sorrow and complexity reach out from the pages . . . for compassion. . . . Yet the central figure, young Albert, is a fictional lightweight trimmed down by the over-articulateness of the author and continually threatened with irrelevancy by the very nature of the plot." Webster Schott

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 28 '68 750w

Newsweek 71:100B F 12 '68 300w

"The boy's father is the doctor from The Last Angry Man [BRD 1957]. . . . The drama and scope of the earlier novel are missing, but they are replaced by an episodic, nostalgic collection of mementoes. . . . It must be the authenticity of detail that makes the book effective. . . . The tension between [the parents] . . . is convincing, as is the tension and love between Albert and his father. What doesn't convince is Green's gushy, wrap-it-all-up, ending. It leaves an unpleasantly saccharine taste in the mouth, an effect which the author, though he often teeters on the brink of mawkishness, generally manages to avoid." Joel Lieber

Sat R 51:32 F 3 '68 700w

"Albert's perceptions are never solidly those of a twelve-year-old apprentice delinquent; often they are those of a 45-year-old writer. . . . [This] is not really a novel, since the author does not seem to control the recollections that sweep him along. It is a superb memoir indifferently disguised as fiction. . . . [However] the book, with all its misty ruefulness, is enormously likable."

Time 91:82 F 2 '68 470w

GREEN, IVAH. Hatch and grow [by] Ivah Green and George A. Smith; life stories of familiar insects shown in close-up photographs, by George A. Smith. 149p $4.50 Abelard-Schuman

595.7 Insects—Juvenile literature 67-21484

This book portrays the life histories of eight groups of insects, including grasshoppers, cicadas, dragonflies, antlions, butterflies, beetles, wasps and true flies. It includes a chapter on insect photography for amateurs. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

Reviewed by Gillian Charters

Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68 110w

"Focusing on . . . an insect's life cycle, with the help of painstaking close-up photographs, this book is a unique addition to the rather crowded field of insect books at this age level. The writing is clear, pleasing, and accurate. There is no new information presented, but the excellent photographs give these descriptions added meaning and are likely to inspire backyard naturalists." B. S. Waters

Library J 93:1310 Mr 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:128 D '68 90w

GREEN, JOHN d. Birds of Britain; phot: John d Green [introd. and captions by Anthony Haden-Guest] art direction: David Tree. unp $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)

779 Women in Great Britain—Pictures, illustrations, etc. 67-22397

A collection of fifty-five photographs portraying young English actresses, models, and pop stars.

N Y Times Bk R p67 O 8 '67 80w

"[This book] is not a new Audubon but a fleshly paradise of nubile young women in the post-Shrimpton with-itry of Swinging London . . . revealed in a variety of forms and postures by an advertising photographer. In short the current British Girl of Fashion. . . . Names and descriptions are provided but no telephone numbers."

TLS p1211 D 14 '67 90w

GREEN, KATHLEEN. Leprechaun tales; il. by Victoria de Larrea. 127p $3.25; lib bdg $3.11 Lippincott

398.2 Fairy tales. Folklore—Ireland—Juvenile literature 68-10771

This book contains "eleven original stories of Ireland, mostly set in modern times, [which use] the 'little people' and occasional folklore themes. . . . Grades three to four." (Library J)

"These flawless tales have been created by a storyteller blessed with a gift for rich, fresh invention and a style to match it in flavor and humor. Cut to the patterns of ancient lore, these purely Irish creations introduce the cobler-leprechauns, banshees, pookas, and human beings whose foolish ambitions and searches for cures are answered by magic spells and counter spells." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:172 Ap '68 130w

"There is little Irish character to the telling, and, lacking any other sparkle, the book is disappointing." M. M. Murray

Library J 93:1310 Mr 15 '68 80w

GREEN, PETER. Introducing surface printing. 96p il $6.95 Watson-Guptill

760 Printing [68-10022]

The author "is concerned with the discovery and exploration of surface texture and pattern in the world around us. The various sections [describe]: Discovery of Surface and Development of Pattern; Texture Collage; Cutting into and Exploring Materials; Masking and the Principle of Stencil; Particular Materials; Free Drawing, Direct Methods and Monotypes; Relief Etching; Practical Processes." (Publisher's note)

"[Green discusses his] medium with imagination and clarity . . . by means of clear diagrams and line drawings, well-chosen photographs of actual examples, and brief explanatory text notes. The results, though practical enough for the novice to follow, still offer stimulation to the craftsman or teacher. . . . Recommended as [a] splendid addition to school craft libraries." R. R.

J Home Econ 60:679 O '68 140w

Reviewed by Dolores McCole

Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 140w

GREEN, TIMOTHY. The world of gold. 242p $5.95 Walker & Co.

669.2 Gold 68-14003

The author "traces the expansion of gold production from the early days to the present. . . . [He discusses] the American gold rush of the 1800s, the Australian gold discoveries, and . . . [South Africa's] predominance in gold production in this century. . . . [There are descriptions] of the operation of the London gold market, the method of setting the daily price of gold on this market by bullion dealers, and the operation of other gold markets such as those at Zurich, Paris and Beirut. In addition the illegal markets and smuggling in the Near and Far East are discussed." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"[Green] not only has a sensitive nose for facts, but when he finds one, he knows how to set it down clearly, crisply and interestingly. In short, this is a book for almost anybody who has an adult interest in one of the more perplexing problems of our troubled modern world. . . . Are you curious to learn the difference between the gold standard and the gold exchange standard? Would you like to go behind the scenes and watch the operation of the London gold market—the biggest in the world—and discover what part Swiss banks play in it? The answers to those and dozens of other questions are all set down here in this eminently readable little book." B. L. Masse

America 118:647 My 11 '68 340w

Reviewed by A. J. Giunta

Best Sell 28:109 Je 1 '68 300w

"Mr Green is a journalist, not an economist, so this is written from the journalistic viewpoint rather than that of the economist. . . . With trade expanding, and the gold fields pretty well worked out, price increases or technology must advance to allow better extraction methods or gold will become a very minor industry before the 21st Century. With this in mind Mr. Green examines some of the methods being discussed for increasing liquidity. This book helps make the problems more understandable, and would be suitable for the young adult or the adult. Recommended." R. W. Haseltine

Library J 93:2483 Je 15 '68 210w [YA]

"This is a fine and enjoyable book . . . providing a fascinating flow of information about the earth's most wonderful metal. . . . Green concentrates on the supply and demand, not the monetary side of the picture. Nevertheless, [the book] contains much that any student of the international monetary system, and what has been happening to it, will find very useful." Frank O'Brien

Sat R 51:38 Ap 20 '68 900w

GREENAWAY, KATE. The Kate Greenaway treasury; introd. by Ruth Hill Viguers; an anthology of the illustrations and writings of Kate Greenaway; ed. and sel. by Edward Ernest; assisted by Patricia Tracy Lowe. 310p $8.95 World pub.

828

67-23363

This volume contains biographical and critical material as well as "the reproduction in full color of the complete text and illustrations of

A Day in a Child's Life, Kate Greenaway's Alphabet, A-Apple Pie and Pied Piper of Hamelin by Robert Browning. The partial text and illustrations are given for Under the Window, Kate Greenaway's Alphabet, Language of Flowers, Marigold Garden, Kate Greenaway's Book of Games, and Mother Goose, or The Old Nursery Rhymes. Selections are included for Little Ann, Kate Greenaway's Painting Book and Queen of the Pirate Isle by Bret Harte." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The Kate Greenaway medal—the British equivalent of the Caldecott—honors the woman whose illustrations of children's books at the end of the last century so influenced fashion that she is said to have 'dressed the children of two continents.' Some of these delicate water colors have been collected [in this book, which portrays] the graceful little girls who dance over the pages in their frilly, high-waisted frocks, their puffed sleeves, and their poke bonnets. . . . A Greenaway treasury indeed." P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p5 F 29 '68 100w

Horn Bk 44:199 Ap '68 200w

"[This book] brings to everyone interested in children's book illustration a valuable insight into the life and work of a truly creative artist whose vision of childhood was translated into gay and tender picture books, enormously popular in her day and still represented in library collections. [The book includes] a fascinating selection of letters to and from John Ruskin and an excerpt from Anne Carroll Moore's A Century of Kate Greenaway. . . . The text is charmingly illustrated with Greenaway illustrations in color and black and white. . . . The reproductions of the books are very good. . . . [This book] should be in the collections of many libraries, library schools, and private individuals." A. O'B. Murphy

Library J 93:847 F 15 '68 500w

"Miss Greenaway's subtle colors (what one contemporary called 'chastened tints') are perversely coarsened. . . . Those loving details—stripes in mattress ticking, patterns of muslins, texture of fruits are blurred and largely lost. It is too bad, for the anthology's value both as a reference work for libraries and as a nostalgic journey for Greenaway admirers, is much diluted, even though it offers excerpts from the lesser-known, yet superior works. . . . One misses some substantive contemporary critical insight. Excerpts from a 1905 biography are so edited that one seldom knows whether the original biographers or present editors are speaking. . . . The present volume's greatest tribute is that so much of Miss Greenaway's felicity of design and grace of execution shine through these unreasonable facsimiles." S. G. Lanes

N Y Times Bk R p22 Mr 10 '68 330w

GREENBANK, ANTHONY. The book of survival; everyman's guide to staying alive and handling emergencies in the city, the suburbs and the wild lands beyond. 223p il $5.95 Harper

613.6 Survival (after airplane accidents, shipwrecks, etc.). Accidents. First aid in illness and injury 67-28832

The author "presupposes nothing on the part of the reader but the will to struggle, the ability to remember instructions, and the initiative to make use of them. His contention [is] that in an emergency the victim, rather than 'freezing' and forgetting the survival information, will search his mind and remember." (Library J) Index.

"[This book] covers almost every kind of an accident or episode which can maroon, engulf, injure, mutilate, immobilize, imperil, endanger or threaten anyone on this earth. [There is] solace for any wary worry-wart, whether he ends up in an elevator that is out of control or under eight feet of avalanche snow, or facing a timber wolf, or in a hole in the ice on lake or river, or trying to start a fire in the wind, or resuscitating a person who has stopped breathing." W. O. Douglas

Book World p4 Mr 3 '68 1600w

"The untrained person will find suggestions in this book for using readily available items that will make it possible to carry out or assist in his own rescue. . . . [Mr. Greenback's] suggestions on first aid in a wide range of natural and man-made disasters seem to be well conceived and practical. The American reader may find some British idiomatic expressions distracting, and his spare style gives an impression of the need for breathless haste in reading . . . [but] the person who has to use the suggestions in this book will have reason to feel glad he did his homework." G. B. Weinrich

GREENBANK, ANTHONY—Continued

Library J 93:762 F 15 '68 260w

Library J 93:1828 Ap 15 '68 20w [YA]

GREENBAUM, EDWARD S. A lawyer's job: in court, in the army, in the office. 246p ll $6.95 Harcourt

B or 92

67-20328

A New York lawyer describes his "public and private service in the Army and the legal profession [from 1915 to the present]." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

"No one can question [the author's] integrity or his attempts to improve the law. But anyone who writes 'I was going downtown to work on the Sixth Avenue El . . . ' is not going to generate much excitement among his readers. The book does have rewarding moments such as the Mitchell tax case. But Mr. Greenbaum makes much of his not making Columbia Law Review—he certainly writes as if he did. For large public libraries and law school libraries." E. J. Bander

Library J 93:203 Ja 15 '68 100w

"In this relaxed memory book, Mr. Greenbaum examines some of the faded roses and reputations of a half-century of [service]. . . . The only revealing parts of the [author's] book concern his public affairs—and disclose an ethical individual with what today seems a rare devotion to his profession, his city's and his religion's charities and to the United States Army. . . . As a judge advocate during World War I, [Greenbaum] helped save the skins of many soldiers; the cases he cites are amusing in retrospect. The strongest sections of the book reveal how the American economy was converted to wartime needs in the 1940's. By comparison, his description of court and office life is stiff and somber." Herbert Mitgang

N Y Times Bk R p43 Ja 14 '68 480w

GREENBERG, CAROL ARNEL. The day before cookbook. 274p $5.95 Little 641.5 Cookery

68-15559

"Recipes are arranged with detailed instructions for preparation the day before with approximate time given, plus instruction for the serving day with the time for preparation given again. . . . In her first chapter [the author] gives . . . timesaving tips on utensils and planning and includes a dozen sample menus." (Library J) Index.

"The organization is traditional for cookbooks, starting with hors d'oeuvres, then on to appetizers and soups, meats, poultry, fish and shellfish, vegetables, salads and dressings, desserts; supplemented by . . . several suggested menus. The recipes are detailed and carefully worked out and are, in many instances, noteworthy for some original touches or time-saving techniques." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 28:54 My 1 '68 90w

"Necessary utensils are listed, help to a beginning cook although even an experienced cook will find it handy to note specifically that a three-quart or six-quart casserole is needed. . . . A good addition to any cookery shelf, this cookbook will be of special interest to women who are always short of time . . . and who isn't?" Ruth Dorman

Library J 93:994 Mr 1 '68 170w

"The personality cult has reached the cookbook world. Authors nowadays insist on telling us the personal experiences that prompted their books. . . . Too often, alas, these 'I' or 'we' writers are so plodding and so humorless that their friends must be taken aback, even if the authors are really as organized and as talented as they say they are. [This volume is an] example. [It] is well-organized. . . . The menus and dishes are pleasant and safe; they should appeal to nervous nice women who live in nice houses. . . . [But], the trouble with [this kind of book is its] relentless, humorless searching for the gourmet life." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p23 Je 1 '68 120w

GREENBERG, DANIEL S. The politics of pure science. 303p $7.95 New Am. Lib.

509 Science and state

68-15277

This "account of scientific communities striving for recognition and federal funding . . .

shows the scientist to be . . . a searcher for knowledge with all the limitations and culpability of other men. Beginning with the pre-war situation, when government support of pure science was looked upon unfavorably, Mr. Greenberg details the changes brought by the war and the sudden affluence in which pure science found itself. He examines in detail three recent events as indicative of the politics of science: The MOHOLE project; . . . the battle for bigger and better accelerators for particle physics research; and finally the . . . tale of MURA (Midwestern Universities Research Association) which tried to locate a new type of accelerator in the Midwest but relied too heavily on politics." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Testimony for the maturity of basic research as a social and political institution arises in the appearance of a hard-bitten journalistic exposé, which castigates the establishment, pulls out sundry ancient laundry for public inspection, and raises loud cries of concern and alarm. . . .

The book bears hallmarks which have occasionally flawed the author's work as a news reporter. . . . The rhetoric is somewhat strident, the manner testy and sometimes impolite. The style is clever and laced with hints of potential scandal. Semantically loaded words and phrases abound. . . . Harsh judgments are made of individuals . . . in easy contempt of the conventions of politeness in print which are customary in the scientific world. . . . Yet, taken as a whole, the book is timely, exciting, and generally quite perceptive, raising serious and fundamental questions for the course of the relationship between government and science in a way that is not likely to be ignored. . . . That one can find something to argue with on almost every page is one of the real merits (perhaps intentional) of this book." J. A. Snow

Bul Atomic Sci 24:34 My '68 3000w

"Out of his experiences as news editor for Science, the official journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Daniel Greenberg has written a perspicacious account of the intricate politics pure science has developed in its quest for a cut of the federal dollar. . . . Anyone with the slightest interest in science and its relations with government will profit from reading this account." William Newmar

Library J 93:196 Ja 15 '68 320w

Reviewed by Carl Dreher

Nation 207:186 S 2 '68 2550w

Reviewed by R. K. Merton

N Y Times Bk R p36 O 6 '68 1350w

"[This book] is not a very careful history which avoids presumptive interpretation. Neither is it a deeply penetrating and constructive critical essay. Perhaps it might be best described as a historical novel, written in the reportorial style, with titillating tidbits liberally dispersed among important facts. The cast is drawn from the roster of prominent men in the councils of science. Not only are the actions of the characters chronicled, but they are given the opportunity, here and there, to place their wit before their wisdom. By implication they are also provided with emotions and motivations. All this lends the book a lively and interesting readability. But assessing motives on the basis of actions is a hazardous business at best, and the reviewer found himself disturbed by a style that seemed to suggest the least generous interpretation. . . . The overall effect is to demean, and few men or institutions went into this book but came out poorer." F. T. McClure

Science 160:752 My 17 '68 1750w

"Greenberg does know a lot about the scientific tribe and its institutions. . . . [however] he is somewhat confused in a chapter on post-war events: the efforts of scientists to secure international control of atomic energy abroad, civilian control at home and financial support of basic science in the universities. He is more successful in telling the amazing story of how American science gained financial salvation through the armed forces. . . . The following chapters, however, confirm one's feeling that Greenberg is emphasizing the negative. . . . In general his stories seem to be factually correct (apart from a few glaring exceptions). His interpretation of motives, however, is often biased and misleading. It gives a distorted picture of the scientific community and its mode of operation. . . . At the end of the book Greenberg gives the scientific community some advice on how to improve the image of science before the public. Much of his advice is worth heeding." V. F. Weisskopf

Sci Am 218:139 Mr '68 5050w

GREENBLUM, JOSEPH, Jr. auth. Jewish identity on the suburban frontier. See Sklare, M.

GREENE, FRED. U.S. policy and the security of Asia. (Council on for. relations. The U.S. and China in world affairs) 429p $9.95 McGraw

327.5 U.S.—Foreign relations—Asia. Asia—Foreign relations—U.S. 68-11606

"Part I of this study endeavors to establish the setting in which American policy has operated: the place of security policy in foreign affairs, the evolution of American policy in Asia, and the contemporary significance of a balance-of-power approach in light of the past record and present interests of the United States. Part II stresses the instrumentalities of American defense policy. . . . It includes a survey of the American military presence. . . . Chinese security and military policy is considered in Part II, which investigates Peking's ideological premises and strategies, its national objectives, and its view of the role of force. . . . [The author's intention] is to clarify the issues and the choices open to the United States." (Introd) Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 118:608 My 4 '68 160w

"Greene has written a major study of the past and future role of American power in Asia, as well as of the whole complex issue of security there. . . . [His] book follows closely upon Reichauer's Beyond Vietnam: The United States and Asia [BRD 1967] which is an important assessment of what America should do after the cessation of hostilities in Asia. Of the two, Greene has written the more detailed, if not challenging work. . . . Both the general reader and student of American policy in Asia will profit from it."

Choice 5:680 J1 '68 150w

"Greene, who is professor of political science at Williams College, ably examines China's great potential, her influence on her neighbors, and the interaction between all of the nations of Asia. . . . While his primary emphasis is on China, he does not neglect the other Asian nations and views them in light of the complex system of bilateral and multilateral treaties that exist and shape foreign policy. . . . [The author's] views on conciliation are worth reading and make sense in light of his research. This book, an excellent addition to the growing shelf of books which are examinations of our current role in Asia, is highly recommended to public and academic libraries." John Lustig

Library J 93:560 F 1 '68 300w

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo
Nation 206:613 My 6 '68 60w

GREENE, JACK P., ed. Settlements to society: 1534-1763. 386p $4.95 McGraw

973.2 U.S.—History—Colonial period—Sources 66-22295

A "collection of original source readings in early American history. The selections are divided into three parts: (1) First Settlements, 1534-1660; (2) Expansion and Adjustment, 1660-1713; (3) Emergence of American Society, 1713-1763. It includes documents from Hakluyt to the Treaty of Paris." (Choice)

"Especially valuable is use made of unique items (such as private letters, etc) not usually found in such collections. There is no general introduction but a brief introduction to each section (with some bibliography) and notes on each item. Like all such collections, more useful in the classroom than in the library, but this one is particularly well selected and integrated."

Choice 4:577 J1 '67 100w

"[This is a] recent addition to [the Documentary History of American Life series] the most comprehensive collection of source materials ever published on the history of the United States. Although mainly designed for college students, [this] can be profitably used in advanced high school courses in American history."

Social Studies 58:336 D '67 40w [YA]

GREENE, THAYER A. Modern man in search of manhood. 128p il $3.95 Assn. press

301.41 Man 67-14585

The author "discusses such topics as biological sexuality, body image, emergence of extended adolescence, the psychological factors in male development and corresponding drives, a framework within which man can begin to understand his own personal history and problems, and the process for becoming truly oneself." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The emphasis implied by the title is perhaps slightly misleading since much stress is laid on the general growth process in American society. . . . Greene's purpose is to 'evoke the reader's response to [the reader's] particular life experience . . . and he sees his audience as men 'roughly between the ages of eighteen and thirty, trying to find meaning and direction for their lives in our rapidly changing American culture.' The social analysis has a therapeutic rather than a scholarly aim. It would be assessed as weak on both counts."

Choice 5:379 My '68 120w

"Following the psychology of Jung, Reverend Mr. Greene, formerly chaplain at Amherst College, and a Jungian analyst, attempts to give a view of man's role in a world of changing sex roles. . . . A useful book!" Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:2783 Ag '67 70w

GREENFELD, HOWARD. Marc Chagall; with reproductions of the artist's work in color and black and white. 192p $4.95; Titan ed $4.93 Follett

B or 92 Chagall, Marc—Juvenile literature

68-10479

The author, who is the publisher of the artist's My Life (BRD 1960) "tells of Chagall's growing up, finding love, and holding fast to his 'singular vision' under hard conditions in Russia, France and Germany and concludes with a section on Chagall's recent (1966) works in America. [Bibliography.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:421 Ja 1 '69 170w

"Writing with clarity and warmth, the author traces Chagall's life. . . . From the book emerges the shy, bright-eyed curly-haired boy who refused to let the handicaps of poverty and of being a Jew and a non-conformist stand in his way of becoming an artist; there is also the man who, through unremitting work, has given joy to the world through his art. Other interesting portraits are those of friends—artists, poets and theater folk—and above all that of his beloved wife Bella. . . . The book itself is well printed, handsomely designed and illustrated with 16 pages of excellent color plates and 28 pages of black-and-white reproductions of etchings and dry-points." Polly Goodwin

Book World p20 Je 2 '68 230w

Horn Bk 43:762 D '67 280w

"The Green Violinist' graces the jacket of this successful juvenile biography. Written [in simple, direct style] . . . the book includes 43 acceptable reproductions of his art in a format of above-average attractiveness." M. B. Stephenson

Library J 93:881 F 15 '68 70w

Reviewed by Shulamith Oppenheim
N Y Times Bk R p26 Ap 7 '68 290w

GREGOR, ARTHUR. Figure in the door; poems. 129p $4.50 Doubleday

811

67-20911

This is the fourth volume of poetry by a senior editor at the Macmillan Company. Some of these poems have appeared previously in various periodicals such as Kenyon Review, Sewanee Review and The New Yorker.

"[These] poems are well thought out and move with concrete sureness through rather abstract areas of thought. There is no particular charm in the language, [Gregor's] free rhythms remaining consistently flat, but a poet who can handle the materials of meditation on this level is rare. The book should be available to students exhibiting as it does a strain of American poetry that is often overlooked."

Choice 5:194 Ap '68 70w

Reviewed by Josephine Jacobsen
Commonweal 88:417 Je 21 '68 400w

"Gregor gives us an earnest of his craftsmanship and lyrical fervor. His best pieces like 'Cypresses,' 'Enchanted Flowers,' or 'Requiem' have a finish that suggests much more than mere talent. The speaker of his lyrics enunciates the broken syllables of being and becoming, whether the catalyst for the utterance be tree, fog, storm, or sea. Occasionally, richness of imagery overflows the spare lines.

GREGOR, ARTHUR—Continued

... But the whole collection reassures us that honest, contemporary lyricism is far from being moribund. Highly recommended for academic and public collections of the best poetry of the 20th Century." J. R. Willingham

Library J 92:4610 D 15 '67 140w

"Gregor's new book simply languishes. It is an anchor without a boat. The good poems in [it] are hidden by the overwhelming presence of the bad; the book is long for a collection of poetry, and should have been made less cumbersome. Most of the poems are acts of meditation totally without the primary delight in language one finds in good poetry. . . . The nouns throughout the book are obvious poetic commonplaces, always within a setting of an indefinite, almost translated quality. . . . Gregor, though, is capable of fine poems such as 'Late Last Night.'" Jim Harrison

N Y Times ■k R 6 p 28 '68 310w

Reviewed by Daryl Hine

Poetry 113:56 O '68 350w

Va Q R 44:cl autumn '68 200w

"Gregor is surely one of the most deeply spiritual poets of our time. . . . [He] has evolved a poetic manner that serves as a frictionless conveyor for his thought. Ideas in the poems are as inseparable from the style of their expression as wave from water, wind from air. . . . But these poems are not doctrinaire; rather, they employ ideas as one of many elements in the service of projecting an inner luminosity of being. Philosophy is subordinate to the stream of intensely devotional feeling running through most of the poems. . . . Gregor's power to envision for the reader the quality of spiritual beauty in strangers, 'foreigners,' is an ideological mainstay of many of his poems. . . . [and] revives the power in us to respond to beauties in people that transcend their worldly personalities." Laurence Liberman

Yale R 57:606 summer '68 1100w

GREGOR, IAN, jt. auth. William Golding. See Kinkead-Weekes, M.

GREGORY, DICK. The shadow that scares me; ed. by James R. McGraw. 213p $4.50 Double-day

301.451 Negroes. U.S.—Race relations

68-10561

In ten articles the author "explores his attitudes toward life in America. He writes about the black man in a white society but is mostly concerned with the morality of right and wrong actions." (Library J)

"[The author] preaches freedom; he teaches it; he satirizes over it, and no one is safe from his keen wit or his common sense. . . . In ten excellent chapters (essays? sermons?) Gregory piles up evidence to support his thesis. The Negro has come of age as an American and he can no longer be denied his birthright. . . . The author shows himself to be a devout Christian who is appalled by the hypocrisy of middle class pharisaism—both white and Negro. At times he writes with passion and once in a while he borders on the hysterical. However his general tone is witty and his usual stance is logical. This is a highly disturbing book which deserves to become a best seller. Every library with adult readers will want at least one copy." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 27:420 F 1 '68 350w

"We picked up this book to read Gregory and went away remembering the introduction by the book's editor, James R. McGraw of Renewal magazine. As an attempt at lay sermonizing, the book deserves applause. Unfortunately, many of Gregory's virtues, including a compelling wit, have been victims of the new polarization in racial and urban affairs. Alas, in the end too much of his preaching sounds preachy—which means that he is on the verge of the moment when he may no longer be heard or, for that matter, even listened to. Verdict: morally on target, but humanistically unconvincing."

Christian Century 85:146 Ja 31 '68 80w

"Comedian Dick Gregory calls the ten essays in his book a series of 'prophetic sermons.' . . . [He] is not easily put into a pigeonhole as a representative of the American Negro. His views and actions are highly individualistic. . . . Most of his writing is reasonable and quite clear. He calls the church a failure, yet is obviously very religious, on his own terms. . . .

His view of America's urban problems is essentially economical, not racial. He maintains a sincere devotion to the principles of American democracy. He is, above all, a thoughtful individual concerned about the future of his country." C. M. Weisenberg

Library J 93:200 Ja 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by J. A. Lloyd

Library J 93:1336 Mr 15 '68 130w [YA]

GREGORY, JACK. Sam Houston with the Cherokees, 1829-1833, by Jack Gregory and Rennard Strickland. 206p il $6 Univ. of Tex. press

B or 92 Houston, Samuel

67-25326

This biography begins with Houston's resignation from the governorship of Tennessee in 1829. To reconstruct the years he spent in Cherokee country the "authors have examined Indian agency records, maps, Congressional documents, traders' account books, contemporary diaries, unpublished letters, shipping records, missionary reports, and newspapers, as well as Houston's letters and speeches. . . . Proof of Houston's marriage to the Cherokee Diana Rogers is offered. The rumors and speculation over Houston's Indian wives and children are examined. . . . [The authors assert that] Houston's years with the Cherokees . . . [are] reflected in his policies as President of the Republic of Texas, governor of Texas, and United States senator." (Publisher's note) Appendix: Houston chronology, 1829-1933. Bibliography. Index.

"The book for any library that needs the last word on Houston's brief career as an Indian. It shifts through the fact and fancy of Houston's self-imposed exile, too often with tiresome minuteness. Houston's plans for a Cherokee empire in Texas are significant, to be sure, but too much of this book is devoted to trivia such as legendary wives and offspring and his alleged drinking sprees. Although Gregory and Strickland bring much experience with Indian studies to this work they are not successful in integrating their wealth of facts and legends into a readable account. With a huge bibliography and a painstaking index, this book will be the delight of every Houston and/or Cherokee specialist, but otherwise its appeal is severely limited."

Choice 5:1212 N '68 90w

"This is a lively effort to pierce the thick fog of falsehood, calumny, ignorance, and legend surrounding the four years Sam Houston spent among the Cherokees in what is now northeastern Oklahoma. . . . A good many sources, manuscript and published, have been examined; but since the authors, both professors of speech at the University of Arkansas rather than professional historians, are not always adept in refuting arguments on the other side, and admit to drawing freely upon legend and speculation, the last word on this tangled episode has obviously not yet been said."

Va Q R 44:lxviii spring '68 230w

GREGORY, JAMES S. Russian land, Soviet people; a geographical approach to the U.S.S.R. 947p maps $15 Pegasus (N Y)

914.7 Russia—Description and travel

68-17549

"A British lecturer in geography shows how the development of the USSR has been affected by various physical, cultural, demographic, and climatic conditions, and how past and present political systems have worked to unite the diverse areas into a single nation. In the second half of the book he describes the individual regions of the USSR." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[An] extremely comprehensive study . . . written in part from firsthand information obtained during frequent visits to the Soviet Union, substantiated by data from the mid-1960's, and illustrated with numerous detailed maps. It contains an extensive bibliography and it is a valuable reference tool for the college student and scholar." A. T. Sprankel

Library J 93:4295 N 15 '68 80w

"[This book] emphasizes the economic aspects of the country's geography, and its 234 plain black-and-white maps and diagrams are mere utilitarian adjuncts to the comprehensive text." D. M. Glixon

Sat ■ 51:61 N 16 '68 40w

GREIFF, CONSTANCE M. Princeton architecture; a pictorial history of town and campus [by] Constance M. Greiff, Mary W. Gibbons [and] Elizabeth G. C. Menzies. 200p il $12.50 Princeton Univ. press

974.9 Princeton, New Jersey—Historic houses, etc. Princeton University 65-17138

The authors "discuss the architecture of both town and campus in relation to its history and place Princeton architecture in relation to American architecture generally. . . . Accompanying maps document the town's development." (Publisher's note) Contemporary prints and photographs are included. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Think a bit before you order. If you have many 'old house' or 'stately homes' books, you may want to add this volume. . . . Historical discourse and excellent architectural photographs are mixed in agreeable portions, but the book is really a showing of exteriors; there is just one building plan and only one photograph which suggests an 'interior.' A librarian should buy it, of course, if there are several Princetonians around, for they will seize on it and wear it out. The book will interest few small libraries, for its use by students is hard to predict. Architecture students will find no inspiration in it, but architectural photographers will admire its illustrations. Students of history or geography might rarely use any of its materials or suggestions, but architectural historians might think it an example of what they should or should not do." Choice 5:183 Ap '68 180w

"A survey of this type will add more to nearly any collection than yet another general architectural study of wider scope repeating examples readily available elsewhere. Nevertheless, it is probable that many libraries will not purchase this book, deciding that it is either too specialized or regional in treatment for patrons who are not also Princeton alumni. They will do a disservice both to the student of architecture or town planning, who will find some of this material in no other place, and to the general reader, who will enjoy 'the charm and the special characteristics of Princeton architecture . . . reflected in the crisp photographs, and described in a text worthwhile in itself.' R. C. Hilton

Library J 93:539 F 1 '68 180w

GRENE, DAVID. Reality and the heroic pattern; last plays of Ibsen, Shakespeare, and Sophocles. 169p $5 Univ. of Chicago press

809.2 Ibsen, Henrik. Shakespeare, William. Sophocles 67-25519

The author discusses "the last plays of three great dramatists: Ibsen's The Master Builder, Little Eyolf, John Gabriel Borkman, and When We Dead Awaken; Shakespeare's Cymbeline, The Winter's Tale, The Tempest; and Sophocles' Ajax, Philoctetes, and Oedipus at Colonus." (Publisher's note) Bibliographies.

"There is no other book which deals specifically with the last works of a group of significant artists. . . . It may be somewhat advanced for the average undergraduate, but for the advanced student it bristles with implications . . . [and] opens up a series of vital questions about the boundaries of art and the relationship between the artist, his subject, and his audience." Choice 5:770 S '68 170w

"One concludes that the essays were composed quite independently of each other rather than as interconnected efforts to demonstrate a central thesis. Mr. Grene has sensed the similarities in these works, the common concern of these aging playwrights with time, death, the search for meanings, but he has resisted facile generalizations and allowed the essays to stand as separate analyses, inviting the reader to trace the threads. This basic and lucid study is recommended for college, public, and high school libraries." Arthur Curley

Library J 92:4417 D 1 '67 190w

GRENNAN, JACQUELINE. Where I am going; excerpts from the speeches of Jacqueline Grennan. 179p $5.95 McGraw

815 68-24342

This "book consists of 16 speeches, many of them convocation addresses, given during the past few years by [the] president of Webster College in Missouri. Miss Grennan has attained fame in Catholic educational circles for . . . transferring control of Webster College from the Order of the Sisters of Loretto to a lay board of trustees, then leaving the Order (with canonical permission) but retaining her position as president of the College." (Library J)

"This is not, like so many collections of speeches, a non-book. True, it has no clear unity. . . . But it is more Miss Grennan's style than her insights that intrigue an audience. . . . We are taken not with her profundity, but her passion. The passion is for relevance. . . . This is the key to the volume: where J. Grennan is going is not a place, any more than heaven; it is a process, the 'search' she keeps alluding to in the book's last section. The only thematic unity represented here is in the person herself, and her transparency. One must be prepared to accept her totally. . . . We find here one wounded by finity: man's, our nation's, her own. And it is J. Grennan's faith—a term she makes us once more unashamed of—in God and in man's ability to correct our incredible mistakes that makes her a great person." Robert Hassenger

America 119:109 Ag 17 '68 650w

Reviewed by Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 28:200 Ag 15 '68 550w

"[These addresses show the author] to be brief, clear, open and progressive. They were delivered during the years of her and her college's transition from semicloistered Catholicism to a new secularity that retains a Christian reference."

Christian Century 85:874 J1 '68 50w

"An ambitious, hard-driving executive, Miss Grennan is interested, by her own admission, more in administrative tactics than in basic theological studies. Yet she uses, rather superficially, some of the ideas of Karl Rahner, Harvey Cox and Teilhard de Chardin. She is an enthusiastic and uncritical herald of the future, which she assumes will be much more good than bad. The energy is there, but, contrary to the title, the reader never really does find out where Miss Grennan is going. As would be expected in such a collection, there is a good deal of repetition, and name-dropping occasionally irritates." J. T. Kilbridge

Library J 93:2484 Je 15 '68 200w

"Maybe the basic problem with [Miss Grennan's] untortured sunniness arises from the jarring incongruity of its pre-1968 worldview. Time and events of the past year in America have thoroughly buried Camelot and the New Frontier under glacial layers. Still to be buried though already cooling is a parallel Catholic springtime. Liberated Catholics had a brief and glorious May-time affair with the world. . . . As this faith slowly fades, one liberal Catholic remnant still hopes for the apocalyptic conversion of the Bishops and another believes in the spontaneous power of an underground Church. Those Catholics who, like Jacqueline Grennan, remain verbal in the old optimism are the most unsatisfying of all. . . . [Still,] while it is easy to carp at her language and criticize her ideas, her accomplishments compel the respect due a successful reformer." Sidney Callahan

New Repub 159:34 S 14 '68 1100w

GREY, ELIZABETH. Behind the scenes in a film studio. 102p il pl $3.50 Roy pubs.

791.43 Moving pictures—Production and direction 68-12418

An explanation "of how films are made, with special attention given to the many specialists who contribute to the completed film. Elizabeth Grey is British and her observations were made at the Pinewood Studios. . . . She devotes various chapters to stories, the producer and his team, the director and his assistants, the art director and his assistants, the art department, set builders and dressers, cameramen, editors, and so on." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

"This is a brief and simple exposition. . . . The information on film production is valid for American studios and the glossary of terms which Miss Grey includes in most cases contains terms applicable in the United States. . . . Her book will hold greater appeal for young readers." G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:1650 Ap 15 '68 120w [YA]

TLS p464 My 25 '67 40w

GREY, IAN. The first fifty years; Soviet Russia, 1917-67. 558p pl maps $10 Coward-McCann 947.084 Russia—History—1917- 67-27528

"The author, an Australian long associated with the British Foreign Office, . . . attempts to steer a middle course between Western historians, who 'write as protagonists in the Cold War,' and Soviet historians, who are 'prone to suppress and distort.' Grey's major point is that the Soviet period is only a chapter in Russia's thousand-year history." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] leaves out of account the whole ideological dimension of Soviet history, although many actions by the country's rulers make sense only when seen as steps towards the achievement of an international communist society. Such considerations may well be irrelevant to the Russia of the future, but it would be naive to ignore their function in the past. . . . Although Mr. Grey's interpretations are sometimes unreliable, he expounds the facts clearly and has a warm feeling for the country that emerges to good effect in his treatment of the grim wartime years."

Economist 225:527 N 4 '67 370w

"General readers and students of history will find this work an objective, well-researched, and lucid treatment. . . . [It] should have a place on public and academic library shelves." A. S. Birkos

Library J 93:1140 Mr 15 '68 170w

Nation 206:124 Ja 22 '68 30w

"Grey's long, readable and scholarly account of the whole of Soviet history is excellent as long as it sticks to facts. But his historical judgment tends perhaps to slant eccentrically, and this in turn affects . . . his perspective on the facts themselves. He is not inclined to maintain that the present state of the Soviet Union is itself very wonderful. He nevertheless feels that under it can now be developed 'a more liberal system so that the Russian people may enjoy the richer life for which they have struggled and sacrificed.' But the chances of anything of the kind being produced by the regime which has evolved from the Revolution are low, and this problem is simply not faced. . . . Grey gives much too little space to the destructive side of the regime. The great man-made famine of 1932, which cost some 5,000,000 lives . . . is barely mentioned." Robert Conquest

N Y Times Bk II p6 Ja 7 '68 750w

Reviewed by Russell Barnes

Sat R 50:22 D 30 '67 230w

"Grey has written a biography of Ivan the Terrible, and is a little obsessed by the parallel between Ivan and Stalin. . . . One stumbles a little perhaps when [he] refers to 'the support and love which the great mass of the Russian people, while enduring so much, accorded to Stalin.' But it is not, in one sense, untrue. On the other hand, it seems fanciful to infer, from a few references to Peter the Great and Ivan, that 'Stalin was keenly interested in history' and 'read widely, especially about the Russian aristocrats of the past'. Some minor errors are inevitable in a work of this scope. The economic sections are probably the least satisfactory. . . . This is, however, on the whole, a well-balanced and sensible account of the period; and the reader who is content with a straightforward narrative of fact will come to little harm with Mr. Grey."

TLS p1027 N 2 '67 330w

GREYFIE DE BELLECOMBE, L., jt. auth. Collective bargaining in African countries. See Roberts, B. C.

GREYSER, STEPHEN A., jt. auth. Advertising in America. See Bauer, R. A.

GRIER, WILLIAM H. Black rage, by William H. Grier and Price M. Cobbs; foreword by Fred R. Harris. 213p $5.95 Basic bks.

301.45 Negroes, Negroes—Segregation. Race psychology. U.S.—Race relations 68-29925

"Dr. Grier and Dr. Cobbs [who] are assistant professors of psychiatry at the University of California Medical Center, San Francisco . . . [describe the] plight of the American Negro, in essence his having been violated from the time of his enslavement to the present. . . . [They write of] the depression, listlessness, and apathy which they believe to be the underlying life tone of the Negro American. . . . [They urge] the Negro 'to develop a profound distrust of his white fellow citizen and of the nation.' For his own survival then, he must develop a cultural paranoia (italics are the authors') in which every white man is a potential enemy unless proved otherwise and every social system is set against him unless he personally finds out differently.'" (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:134 S '68 90w

"This book, in the fashion of Erich Fromm's Escape from Freedom [BRD 1941], is a study in cultural psychology. It describes the manner in which white America, through its systematic and thoroughgoing repression, has driven black America almost insane. No book I have read so convincingly portrays the condition of black America. Even the intensely personal disclosures of Richard Wright, James Baldwin, John A. Williams and other novelists do not have its impact. . . . This remarkable book offers fresh and provocative insights into the history of the black man, the development of womanhood and manhood, marriage and family life, character traits, education, mental illness, and many other subjects. Unfortunately, or perhaps necessarily, the authors are less helpful about the future." T. R. Frazier

-Book World p20 S 8 '68 750w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster

-Christian Science Monitor p15 N 14 '68 800w

"[It seems that the authors' recommendation means] that a total paranoia must develop in which all are involved! It is utterly impossible to live under such conditions, impossible to grow, not just for blacks but for whites as well. Drs. Grier and Cobbs know full well the outcomes of such mutually paralyzing operations. No one is a so-called 'winner.' Despite the above reservations the book warrants a reading by all psychiatrists, sociologists, psychologists and by the sophisticated lay reader who has some grasp of psychodynamics upon which the authors call for many of their theoretical explorations. For special and general collections." Louis De Rosis

-Library J 93:2841 Ag '68 400w

Reviewed by C. A. Valentine

Nation 208:24 Ja 6 '69 1950w

"[The authors] have written a book that takes account of the ambiguities in the psychological make-up of black people, and of course, all the rest of us. To their great credit they consistently refuse to strip the black man of his humanity, to dwell exclusively upon his particular problems and special fate. . . . [They] are professional and spiritual kin to Frantz Fanon [author of Toward African Revolution, BRD 1968]. Like him they unashamedly scream as well as analyze. Like him, they laugh at the notion of 'adjustment'—to what? . . . And like him, they uncannily mix apocalyptic politics with hard-headed clinical analysis. They see little time left, and 'catastrophe' near." Robert Coles

New Repub 159:36 Ag 17 '68 2550w

"The authors write with directness and a minimum of psychiatric jargon. But this very clarity and directness highlights some stark problems of psychiatric analyses of complex social problems. Grier and Cobbs present their generalizations no matter how obvious, as if they were brilliant new truths which had not been previously seen or understood by others. Interpretations and hypotheses are presented as if they were unquestioned and unquestionable findings and facts. . . . The preoccupation of [the book] with sexual identity in the Negro male and female and its ponderous analysis of the dynamics of interracial sexual behavior also reflect the psychiatric distortion of the more concrete realities of social problems." K. B. Clark

-N Y Times Bk R p3 S 22 '68 1050w

New Yorker 44:181 S 28 '68 140w

"At the core of the book is the realization that blacks have opportunities to become unstable solely because they are black in a white society. . . . This is not startling news, but for therapists there is additional advice; to find how sick a black patient is, subtract the 'normal' paranoia toward whites, and 'what remains is illness and a proper subject for therapeutic endeavor.' . . . For whites the book [is] basic education. . . . As for Negroes, the book tells where reality has always been at. To blacks who can read with coolness, [it] offers that hardest lesson of all: suspicion is justified, but paranoia is a disease."

Time 92:[85] J1 26 '68 440w

GRIEVE, CHRISTOPHER MURRAY. See Mac-Diarmid, H.

GRIFFIN, GWYN. The occupying power. 318p $6.95 Putnam

68-26797

In this novel, first published in England in 1956, "an Italian colony, Berissa, is occupied by British troops after Italy enters the war on the side of Nazi Germany. The British administrator [Colonel Lemonfield], taking command of the happy-go-lucky local administration, thrusts an irresistible integrity against an immovable venality. Both crumble, but the administrator is totally destroyed." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[Griffin] has a sublime sense of the ridiculous; and he is unafraid to be romantic when the occasion warrants. . . . [He has chosen] a theme and a setting well adapted to his versatility. . . . The story ridicules the conquest by the English authorities, the subtle ways in which they are seduced or opposed by their Italian captives, and how they are finally ejected; in short, this is a comic opera book about the war, and a good one. . . . Bizarre and unpredictable, I find this story clear sailing all the way." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 222:128 S '68 500w

"Observing mankind with a shrewd, honest eye, Gwyn Griffin saw the beauty as well as the beast and the banality. . . . Little venom sours or stings the narrative. . . . Civilized and often sensitive, [the book] does not squalor-wallow, in spite of obvious opportunities. . . . There's little muck in the murk, and none in the glare, of all-too-human Berissa. The plot is neither sick nor slick. Nor are the people. . . . The denouement is logical, dramatic, sad, and surprising. The writing rarely obtrudes, sometimes illumines, sometimes infiltrates. And if a rare cliché rears its pretty, thoughtless head—this hardly matters. [This novel] easily invests the attention; and long after the occupation is over its main protagonists linger in the memory." Neil Millar

Christian Science Monitor pC1 S 9 '68 410w

Reviewed by D. E. Thompson
Library J 93:2897 Ag '68 130w

Reviewed by Glenda Todd
Library J 93:3995 O 15 '68 150w [YA]

"The jacket of [this] book carefully avoids even hinting that the pages inside are actually 12 years old, that the book was, in fact, Griffin's first published novel in England, and is now belatedly being released in this country. How to deal with a posthumous first work by a veteran novelist? To praise the book's promise would be doubly ironic. To measure its achievement against the later works might be unfair and unrealistic. . . . [The novel is] of interest, though perhaps less so than his more intense later work. It is looser in construction and lighter in tone than his mature fiction. The anger that animates his powerful short novel 'A Significant Experience' [BRD 1963] is not so clearly focused in this work, flaming out only occasionally in his portraits of British military men of the officer class." Robert Scholes

N.Y. Times Bk R p4 S 29 '68 800w

"[This represents Griffin's] first attempt at applying the light treatment all the way, and it comes off deliciously. To be sure, dark deeds are by no means absent, and even predominate in a rather grisly ending; the book . . . could almost be called a funny tragedy. . . . The strands of the plot are so deftly woven that while you know a surprise is coming, you may well be caught unprepared. And not by a cheap trick ending . . . but rather by a masterful transformation of . . . events into an altogether believable, if shocking, denouement. Despite its procession of uproarious incidents, this is no frothy situation comedy. Readers whose appetite for mature humor may have soured . . . should find a thick sirloin steak [here]. A cut . . . that's simultaneously rare and very well done." Charles Miller

Sat R 51:45 S 7 '68 550w

GRIFFIN, JOHN HOWARD. The John Howard Griffin reader; sel. and ed. by Bradford Daniel. 588p $8.50 Houghton

813

67-19634

A sampling of the author's works "including novels, nonfiction pieces such as Black Like Me [BRD 1962], shorter studies, works in progress, journal entries, and short stories." (Library J)

"This rather pretentious selection of novels, stories, articles, photographs, and fragments . . . is edited by a disciple who treats his master as if he were a combination Schweitzer and Flaubert. Since Griffin is a gifted polemicist for Christianity, civil rights, free speech, and peace and is a well-known lecturer, most libraries will find this compendium of his work useful and in demand."

Choice 5:938 O '68 190w

"This volume will make possible an appraisal of the whole Griffin career and corpus. It even includes a surprisingly good set of portrait photographs by the Texas author who for some years was blind, for one year posed as black, has made himself at home with Gregorian chant and has written books like Nuni [BRD 1956] . . . and—best, to our taste—The Devil Rides Outside [BRD 1952], a novel about Monastery life. Much of the bulk of these works appears in this gigantic collection."

Christian Century 85:114 Ja 24 '68 80w

"[Although] the type of reader under review, dealing with truncated novels and a potpourri of other works, is unacceptable as a form to this reviewer, . . . [these works] represent an impressive and curiously moving body of work. And coming from a Texan who has freed himself of prejudice his pieces on racism are valuable—though hardly meaningful as an advisory to white Americans. The work includes a collection of photographs of some of the author's friends and associates, and a full bibliography of his works. At best, this volume provides a good introduction to the author and his work for those who do not have the larger works in other forms." M. S. Byam

Library J 93:2468 Je 15 '68 150w

GRIFFITH, SAMUEL E. The Chinese people's liberation army [by] Samuel B. Griffith, II. (Council on for. relations. The U.S. and China in world affairs) 398p maps $10.95 McGraw

355.3 China (People's Republic of China). Army 67-16302

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by T. M. Conrad
Commonweal 87:657 Mr 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Jon Halliday
New Statesman 75:454 Ap 5 '68 800w

Reviewed by John Gittings
Pacific Affairs 40:359 fall-winter '67-'68 800w

TLS p414 Ap 25 '68 700w

GRIFFITHS, HELEN. León; il. by Victor G. Ambrus. 190p $3.50; lib bdg $4.25 Doubleday

Dogs—Stories 68-10602

"When young Hilario found the mongrel, later called León, he already had an interest in medicine. The boy was able to nurse the dog to full health and they grew to be constant companions in the pre-Civil War Spain. When Hilario has to leave to pursue studies the dog is mistreated and eventually is forced to become a killer in order to survive." (Best Sell) "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:465 Mr 1 '68 110w

"A memorable story of the relationship between dog and man, notable for its understanding of canine instincts, and moving for its presentation of idyllic companionship and deepest misery. . . . Avoiding a Black Beauty kind of pathos, the author conveys the intelligent responsiveness between an animal and its master. In addition, she has created a vivid picture of the Castilian sheep country and its villages." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:177 Ap '68 190w

"León barely manages to survive under a succession of cruel masters and, ultimately, on his own, as the author parallels man's inhumanity to one animal with man's inhumanity to man during the 1936 insurrection. The reunion of León and Hilario brings the story to a happy conclusion. The complex plot is well unified, and the characterizations are sensitive. The brutal realism of the dog's situation is handled with skill and little sentimentality." E. M. Guiney

Library J 93:881 F 15 '68 160w

TLS p1157 N 30 '67 140w

GRIFFITHS, JOHN C. Afghanistan; with a historical note by Sir Olaf Caroe. 179p maps $5 Praeger

958.1 Afghanistan—Politics and government 67-19582

"Within the context of the country's historical and strategic role, the author analyzes the implications of the Russian preeminence for East-West relations and for the Sino-Soviet conflict. . . . [He also describes]—based on personal observation and interviews with leading Afghans—the political and social situation in this country where the twentieth century is breaking in on the Middle Ages." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Convinced that the overall picture is one of Afghanistan's overwhelming and increasing dependence on Russian rubles and equipment, Griffiths argues that the Afghan economy is heavily in pawn to its Soviet neighbor, which has already won over the West in this troubled land. He concludes that all else (unity, existence, political development) in this landlocked kingdom depends on the success of economic development in the next 20 years. The book's merits lie in fundamental questions raised in the contemporary context, as well as in the useful appendices and index. Undocumented, largely based on personal observations and interviews. . . . [it is] intended for general and undergraduate readers."

Choice 5:393 My '68 150w

"The first full-length study of Afghanistan from a British publisher in many years [this] covers the history swiftly, to deal more fully with the current political and economic situation."

Economist 224:419 J1 29 '67 40w

GRIGSON, GEOFFREY. More Shapes and stories; a book about pictures, by Geoffrey and Jane Grigson. 70p il $5.95 Vanguard

701 Art—Juvenile literature 67-20942

The authors "insist, by their choice and comment, that good pictures do not divide into 'old master' or 'modern,' into 'like nature' or 'abstract,' and they show how art comes out of experiencing a world common to us all." (Publisher's note) "Age ten and up." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. B. King

Book World p12 Mr 17 '68 130w

"A potpourri of art from various periods and schools, this invites sophisticated browsing by the person with a strong interest and good background in art. Well reproduced, the pictures range from an 11th century manuscript painting of Noah's Ark to Picasso's 'Femme Fleur.' Many will be new discoveries to young people, and therefore in those cases where only a detail is shown of several important and complex pictures, the total meaning of these works of art is lost to the uninitiated. The text . . . continues the adventures in seeing begun in Shapes and Stories [BRD 1965]." M. B. Stephenson

Library J 92:4260 N 15 '67 100w [YA]

"While [this] book contains plates that are too murky to inspire anything but visual fatigue, it is in the relation of words to pictures that [its] interest resides. . . . Without a trace of condescension; [the Grigsons] pack an amazing quantity of history, literature (including excellent quotations) and plain-spoken observation into their commentaries on works as different as Crivelli's 'Annunciation' and Miro's 'The Harlequin's Carnival.' . . . One is never in any doubt about their closeness to—and affection for—the pictures they are discussing and the poems and other literary materials they introduce with an evident pleasure and an exemplary tact." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ja 7 '68 300w

GRIGSON, JANE, jt. auth. More Shapes and stories. See Grigson, G.

GRIMALDI, JOSEPH. Memoirs of Joseph Grimaldi, by Charles Dickens, with il. by George Cruikshank; ed. by Richard Findlater, with new notes and introduction. 311p $6.95 Stein & Day

792.2 68-13245

"Grimaldi, [the English clown,] had finished his autobiography a few months before his death in 1837, and had handed the . . . manuscript to Wilks, a literary hack, for cutting and revision. Wilks's version was badly edited, with many unverified interpolations, and with . . . substitutions of reported for direct speech. It was this version that was bought by Richard Bentley, the publisher, and given to the young Dickens to re-edit. Dickens changed the whole narrative into the third person . . . and told 'some of the stories in my own way.' (Christian Science Monitor) Index of people.

"This condensed and objective account lacks the intimacy, the truly revealing touch, that one imagines would almost certainly have been present in that original version told in the first person. Nevertheless, Dickens knew his job as editor, and the book is very entertaining reading. . . . It offers us interesting glimpses of a rowdy, badly policed, rather squalid London in the late 18th and early 19th centuries; and of the theater of the day. . . . We have in Grimaldi himself a moving, if not very profound, study of a toiling genius . . . who charmed all men with his art and humor while, in the conventional but not the less laudable tradition of the clown, he confronted bravely the hardships, and often tragic circumstances of his private life. . . . Mr. Findlater, who has himself written a biography of Grimaldi, has added an excellent introductory chapter. . . . [His notes] correct innumerable errors that have crept into the text. Altogether, a very worthwhile publication." Eric Forbes-Boyd

Christian Science Monitor p9 Je 7 '68 800w

"The Memoirs of Joseph Grimaldi, edited by 'Boz' with illustrations by George Cruikshank, appeared in 1838. As early as 1846 a new edition with notes by Charles Whitehead appeared and other editions have been published over the years. Nonetheless, this new edition is a fine addition to the library of theater biography. Joseph Grimaldi (1779-1837) remains one of the outstanding clowns of the English speaking theater. The book contains a tremendous amount of rare information about the theater of his time and Mr. Findlater's notes for the new edition are both scholarly and interesting." Paul Myers

Library J 93:2480 Je 15 '68 100w

GRIMM, CHARLIE. Jolly Cholly's story: Baseball, I love you! [by] Charlie Grimm with Ed Prell; introd. by Bill Veeck. 242p il $4.95 Regnery

B or 92 Baseball 68-18274

"The first-person story of . . . the celebrated player, manager, and left-handed banjo player . . . starting over fifty years ago." (Publisher's note)

"Despite a sometimes confusing style caused by incongruent flashbacks, this fun-loving son of an immigrant house painter tells his love story complete with purple passages like winning pennants, eating contests, talking Casey Stengel out of retirement in 1944, and practical jokes. The blue moments are there, too, such as never winning a World Series in four attempts and losing managerships. These disappointments are understandable to Jolly Cholly, but baseball's current lack of frivolity and gaiety, because of a strict businesslike atmosphere, is beyond him. This book is likely to appeal most to older baseball fans." M. D. Dygert

Library J 93:1914 My 1 '68 140w

"Here are tales of Gabby Hartnett, Rabbit Maranville, Cotton Tierney, Kiki Cuyler, of basestealer Max Carey and Chief Yellowhorse, the bibulous relief pitcher; of a day when bench-jockeying could induce blind rage on the field, when players really got to know one another (and the manager) through card games and by-play and thinking up pranks. . . . Jollity aside, Grimm unloads now and then. He hates night baseball (still not played at Wrigley Field). He feels that his compassionate way of handling players was the right one; he criticizes the Cub farm system . . . and claims umpires today are too thin-skinned. . . . [He] lets you revisit and view again a different kind of game and player. It is a glorious trip." Rex Lardner

N Y Times Bk R p12 Ag 4 '68 370w

GRIMM, JACOB. Jorinda and Jorinel, by the Brothers Grimm; tr. by Elizabeth Shub; il. by Adrienne Adams. unsp lib bdg $3.89 Scribner

398.2 Fairy tales. Folklore—Germany—Juvenile literature 68-12517

A new English rendition of the Grimms' tale of an ugly old witch who "casts spells on those who come too near her castle and transforms beauteous maidens into birds, which she imprisons in cages. Jorinda, the maiden turned into a nightingale, and Joringel, her lover who succeeds in freeing her, are a romantic couple." (Book World) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"It is Adrienne Adams' pictures that give this new edition of Jorinda and Joringel its distinction. . . . Story and settings are given true fairy-tale atmosphere through the artist's use of glowing colors." Polly Goodwin
Book World p16 Je 9 '68 160w

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry
Christian Science Monitor pB3 My 2 '68 100w

Horn Bk 44:408 Ag '68 160w

"[This lively text is] complemented by illustrations infused with the vital warmth of bright colors—altogether a delightful book." M. J. Shapiro

Library J 93:2729 J1 '68 100w

Reviewed by S. G. Lanes
N Y Times Bk pt 2, p55 My '68 50w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:65 N 9 '68 90w

GRIMM, WILHELM, jt. auth. Jorinda and Joringel. See Grimm, J.

GRIMM, WILLIAM C. Familiar trees of America. 240p il $5.95; to lib & schools $5.11
Harper

582 Trees—North America 67-13713

The author of Recognizing Native Shrubs (BRD 1966) presents an illustrated introduction to 119 species of representative North American trees indigenous north of Mexico. Bibliography. Index.

"[An] excellent book. . . . [Grimm's] selection of kinds is well made. . . . The text, easy to read, informative, and reliable, is embellished with delightful reproductions of pencil drawings of the species he discusses and small maps indicating their geographical distribution. Appendixes include an illustrated glossary of botanical terms, a key or guide to identification of common trees, [and] a list of extraordinarily large specimen trees. . . . Recommended." E. C. Hall

Library J 93:563 F 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by G. M. Glixon
Sat R 50:41 N 18 '67 20w

GRIMSTED, DAVID. Melodrama unveiled: American theater and culture, 1800-1850. 285p $8.95 Univ. of Chicago press
812 American drama—History and criticism 68-15575

"Through a study of the development of the American theater during the first half of the 19th Century, . . . [the author] links the popularity of melodrama with the economic, social, and political beliefs being evolved by the 'popular mind' during the transitional period from the Age of the Enlightenment to the Age of Romanticism." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Grimsted gives an excellent picture of the theatrical world of the era. He includes a description of the career of William Dunlap, the most prominent of the early theatrical managers, evaluations of the efforts of dramatic critics of the age, a sprightly description of the behavior of audiences and actors of the time, and a review of the types of plays presented. He ends with an exposition of the structure of melodrama and the manner in which it reflected contemporary national ethos. Based largely on original sources, this work should appeal to scholars and informed laymen and those interested in the theater. It is suitable for college and university libraries and large public libraries." D. R. Picht

Library J 93:1496 Ap 1 '68 190w

"The best book on its subject that I know and one of the few American theatrical histories that can be recommended to the general reader. . . . [The] book is a product of thought, not merely of plodding research, yet it is documented thoroughly. (But why so few illustrations—and only in the endpapers?)" Stanley Kauffmann

New Repub 159:29 S 28 '68 1350w

"Composing his book in the style of an academic thesis, Mr. Grimsted has gone to primary sources and inserted a fresh quotation in nearly every sentence. By putting one fact on top of another he has made a contribution to scholarship, not to the pleasures of reading. His book is more assembled than written—but anyone prepared to cope with a pedantic style will find savory material here." Brooks Atkinson

N Y Times Bk R p6 S 29 '68 700w

GRINDROD, MURIEL. Italy. 260p il maps $7 Praeger

945 Italy—History 68-19849

The first part of this book discusses the history of Italy from the early beginnings to the end of World War II. The author's emphasis "is on the postwar years. . . . She describes the political parties . . . [the] efforts of modern Italian statesmen . . . Italy's economic resources, its foreign trade, and the efforts of the Cassa per il Mezzogiorno to revivify the South. In addition, she explains the Italian educational system, the position of women in Italian society, relations between Church and State, and the special problems posed by Sicily and Sardinia." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Even old hands at Italian politics may need to be reminded, from time to time, of some of the details of some of the repeated cabinet crises of the last twenty-three years; and a sixth-former or undergraduate who wishes to learn a little of Italy's past, or a great deal about its present economic and governmental problems, will find Miss Grindrod's guidance invaluable. . . . She is stunningly well-informed; but all too often the result is that she sounds like a supernaturally detached cricket commentator. . . . She might, with profit, have devoted more space than she does to the analysis of the Italian class system and the distribution of power within Italian society. . . . [However] the book is, within its limits, a very capable and clearheaded treatment of its subject. And it has first-rate illustrations."

Economist 228:36 Ag 24 '68 290w

"[Miss Grindrod] has her opinions and is not afraid to express them. . . . The book is obviously geared to an English audience [but] . . . it is a solid work that is likely to appeal to the student of history and to the informed layman. . . . [It] is an essential purchase for subject collections." J. A. Boromé

Library J 93:2487 Je 15 '68 310w

GRODZINS, MORTON. The American system; a new view of government in the United States; ed. by Daniel J. Elazar. 404p $7.50; to schools $6 Rand McNally

320.973 Federal government 66-13444

In this description of "federalism in the United States, . . . [the author] undertakes an evaluation of its effectiveness. . . . His thesis is that the federal system is not . . . a three-layer cake with powers and functions nicely divided and stacked—ranging from local to state to national. . . . [but] rather a conglomerate which intermingles powers and functions in such a mass and in such relationships as appears best calculated to achieve social goals and objectives or to satisfy social desires. . . . [He alleges] that governments in the federal system best serve their purposes and best discharge their functions when the traditional division of powers . . . is abandoned in favor of governmental co-operation and the sharing of functions and responsibilities." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

"The book's highlights in Chapter 7, 'Local Is as Local Does,' . . . come through as a perceptive comment on the notion of localness; in Chapter 10, . . . [the author] relates American parties to the federal system more expertly than I have seen done elsewhere. . . . [In Chapter 12] centralization and decentralization are examined and placed in proper perspective. Nowhere is the author's fresh, imaginative, inquiring mind more in evidence than in these sections. . . . The editor [following the author's death] has attempted to bring the volume into focus through numerous notes and emendations, with what must be judged less than complete success. Finally, it must be recorded that the book suffers from some little repetition. . . . [Nevertheless, this is] a thoughtful and imaginative book." R. C. Martin

Am Pol Sci R 61:1108 D '67 700w

"The editor emphasizes, implicitly and explicitly, the author's unconventional thinking, his unorthodox approach, and his radical suggestions. Yet an even older generation of students of American government will not be shocked. At the same time they should be grateful to the author for his masterful characterizations of twentieth-century federalism and to the editor for his painstaking care in making Mr. Grodzins' thesis readily available to the reading public." H. M. Dorr

GRODZINS, MORTON—Continued

Ann Am Acad 374:192 N '67 490w

Choice 4:1444 F '68 120w

GROETHUYSEN, BERNARD. The bourgeois; Catholicism vs. capitalism in eighteenth-century France; introd. by Benjamin Nelson; tr. from the French by Mary Ilford. 268p $5.95 Holt

901.93 Middle classes. Catholic Church in France. Christianity and economics 67-12908

The author's thesis is that "while the growing bourgeois spirit was critical of the Church, its attack on authority and superstition was also an assertion of its own sense of class. The Church which knew how to accommodate both the nobility and the poor in its providential view of history, was naturally hostile to the critical and independent spirit of the new class, but by the end of the eighteenth century, when the bourgeoisie no longer felt the need to demonstrate that they were different from the people, they would argue less with the clergy and even speak highly of them." (Publisher's note) Originally published in 1927 as L'Eglise et la Bourgeoisie, being the first volume of the author's Origines de l'esprit bourgeois en France.

Reviewed by C. B. O'Keefe

America 118:353 Mr 16 '68 350w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:134 Ap '68 150w

"[This book] evokes varied judgments. Some sentences need a second reading. Even though Bishop Jacques Bossuet is a towering figure, the author is hardly justified in quoting him so often. Although Groethuysen differentiates among clergymen . . . he holds too closely to the stereotypes. . . . Too often he writes abstractly without examples or with too few. Unfortunately, the usefulness of the book is reduced by lack of an index and bibliography. Fortunately, the footnotes are very numerous. They and the multitude of quotations, from Bossuet down to parish priests, provide much of the book's utility."

Choice 5:670 J1 '68 180w

Christian Century 85:204 F 14 '68 20w

Reviewed by Kenneth Rexroth

Commonweal 88:418 Je 21 '68 1050w

"It is extremely gratifying to have this major work in intellectual history now made available in English. . . . [Mr. Groethuysen] demonstrates the changing class and religious attitudes in the 18th Century by focusing on the question of the relations of Church and society. . . . [His work] will appeal to all students of history." Judah Adelson

Library J 93:543 F 1 '68 160w

"[This] is a poor book, highly intelligent in concept, feeble in execution. . . . At no point in his book does Groethuysen mention any 'bourgeois' by name, analyze individual beliefs, describe their religious or charitable activity, nor does he give a collective description of the middle class. . . . Anyone going to this book for a careful, scholarly analysis of the French bourgeois of the eighteenth century and their attitude to religion . . . would be sadly disappointed. . . . [Groethuysen] was essentially an amateur historian, and the weaknesses which this induced are everywhere apparent. . . . [There] is a lack of any knowledge of Protestant history . . . for Protestants are never mentioned at all. . . . [This book is] a contribution to the sociology of religion, not to history . . . [and this contribution] lies largely in selection and arrangement of material." J. H. Plumb

N Y Rev of Books 11:29 O 24 '68 1100w

GROFF, WARREN F. The shaping of modern Christian thought, by Warren F. Groff and Donald E. Miller. 489p $10 World pub.

230 Theology. Christian ethics 68-23018

This study examines "the development of Christian thought over the past two centuries and outlines the directions that such thought is taking today. . . . Source selections taken from such writers as Lessing, Kent, Schleiermacher, Kierkegaard, and Barth [are included]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The authors] have undertaken a monumental task: gathering together and interpreting the major statements on three classic problems of modern theology—uncertainty about historical fact, the shaking of ethical absolutes, criticism of objective knowledge of God. . . . Their purpose is not to deliver a finished position but to outline the various challenges to dogmatic slumber and to work out a typology of the suggestions that have emerged. . . . Most of the selections . . . are easily accessible elsewhere: but the volume includes a new translation by Donald Miller of the major part of Troeltsch's important essay 'Fundamental Problems of Ethics' and a hard-to-find selection from [Jonathan] Edwards analyzing the 'sense of the heart.' The selections are challenging, for in many cases they are concentrated passages in which the entire positions of the thinkers presented are distilled." Eugene TeSelle

Christian Century 85:1476 N 20 '68 500w

"[The authors] have designed this book to meet the needs of a theological curriculum in college or seminary without making it a stereotyped systematic theology. . . . The book is challenging to all readers, but is especially valuable to those interested in liberal Christian theology and ethics. Recommended for the general reader and scholars." Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:3010 S 1 '68 130w

GROHMANN, WILL. Paul Klee [tr. by Norbert Gutermann]. 167p il col il $15 Abrams

759.94 Klee, Paul

67-14056

This book includes a biography and a short chapter on the artist's graphic work. In addition, the author presents "48 large color plates of pastels and paintings, each of which is accompanied by an analysis of the meaning of the work and a description of its colors and subject content." (Library J) Bibliography.

"While the analysis of Klee's art in Grohmann's essay and descriptions is not as detailed as [C.] Giedion-Welcker's Paul Klee [BRD 1952] . . . it is done with a fluency that supports Grohmann's reputation as the leading authority on Klee. This book . . . is a fine introduction to his work and is recommended for the undergraduate student and general reader."

Choice 5:475 Je '68 140w

"[A] handsomely produced book. . . . Illustrations are excellent. . . . [Mr. Grohmann's] analyses will find eager readers in art schools and informed laymen will be brought to a clearer understanding of the artist's world. . . . Recommended for art school libraries and all art collections." W. J. Dane

Library J 93:742 F 15 '68 190w

"This is at least the fifth biographical-critical monograph that Dr. Grohmann has written on Klee . . . [and] he has made no effort to find something different or fresh to say. . . . Since Dr. Grohmann's attitude to Klee and all his works is that of unmitigated hero-worship, he cannot help loading his text with exaggerated (and highly disputable) claims. . . . [He also] carries this tone of wonderment and adulation over into the writing and his supposedly explanatory notes. . . . The quality of reproduction is good. But why, when he says in his text that he had some 9,000 works to choose from, did Dr. Grohmann select so many dull and inept works which do nothing to convince one that Klee was a great artist?"

TLS p1252 D 28 '67 450w

GROSE, MICHAEL W., jt. ed. Organization and handling of bibliographic records by computer. See Cox, N.S.M.

GROSS, BERTRAM M., ed. A great society? 362p $3.50 Basic bks.

309.173 U.S.—Social policy. U.S.—Economic policy. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century 68-11201

This collection of articles attempts to define the direction of American society. It was inspired by public policy questions presented by President Johnson to a faculty seminar at Syracuse University in 1965. The contributors, members of the academic community, discuss "issues of foreign policy, private and local initiative, the role of the individual, art, science, social justice, the 'welfare state,' the 'New Left,' and the 'New Economics.' They probe the politics of affluence, shifting political coalitions, institutional rigidities, presidential leadership, and the 'intelligence gap' with respect to the changing state of the nation." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 5:556 Je '68 130w

Reviewed by Irving Howe
Harper 237:101 J1 '68 2400w

"The White House ought to find useful suggestions and stimulating ideas in the papers of Mr. Gross, Bell, Drucker, and other contributors although it probably won't like the criticisms of H. Marcuse and H. J. Morgenthau. The layman who 'listens in' on the dialogue may be overwhelmed by the great variety of subjects covered. Indeed, he may never get to the more readable parts of the book once he encounters the difficult second chapter about a model of American society by R. M. Williams, Jr. For academic and large public libraries." David Cooley

Library J 93:1014 Mr 1 '68 160w

"The collection is chock full of the special qualities of current political thought in this country—the bitterness and anguish, strain and arrogance, brilliance and absurdity we have come to expect. . . . The best essay in the volume [is] 'Local and Private Initiative in the Great Society,' by one of our most excellent and charming social thinkers, N. E. Long. . . . The contribution of Daniel Bell is provocative, informative, and well-done. Herbert Marcuse is irritating on a high level. . . . There is a very graceful essay by F. E. Manuel, a classicist kind of historian; and even a blueprint for decision-making in the culture business by A. Toffler. The editor's concluding essay . . . is an excellent checklist or characterizing agenda of forward-looking American problems. What holds the collection together besides the energy and industry of the editor? It is the mood of the politicalized academy, and the almost ferociously future-focused thought." D. T. Bazelon

New Repub 158:38 Je 15 '68 2450w

Reviewed by Michael Harrington
N Y Times Bk R p32 O 27 '68 900w

GROSS, BERTRAM M. The state of the nation: social systems accounting. 166p $4.50; pa $2.85
Barnes & Noble

339.2 Social surveys [66-68678]

The author "deplores the macro-economist's overuse or misuse of quantification as the solution to broader social meanings. . . . [He] pleads for an integration with the other social sciences such as psychology and sociology and for the development of more quality indices as an avenue for return to reality. . . . Gross develops most of his thesis for social accounting around system structure and performance. He moves from a general model of social organization and its abstract ideas at the apex of a pyramid down to the specifically detailed areas of social, political, and economic components at the bottom." (Choice)

"The present book . . . is a revised and expanded version of a long chapter in the volume, Social Indicators, edited by Raymond A. Bauer [BRD 1967]. The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science devoted two volumes in 1967 to 'Social Goals and Indicators for American Society.' . . . In his Annals article, Amitai Etzioni describes Gross' book as 'basic to the field,' and it certainly is in the sense that it contains a detailed inventory of the structural and performance variables that must be fed into a systems model of a national society. . . . But the reader who wants to educate himself in the problems and prospects of social accounting is best advised to begin with [some of the other recent publications on this subject]." D. L. Sills

Am Soc R 33:172 F '68 650w

"A scholarly creation which breaks new ground in model building. . . . From a successful background of experience with national economic accounting, Gross . . . throws out many broad new ideas that provide a generation of further research in many areas. His style is quite readable; but he has so many implications behind his statements that the primary readership audience would be college level or above. This treatise on social system accounting should become a landmark among standard works common in these fields and will no doubt cause considerable controversy among social scientists if for no other reason than their own overspecialization."

Choice 4:718 S '67 200w

GROSS, ELIZABETH H. Public library service to children. 152p $5 Oceana

027.62 Libraries, Children's 67-24347

The author was "the director of a study on the organization and administration of work with children in public libraries which was conducted in 1957-58. The material gathered was subsequently edited by Gene I. Namovetz and published in 1963 by the American Library Association as 'Children's Services in Public Libraries.' This study, states Miss Gross, 'provided a . . . background for the selection of material to be perused and used' in this book, which purports to give 'an over-all view of the development and the present state of public library service to children with thought given to its future possibilities and potential.'" (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Bibliography. Index.

"Much will seem familiar to the well-read professional. For the untrained, however, there is much on book selection and programming that, if not fresh, has fundamental importance. The manuscript deserved an editorial treatment and production which the publishers failed to provide." Virginia Haviland

Horn Bk 44:441 Ag '68 170w

"[This] is an ambitious undertaking, but it has three major flaws: 1) it lacks a personal point of view; 2) such broad coverage can only receive superficial treatment in such a slim volume; 3) although it is not intended as a how-to-do-it kind of book, the author simply cannot resist throwing in helpful suggestions—how to compose a booklist, how to arrange exhibits, how to learn a story, etc. Some mention must also be made of the poor editorial work. . . . The traditional philosophy is sound, and the statements not untrue, but there is a lack of vigor, a lack of now throughout the book." Virginia Heffernan

Library J 93:1748 Ap 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman

Library Q 38:280 J1 '68 500w

GROSS, HARVEY. Plans for an orderly Apocalypse, and other poems. 43p $4.95 Univ. of Mich. press

811

68-13662

"In addition to [the author's] own poems, the volume contains . . . translations and recreations of poems by Stefan George, Georg Trakl, Gottfried Benn, and Rainer Maria Rilke." (Choice) Many of the poems have been published in literary magazines.

"Gross exhibits a poetry filled with a sense of harmony and vision. His poems are urbane and speak directly to the problems which men face in the 1960's; yet . . . he achieves meaning through restrained passion and sensibility rather than a strong reliance on unusual prosodic forms. . . . These poems should be as interesting to the general reader as to the scholar, for in them are harmony and beauty."

Choice 5:776 S '68 170w

"All the poems are of a kind called 'committee poetry,' that is, 'interchangeable verses written by skilled craftsmen when they feel like writing a poem but have nothing much to say.' Standard places are visited or certain things are seen and they write something; they toss off a villanelle or some other trick. . . . It is harmless, but there is no innovation, no passion." Herman Elstein

Library J 93:2882 Ag '68 90w

GROSS, LEONARD. The last, best hope: Eduardo Frei & Chilean democracy. 240p $5.95
Random house

983 Frei Montalva, Eduardo. Chile—Politics and government 66-23500

This "is an account of the rise of Eduardo Frei [to the Presidency of Chile] and of his first two years in office. An addendum chapter records significant events of the fall of 1966 and spring of 1967." (New Repub) Index.

Choice 5:255 Ap '68 120w

"This book is a highly readable report of Look correspondent and journalist Leonard Gross's experiences in Chile since 1961. Mr. Gross, an admitted admirer of President Frei, provides an analysis of events and people which gives the reader the necessary background to understand contemporary movements. An important contribution to the literature about the democratic left which will be enjoyed by the general reader and valued by scholars." F. E. Kidder

Library J 92:3046 S 15 '67 100w

GROSS, LEONARD—Continued

"[This] book is a sore disappointment, doing scant justice to an important story. Its lack of detail (such as the personal relationship between Frei and Allende, who traveled abroad together as senators) and reliance on secondary material suggests an insufficient exposure to the country and to the people who are making it move. On the positive side, Gross does present a useful portrait of Frei, the serious dedicated, honest politician. . . . Gross' analysis of the Catholic Church in Chile is another strong point. . . . Of the book's weaknesses, the most serious is [the] inadequate treatment of the Christian Democratic Party. . . . The discussion of Frei's 'Chileanization' of the copper industry is equally shallow. . . . In addition to its superficiality, Gross' book is premature. A look at three or four years of Christian Democratic rule in Chile would give a more meaningful indication of Frei's chances." J. A. Page
New Repub 157:30 D 23 '67 1150w

"Despite many minor errors and oversimplifications [the author tells his story] well. He has had the advantage of many conversations with Frei and with other Chileans. Their reported remarks enliven the narrative and give color to its fabric. But his intimacy with the Christian Democrats and his admiration for Frei bring one disadvantage. The author has adopted an attitude that political necessity forced on the Christian Democrats. They had to describe the situation of Chile in 1964 as much worse than it really was, and they had to minimize the achievements of the preceding Alessandri Government in matters of reform. Mr. Gross follows their lead and brushes aside the genuine progress under Alessandri in tax and land reform and in building housing, roads, schools and hospitals." C. W. Cole
N Y Times Bk R p3 D 17 '67 1000w
Va Q R 44:cxvii summer '68 230w

GROSSMAN, ALFRED. The do-gooders. 229p $4.95 Doubleday 68-17790

This book "contains the further adventures of Marie Svobodna Forbes of [Grossman's] earlier novel, Marie Beginning [BRD 1965]. The story is narrated by Francis Kennan, who . . . shares Marie's apartment on a platonic basis. . . . Through these pages move an assortment of characters as Marie involves herself and Francis in her schemes to gain power and give aid to the masses. Her one success is the blowing up of a section of freeway to slow the expanding highway system." (Library J)

"The book is an unfocused series of bits, a collection of aimless meanderings looking for something to say. . . . Grossman wants to be involved, engagé—but he comes on like a 1936 liberal. Perhaps this is what happens when a humorist tries to go straight. . . . Despite occasional flashes of the old Grossman there are not enough of raisins in [this novel] to make it worth picking through." Robert Las-son

Book World p22 S 8 '68 400w

Reviewed by Maybelle Lacey

Library J 93:2690 J1 '68 150w

"[A] fundamental problem with [this book] is that everyone in it is completely superficial. The author's view of human life in New York City seems to be cynical to the point of nihilism. Out of this moral position, of course, the stuff of comedy is often woven—but Mr. Grossman . . . seems to feel that even sin has lost its zest. The sexual encounters that occur with depressing frequency are completely joyless. . . . This novel seems entirely to lack the texture of life. We don't really know how the characters live, where they go, what they think, or even how they make love, although this is an act which occurs more than any other in these pages." Peter Buitenhuis
N Y Times Bk R p56 S 8 '68 550w
Time 92:185 J1 26 '68 1000w

"[There is] some good hard-boiled dialogue. . . . Otherwise one suspects that the comedy depends too much on local language and references to travel far from New York without losing edge."

TLS p93 Ja 25 '68 170w

GROSSMAN, GREGORY. Economic systems. 120p $4.50; pa $1.75 Prentice-Hall 330.1 Economics 67-10741

This volume "compare, and contrasts the modified market system of the U. S., the command economy of the Soviet Union, and the socialist market economy of Yugoslavia. Specific criteria of evaluation (plenty, growth, stability, security, efficiency, equity and justice, economic sovereignty) are established and . . . applied not only to existing systems but the economic models upon which the systems are based." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The approach of the book is analytical rather than descriptive, although enough factual material is presented to buttress the theoretical and institutional analysis. The treatment of the various topics is sophisticated and comprehensive, considering political and social aspects where relevant. At the same time broad and deep, it reveals Grossman's unusual grasp of the field of comparative economic systems. In dealing with controversial and ideologically sensitive matters, he is fair and judicious. . . . Most striking is the fact that his case studies are presented and analyzed within the theoretical framework developed at the beginning of the book. This feature provides a coherence lacking in a number of books in the field. . . . The table of contents incorrectly lists Chapter 7 as dealing with 'The Soviet Market Economy: Yugoslavia.' In the chapter itself, Yugoslavia is properly described as possessing a socialist market economy which emerged as a reaction to experience with the Soviet-type economy." Morris Bornstein
Am Econ R 58:601 Je '68 800w

"[This is] one of a series of paperbacks written by outstanding scholars for a series edited by Otto Eckstein and designed for classroom use as texts. . . . The book is readable. . . . The short selected readings list refers to most standard contemporary comparative systems works. . . . Usefulness will be limited to the classroom; few libraries will consider it a necessary addition."

Choice 5:95 Mr '68 180w

GROSSMAN, SHELLY. The struggle for life in the animal world; written and photographed by Shelly Grossman. 128p $4.95 Gros-set

574.5 Animals—U.S.—Juvenile Literature. Ecology—Juvenile literature 67-23802

A description of the interrelation of plants and animal life in various parts of the United States. "Ages eleven to fifteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"It is a pleasure to come across this excellent book which shows how these creatures are tied together in a great web of life. . . . The book is worth buying just for the photographs. Most are in color and they are spectacular. The close-ups of a great variety of animals give this book an extra dimension of perception." Marian Sorenson
Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 2 '67 150w

"Mr. Grossman has tackled a big subject, nothing less than the balance of nature. His arena is the United States—mountain, swamp, desert, forest—and his camera proves mightier than his pen. Because he is evidently the luckiest or, more probably, one of the most patient and skillful photographers ever to drag camera and tripod from tideland to timber line, he is able to illustrate many of the basic ecological points dealt with, sometimes rather hastily, in the narrative. Occasionally, one gets the feeling that an area is being touched upon only because there happened to be an appropriate photograph (often in color and beautifully reproduced) in Mr. Grossman's portfolio. But this is a minor quibble." Robert Berkvist
N Y Times Bk R p42 N 12 '67 230w
[YA]

GROSSMAN, WILLIAM L. Modern Brazilian short stories; tr. with an introd. by William L. Grossman. 167p $4.95 Univ. of Calif. press
Short stories—Collections 67-13379

"The seventeen stories in this anthology have been . . . chosen to provide a . . . representative range of recent and contemporary Brazilian themes and styles." (Publisher's note) "Each story is followed by a short biographical sketch of the author and a description of his other works." (N Y Times Bk R)

Choice 4:1249 Ja '68 150w

"These stories represent the variety of regional spirit to be found in the vastness of Brazil; moreover, they represent the keen appreciation of and insight into the sadness, the joy, the paradox, and the ironic complexities of the life of man. The selections are all short—ideal for the running reader—and the economical development of believable character and significant action is a delight to read." T. F. Smith

Library J 92:1177 Mr 15 '67 150w

"[This] anthology must be controversial to some degree, but I don't feel that any major name, with the possible exception of Carlos Drummond de Andrade, has been left unrepresented. Mr. Grossman has included two classics of the Brazilian Modernist movement: Mário de Andrade's 'It Can Hurt Plenty' and Antônio de Alcântara Machado's 'Gaetaninho.' The succeeding generations have been perceptively represented at their best by such authors as Aníbal Machado, João Guimarães Rosa and Clarice Lispector. . . . The best of these stories are masterpieces." Alexander Coleman

N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 9 '67 140w

"[None of the stories] is specifically related to . . . any artistic movement [which diminishes] . . . one of the two principal attractions of any anthology—its over-all controlled form and character. . . . [However] most of the stories are effective, quite straightforward narratives or sketches in which personalities dominate rather than ideas. . . . The English translations by a professor of economics at New York University are uniformly good, but one has the suspicion that a number of distinctive literary styles—in particular that of Guimarães Rosa—have lost part of their distinctiveness owing to the uniformity maintained in the renderings." D. A. Yates

Sat R 50:34 Je 1 '67 490w

Va R 44:xvi winter '68 70w

GROSSMANN, RICHARD. Mexico: the land, the art and the people; phot. by Ursula Bernath [tr. and adapted by Marie-Christine Hellin]. 60p $19.50 Universe bks.

917.2 Mexico—Description and travel 67-21785
Text and photographs combine to describe Mexico today.

"Neither adequate as travelogue or art book. . . . Can such a volume, which combines a cursory text with a plethora of reproductions, be written off as a mere coffee-table book? Indeed it can. . . . The art coverage is brief to the point of embarrassment. It is grossly overpriced. About the only salient points are [the] generalities—patronizing in theme as well as in tone of voice. [The book shows] a cold lack of persuasion. Not recommended."

Choice 5:400 My '68 110w

"This book's 40 pages of text are a poor and uneven preface to Mexico and to the photographs that follow. The 17 vignettes which, together with the introduction, comprise the text, bear such titles as 'Maya Ruins in Uxmal' and 'Fiesta in Cuetzalán.' Varying in length, accuracy, and interest, they are primarily descriptive and, too often, stylistically inept. The photographs come off better, conveying a good idea of the people, landscapes, archaeological sites, and cities. They are well keyed so that the 'Explanation of Photographs' can be used easily. Only 12 of the 165 photographs are in color, despite the jacket's promise of 'many in color.' Only rich libraries may want this book." F. L. Cinquemani

Library J 93:1131 Mr 15 '68 120w

GROUP FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF PSYCHIATRY. Normal adolescence: its dynamics and impact; formulated by the Committee on adolescence. 127p $3.95; pa $1.45 Scribner

155.5 Adolescence 68-12511

A "study of the biological, psychological, and cultural factors involved in the various stages of adolescence, from puberty to adulthood." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Utilizing a psycho-dynamic approach . . . [the authors discuss] the complex biological (physiological) changes of puberty . . . as well as their psychological and social aspects as perceived by the adolescent. . . . Problems briefly discussed include the impact of puberty; independence, masturbation, menstruation, a new body and self image, action and impulsive behavior, capacity for thought, boy-girl relationships, adolescent love, identity seeking and idealism, occupational choice, the attainment of adult prerogatives, and the resolution of adolescence. A psychological explanation is offered to explain defensive behavior of parents toward their children. . . . Every parent should find this report helpful in better self-understanding regarding their own attitudes and treatment of the new (younger) generation." J. A. Szuhay

Best Sell 28:72 My 15 '68 650w

"This is definitely not a popular book for parents on the care and comprehension of their adolescent children. . . . The language is technical, and unfortunately, at times, obscure, at least for a layman. . . . If the committee's purpose was to provide a text on adolescence for students, it is at least moderately successful." Lola Dudley

Library J 93:561 F 1 '68 130w

GRUBE, ERNST J. The world of Islam. (Landmarks of the world's art) 176p il col il $5.95 McGraw

704.948 Art, Islamic. Architecture, Islamic 66-19271

This survey contains discussions and illustrations of various "phases of Islamic art—architecture, painting, and decorative arts—from the earliest Umayyad period to the late 18th-Century art of Turkey, Iran, and India. . . . Mr. Grube is curator of the Islamic Department at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book is one of a series which] has been carefully aimed, one would judge, at the unsaturated market (if any such there be) lying between the art-book proper, the coffee-table and the Reader's Digest. Its merits are great: a sensible and genuinely international selection of illustrations; efficient and attractive layout; scholarly texts; and a fantastically low price. Its faults are what one must expect from the specification: a degree of textual compression that is sometimes stifling. . . . All in all, very good value for money."

Economist 225:xy D 2 '67 40w

"The text here is extremely well written and in itself constitutes a valuable contribution to our understanding of Islamic art. The beautifully reproduced black-and-white and color illustrations are perfectly integrated into the text, and at the same time they form a self-contained picture book. . . . Recommended for collections on eastern art and for collections where there is reader interest in Islam." David Gebhard

Library J 92:1820 My 1 '67 130w

GRUBER, FRANK. The gold gap. 192p $4.50 Dutton

68-12454

Lieutenant-Commander Sargent "escapes from a North Viet prison camp and undertakes the investigation of a multi-millionaire's fiancée. He is in turn pursued and harassed by agents of Red China who want to learn the details of his escape and feel that there is a tie-in with a former escapee from the same camp after the battle of Dienbienphu in 1954 and the disappearance at that time of some $200,000." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:11 Ap 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1023 Mr 1 '68 40w

"[This story] has many of the strong elements we have become accustomed to from Gruber. . . . A smooth job with action that's downhill all the way, though it's not so deviously plotted as some." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p35 Je 16 '68 140w

"A highly ingenious switch on the buried-treasure theme." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:32 My 25 '68 40w

GRUBER, HELMUT. International communism in the era of Lenin; a documentary history. 512p $7.50 Cornell univ. press

335.4 Communism—History. Lenin, Vladimir Il'ich 67-7311

A narrative framework accompanies selections from doctrinal statements, manifestoes, analyses, tactical decisions and polemics intended to highlight important events in Lenin's career. "The documents range from Lenin's first major exposition of the Bolshevik position in 'What Is To Be Done?' through the battles over strategy that took place in the Comintern after the end of World War I, to Zinoviev's speech in 1923 that announced the end of the Comintern's expectations for world revolution." (Nation) Chronology. Bibliographies. Index.

GRUBER, HELMUT—Continued

"[This] valuable documentary collection . . . covering the early years of the Third International until Lenin's death, points to continuities of the Lenin era not only with the Stalinism that followed, but also with the earlier Second International, which is usually presented as a completely antithetical force. . . . [This volume] will help the general reader to understand more fully those forces that have torn [the World Communist Movement] apart in more recent years. Fascination with the bewildering factional politics of the left tends at times, however, to disembowel movements somewhat from key personalities and peculiar national contexts that helped shaped them." J. H. Billington

Book World p4 N 5 '67 240w

"Gruber's unusual book happily devotes more space to actual documents of the period than to the somewhat uneven interpretive essays [one of which was written by the author,] which follow them. . . . [The author's] personal contributions are scholarly, sympathetic and informative."

Nation 206:124 Ja 22 '68 70w

GRUBER, RUTH. Israel on the seventh day.

214p pl maps $6.50 Hill & Wang

956.94 Israel-Arab War, 1967- . Israel—History 68-28036

This book consists of a "survey of Israeli history, a . . . report on the Six Day War, and an assessment of conditions in Israel and all the Middle East one year after the war." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

"The 'seventh day' of the title refers . . . to the period following the six-day war of June 1967. During this period Ruth Gruber visited Israel twice and part of her book is devoted to her personal observations on the effects of the war on certain communities in Israel—a development town, an Arab village, a refugee camp, the Gaza strip, and Jerusalem. She devotes the second part of the book to the war itself, but, except for some personal stories, there is little new in it. . . . Miss Gruber, who has been a correspondent for the New York Herald Tribune, writes well. As a personal, journalistic report of some of the problems faced by Israel the book will be of some interest to the general reader." David Shavit

Library J 93:2487 Je 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler

Nation 207:444 O 28 '68 120w

Reviewed by Emil Lengyel

Sat R 51:27 Jl 20 '68 340w

GRUBERG, MARTIN. Women in American politics: an assessment and sourcebook.

336p $7.50 Academia press

301.41 Women as politicians. U.S.—Politics and government 68-27151

A professor at Wisconsin State University "discusses the roles women have played as elected and appointed public officials, and also analyzes voting habits and political behavior of American women generally. He surveys the pioneer battles for suffrage, outlines the development of such organizations as the League of Women Voters, and describes the political efforts of women in foreign nations." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This [is a] valuable and, in many ways, fascinating work . . . filled with curious side-lights. . . . [It] includes short biographies of all congresswomen to 1967, along with lists of women who have been elected or appointed to important positions on the federal, state, and local levels. A lengthy 'footnotes and references' section is a valuable source bibliography. Highly recommended for public, academic and specialized libraries." Susanne Haffner

Library J 93:3770 O 15 '68 240w

Reviewed by B. M. Solomon

Sat R 51:34 N 2 '68 600w

GRUEN, JOHN. Close-up.

206p il $7.50 Viking

790.2 Performing arts. Artists 67-26916

"In this collection nearly 40 personalities in the world of theater, movies, art, and music

[are interviewed]. . . . Many of these interviews first appeared in the pages of New York's late World Journal Tribune." (Library J)

"Gruen's encounters involve such attention getters as Federico Fellini, Samuel Beckett, Leon Krole, Joan Miro, Francis Poulenc, Virgil Thomson, Leonard Bernstein, Tennessee Williams, Charles Addams, Stella Adler, Lauren Bacall, Candice Bergen and Bette Davis, yet the collection fails to come up to expectations. Instead of thoughtful in-depth interviews, one finds superficial sketches which give little insight into the complex personalities upon whom the author focuses attention. When the results of forty encounters are compressed into a mere 206 pages the result is bound to be somewhat shallow." Sister M. G. Duffy

Best Sell 28:50 My 1 '68 440w

"As a critic and student of art history, as a composer and newspaper columnist, Mr. Gruen is more than equipped to interview celebrities in the arts. . . . [He] knows how to provoke and entice creative people to talk interestingly about themselves and their work. . . . [These interviews] have a depth and seriousness not often encountered in newspaper pieces. The most provocative and revealing of these interviews are those with Tennessee Williams, Jackson Pollock's widow, Lee Krasner, Leonard Bernstein, and George S. Kaufman's daughter. Mr Gruen is not afraid to express his own feelings about any one of the people he interviews. . . . His photographs give further glimpses into the private world of the celebrity. . . . This entertaining and informative book is recommended for all adult collections." Henry Halpern

Library J 93:1143 Mr 15 '68 220w

GRUEN, JOHN. The private world of Leonard Bernstein; phot. by Ken Heyman.

191p $12.50 Viking

B or 92 Bernstein, Leonard 68-29354

Through text and photographs the author shows the musician amid family and friends. There are pictures of Bernstein "scuba-diving, or making funny faces, or sweating after a concert, or having his hair cut by his wife." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor pB9 N 29 '68 160w

"The title of this book is as appropriate as possible. . . . I think it will appeal to many persons: professional musicians will read it to learn how Bernstein learned from Koussevitzky, Mitropoulos, Walter, and others, and they will get an informed opinion on many perplexing problems in music today; any artist will be interested in how Bernstein himself developed as an artist, a composer in particular; many other readers will be interested in the family relationships of the Bernsteins, in their quiet humanity. John Gruen, whose research for this book included a summer with the Bernsteins and some time with them in New York and Connecticut, has written a superb book. . . . There are 150 black-and-white photographs accompanying the text." Baird Hastings

Library J 93:3126 S 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:4742 D 15 '68 110w [YA]

"This is an excellent book of its type, which is the genre of the illustrated authorized campaign biography. . . . All the elements of the public-statesman's biography are here, but the reader is likely to be drawn through the book by its way of fastening on profoundly trivial things. . . . We enjoy this kind of voyeurism, this authorized, not particularly risky peeping into the lives of the great. And the authors give us rich opportunities. . . . The gossip is good stuff, full of between-the-lines potentialities." Donal Henahan

N Y Times Bk R p6 N 10 '68 390w

Reviewed by M. R. Weiss

Sat R 51:55 N 30 '68 50w

GRUENING, ERNEST. Vietnam folly, by Ernest Gruening and Herbert Wilton Beaser.

664p il $8.95 Nat. press inc.

327.73 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 67-29093

A U.S. senator and his legislative director present an "inventory of current arguments against United States involvement in Vietnam. . . . [They outline events from the] beginnings of U.S. involvement in Vietnam to the last steps in 'open-ended escalation.' . . . [It is their contention that the war is] a purely Vietnamese phenomenon, rooted in the country's peculiar social and political conditions created by the French colonial regime . . . [and is] essentially a civil war in the South. . . . [They offer a] plan for de-escalating the war and for the gradual withdrawal of American forces." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"The novelty of this book . . . is that it comes from the pen of an able Senator of the U.S., senior in age and involved with the country's public problems for well over half a century. Gruening was among the first to question the Johnson Administration's Viet-Nam policy and has consistently opposed the American involvement largely on grounds of its domestic repercussions and its irrelevance to the nation's security. One-third of the volume is devoted to documentation, much of which is available elsewhere in print. The argument of the book is not objectively presented. However, the book is a must for all college and university libraries because of the importance of the topic and the author."

Choice 5:680 J1 '68 130w

"Senator Gruening, a leading angry dove and one of two senators who voted against the Tonkin resolution . . . is most critical of legislative inaction and feels Congress has fiddled while the President burns Asia. Viet-Nam Folly, a poorly printed book, is a filing cabinet of dates and quotations, with 250 pages of appendixes, which only comprehensive collections will need." Collin Clark

Library J 93:2010 My 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo

Nation 206:613 My 8 '68 100w

"[Although] both useful and politically important, [this is not] . . . as good a book as it could have been. The volume was obviously put together in great haste; it is poorly organized and contains many unnecessary repetitions. . . . [It] is really a gigantic political pamphlet. As such, however, it is more impressive than anything of its kind so far published in the United States. The wide range, if not always the power of argument is [its] main virtue. . . . One of the best chapters in the book discusses the prospects for bringing peace to Vietnam." Joseph Buttinger

N Y Times Bk R p3 Mr 10 '68 1000w

GUARDINI, ROMANO. The virtues: on forms of moral life; tr. by Stella Lange. 163p $4.95 Regnery

241.4 Christian ethics 67-28495

The author "uses phenomenalism to explore the way virtue is practiced in people's lives. Among the virtues he discusses are 'disinterestedness,' 'courtesy,' and 'justice before God.'" (Library J) This is a translation of Tugenden: Meditationen über Gestalten sittlichen Lebens, published in Germany in 1963.

"A small but profitable volume on the qualities of the good man . . . with a particular existential approach which gives the book a striking here-and-now flavor. The book is personal, not a scholarly theological treatise, and so it should find a place on the spiritual reading or self-help shelf. Recommended for anyone concerned with the deeper qualities of man."

Choice 5:974 O '68 90w

"[The author] seems to speak more as a man to other men than as a priest to men.

He omits any discussion of either the theological virtues or the cardinal virtues. . . . This treatment will not help certain traditional-minded readers or general readers who want a book on 'the New Morality.' . . . Recommended only for large, inclusive religion collections, or for theological libraries." E. W. Frazer

Library J 92:4005 N 1 '67 180w

GUARESCHI, GIOVANNI. A husband in boarding school. 229p $4.50 Farrar, Straus

67-22432

Dom Casimiro Wonder promises to bequeath his fortune to his niece Carlotta "if she marries within two days. She tries all available eligible suitors without success—and, at the eleventh hour, has to settle for [Camillo] Debrai, a poor uneducated woodcarver. . . . Debrai is sent to an expensive boarding school in Switzerland where . . . he is trained in the social graces. Carlotta and her family try, in various ways, to get out of the socially embarrassing marriage of convenience. After these twists and turns of plot, she falls for her husband . . . [and] the marriage is finally consummated." (N Y Times Bk R) Originally published in 1945 as Il Marito in Collegio.

"This tongue-in-cheek fable is . . . [a devastating] portrayal of the greed and pretensions of the 'nobles' of Italy. . . . In spite of the fact that Carlotta is more than a little snobbish and Camillo more than a little dense and long-suffering, and some of the 'business' close to slapstick, this is a wonderfully funny novel." R. F. Grady

Best Sell 27:228 S 15 '67 320w

Critic 26:89 O '67 80w

"Although [this book] has the characteristics of a farce, it is rather in the style of Restoration comedy with the long view of the newer Italian tongue-in-cheek cinema. . . . The plot, essentially simple, is so heavily embroidered with cute complications that the reader might not be willing to make the tortuous journey." H. L. Rosofsky

Library J 92:3444 O 1 '67 130w

"[This novel] is nonreligious, nonpolitical and noncontroversial. . . . [In fact] Guareschi follows the [fairy tale] formula exactly. [However] the book tries hard to be funny (too hard). It relies almost entirely on ad nauseam repetition of not very good jokes, [and] on coy circumlocutions." Richard Boston

N Y Times Bk R p58 S 10 '67 600w

TLS p1321 N 21 '68 180w

GUEVARA, CHE. See Guevara, E.

GUEVARA, ERNESTO. Che Guevara speaks; selected speeches and writings [ed. by George Lavan]. 159p $4.50; pa $1.95 Merit pubs.

972.91 Cuba—History. World politics—1945-67-31739

"A collection of speeches, interviews, and articles [by the Cuban guerrilla insurgent] most of which were published originally in Spanish." (Library J)

Choice 5:1210 N '68 130w

"[This volume] reflects the life of an extraordinary and, in the context of the Cuban revolution and its infiltration into neighboring Latin American countries, an important man, and should be purchased by academic and large public libraries in spite of the strong possibility that something better may appear eventually." R. D. Harlan

Library J 93:992 Mr 1 '68 90w

"[This is an] incisive and luminous selection of Che's writings. . . . Che in print is important because of his influence on the Cuban Revolution (his public utterances consistently anticipated Fidel's future moves) and his symbolic meaning to much of Latin America. But the warmth and weight of his personality are muffled in his official words, and the evolution of his intellectual character still needs to be described." Norman Gall

N Y Times Bk R p3 My 5 '68 550w

GUEVARA, ERNESTO. The complete Bolivian diaries of Ché Guevara, and other captured documents; ed. and with an introd. by Daniel James. 330p il $6.95 Stein & Day

984 Bolivia—History. Guerrilla warfare 68-55642

The 1966 and 1967 diaries of the late Cuban leader written during his attempt to establish a guerrilla insurrectionary movement in Bolivia. The diaries were found by the Bolivian government when Guevara was captured and executed last October. "In July, Fidel Castro . . . [announced] that he had acquired a copy. . . . An English translation of [the] Cuban edition, together with an introduction written by Castro, appeared in this country in Ramparts Magazine, and . . . [more recently] in a Bantam paperback. Almost simultaneously, Stein & Day publishers have come forth with [this uncut translation] published under official license of the Bolivian Government." (N Y Times Bk R) Chronology.

"If you are caught up with the Che Guevara affair this book will fascinate and probably disturb you. . . . [It includes] some remarkable photographs—hitherto unpublished. . . . While paying due tribute to the courage and integrity of Guevara, the man, but at the same time raising doubts about his rating as Number One Guerrilla Leader, this book will no doubt give second thoughts even to his most fervent admirers. Perhaps this is what it is intended to do."

GUEVARA, ERNESTO—Continued

Economist 229:72 N 23 '68 350w

Reviewed by R. D. Harlan
Library J 93:4286 N 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by Jose Yglesias
Nation 207:317 S 30 '68 190w

Reviewed by Mervyn Jones
New Statesman 76:673 N 15 '68 430w

"[This edition of the diary] is called 'complete' because it contains Che's entries for 13 days that are missing from the Castro version (out of nearly 400 days). More interesting, it also includes the diaries of three other Cuban guerrilleros ('Pombo,' 'Rolando' and 'Braulio,' all officers of Cuba's Army) which shed further light on Che's fascinating narrative. . . . [Che's diary has suffered] needlessly from inept and inaccurate translations. The Cuban translation, prepared in Havana (in obvious haste), is an especially messy job; the Stein & Day version is somewhat better, but far from perfect. . . . [James] devotes several pages to a discussion of what he calls the 'rivalry' between Guevara and Castro. . . . There exists not one shred of documentary evidence, either in Che's diaries or anywhere else, to support this fantastic story. . . . Yet no amount of scandal or intrigue will tarnish Che Guevara's Bolivian diary or prevent it from being read as one of the most transcendent documents of our time. More than a simple war journal, it is a rare self-portrait of the compleat revolutionary." Lee Lockwood

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ag 25 '68 1800w

"Guevara's diaries are the least interesting part of this book. They read like a log kept by the leader of a scheme for rehabilitating delinquents by taking them out-of-doors. . . . Except for flashes of hostility . . . the diarist shows little personality, and the entries suggest that life in the Andes, even for revolutionaries, is monotonous. However, the introduction by Mr. James, a former managing editor of the New Leader and a biographer of Guevara, is interesting, and so are diaries kept by three of Guevara's men. . . . These portray Guevara, as he himself does not, and tell what he said when he expostulated with his men, and what appeals kept them—or most of them—fighting."

New Yorker 44:139 S 7 '68 170w
TLS p1280 N 14 '68 500w

GUEVARA, ERNESTO. Episodes of the revolutionary war, by Ernesto Che Guevara. 144p il $4.95 Int. pubs.

972.91 Cuba—History 68-19920

The author gives an "account of his activities as a guerrilla during the Cuban struggle. [The book] dates from December 1956 to January 1, 1959. (Library J) Originally published in Spanish in 1963 under the title Pasajes de la Guerra Revolucionaria.

"One would expect this book . . . to be a political doctrine espousing the cause of Marxist socialism. Surprisingly, it . . . is a simple account devoted almost entirely to limited scenes of war, illuminating as a glimpse into the grass-roots thought processes of the revolutionaries. Therefore, as a social document, it has value. As an example of Guevara's writing, it has interest. However, James S. Allen in his editor's preface parrots the usual anti-American, pro-Marxist doctrine rather glibly. The book is recommended for collections featuring Latin-American affairs." Bruce Keeney
Library J 93:2857 Ag '68 150w

"[The author] was a very careful writer and this work . . . is his admittedly personal view of individuals and incidents encountered in the fighting in the Sierra Maestra—all of it, of course, yielding lessons he felt were valuable for future fighters. . . . [This] edition is more straightforward [than the edition by Monthly Review Press, entitled Reminiscences of the Cuban Revolutionary War, BRD 1968]. For example, it adds four articles by Che in which he gives a précis of the military history of the revolution, and details their source. The Monthly Review edition has transformed these articles into two chapters which appear (with no explanation and, in one case, cut) at the beginning and end of the book. . . . [Of the various] versions of this simple, beautiful, politically prophetic book, . . . [this one] does best."

Jose Yglesias

Nation 207:316 S 30 '68 400w

Reviewed by Norman Gall

N Y Times Bk R p3 My 5 '68 550w

GUEVARA, ERNESTO. Reminiscences of the Cuban revolutionary war; by Ernesto Che Guevara; tr. by Victoria Ortiz. 287p il $6.95 Monthly review; for sale by Grove

972.91 Cuba—History—1959-

68-13655

The thirty-two episodes collected in this volume and written by one of the major leaders of the Cuban Revolution originally appeared in various Cuban periodicals. This book also contains "diagrams of several battles, photographs of the guerrilla period, and endpaper maps of the guerrilla itinerary in the Sierra Maestra. The introduction by Fidel Castro consists of the text of his speech in memory of Guevara at the Plaza de la Revolución on October 18, 1967. . . . The volume closes with twenty-six . . . letters written by Guevara between the end of the guerrilla war and his disappearance from Cuba in the spring of 1965." (Publisher's note) Nineteen of the episodes were first published in book form in 1963 as Pasajes de la Guerra Revolucionaria.

"[This book] not only seems dated, but dry, turgid and totally lacking in feeling for the thrust and passion of the guerrilla struggle against Batista." Ronald Steel

Book World p7 Ag 18 '68 100w

Choice 5:860 S '68 80w

Reviewed by J. N. Goodsell

Christian Science Monitor p9 Jl 13 '68 410w

"Reminiscences of the Cuban Revolutionary War is Guevara's unadorned memoirs of his own service in that struggle. They suffer somewhat from having been set down as occasion offered, and because the author confined himself strictly to what he himself had done or observed. . . . The most interesting sections . . . are concerned with the hand-to-mouth stage of the revolution. . . . Unfortunately [the] transition [from survivors in flight to effectual rebellion] accomplishes itself offstage. . . . What does emerge clearly enough is Guevara's personal development in the course of the fighting. [Moreover] I think it impossible to read [his] letters—direct, unassuming, austere—and not know that one is in the presence of a rare being, a man of principle, deserving of Castro's eulogy: 'Immensely humane, immensely sensitive.'" Emile Capouya

Commonweal 88:110 Ap 10 '68 1700w

Economist 228:36 Ag 24 '68 290w

"While the inclusion of a brief biography of Guevara and Castro's laudatory speech delivered following Guevara's death seems appropriate here, the addition of 26 letters from Guevara to various persons on various subjects does not." R. D. Harlan

Library J 93:992 Mr 1 '68 130w

"[This] version despite its absurd title—Che was incapable of the self-indulgence of reminiscing—is the smoothest reading . . . and it also contains some thirteen chapters more than the [edition by International Publishers, entitled Episodes of the Revolutionary War, BRD 1968]. These last are articles issued both before and after publication in Cuba of the original book. . . . [But] one is tempted to decry the publisher's . . . air of doing the reader a favor when, in fact, it is simply rushing into the market place like any publisher with a campaign biography." Jose Yglesias

Nation 207:316 S 30 '68 210w

Reviewed by Norman Gall

N Y Times Bk R p3 My 5 '68 550w

GUEVARA, ERNESTO. Venceremos! the speeches and writings of Ernesto Che Guevara; ed. annot. and with an introd. by John Gerassi. 442p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

335.4 Communism—Cuba

68-22126

A collection of articles by a leader of the Cuban revolution, chronologically arranged, "beginning with an account, based on diary entries, of the guerrilla fighting in the early days of the Cuban War of Liberation and ending with Guevara's last-known writing, 'Message to the Tricontinental: 'Create two, three . . . many Vietnams.'" Among the addresses and writings included are 'On Party Militancy,' 'On Revolutionary Medicine,' . . . 'Colonialism Is Doomed,' . . . 'On Socialist Competition and Sugar Production.' . . . There are also analyses of the Alliance for Progress, of the errors and successes of the Cuban economy, of guerrilla warfare, of Cuban-United States relations, and of the production process. And there is a . . . short biography of Guevara [in the introduction.] (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
Book World p7 Ag 18 '68 100w

Reviewed by J. N. Goodsell
Christian Science Monitor p9 Jl 13 '68 410w

Economist 228:36 Ag 24 '68 290w

"A comparison between this work and two others recently published, Che Guevara Speaks and Reminiscences of the Cuban Revolutionary War [both in BRD 1968], shows inevitable overlapping with some puzzling omissions in all three. The present book contains more of Guevara's speeches than Che Guevara Speaks, but it seems to lack several sections included in Reminiscences of the Cuban Revolutionary War. Scholarly libraries should probably purchase all three books since each contains material the others lack. For other libraries, Venceremos is probably preferable since it is the best balanced and most comprehensive of the three." R. D. Harlan

Library J 93:1889 My 1 '68 200w

"[The editor] is, no doubt, quite sincere when he states that one will find in Che's articles 'clichés, misstatements, and factual errors, not to mention sheer bad writing,' and in claiming Che for the Love Generation. For the first statement, his authority must be the dreadful translations he has rushed into print; for the second, God alone knows; but it is simply the reverse of that view which presents Che as cold and ruthless." Jose Yglesias
Nation 207:316 S 30 '68 240w

Reviewed by R. W. Fontaine
Nat R 21:31 Ja 14 '69 950w

"[The introduction] merely provides a thin biographical sketch of the author, without any critical evaluation of his development or his political role. . . . Since Che was one of the key symbols and spokesmen of Cuba's revolutionary government, virtually every word in the book was uttered for its propaganda effect. . . . The formalization of [Guevara's] ideal was dramatized best in his last published essay, the utopian 'Man and Socialism in Cuba,' reprinted in [this book]. . . . Unfortunately, the anthologies published since Che's death fail to include—and barely mention—his little handbook, 'Guerrilla Warfare' [BRD 1962], which is probably the most influential book published in Latin America since World War II." Norman Gall
N Y Times Bk R p3 My 5 '68 550w

New Yorker 44:87 Je 29 '68 200w

"The over-all effect [of these writings] is turgid and flatfooted; and the message is repetitive. Like most pep talks, these harangues and pseudo-essays probably worked with the original audience but don't have much significance afterward except as historical documents in the archives of propaganda. There are marginal exceptions to the general sweep of ennui. Che's personal account of the Cuban revolution is an engaging scenario. . . . [His] knotty economics is hard for the non-Marxist to follow, but it led to Cuba's unorthodox but apparently workable substitution of moral for cash incentives. The Guevara myth is no fairy tale, but his talents were not on the printed page." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 71:102 My 13 '68 600w

GUIGNEBERT, CHARLES. The Christ; tr. by Peter Ouzts and Phyllis Cooperman; ed. and rev. by Sonia Volochova. 321p $10 Univ. bks. 270 Church history—Primitive and early church 66-24067

"Now published in English for the first time, The Christ stands in the scholarly tradition of Guignebert's earlier works, The Jewish World in the Time of Jesus, and Jesus. The present book is divided into two parts, 'Jerusalem' and 'The Birth of Christianity.' How did the Jesus of history become the Christ of faith? Professor Guignebert wrestles with the . . . problems involved in answering this question." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Guignebert was a far-out church historian of pre-World War II France, and this manuscript . . . was incomplete at the time of his death in 1939. A demolition expert, Guignebert clears away much myth and messiness in this essay on the difficulty of retrieving or retracing Christian origins. There are probably no Guignebertians around today, but many critical scholars remain in his debt."

Christian Century 85:594 My 1 '68 70w

"Along with Alfred Loisy (1857-1940) and Maurice Goguel (1880-1956), Charles Guignebert (1867-1939) is representative of that generation of French scholars whose writings and ideas dominated New Testament studies in the period between the two World Wars. . . . Not all will agree with his conclusions, but no one can deny the intellectual honesty with which he approaches his task. Highly recommended for theological collections." W. S. Sparks
Library J 93:2879 Ag '68 160w

GUILLÉN JORGE. Affirmation; a bilingual anthology, 1919-1966; tr. with notes by Julian Palley; introd. by Jorge Guillén. 208p $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press

861

68-15667

"The present volume includes selections from Guillén's three . . . poetic works, Cántico [BRD 1965], Clamor, and Homenaje—in Spanish and in English on opposite pages." (Library J) Works of Jorge Guillén. Bibliography.

"The Castilian Guillén, austere disciple of Valéry and the school of 'pure poetry,' . . . has lived in the United States since 1938. His poetry is intellectual, complex, sculptured, a celebration of Being and of the momentary experience. . . . Despite Julian Palley's modest claim that the translations are intended primarily as guides to the originals, they successfully convey the exquisite sensibility of these poetic affirmations. This well-designed book is recommended for collections of modern poetry and modern Spanish literature." Arthur Curley
Library J 93:1638 Ap 15 '68 200w

"Unusual at this age level, high school Spanish language classes will find this dual-language text both interesting and helpful. . . . [This volume] displays the poet's attitude of 'human affirmation and an attempt to reach a condition of authentic humanity.' . . . Guillén writes very clearly but uses metaphors and images that are extremely complex. There is a pleasing polish and a cleanness to the Spanish text. Explanatory notes in the back help in understanding the individual poems." Larissa Rulofson
Library J 93:1820 Ap 15 '68 110w [YA]

"As one of the relatively few Spanish poets whose work is lean and sharp-cornered, non-romantic and relatively direct, Guillén represents a move away from the influence of the Spanish Academy, but he writes into his lines a sense of an antiquity beyond the Romantic period. . . . He has his own—and a secure—place in Spanish poetry. . . . Mr. Palley's translations have been done with great care, and with the always detectable and necessary translator's humility. . . . Some of the translations are . . . good poetry, some are good prose paraphrases of the Spanish. Most are neither. They serve their purpose, as satisfactory failures to do what, at best is impossible." Miller Williams
N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 18 '68 800w

TLS p1022 S 12 '68 700w

GUITTON, JEAN. The pope speaks. See Paul VI, Pope

GULICK, JOHN. Tripoli: a modern Arab city. (Harvard univ. Center for Middle Eastern studies, Harvard Middle Eastern study) 253p pl maps $8.50 Harvard univ. press

915.692 Tripoli, Lebanon

67-14340

"This book is a study of a large Lebanese city with mixed Arab Sunni, Maronite, Orthodox Catholic, and other religious groups, in terms of such factors as social prestige, types of architecture, family life, education, religion, government, economics, commerce, and transportation." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Valuable contribution to the relatively scarce scholarly literature on contemporary urban life outside North America and Western Europe. Gulick, an anthropologist, is well versed in this area, having previously studied an Orthodox village community on the Lebanese Coast. . . . Much of his social data derives from responses to questionnaires completed by Tripolitans who were students at American University in Beirut in 1961-62. Unfortunately, individual case studies and family histories are lacking. Despite qualifications, this useful study, with its rich statistical data, should be in undergraduate libraries possessing even rudimentary Middle Eastern collections."

GULICK, JOHN—Continued

Choice 5:380 My '68 200w

"[This] is a unique study, done in great detail, and based on first-hand investigation over a considerable period of time; it deals with an Arab city in a relatively underdeveloped country, faced with the modern problems of rapidly increasing population, urbanization and industrialization. Surprisingly lively in style, reflecting the author's own interest in his subject, and his close observation and careful evaluation, this book is for any reader interested in modern Arab urban culture." J. C. Shipman

Library J 92:2171 Je 1 '67 200w

GULLASON, THOMAS A., ed. The complete novels of Stephen Crane. See Crane, S.

GULLICK, J. M. Malaysia and its neighbours. 194p $4.50 Barnes & Noble

959.505 Malaysia—History—Sources 67-5340

"Basically a collection of source material. . . [this volume covers] the history of the Malaysian Federation from the planning stage in the early 1960s to the departure of Singapore in 1965. Mr. Gullick confines himself in the main to documents, reports of commissions, treaties, official statements and the like." (TLS)

"There are two major faults in this generally sound and serviceable book. . . First, the title should be something like Commentary and Documents on the Formation of Malaysia, for the book is basically a documentary survey enlivened and illuminated by Mr. Gullick's observations. Second, there should have been developed some sort of system of punctuation to signal effectively the end of a document and the start of the author's interpretive remarks. It is more than a little confusing, for example, to make an unconscious jump from Sukarno's passionate slogans to the author's cool phrases. . . The documents are mostly familiar to close students of the Malaysian scene, but their presentation in one volume will be a service to those without access to relevant government reports, records of parliamentary debates, speeches and press accounts. In particular, university students in courses on Southeast Asia will be helped." L. E. Williams

Pacific Affairs 41:119 spring '68 380w

"Mr. Gullick's commentary is brief and to the point, his selection of documents covers well enough all the major aspects of the subject, and the book undoubtedly achieves its designed purpose as, indeed, one would expect from the work of a scholar of Mr. Gullick's calibre."

TLS p394 My 11 '67 270w

GUNN, PETER. My dearest Augusta; a biography of Augusta Leigh, Lord Byron's half-sister. 272p il $6.50 Atheneum pubs.

821 Leigh, Augusta. Byron, George Gordon Noel Byron, 6th Baron 68-27656

Quoting "from letters beginning in 1802 to her death in 1851, . . . [the author] probes into the powerful attraction between Augusta and her passionate, ambivalent half-brother." (Library J) Genealogy. Bibliography. Index.

"Gunn unravels the tangled skein of Byron's relations with his sister expertly, without recourse either to pedantry or sensationalism. While being as objective as possible, he is rather fonder of Augusta than anyone since Byron has been. . . The one real flaw in the book . . . is that in his laudable reliance on the letters written by this unholy trio, Gunn quotes over-extensively. One cannot have enough of Byron's letters. . . he ranks with Keats as the supreme letter writer of his age—but one characteristic of Byron his sister did not share was his literary genius, and Annabella's letters, too, are almost maniacally boring." Richard Freedman

Book World p13 Ja 5 '69 800w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 237:162 N '68 220w

"Mr. Gunn defends [Augusta] as a decent, tender person, lured into a momentary impropriety, too devoted for her own good both to Lord and Lady Byron. The drama of her life is dimmed somewhat by Mr. Gunn's stately prose, his detached scholarship, and the necessity for including so much correspondence. The book is recommended for academic and large public libraries as an additional view of Byron's character and a fresh assessment of a gallant and generally maligned woman." R. R. Gambee

Library J 93:2646 J1 '68 200w

"To the Byron drama [incest] gives a needed centre, a romantic dimension of darkness that extends to Augusta Leigh herself, the enigmatic partner in the deed. Now that we see her at last in a full-length portrait, . . . the mysteriousness is three-parts dispersed; Augusta, even in her own life, was never wholly a foreground figure. But the Byron in this mirror is an interesting one; and the histoire itself—high drama or modern black comedy—is not without its poetry or surprises. . . It is Lady Byron's weird love-and-hate pursuit of Augusta that sharpens the rest of the tale as it moves along to the middle-class, middle-century railway era." Naomi Lewis

New Statesman 75:874 Je 28 '68 900w

Reviewed by Anne Fremantle
N Y Times Bk R p48 N 24 '68 900w
New Yorker 44:247 N 16 '68 70w

Reviewed by Robert Halsband
Sat R 51:34 O 19 '68 600w

"The biographies written of friends and relatives of the Romantics are in a class by themselves; not usually a very exalted class. These characters are famous by their contacts, while their independent life tends to be, with some exceptions, lacking in significance or achievement. The case of Augusta Leigh is not so much an exception as a variation. As Mr. Peter Gunn has traced it out there appears to be no independent life; the Byronic fatalism intrigues, enwraps, and finally engulfs her. . . To establish the almost preordained emotional connexion between Augusta and her younger half-brother, Mr. Gunn does a good deal of hard spade-work. . . Anxiously avoiding the scholastic touch, [he] gives the briefest of bibliographies, and might with advantage have supplied some notes on sources, especially of Augusta's later letters."

TLS p799 J1 25 '68 1050w

GUNN, THOM. Touch. 58p $3.95 Univ. of Chicago press

821 67-24300

Some of the poems in this collection first appeared in such periodicals as Encounter, Poetry, and The New Statesman.

Reviewed by Ronald Hayman
Encounter 30:72 J1 '68 450w

"[This] is a satisfying book of poems. . . It is not disturbingly clever or maddeningly obtuse, nor is it facile and superficial. The poems are consistent in their quality and in their idea. Mr. Gunn has gathered them around a sanely optimistic theme of rebirth, stated in images of nature, sexuality, urban redevelopment, and age. Even the poems concerned with depressed people . . . or with places . . . have a strong optimistic strain. His style is consistently simple and direct, but without much variety or imagination." T. E. Luddy

Library J 93:2009 My 15 '68 140w

"Gunn's new book shows some stylistic variations on his previous firm and finely-controlled but occasionally rigid rhythms, and also some broadening of theme. There are no poems here praising all the toughs through history or tenderly analysing sado-masochism, no threnodies for black-jacketed motor cyclists. Instead we have pieces which almost for the first time in his work, suggest the possibility of tenderness between human beings. . . Misanthropos, which occupies a third of the new book, is an imaginative achievement probably beyond the reach of any other living poet, and almost every poem in this collection shows the agility and subtlety of Gunn's mind and his ability to convey complicated ideas directly, forcefully and with wit."

New Statesman 74:476 O 13 '67 300w

"Thom Gunn has two manners, which might be called Upper Case and Lower Case, according to whether or not he capitalizes the beginning of his lines. . . In lower case—what the poet calls 'confessions of the life artist'—he is like a translator from an unfamiliar language tackling a recalcitrant text without a dictionary. The result, when you can make it out, is rather drab little still lifes with titles like Taylor Street, Breakfast, Bravery, . . . well and sometimes wittily observed, but painted with too restricted a verbal palette. The artist too obviously feels, as he says, that 'the art of designing life is no excuse for that life.' Mr. Gunn's other manner, grander and much more attractive, is that of the longest, most ambitious poem in the book, Misanthropos. Here he writes with assurance and impact, so that one ceases to worry about the original that he is translating into such subtle rhythm, unobvious rhyme, and even into terza rima." David Hine

Poetry 113:55 O '68 270w

"['Misanthropos'] a sequence of seventeen lyrics, tells the story of what seems to be the sole survivor of some 'monstrous battle.' It is a poem of almost liturgical dignity and gravity, strict in form and moving slowly through its series of disciplined meditations. . . . It is a tiny epic, one of grandeur and faultless technique. There are a number of fine shorter poems in the volume, too." Judson Jerome

Sat R 51:34 Je 1 '68 330w

TLS p937 O 5 '67 500w

Reviewed by Laurence Lieberman
Yale R 58:139 O '68 550w

GUNNELL, JOHN G. Political philosophy and time. 314p $10 Wesleyan univ. press

320.01 Time. Political science. Plato. History
—Philosophy 68-16009

The author "sees the substantive problem as trying to make 'intelligible what appeared to be a recurring pattern of attitudes toward time and history, on the part of political philosophers. . . . He also indicates the important role that the process of transformation of political symbols plays in this vision. To accomplish this end he presents a theory of symbolic forms, and devotes a major portion of the study to an examination of Plato. . . . [There are also] observations regarding the conceptualization of time, myth, the Hebrew prophetic tradition, and pre-philosophic Greek thought." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Gunnell's focus limits the appeal of the book to scholars in philosophy, political science, and social science. A sound, careful, and valuable addition to the field, his book is an imperative purchase for academic holdings at the graduate level and for strong political science and philosophy collections at undergraduate level." Jack Van Derhoof

Library J 93:1641 Ap 15 '68 200w

"The author has succeeded notably on several counts, not the least of which is his broadened approach to the study of the history of political thought. Written with little or no bias, exhaustively researched (there are 864 footnotes), illuminating and imaginative, this is a work that not only deals with political science but ranges broadly and confidently over the fields of classical studies. . . . not to mention a sustained focus upon some of the most pressing philosophical problems of human existence." Rudolph Muska

Sat R 51:37 Ag ■ '68 480w

GUPTA, ASHIN DAS. See Das Gupta, A.

GURKO, LEO. Ernest Hemingway and the pursuit of heroism. (Twentieth-century American writers) 247p $4.75 Crowell

813 Hemingway, Ernest 68-21604

"The first chapter outlines Hemingway's life, focusing on his background, his friends, his marriages, and the important influences on his personal and literary life. It concludes with his tragic final years and death. The remaining chapters discuss in turn his novels, short stories, and nonfiction. There is a . . . chapter on each of his major novels. . . . The final chapter evaluates Hemingway as artist, his techniques, motivation, and philosophy." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by E. B. Hungerford

Book World p20 N 24 '68 200w [YA] "

"A sustained evaluation of Hemingway's fiction and nonfiction, serving well as a general introduction for undergraduates. More knowledgeable scholars, however, will not find much that is new. The biographical portion includes the salient moments of Hemingway's life, but it loses its authority when, without the aid of formal documentation, it attempts to merge real life responses with those of fictional characters. The discussions of individual stories and novels often tend toward generalization and summary, and at times the analysis of details is casual rather than profound. Gurko is an able student of literature and a reputable scholar in his field, and the weaknesses of this book do not extend to matters of literary judgment."

Choice 5:1306 D '68 220w

Horn Bk 44:569 O '68 240w

"A useful addition to the growing body of critical essays on American literature so much in demand by students for English class assignments. The book organization is both functional and scholarly, it can make absorbing reading as a whole but it is well suited to consultation for specific information and critiques. . . . The search for heroism, says Gurko, is the recurrent theme in Hemingway's life and work; he shows with great clarity how this central concern shaped Hemingway's work and secured for him a permanent place in American literature." R. S. Bender

Library J 93:133161 S 15 '68 190w

"[The] professor of English at Hunter College . . . is thorough, lively and frank in his analysis of his subject as writer and as man. He praises the writer as a genius in creating action, sense of place, mood and character, and for his masterful descriptions of 'sensory experiences.' He is harsh about personal defects—vanity, nastiness and vindictiveness. . . . I also disagree with him on the esthetics of hunting and on his interpretation of the hyena episode in 'The Green Hills of Africa.' But these minor differences do not detract from this brilliant biography, which is perfect for high school students, college freshmen and for the general public." Robert Hood

N Y Times Bk R p54 D 8 '68 370w [YA]

GURNEY, EDMUND. The power of sound; with an introd. essay by Edward T. Cone. 559p $15 Basic bks.

780.1 Music—Analysis, appreciation. Music—Psychology. Esthetics 66-28360

This reissue of a book first published in 1880 contains "discussions of the physiology of hearing, the aesthetics and the relation of music to the other arts, of melody, harmony, and rhythm, of public taste, of song and its relation to speech, of opera, of criticism and other topics. . . . [The author was] a professional student of medicine, law, classics, psychology, [and music, and was a founder of] . . . the Society for Psychological Research." (Music Lib Assn Notes)

"Recommended for the music department library and for the school which offers courses in aesthetics or psychology of music. The contents are based more on intuition than analysis but represent much creative thinking and can serve as valid topics for discussion and points of departure for scientific investigation; the book should not be considered as supplementary to other sources. Some musical background is required of the reader if all parts of the text are to be used effectively."

Choice 4:1390 F '68 100w

"A monumental achievement, one that has been strangely neglected, if not forgotten, by musicologists and theorists. . . . [The author's] ethnocentric point of view makes some sections of the book relatively worthless. Still, there is [much] insightful discussion. . . . It is because Gurney had read so widely that he was able to achieve such unusual insight, and the book seems to prove without question the need for interdisciplinary work by future theorists and musicologists. . . . Although Gurney's analysis of melody, harmony, and rhythm has in some ways been superseded, his central contribution to the social psychology of music has not. . . . The publisher is to be commended for bringing this book back into print." Jon Appleton

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:37 ■ '67 750w

GUTHMUNDSSON, BARTHI. The origin of the Icelanders; tr. with an introd. and notes by Lee M. Hollander. 173p $5.75 Univ. of Neb. press

914.91 Iceland—History 66-19265

The "Keeper of the National Archives of Iceland from 1939 until his death in 1957, published the eight articles comprising this volume in various Icelandic journals between 1942-1951. They appeared [as part of a book] in 1959 under the title Uppruni Íslendinga, and are now published for the first time in English translation." (Publisher's note) It is the author's contention "that although to the greatest extent the founders of the island realm came from Norway, their ancestors were probably not Norwegians but east Scandinavians, i.e. Danes and Swedes, of Herull extraction." (Sat R) Index.

GUTHMUNDSSON, BARTHI—Continued

"Guthmundsson tries to make the colonization [of Iceland] a largely East Scandinavian affair. Unfortunately, few people even in U.S. academic circles can make effective use of the book. The author assumes a body of familiar knowledge which does not exist here, and the narrative style tends to be labyrinthine. The work is important to the specialist because it represents an effort to use archaeology and ethno-history to modify an interpretation based on linguistic and literary data."

Choice 4:1427 F '68 220w

"While Dr. Guthmundsson generously admits that some of his conclusions may seem a shade arbitrary or incidental, he offers massive and persuasive defense of his theories. The author's knowledge, which is profound, covers history, archeology, philology, mythology, and genealogy. . . . The records of the Herull are misty and vague, yet their obvious link to the civilization of the Northlands makes one wish that more data concerning them appeared in Dr. Guthmundsson's otherwise exhaustive and fascinating account. It is important to have this record appear in English, and we are grateful to Lee M. Hollander for his painstaking, affectionate rendition of the original. . . . However, because of the many repetitions, of which Dr. Hollander speaks, the text has a tendency from time to time to bog the reader down." Holger Lundbergh

Sat R 50:41 Je 10 '67 340w

GUTHRIE, WOODY. Bound for glory; ill. with sketches by the author. new ed 403p $6.95 Dutton

B or 92 Guthrie, Woody 68-28884

This autobiography of the singer's life from 1912-1942 has a new foreword by Pete Seeger. For the first edition see BRD 1943.

"[This book] deserves the attention of this generation. Not only is it [a] fascinating autobiography . . . it is a voice from the grass roots of America. . . . [Woody] speaks for all the families who fled the Dust Bowl to become migrant workers, for the hordes of men who rode the rails in search of work. Most of all, Woody speaks for the indomitable spirit of an independent man. . . . He set out to do his own thing, and his account of how he did it should be irresistible bait for YA's." Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:3997 O 15 '68 170w [YA]

"Even readers who never heard [Woody] or his songs will understand the current esteem in which he's held after reading only a few pages. . . . [The book] is mostly about the long years of riding the rails and the conversations he had with boomers and other box-car types. . . . Some of it is a little corny and sentimental, but it is always shockingly immediate and real, written as if Woody were telling it out loud. . . . This is a book to make novelists and sociologists jealous." Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:346 O 7 '68 230w

Reviewed by Margot Hentoff

N Y Rev of Books 11:23 N 7 '68 750w

GUTKIND, P. C. W., jt. ed. Anthropologists in the field. See Jongmans, D. G.

GUTMAN, JUDITH MARA. Lewis W. Hine and the American social conscience. 156p pl $12.50 Walker & Co.

770 Hine, Lewis Wickes. U.S.—Social conditions—Pictures, illustrations, etc. 67-23089

The author "has first pieced together an introductory . . . biography and criticism of Hine's pictures and accomplishments in the first part of this century. The second part of the book, a 96-page folio of . . . photographs, illustrates this photographer's [work] as a crusader for human decency. Here are working children, immigrants, adults in an industrial age, Europe immediately after World War I, the rural and urban American 1930's, and other subjects." (Library J) Annotated bibliography.

"Some other photographer's photo of Hine at work is also included. Capturing some remarkable, elusive candid scenes under poor lighting conditions was not easy with the large format cameras, slow films, and plates that were compulsory in those days. This book is important for public and college libraries with serious photography collections." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:67 Ja 1 '68 140w

"As a figure, even as a name, Hine is far less known than several of his pictures—perhaps attaining thereby the status of authentic anonymous folk artist. A thorough survey of available materials, biographical as well as photographic, is the first step toward preparing this figure for study. And this groundwork has been undertaken with talent and efficiency by Judith Mara Gutman. Her book is the result of impressive research, and her bibliography, especially of magazines and books in which Hine's pictures first appeared, is an excellent and generous contribution. . . . At its best all writing about photography seems redundant in the presence of the pictures. . . . The author's own most important interpretation of Hine lies in her selection and arrangement of his symbols of reality. As a picture editor she makes certain choices one may question. . . . But on the whole the group of pictures provides a valuable guide to the variety of subjects and treatments in Hine's canon." Alan Trachtenberg

Nation 206:766 Je 10 '68 1050w

GUTMAN, ROBERT W. Richard Wagner; the man, his mind, and his music. 490p il $12.50 Harcourt

B or 92 Wagner, Richard 67-20310

The author attempts to show the relationship of nineteenth century thought to the composer's life and work. He examines the "nationalism and racism from which Wagner drew his most powerful symbols, and explores well the turmoil of his relationships to his immediate world—his family and friends, his love affairs, his enemies, his debts, his politics, and the sources of creativity that inspired some of his greatest compositions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:569 N 30 '68 80w

"This fine biography, an outgrowth of the author's lectures to the Bayreuth master classes, wastes no time attempting to reconcile the artist with the man. Gutman sanely admires that which is admirable and detests that which is detestable in Wagner. . . . So objective is Gutman, in fact, that one wonders how he could have borne living with his subject for as long as he must have done to produce this book. . . . [He is enthralled by Wagner's art] but he is merciless to the myth that Wagner was also a respectable, let alone a profound, poet and thinker. He has read all Wagner's dreadful polemical essays, and exposes their shoddy 'ideas' for the evil twaddle they are." Richard Freedman

Book World p5 My 12 '68 850w

Reviewed by Harris Green

Commonweal 88:338 My 31 '68 1050w

"[The author says that] Ernest Newman, the standard biographer, did not 'look squarely' at the anti-Semitic essays of Wagner, and thus missed some levels in 'Parsifal' and other late works. Pursuing this line, Mr. Gutman appears to overlook deeper impacts of Wagner on his century; the influence of the operas (not of the prose ramblings) on what Barzun calls mechanical materialism. As for musical analyses, Mr. Gutman gives up easily on the big question of form. He brushes Lorenz aside but offers no substitute principle except that 'Wagner's musical form is essentially free. . . . His book thus stops short of the main musical and philosophical problems, but otherwise Mr. Gutman has given us a well-written, vital, nontechnical, accurate, and provocative biography." Guy Marco

Library J 93:747 F 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by David Cairns

New Statesman 76:470 O 11 '68 1300w

"Gutman, a teacher and writer on music, . . . [has written] much the richest and best-accomplished single volume on Wagner in English. Wisely not attempting to match the space devoted by Ernest Newman [in] 'The Life of Richard Wagner' [BRD 1946] to marshalling biographical minutiae (though sometimes correcting Newman in detail), Mr. Gutman nonetheless gives the full development of Wagner's life with such grasp of its unfolding as to convince the reader that he is facing a speaking likeness. Most important, the author has placed chief emphasis on Wagner's mind. . . .

[But he] does not scant esthetic and purely musical description or judgment. . . . [The book] has been excellently illustrated and handsomely produced. It has been made more useful by a selected bibliography and a good index." Herbert Weinstock

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ap 21 '68 1250w
New Yorker 44:174 My 18 '68 380w

Reviewed by Robert Jacobson
Sat R 51:42 D 21 '68 150w

GUTTMANN, ALLEN. The conservative tradition in America. 214p $6 Oxford

917.3 U.S. Civilization. Conservatism 67-25460

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. P. Diggins
Am Hist R 73:1617 Je '68 500w
Choice 5:334 My '68 170w

Reviewed by Peter Shaw
Commentary 45:94 My '68 2800w

Reviewed by John Ratté
Commonweal 88:476 Je 12 '68 1050w

Reviewed by J. D. Lewis
New Eng Q 41:455 S '68 950w
TLS p176 F 22 '68 550w

GWERTZMAN, BERNARD M., jt. auth. Fulbright: the dissenter. See Johnson, H.

GYLES, MARY FRANCIS, jt. auth. The ancient world [3d ed]. See Caldwell, W. E.

H

HAAS, JOSEPH. Carl Sandburg; a pictorial biography, by Joseph Haas and Gene Lovitz. 222p $7.95 Putnam

B or 92 Sandburg, Carl 67-19394

A survey of the American poet's life from boyhood to old age using "anecdotes of the people who knew him well, in letters from his friends and critics, and in quotations from the writings, speeches, and letters of Sandburg himself. . . . Here are pictures of the houses in which he lived, the family and friends he loved, the men whose ideas and imaginations influenced him, and the American cities and countrysides, as they were when he first knew them and as they grew and changed." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"An exceptionally good collection of pictures detailing the life and career of Sandburg, beginning with a photograph of a birth record and carrying on to the latest days. The accompanying text is brief—and popular in treatment."

Am Lit 40:113 Mr '68 40w

"Written with . . . a complete lack of imagination. . . . One chapter is called 'In the Alger Mode' and this title fits the text perfectly. Too many of the photographs tell the reader nothing at all about Sandburg: elevated tracks under which the poet walked, department stores which he visited, and train stations where he entered a city. In this reviewer's opinion, neither the text nor the pictures of this book illuminate Sandburg's life." R. L. Enequist

Library J 92:4146 N 15 '67 130w

Library J 92:4640 D 15 '67 40w [YA]

HAASE, JOHN. Me and the arch kook Petulia. 191p $4.50 Coward-McCann

66-26532

This novel chronicles "the bizarre romance of Dr. Archibald Bollen, a divorced thirty-eight-year-old orthopedic surgeon, and Petulia, a twenty-two-year-old beauty married to an impotent sadistic Adonis, [which] begins at a cocktail party when Petulia, immediately upon meeting Archie, proposes that they have a liaison. This is just the start of Petulia's well-planned campaign to awaken Archie's interest in her. . . . Archie falls for the bait, but it is constantly snatched away from him, and it is only after a long period of frustration, during which time he successfully restores her health after she receives a near-fatal beating from her husband, that Petulia decides that Archie really is in love with her and that their inevitable marriage will be a successful one." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by B. J. McGurl

Best Sell 26:394 F 1 '67 250w

"Haase has created an original. Petulia is an arch kook who is delightfully zany, unpredictable but always lovable. . . . Of course, all is rather neatly resolved as it will be in the movie which is already cast. We can only hope that it will be as entertaining as the book." H. L. Rosofsky

Library J 92:133 Ja 1 '67 160w

"[This] book portrays with a frothy 'brilliance' an affair between an inconsequentially manneristic socialite girl and an orthopaedic surgeon. There is a distinctly chemical fascination in watching the interplay of conversation between these two non-combinable elements. The book is witty in the Noel Coward manner, and succeeds on this level; but when in the second half . . . the characters blame each other for being shallow one feels the author is really blaming himself." Miles Burrows

New Statesman 75:147 F 2 '68 80w

"Both [Petulia and Archie] boom along in half a bookful of snappy play-acting, until Mr. Haase shifts gears from light comedy into a stretch of bathos involving the battered-wife syndrome. The switch from brittle to soggy opens a credibility gap that is hard to bridge even with a semi-cute ending." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p60 Ja 29 '67 40w

HABERLAND, WOLFGANG. The art of North America [tr. by Wayne Dynes; Eng title: North America]. 251p 95il 60col pl maps $6.95 Crown 970.1 Indians of North America—Antiquities.

Indians of North America—Art 68-15660

The author "begins by examining the background of the early settlements of the New World and the broadly diffused rock paintings, and then deals in turn with the Eskimos, the Indian tribes of the various regions of the present United States, . . . and finally the original inhabitants of the West Indies." (Publisher's note) Chronologies. Bibliography. Index. First published in German under the title Nordamerika; Indianer, Eskimo, Westindien.

"The Art of the World series always assumes a hardworking reader, and this volume is tougher going than most because of the lack of any historical framework to which Indian and Eskimo art can be related. The handsome objects in the colorplates, however, justify exertion." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:106 J1 '68 60w

"Except for the remarkably good and unusual illustrations that have been selected for it, the book can hardly be said to serve as an introductory volume, as do the [other volumes in this series]. The organization of the material, basically geographic, is destroyed by the unevenly balanced admixture of highly technical interpretations of art theory, history, and ethnographical observations. . . . The offhand introduction of the names of special cultures and their 'stages' of development throughout the text will leave the uninformed reader floundering in a sea of unexplained terms, ideas, and concepts; the book might serve the anthropologist (who probably doesn't need it) as the general survey it was intended to be." Lee Ash

Library J 93:3122 S 15 '68 150w

HACKER, LOUIS M. The world of Andrew Carnegie: 1865-1901. 473p $8.95 Lippincott

330.973 U.S.—Economic conditions—1865-1898. Carnegie, Andrew 67-24007

This book is a sequel to the Triumph of American Capitalism (BRD 1940); in it the professor of economics at Fairleigh Dickinson University attempts to explain "how one developing nation, the United States, transformed itself into the most modern and mightiest industrial power in the world within the short space of 40 years. The knowledge that can be gained from the study of that transformation, he feels, will be valuable for emerging states of the 20th century. His conclusion is that the creation of a highly developed industrial economy in America came about only after 'the appearance and acceptance of those mores in which the process of capitalism could flourish and expand." . . . He surveys the political, social and intellectual as well as economic history of the Gilded Age to prove his point." (America) Bibliography. Index.

HACKER, L. M.—Continued

"Hacker's survey, while highly informative at many points, will not be easy going for the casual student of the period. He makes few concessions to the reader untrained in economics. . . . [If one can surmount rhetorical obstacles] he will find the author well-read in the scholarship of the era and not afraid to take a fresh position on men or events. He will, as an example, defend in large part not only Jay Gould's railroad machinations but also—and more surprisingly—Henry Clay Frick's action in the Homestead Strike. Hacker devotes only the last quarter of the work to Carnegie himself. The treatment is sympathetic and admiring. It is more unfriendly to Carnegie's recurrent foes, the investment bankers. . . . The description of the tactics employed by these formidable adversaries forms one of the most engrossing sections of the book." C. J. Pusateri
America 118:353 Mr 16 '68 490w

"[Hacker] denies the suggestions of some economic historians that the Civil War may not have ignited but indeed may actually have retarded industrial expansion in this country and sees the take-off as essentially politically motivated. . . . [He] reluctantly admits that there were critics of this great society—the Populists, the Socialists, the do-gooder Social Gospel preachers and the anarchists. But all these were on the fringe of the national consensus. Most of their grievances, Hacker believes, were imagined. . . . What should prove disturbing to the perceptive reader are Hacker's basic assumptions about this period and the conclusions he draws. In denying there was meaningful and effective criticism of the consenses he portrays, he cannot account for the historical forces that brought the period to a close. . . . [His] is a simplification of the historical process; for the very success of the creative entrepreneurs whom he admires doomed the system that had produced them." J. F. Wall
Book World p6 My 5 '68 800w

"Hacker seeks rather to explain, and not condemn, the role of the 'robber baron' in American history, as well as the public policies and legal attitudes that permitted his phenomenal growth. The subject of economic development is pursued broadly through a topical analysis of agriculture, banking, railroads, labor, education, and urbanization. Interesting, brief biographical accounts appear throughout, highlighted by an excellent portrayal of the early Socialist, Daniel DeLeon. A pleasing writing style and understandable tables which clarify, rather than confuse, are valuable assets in a book which explains a period when business and not politics was the most exciting facet of American life."

Choice 5:550 Je '68 170w

Christian Century 85:302 Mr 6 '68 30w

Reviewed by G. M. Gressley

Library J 92:4407 D 1 '67 200w

Reviewed by J. E. Dornan

Nat R 20:615 Je 18 '68 1550w

Reviewed by William Miller

N Y Times Bk R p16 Je 16 '68 650w

Reviewed by D. W. Grantham

Va Q R 44:480 summer '68 1400w

HACKETT, ALICE PAYNE. 70 years of best sellers, 1895-1965. 280p $7.90 Bowker 655.5 Books and reading—Best books

67-25025

The first edition of this work was entitled Fifty Years of Best Sellers, 1895-1945 (BRD 1945). It was revised ten years later as Sixty Years of Best Sellers (BRD 1957). This third edition "contains a combined list of books selling over one million copies, supplemented by hard-bound sales 750,000 copies, and paperbacks over one million; best-seller subjects; and a guide to, and references about, best sellers." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '68 450w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:152 Mr '68 90w

"[This] edition provides the statistics and some interpretation of the best-seller phenomenon for social scientists and those in publishing, marketing, communications, bookselling, and librarianship. An indispensable documentation of one mass medium, it . . . is well indexed, and reader advisors and others will welcome the background notes to best sellers and the discussion of best-seller subjects in ten such categories ■ novelty and game books, pamphlets, poetry and drama, and science—new to this edition. The purpose is 'to interpret and comment to some extent upon the statistics and the trends, but not to evaluate them from a literary point of view.' Miss Hackett's facts and trends will be eagerly consulted as a base for extrapolation. Recommended for purchase by academic and public libraries, even the small, and by all those in the media professions." P. R. Penland

Library J 93:742 F 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 71:98 F 19 '68 800w

"The predominance of crime and suspense, in number of titles sold, introduces an economic factor that Miss Hackett . . . overlooks; indeed, she does not include price data. It is nevertheless a fact that most of Erle Stanley Gardner's ninety-one best sellers can be bought for fifty cents, whereas most 'straight' paperback fiction ranges from seventy-five cents to $2.95. To the casual reader, therefore, crime must seem a bargain. . . . Those disposed to downgrade public taste must acknowledge the rise in sales of both classics and quality moderns. . . . Statistically unsound as they are usually conceded to be, best-seller lists can only suggest trends, never prove them. One vagary of the present volume makes its findings positively misleading for those who fail to read a summary of major exclusions mentioned in the text. This includes the Holy Bible, all variants of Webster's dictionary, and several standard reference works that might challenge cookbooks and sex books if properly tabulated." Glendy Culligan

Reporter 38:45 Mr 21 '68 2600w

Reviewed by J. K. Hutchens

Sat R 51:29 F 10 '68 1450w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:50 F 24 '68 340w

"This newly updated compilation by . . . an editor of the trade magazine Publishers' Weekly, gives a highly useful perspective on the long-range trends beyond the weekly ups and downs, and also includes such items as dictionaries and cookbooks, which the weekly compilations omit. The volume shows how the paperback and population explosions have altered the bestseller concept. . . . Peyton Place [by Grace Metalious, BRD 1956] has sold only 600,000 copies in hard cover since 1956, but paperback sales added 9,300,000 more. Miss Hackett's accounting emphasizes that there is a Gutenberg Fallacy lurking in bookdom's galaxy. To begin with, something that looks like a book and is sold in a bookstore is not necessarily a book. It could be a non-book, or ■ Miss Hackett would say, a 'non-reading' book. . . . The record shows that year by year, readers tended to be more discriminating in their choice of nonfiction than fiction. [This is a list] for the social anthropologist and the moralist to brood upon."

Time 91:80 F ■ '68 1200w

HACKNEY, JOHN. A history of Greek and Roman philosophy. 269p $6 Philosophical lib.

182 Philosophy, Ancient—History 66-26185

"This work is intended to show how the various lines of thought influencing our present civilization originated from the concepts conceived in Greece and Rome, particularly the former. It traces the development of the science of thought and shows how man has developed the use of natural reason. . . . The author's aim throughout is to present thought as a concrete concomitant of history. This theme is traced from the . . . beginnings of philosophy at Ionia, through the . . . systems of Plato and Aristotle to the neo-Platonism of Rome." (Publisher's note)

"Penetrating layer after grotesque layer of this foolish book one finds that 1) the author cannot write English comfortably or even clearly; 2) he cannot read Greek or Latin; 3) he can rarely construct a sentence and almost never a whole paragraph; 4) he cannot comprehend the force of the simplest piece of historical evidence; 5) he cannot formulate a philosophical argument without egregious blunders. . . . No meaning of any kind can be attributed to this book, for the author seems to be feeling for what he really wishes to express, and unfortunately he has nothing to express." D. J. Stewart

Class World 61:108 N '67 140w

"In John Hackney's words this book is 'not intended for the scholar,' but for 'average people of average education.' Scholars will heartily agree with the first statement. . . . Whether an 'average person of average education' will gain anything from it is equally debatable. Such a person, surely, has a right to demand, in a book which purports to be historical, some reference to source materials, some guidance concerning technical terminology and a small bibliography. He also has a right to some assurance that the author's own philosophical bias is kept in the background as far as possible. On not one of these counts does the book pass muster. A few committed Thomists might conceivably see some virtue in it, but this reviewer cannot believe that the 'average person of average education' will be anything but bewildered by it." T. M. Robinson

Library J 91:4123 S 15 '66 160w

HADEN-GUEST, ANTHONY. Birds of Britain. See Green, J. d

HADLEY, ARTHUR T., jr. auth. Crisis now. See Gavin, J. M.

HADLEY, LEILA, jr. auth. A young people's guide to manners. See Barclay, J.

HAGA, ENOCH, ed. Automated educational systems. 343p il $15 Business press

370 Education—Electronic data processing 67-22351

"This book consists of 18 papers dealing with the application and potential utility of computer based systems in education. Eight chapters deal with concepts and patterns; the remaining 10 report on applications and techniques. In this overview, topics range from the concept of regional, state, and national data processing centers to the application of automated systems in pupil and class scheduling." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"A welcome addition to the growing literature on educational technology which, until recently, has dealt mainly with audiovisual and programmed instruction. . . . Because of its scope it should be included in any college library and is of value to the student, teacher, and administrator."

Choice 5:240 Ap '68 110w

Reviewed by C. R. Johnson

Library J 93:70 Ja 1 '68 200w

HAGEN, ANDERS. Norway [tr. by Elizabeth Seeberg]. 205p il pl maps $7.50 Praeger

914.8 Norway—Antiquities. Iron age 67-17568

This book traces the archeological history of Norway, beginning with the Early Stone Age Fosna and Komsa people. "Professor Hagen pursues his story . . . by way of the Neolithic Age and the first farmers, past the sub-Neolithic cultures and the Bronze Age with their marked overlappings, on to the defined periods of the Iron Age—always with the proviso that the less accessible regions of the country lagged well behind the south." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"In one of the best of this [Ancient Peoples and Places] series, Hagen (professor of prehistory, University of Bergen) . . . deals with the complexities of culture between European southern Norway and the Polar North. . . . The skillful interplay between broad generalization and precise detail is conveyed by the fine translation as well. There is, however, less of a bibliography than in other books of the series."

Choice 5:106 Mr '68 80w

"Some of [Professor Hagen's] most interesting remarks concern the village settlements by the Varanger Fjord in sub-Neolithic times, for on skeletal evidence the physical anthropologists conclude that during the period 1500 B.C. to the first century A.D. these villagers were of a Nordic racial type, and therefore of the same physical type as the inhabitants of southern Norway—a fact surprising in itself and upsetting to many earlier notions of prehistoric ethnology. [It is] a constant virtue of this brief but authoritative book that it takes account of the latest scholarship and invites the reader to do some thinking for himself. . . . Professor Hagen sees the Viking Age as the last phase of Norwegian prehistory, which to many historians must appear a highly pre-emptive point of view. But this is an archaeologist's book and a very good one. [It] is aptly illustrated with 75 plates and 75 text-figures after the fashion of its valuable series."

TLS p842 S 21 '67 850w

HAGEN, VICTOR W. VON. See Von Hagen, V. W.

HAGGARD, WILLIAM. The conspirators. 184p $3.95 Walker & co.

68-13441

The hero of this mystery novel is "Colonel Russell of Britain's Security Executive. His problem this time is to nullify a potential danger to Anglo-American relations. A United States plane accidentally jettisons an atomic bomb off the coast of Devon, but . . . was there a second bomb whose existence was being denied by United States authorities? Political capital could be made out of this suspicion by anti-American elements in Britain unless Russell is successful." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:186 Ag 1 '68 60w

"Haggard is clearly familiar with many of the nuances of life in British governmental departments and develops his plot confidently. My only reservation lies in the over-contrived initial scene-setting. The sole survivor of the plane's crew lands in a remote country area where three key figures in later developments also live—the widow of a former Security Executive agent, her doctor, and his wife who is not only the local hospital's nurse looking after the survivor but also an active member of the Communist party! This novel is not up to Mr. Haggard's standard and you might prefer to wait for his next." Norman Horrocks

Library J 92:4523 D 15 '67 220w

"Twelfth adventure of this suave practitioner lives up to established high standard." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:30 Je 29 '68 40w

"Anyone who accepts the peculiar Haggard outlook, which is disdainfully establishment, will enjoy the latest froth of the mixture."

TLS p1092 N 16 '67 40w

HAGGERTY, JAMES J., jr. auth. Food and nutrition. See Sebrell, W. H.

HAGGETT, PETER, jr. ed. Models in geography. See Chorley, R. J.

HAGOPIAN, JOHN V. J. F. Powers. 174p $3.95 Twayne

813 Powers, James Earl 67-28860

This biographical-critical study of the short-story writer and novelist contains comments on the 'stories in Prince of Darkness [BRD 1947], The Presence of Grace [BRD 1956], the novella 'Keystone,' and . . . Morte D'Urban [BRD 1962], the novel that received the National Book Award in 1963." (America)

"Powers is an ideal subject for a biographical-critical study of less than 200 pages. To date, the corpus of his published work is as small and as meticulous as that of Katherine Anne Porter, the American author who has had the profoundest influence on him. . . . Hagopian has done his homework well. Besides a close reading of everything Powers has written, Hagopian visited Powers in Greystone, Ireland, in 1964, talked with Powers' friends, teachers and editors, and carried on an extensive correspondence with him. . . . Until the definitive study is written, . . . [this] volume will remain the indispensable book for students of this scintillating writer." E. P. J. Corbett

America 118:548 Ap 20 '68 410w

"Hagopian's study is [disappointing]. . . . Although he touches on the entirety of Powers' small canon, his treatment is perfunctory, providing few closely analyzed interpretations, no fresh approach, and little evaluation of meaning. Also, his organization is plodding and unimaginative, first discussing the stories about 'The World Outside the Rectory' and then stories about 'The Fathers'—the distinction between secular and religious material making little significant contribution to understanding and appreciating Powers better. Moreover, the book lacks insight.

HAGOPIAN, J. V.—Continued

Choice 5:952 O '68 180w

HAHN, PETER A. Chemicals from fermentation; prepared under the sponsorship of the Mfg. chemists' assn [phot. by Charles M. Lehman]. 112p $3.95; pa $1.25 Doubleday

660 Fermentation. Chemistry, Technical 67-22447

The author presents a "history of fermentation—from primitive man and his beer to the wonder drugs of the twentieth century, and traces the development and refinement of industrial fermentation processes." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Strictly for the layman is this simply written nontechnical discussion . . . which could be read by junior high school students. A non-science oriented college student might find it useful as a starting point in his search for information on this field of industrial chemistry. . . . However, references to a scientist's 'bag of tricks' or the specialist's 'black magic,' when well-known chemical processes are involved, perpetuates a false picture of scientific activity. The technical terms are usually clearly defined so that the nonscientist will have no difficulty reading the book. There are, however, a few omissions."

Choice 5:816 S '68 180w

"While the text is brief, Mr. Hahn covers the essential points well, along with . . . a bit of humor now and then. . . . His book might well be used to foster vocational interests among younger readers. Recommended for public libraries." C. M. Brosky

Library J 93:1006 Mr 1 '68 100w

HAIGHT, GORDON S. George Eliot; a biography. 616p pl $12.50 Oxford

B or 92 Cross, Mary Ann (Evans) 68-9440

Based on the author's "research begun in 1933, which has already produced George Eliot and John Chapman [BRD 1940] and the seven-volume The George Eliot Letters [BRD 1954, 1956, this] biography uses much new . . . [manuscript material to explain] the personal circumstances underlying the creation of [George Eliot's] great novels." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by V. P. Tartella

Best Sell 28:413 Ja 1 '69 500w

"In his most admirable biography of George Eliot, [Haight] manages to convey the luminosity of mind and heart that almost at once blinded her interlocutor to her horse-faced plainness and made everyone, when she was at her zenith, want to meet her. . . . [He] has given us an illuminating portrait of this luminous woman; the reader will be imbued richly and quietly with the virtues of both subject and delineator. How did either of them, George Eliot or Gordon Haight, find the time to produce such a corpus of sterling work?" Jean Stafford

Book World p1 O 6 '68 1700w

Christian Century 85:1245 O 2 '68 40w

"For the first time, a full and satisfying account of the life of George Eliot has been written. . . . The complex person behind the pseudonym had not been delineated until this volume. . . . Haight accounts for all her personae; and in the accounting, shows how they were all part of the novelist while carefully sticking to the facts and the records, carefully staying away from speculation or psychoanalysis. . . . It is precisely the use of every available memorandum which gives this book its value and its relish. . . . They heap up into a true and solid picture of George Eliot and of the whole mid-Victorian literary world." B. R. Stout

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 17 '68 800w

Economist 229:xiv N 9 '68 500w

Reviewed by Keith Cushman

Library J 93:4287 N 15 '68 280w

Reviewed by Gertrude Himmelfarb

New Repub 159:38 N 2 '68 1200w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 76:463 O 11 '68 2150w

Reviewed by Noel Annan

N Y Rev of Books 11:3 Ja 2 '69 3150w

Reviewed by Stanley Weintraub

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 29 '68 1400w

New Yorker 44:237 N 9 '68 70w

"Prof. Gordon Haight's scrupulous, affectionate biography is indisputably definitive in the sense that all that is directly knowable . . . at the present time is to be found here—and in Haight's earlier work. . . . This is a great work of scholarship, perhaps diminished somewhat by Haight's refusal to move toward the depths of the woman and novelist as they fleetingly appear beneath the sublimely composed surface of her life and art." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 72:109 S 30 '68 600w

"Perhaps inevitably, Biographer Gordon Haight, a Yale professor and the world's foremost George Eliot scholar, temporarily lapses into a kind of chronological literary Baedeker. Much of his detail is of interest mainly to people who really want to know what sort of financial deals Lewes made for 'George,' or who wonder if Maggie in The Mill on the Floss really was George Eliot. . . . Wisely, Author Haight contents himself with chronicling his heroine's dazzling success in her own time."

Time 92:108 O 11 '68 1100w

TLS p1129 O 3 '68 2250w

HAIGHT, MABEL V. JACKSON. European powers and South-East Africa; a study of international relations on the South-East coast of Africa, 1796-1856. rev 2d ed 368p maps $9.50 Praeger

$67.8 World politics. Africa, East—Relations (general) with Europe. Europe—Relations (general) with Africa, East

67-14057

A chronicle of political and economic history based on "research in the Colonial Archives, in Lisbon, and in the India Office and other repositories, in London. . . . [The author attempts] to show the effects of European naval activity on the economic history of the coastal areas of Mozambique and neighboring territories. . . . [She] considers the region in an international and strategic setting, as influenced by circumstances in southern Africa and by the presence of European powers in its waters. . . . [The first edition which] was originally published in London in 1942, . . . was destroyed soon afterward during an air raid. The present edition has been entirely rewritten." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. For the first edition see BRD 1943.

"The first edition of this book belonged clearly to the school of strategic-diplomatic history. Southeastern Africa was then neglected by historians of international affairs, and the use of Portuguese as well as British archives represented a step forward. In the intervening quarter century Mabel Jackson Haight has added a few files to her list of primary sources and made an effort with uneven success to keep up with new secondary works. The neglect of French archives is regrettable. This book, packed with facts, . . . seems to have no prominent thesis to guide its internal development. . . . This new edition is timely, however, for Indian Ocean and Mozambique history is coming into well-deserved prominence, and Haight provides clues to a range of subjects that will bear monographic treatment."

Marcia Wright

Am Hist R 73:1593 Je '68 400w

Reviewed by Kenneth Kirkwood

Ann Am Acad 337:191 My '68 850w

"A welcome and substantially revised (especially the early chapters) volume which also performs the valuable service of granting a wider circulation. . . . Most of the book concerns trade, both slave and 'legitimate,' and the imperialism of the Europeans (French, English, Portuguese) which it fostered. It deals with the effects of the trade on the colonizer and the colonized. Trade, channeled largely through the Portuguese at Mozambique and the Omani Arabs at Zanzibar, is closely analyzed."

Choice 4:1156 D '67 140w

"This is a book of merit. It would be unfair to dismiss it on sheer grounds of indigestibility. The further one champs through it, the more one realizes that Mrs. Haight has knitted many hitherto undetected Afro-Indian strands together. The Portuguese archives have for the first time been thoroughly and painstakingly raided. . . . The interest of this work lies in its revelation of the interplay between French, British, American and Portuguese ambitions in the Indian Ocean area. . . . Students of stamina will find much to reward them here. One tip for the course, however—'Brush up your Portuguese'." TLS p218 Mr 7 '68 360w

HAILEY, ARTHUR. Airport. 440p $5.95 Doubleday

68-11755

"In the space of a single night at the . . . Lincoln International Airport, nearly every imaginable man, machine or function goes wrong. One of the worst snowstorms in history has been raging over the airport for three days. The longest and widest runway is blocked by a mired Boeing 707. A traffic controller is suicidally depressed. And a Rome-bound flight lifts off with a man carrying a bomb in his briefcase. How Airport Manager Mel Bakersfeld and a score of other characters cope provides the [plot of this novel]." (Time)

Reviewed by Jane Oppenheim

Best Sell 28:5 Ap 1 '68 700w

Reviewed by Robert Cromie

Book World p6 Ap 14 '68 500w

"Hailey has managed to capture the excitement and intensity of life in a big city airport, and has evidently researched his subject thoroughly for technical accuracy. The jealousies, frustrations, failures, and triumphs of the very real people in this novel are vividly portrayed. . . . It is a necessary addition to fiction shelves of any public library; definitely a circulator; you cannot go wrong with this one." Philip Marr

Library J 93:1020 Mr 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:2132 My 15 '68 150w [YA]

"Hailey is a plodding sort of writer, but he has just the talent to suggest the crashing ennui of airport routine, where only a mortal disaster can provide color." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ap 7 '68 200w

"Novelist Hailey gives airports his familiar Hotel treatment and the result may permanently ground all his readers. . . . [An] obvious but well-programmed novel." Time 91:84 Mr 22 '68 300w

HAIMENDORF, CHRISTOPH VON FURER-. See Fürer-Haimendorf, C. von

HALACY, D. S. Energy and engines [by] D. S. Halacy, Jr.; with drawings by Haris Petie. 223p $4.50; lib bdg $4.28 World pub.

621.4 Engines—Juvenile literature. Power resources—Juvenile literature 67-23359

"The author traces the uses of energy from prehistoric discovery of fire to the predictable power sources of the future. The first section's history of steam, solar, water, and electric power and the basic machines which make use of these forms of energy leads . . . to a discussion of man's search for new energy fuels and methods, such as jet engines, solar batteries, fuel cells, and atomic power. . . . The future of the man-energy relationship is discussed in terms of how large population can grow and what effect flight into space may have on earth's civilization. [Index]. Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

"Young readers who are interested in science will find this book both informative and stimulating and it will make a fine addition to the school library."

Best Sell 27:466 Mr 1 '68 80w

"This excellent survey is supported by many informative photographs and drawings." M. B. Wenger

Library J 93:2547 Je 15 '68 140w

HALACY, D. S. Science and serendipity: great discoveries by accident [by] D. S. Halacy, Jr.; ill. by Frank Fretz. 155p $3.95 Macrae Smith co.

500 Science—Juvenile literature 67-26974

This book "is built around the chance discoveries that have contributed to the growth of new scientific ideas and novel technical applications. The accidental discoveries of Galvani (current electricity), Goodyear (vulcanized rubber), Stookey (ceramic glass), Fleming (penicillin), and others [are presented. Index.] Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"[Halacy] combines the familiar (to chemists) account of Wöhler's synthesis of urea and Roentgen's discovery of X rays with less-often-retold [discoveries] such as those of Schoenbein and gun cotton, and Senefelder and lithography. The serendipity theme suffers a slight strain when Goodyear discovers vulcanization—this was, after all, what he was seeking, even though accident played a part—and is even more doubtful when applied to Edison's development of the phonograph. Still, the tales are well told and worth adding to any science teacher's repertory." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:81 F '68 130w

"Each year many books are written with the sole purpose of popularizing science and making it understandable and palatable to young adult readers. Mr. Halacy's title is one of the few which has succeeded in this aim. . . . [Discoveries] are clearly presented in this readable and engaging book. The art work, unfortunately, is purely decorative." George Basalla

Library J 93:304 Ja 15 '68 120w [YA]

"The book's idea is good: seeing scientific progress through the mind of its human practitioners."

N Y Times Bk R p28 F 4 '68 60w

HALACY, D. S. The weather changers [by] D. S. Halacy, Jr. 246p 11 maps $6.95 Harper 551.6 Weather control. Weather forecasting 67-22539

This "book on weather study and control intended [for laymen, traces] . . . weather prediction from its scientific origins in the 17th century until the present, and investigates weather control measures from [the 18th century to today. The author] . . . undertakes to explain current views in weather forecasting, discusses the tracking of cataclysms like hurricanes, outlines the manner in which lightning may be suppressed and sketches in the legal problems inherent in weather change. He tells of efforts by state and Federal governments in the United States and those of foreign nations and branches of the United Nations to experiment with weather control, and . . . ends with a plea for international cooperation." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Those looking for objective information on the complexities of weather and climate modification will have to look elsewhere. This book is a clear case of axe grinding. Halacy seems to be more impressed by the large sums paid to some commercial meteorologists for artificial stimulation of rain than by the need for rigorous scientific investigation of the meteorological processes involved. The book is replete with glosses, oversimplifications, and not a few errors of omission and commission. . . . Index but no bibliography. Illustrations are plentiful, but many seem to be added for decoration and most are not sufficiently explained. B. J. Mason's little book Clouds, Rain, and Rain-making [BRD 1963] and the National Research Council's Weather and Climate Modification are to be preferred."

Choice 5:522 Je '68 160w

"This book will interest the technical-minded high school student, or adult. Despite an enthusiastic foreword, the text is not really exciting. . . . [However,] in view of the possible drastic effects weather may have upon our lives, [the] inclusion . . . of legal and political factors is welcome. For senior high schools and public libraries, who should continue to look for material on the subject." R. S. Potts

Library J 93:90 Ja 1 '68 110w

"A science journalist and teacher of technical writing, D. S. Halacy . . . uncovers information that is both rarely known and unavailable to the general reader. . . . This book goes beyond compiling the histories of the various aspects of weather modification and climate control. . . . Considering the length of the book and the author's insistence on maintaining a steady level of easily comprehended prose, his accomplishment is a remarkable one. . . . He has written a plain and excellent little book, readable in a single four-hour sitting, handicapped only by the nominative character of its index and the absence of footnotes and a bibliography." E. F. Murphy

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 14 '68 800w

HALASZ, PIRI. A swinger's guide to London.
207p $3.95 Coward-McCann
914.21 London—Description—Guide books
67-15274

This guide covers "hotels, rooms, and hostels in all price ranges; listings and descriptions of widely diversified restaurants and night spots; and recommendations for shopping both on and off Carnaby Street. In the entertainment field the nontourist attractions are accented—sauna baths, squash, and betting, and performances of contemporary drama, art exhibitions, and the 'in' pubs." (Library J)

"Even though it is slanted toward YA readers, this book contains material of interest to middle-aged tourists not considered 'with it.' [It] should be considered for general and YA collections noting, however, that sex, strip clubs, and similar amusements are part of the English swinging life. At this price, it is a good supplement to the more standard guides." R. L. Enequist

Library J 92:2775 Ag '67 170w [YA]

"Swinging London wasn't invented by Time Magazine. . . . But it was Time which somehow fixed the concept as part of the Western world's contemporary mythology. Miss Piri Halasz, a Time staffer who was involved in that notorious cover story, has now given us the benefits of her research in the form of a neat little volume. . . . Most of the factual errors which provoked derision in the Time article have been corrected, but Miss Halasz has managed to add some new ones." Anthony Lejeune
Nat R 20:197 F 27 '68 1400w

HALBERSTAM, DAVID. One very hot day; a novel. 216p $4.95 Houghton 67-27510

This novel follows a company of Vietnamese "foot soldiers on a day's mission beneath a murderous sun, [under] a team of officers with varying abilities and loyalties. . . . [U.S. Captain] Beapre is an army pro who has seen his best days as soldier and man. . . . It is not the war itself he questions, but the odd little men whose language and soldiering he neither understands nor wants to understand. His junior officer, Lieutenant Anderson . . . is West Point, brave, and thoroughly engaged. He does want to understand—the language, the men, the war. . . . The Vietnamese opposite numbers are Captain Dang, an untutored package of self-serving incompetence, and Lieutenant Thuong, a North Vietnamese who has come south to fight the Communists but whose native knowledge and fatalism give an equivocal edge to his loyalties. The story is told through the minds of Beapre, Anderson, and Thuong." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Cora Brady
America 118:265 F 24 '68 60w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 221:140 F '68 650w

Reviewed by Fred Rotondaro
Best Sell 27:403 Ja 15 '68 550w

Reviewed by Richard Lincoln
Book World p10 Mr 3 '68 650w

"Halberstam has chosen his framework well. His tale implies the range of attitudes and interrelationships on the part of the Americans and Vietnamese. Mr. Halberstam's reporter's ear has caught with uncanny accuracy the inflections and nuances of relevant conversations—including those between Vietnamese and Vietnamese, as well as between Americans and Vietnamese. From the opening volleyball game, through military briefings, interrogations of villagers, and Negro bars in Saigon, and on to the final battle that is only a momentary catalyst, the characters are authentic. . . . What Mr. Halberstam knew intimately . . . back in the days when very few Americans thought much about Vietnam, he has now committed to fiction that is bitter and warm—and true." Elizabeth Pond

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ja 25 '68 700w

Reviewed by Paul Bixler
Library J 93:209 Ja 15 '68 150w

"[The main characters] and several minor characters are excellently drawn and the novel conveys well the feel of battle and of the Asian countryside. A few whoring scenes and four-letter words fit the circumstances of the novel, even if they don't fit some collections. Author of Making of a Quagmire [BRD 1965], Halberstam can now add the successful novelist cluster to his distinguished war-correspondent medal." Collin Clark

Library J 93:1820 Ap 15 '68 160w [YA]

Reviewed by Liam Linehan
Nation 206:512 Ap 15 '68 200w

"The author has said elsewhere that the novel consists of things that he had to leave out of his news reports. The result is a lot of intriguing information . . . and a mess of anecdotes, editorializing dialogue and atmosphere dialogue stitched together somehow into a story. Occasionally it seems that Halberstam has to plug along with the story for the sake of the anecdotes or has to bend it carefully around some information; but the reward is as sharp and comprehensive a look at the war as you could hope to get in the space. . . . Each [principal character] unabashedly is a type . . . or rather several types, since each must do duty for the characters there wasn't room for. . . . [Halberstam's] main defect is inseparable from his virtues. He sometimes makes his points too explicitly, and leans too hard on his ironies. . . . Also, his flashbacks become a mild nuisance when the action proper seems to be tightening." Wilfrid Sheed

N Y Times Bk R pl Ja 7 '68 1100w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Newsweek 71:74 Ja 15 '68 330w

Reviewed by Seymour Epstein
Sat R 51:82 Ja 13 '68 750w

HALBERSTAM, H., ed. Algebra. See Hamilton, W. R. The mathematical papers, v3

HALDANE, CHARLOTTE. Queen of hearts; Marguerite of Valois ('La Reine Margot')
1553-1615. 307p pl $5.95 Bobbs

B or 92 Marguerite de Valois, consort of Henry IV, King of France
68-11148

A biographical study based on Marguerite de Valois' own memoirs and correspondence. Index.

"This work tends toward the tedious: though it does present a detailed account of the intrigues, love affairs, bickerings of the 'tragic' queen and her 'amazing' family, a reader who approaches it not already won over by Marguerite of Valois—as the author quite evidently is—has a 'hard time' of it." O. A. Bouise
Best Sell 28:201 Ag 15 '68 300w

"Charlotte Haldane, a journalist and biographer, has had at her disposal all the elements for writing an exciting biography, but she has failed to do so. Queen of Hearts is generally accurate and may even be classified as a good biography, with adequate illustrations and index, but it is not a truly exciting book; the style is dull and lifeless. The book will appeal largely to informed laymen and to college students who are forced to read a biography." Judah Adelson

Library J 93:1888 My 1 '68 120w

"Based on gossip by Brantome and on the re-vamped memoirs of the Queen herself, it is hard to see what historical purpose [this] book may serve except, perhaps, for setting the sexual mores of the twentieth century in what the author considers to be their correct perspective. Errors of fact are not hard to find. [This] is not history, but it is very good historical novel."

TLS p871 Ag 15 '68 160w

HALE, WILLIAM HARLAN. The Horizon
cookbook and illustrated history of eating and drinking through the ages. See The horizon cookbook and illustrated history of eating and drinking through the ages

HALEY, JAY. Techniques of family therapy
[bv] Jay Haley and Lynn Hoffman. 480p
$12.50 Basic bks.

616.89 Psychotherapy
68-11204

This volume describes a "therapy method with husband, wife, and children. [Five family therapists] give both typescript demonstration of their work and a discussion of what they are doing and why they respond as they do in therapy sessions. . . . [The authors] stress that family therapy is not simply a new treatment approach but involves a distinctly new conceptualization of psychiatric problems." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The book is well written (e.g. avoidance of jargon) but deals with such abundant detail that it would be of greatest interest to those concerned with psychotherapy and family therapy."

Choice 5:561 Je '68 150w

"The usual criticisms must be made for this form of presentation, especially in behalf of the experienced worker for whom there is a slowness and, at times, a ponderousness in the flow. The book will probably be of most value to the new worker in the field. . . . For the shelves of general collections in the field of family therapy." Louis De Rosis
Library J 92:4425 D 1 '67 150w

HALL, EDWARD T. The hidden dimension. 201p il $4.95 Doubleday

301.3 Ecology. Perception. Social psychology 66-11173

The author suggests that "culture is the hidden dimension of human space [and he] analyzes how our culture molds our experience of space and directs our behavior toward it. This is proxemics. Middle-class Americans, for example, need space to spare. . . . The body of this book, after the introductory chapter, is divisible into four parts. The first analyzes the spatial world of animals. . . . [The second] analyzes the spatial world of man. . . . Beyond animal behavior and human perception is the cultural level of human behavior, which is analyzed in the third part of the book. . . . The fourth and final part . . . presents the need for proxemic analysis in city planning." (Am Anthropol)

"[This] is written for whoever is concerned with human behavior—architects, councilmen, social scientists, and others. For this broad readership Hall writes engagingly and personally. He is primarily concerned with our everyday behavior and experience, yet he also brings together from many different fields and locales an abundance of suggestive information. He presents a number of analytical systems of technical categories, and he presents a series of proposals for further inquiry. [The book] is evocative rather than definitive, and it is stimulating and significant." A. G. Smith
Am Anthropol 69:550 O '67 700w

"Dr. Hall's recent book is an expansion of Chapter 10 of The Silent Language [BRD 1959], and those familiar with the earlier work, now in its tenth printing, may need to know no more than that. Dr. Hall is a homegrown, very old-fashioned, practical-problem kind of American anthropologist who has been quite unaffected by the developments which have taken place either in his own subject or in linguistics during the past twenty-five years. . . . [Much space] is taken up with clumsy ethnographic illustrations. . . . He does his profession a disservice by suggesting that the 'science' of anthropology consists of nothing better than the tendentious misleading hunches with which [this volume is] filled." Edmund Leach
N Y Rev of Books 10:16 My 23 '68 850w

HALL, JAMES. The lunatic giant in the drawing room; the British and American novel since 1930. 242p $6.95 Ind. univ. press

823.9 English fiction—History and criticism. American fiction—History and criticism 68-14602

A "professor of English at the University of Washington presents the thesis that the major novelists after 1930 are 'explorers, writers trying to go beyond existing formulations. They all show an uncommon pressure to set directions for experience while giving the fullest expression to disorder.' For his purposes he has chosen to discuss six authors: Elizabeth Bowen, William Faulkner, Robert Penn Warren, Graham Greene, Saul Bellow, and Iris Murdoch." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"For the specialist, this book will prove interesting and provocative, but the general reader will find that his attention flags as he reads. Mr. Hall has all the virtues and shortcomings of the academic critic: he throws out assertions like sparks, and he compresses his ideas, saying too much in too short a space so that he tires the reader." E. J. Gaines
Library J 93:1635 Ap 15 '68 180w

"[This volume is a follow-up to the author's] earlier The Tragic Comedians, a study of seven British novelists [BRD 1963]. . . . Hall assumes that criticism functions as a source of order and meaning; [however] he believes in a wild absurdity at the core. And, since form follows function, as he puts it, his own prose much too often proceeds, perhaps unwittingly, with an errant logic, a description paradoxical enough to please him. Where one looks for a mode of thought in criticism that is direct and practical, here are pages and pages that are dubious and imprecise. Most often it is when he deals with texts in detailed fashion—which, fortunately, he often does—that he reaches total clarity. Hall's greatest gift is his originality in pursuing a central theme through this whole study. He is completely off on his own: though his references sweep widely over many literatures and many schools of thought, the stamp of his own mind is always indelibly present." Robert Maurer

Sat R 51:35 Je 22 '68 800w

HALL, JAMES B. Mayo Sergeant; a novel. 278p $5.95 New Am. lib.

67-24794

"Crippled Bob Gloucester, an old-time resident of Cutlass Bay, a southern California coastal town, tells the story of what happens when Mayo Sergeant arrives in the quiet town and zooms to affluence and influence, dragging Cutlass Bay and some of its residents along with him." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 27:304 N 1 '67 460w

"By the time Mayo has taken two women out of Bob's life, commercialized the Bay, and turned the artless yachting society into a climber's paradise, Mr. Hall, who has competent style and an obvious interest in the sea, has had a chance to write of yachting, business operations and introspective emotions. He has also made Bob Gloucester with his infirmity, endless patience, and high ideals a perfect foil for the non-hero Mayo Sergeant. . . . A good novel for men and women alike." J. M. Carroll

Library J 92:3055 S 15 '67 150w

"That this is less of a tragedy than the author means it to be is due to the poor quality of the opposition. Robert Gloucester . . . is a bitter Native Son. . . . [He] is so much of an elegiac observer that there is little drama in his account of how Sergeant appropriates and corrupts the things the narrator holds dear. The blue-water environment Mr. Hall constructs is more commanding than the events that transpire there." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p56 O 15 '67 150w

"In treating seriously what is patently a comic matter the author . . . has unintentionally travestied the gaudy, tinsel aspects of life in Southern California. . . . The novel itself, viewed objectively, is a competently organized, moderately interesting work, marred technically by unpredictable shifts in the point of view between narrator and the author himself."

Va Q R 44:xiv winter '68 120w

HALL, WENDY. The Finns and their country. 224p il $5.95 Eriksson

914.71 Finland

68-19923

"Six chapters set the scene by describing the land, its nature and climate, the kind of people the Finns are, and how they resemble or differ from the rest of us. Five chapters deal with history (mainly recent) and politics. . . . The concluding third of the book deals . . . with what Mrs. Hall calls 'the vanishing idyll,' the adjustment of a nation of farmers and forest-dwellers to the demands of industry . . . and to the unsuspected strains attendant upon a sudden modernity and a higher standard of living." (TLC) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Lon Rand

Library J 93:[3338] S 15 '68 60w [YA]

"There is not a phase of Finland, past and present, that has been left out of [this] book. . . . It is the famous sisu (which we might call guts), coupled with an incredible tenacity that, in Miss Hall's opinion, has made this warm-hearted, dramatic, yet untheatrical people able to meet and surmount the many vicissitudes of fate and, in spite of all, remain, as the author rightly points out, one of the few in Western Europe still in love with the world. She dwells with enthusiasm on the country's artistic life, . . . justly devotes a chapter to Helsinki, . . . [and] bids the visitor linger at the South Harbor market." Holger Lundbergh
N Y Times Bk R p39 Je 9 '68 550w

"Mrs. Hall is a clear-eyed admirer of the Finns and their country, and her new book is an introduction to both. She spares a glance for their past, but her main interest is in their present, and the future which will grow out of it. . . . [She gives] a fair and balanced treatment of the subjection to Sweden and then Russia, the determination against all odds to win independence, and the setbacks and achievements of the past thirty years. . . . [The] social, political and economic problems are many and considerable. Mrs. Hall writes of all these matters firmly and clearly; she offers sound information, and her conclusions are well argued and reasonable."

HALL, WENDY—Continued

TLS p57 Ja 18 '68 350w

HALL-QUEST, OLGA. Old New Orleans, the Creole city; its role in American history, 1718-1803; il. by Victor Lazzaro. 192p $4.25; lib bdg $4.21 Dutton

976.3 New Orleans—History—Juvenile literature. Louisiana—History—Juvenile literature 68-24722

The "story of New Orleans, from its founding shortly after LaSalle's exploration of the Mississippi, by Pierre LeMoyné, better known as Sieur D'Iberville, until the Louisiana Purchase which made it part of the United States. [Bibliography. Index.] Age ten and up." (Best Sell)

"A charming if rather sketchy story."

Best Sell 28:226 S 1 '68 50w

"In an orderly narrative, which makes use of memoirs and chronicles, the author relates the history of New Orleans until the time of the Louisiana Purchase; tells of [the town's] varied inhabitants—French, Spanish, Negro, Anglo-American; discusses the effect of the French and Indian Wars, and of the expansion of American settlements west of the Alleghenies; and evokes the beauties of the Vieux Carré, with its Spanish architecture and wrought-iron balconies." P. H.

Horn BK 44:569 O '68 260w

HALLET, JEAN PIERRE. Animal kitabu [by] Jean-Pierre Hallet with Alex Pelle; drawings by Sheridan Oman. 292p $6.95 Random house

591.96 Animals—Africa 67-22666

Accounts describing "the way lions, leopards, hippopotami and other animals live, mate, raise their young, and get along or don't get along with humans. Hallet . . . is fearful of the future of animals in strife-torn Africa, and he debunks the vicious reputations of some of the animals." (Publishers' Weekly) Index.

"[This] is a series of overlapping animal portraits which blend together to show us the complex animal society of Equatorial Africa—before these great beasts are extinct. I need hardly tell you that Mr. Hallet has a hearty contempt for the average sportsman with his high-powered rifle. . . . His chapters on the baboons and the chimpanzees are among the most amusing in the book, so closely has he observed their social relations and so respectful is he of their intellect." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:128 Ap '68 750w

"Of special interest are the relationships between the animals and the African natives, including the legends about the animals that have passed from generation to generation. A strong plea is made for the conservation of Africa's animal resources which are dwindling even more rapidly under political independence. May serve to arouse the politician, professional conservationist, and layman to action while there is still time to act."

Choice 5:644 J1 '68 170w

"Two years ago there appeared an astounding tale of the life of a man in Africa that topped any legend of Paul Bunyan. Anyone who read Congo Kitabu [BRD 1966] will never forget Jean-Pierre Hallet. Now in his latest book he pleads for the preservation of Africa's big game. . . . With a sharp pen he destroys much of the glamour surrounding the present-day white-hunter safaris into Africa and their shabbily assembled game trophies. In a brief appendix he details his attempts to set up a Congoland preserve on the West Coast of the United States. Good reading." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:763 F 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:1824 Ap 15 '68 90w [YA]

HALLIDAY, E. M. Russia in revolution. See Horizon magazine

HALLIDAY, M. A. K., jr. auth. Patterns of language. See McIntosh, A.

HALLIWELL, LESLIE. The filmgoer's companion; with a foreword by Alfred Hitchcock. 2d ed rev & enl 847p $12.50 Hill & Wang

791.43 Moving pictures—Dictionaries. Moving pictures—Bibliography 67-23520

The first edition (BRD 1966) of this reference work "claimed 'over 3,000 films, directors, actors, composers, writers, cameramen [and] producers,' and this revision cites over 5,000 of the same." (Choice)

"This edition absolutely replaces its predecessor with its updated film credits, incorporation of new terms and names, and assiduous correction of past errors. Vastly improved. Predominantly British and American. For high school to college libraries."

Choice 4:1364 F '68 40w [YA]

"Every corner of the movie world has been combed for these 5,000 entries that will answer questions on actors', directors', and authors' movie careers, film plots (in brief), technical terms, themes (what movies have been based on amnesia, prostitution, or exploration), and other aspects of the cinema through 1966." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:63 My 18 '68 50w

HALPER, ALBERT, ed. The Chicago crime book. 521p il $10.95 World pub.

364.1 Crime and criminals—Chicago. Murder 67-24471

An anthology of twenty-four journalistic pieces on crimes set against the background of Chicago. Among the writers are William Braden, Clarence Darrow, and Herbert Asbury. Among the criminals are Al Capone, Bugs Moran, and John Dillinger. The articles are arranged in three sections: The Volstead era, nongangster homicides, and the Syndicate.

"This collection of memorabilia serves an unintended purpose. It demolishes the myth of 'The Front Page' funniness. It reveals some celebrated journalists of Chicago's past as unbelievably oafish and brutish. . . . [Although] Mayer's superb essay on the framing of Roger Touhy for the kidnapping of Jake Factor almost redeems this book. . . . A book concerning Chicago crime is still to be written. Ray Brennan, a consummate journalist, is my candidate for the job. None of his pieces are in this anthology." Studs Terkel

Book World p22 D 3 '67 800w

"[These are] inherently fascinating—and frightening—pieces of criminal reporting. . . . An impressive list of writers is represented."

It's a lavishly illustrated, lavishly priced work, but with the exception of the editor's atrocious foreword, it is a totally absorbing one, well worth considering." R. A. Hamm

Library J 92:4022 N 1 '67 100w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 50:33 D 23 '67 70w

HALSEY, WILLIAM D., ed. Collier's encyclopedia with bibliography and index, 24v. See Collier's encyclopedia with bibliography and index

HAMBY, WALLACE B. Ambroise Paré; surgeon of the renaissance. 251p maps $9.50 Green, W.H

B or 92 Paré, Ambroise 67-19384

The author, a neurosurgeon, gives an account of the life and times of the sixteenth century French surgeon by "combining Paré's various case reports, medical and autopsy records, and other such documents with the known biographical details to give a sort of historical case book of Paré's activities." (Am Hist R) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"This biography is so obviously a labor of love and dedication that the task of criticism becomes difficult. . . . In a sense this biography might be called antiquarian rather than historical. In the century of the Reformation, where the religious wars afforded Paré an opportunity to experiment with his surgical techniques, Hamby is concerned only with whether Paré was Catholic or Protestant. He has not even placed Paré in the context of the medical or scientific events of the time. . . . As far as I can ascertain, Hamby did not consult any of the standard historical reference works on the sixteenth century, and he ignored all the more specialized studies. . . . The book should interest the dedicated physician who is an amateur historian, but it is not a real historical biography of Paré and his times." V. L. Bulough

Am Hist R 73:1160 Ap '68 470w

"Hamby's account is meticulously detailed, but it shows no evidence of the increase in our understanding of Renaissance and Reformation gained from recent historical scholarship. . . . Only libraries specializing in medicine which lack . . . earlier works will wish to buy this book."

Choice 5:826 S '68 110w

HAMILTON, ALEX. Beam of malice; fifteen short, dark stories. 222p $4.50 McKay

67-16506

A collection of stories about ordinary people in fantastic and/or horror filled situations.

"[These stories are] in the tradition of Saki and John Collier, although they generally do not reach the same level of accomplishment. . . . The best ones, 'The Words of the Dumb,' 'A Glutton for Punishment,' and 'The Baby Sitters,' have a Saki-like atmosphere and effect in which the strange is suddenly interjected into the real as if it were really there all the time waiting to be discovered. Occasionally, a fantasy element more suggestive of Ray Bradbury than Saki is utilized, but too often the stories consist of a detailed development that leads to a predictably disastrous or evil close. A good book for public libraries but only for the short story collection of large college libraries."

Choice 4:827 O '67 110w

"The flyleaf states that these are horror stories. . . . I am glad it told me, since it was not readily apparent as I read the book. Many of the stories are good, . . . others seem to merely be the manipulations of the author's fancy, with unmotivated, two-dimensional characters playing a role and saying words put into their mouths by the ventriloquism of the author. There are better horror books on the market which are guaranteed to induce nightmares. Mr. Hamilton's stories are well written and motivated, but I trust this is not his best work." R. W. Haseltine

Library J 92:2430 Je 15 '67 110w

Reviewed by Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p25 My 28 '67 50w

"Too many of the situations in Alex Hamilton's [book] have been worked over before. [He] conveys unease of a strictly undisturbing kind and while some of the traps, like that of a man marooned on a dwindling iceberg moving south, are well sprung, in general the sense of a diligent, energetic, but fundamentally, derivative talent persists."

TLS p321 Ap 14 '66 100w

HAMILTON, CHARLES V., Jr. auth. Black power. See Carmichael, S.

HAMILTON, FRANKLIN. Challenge for a throne; the Wars of the Roses; II. by Judith Ann Lawrence. 275p maps $4.50 Dial press 942.04 Great Britain—History—Lancaster and York, 1399-1485 67-22250

A "description of the couplings, conspiracies, and dynastic feudings of the British nobility during the Wars of the Roses." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[Hamilton's] efforts do not come close to the publisher's blurb of possessing a 'talent for lucid narration and sure mastery of historical materials.' Adults with sufficient background might want to page through the book, but it is not for the high school reader. (Senior High up)."

Best Sell 27:361 D 1 '67 60w

"The concise, clear presentation of the historical dramatis personae and of the part each one played balances the intricate events leading to frequent abdication, imprisonment, or murder; and along with the English monarchs of the period, Louis XI of France, Margaret of Anjou, and 'Warwick the Kingmaker' emerge as personalities. The quotations from Froissart, Comines, and Sir Thomas More add a touch of authenticity, and those drawn from Shakespeare's chronicle plays reveal how the events of the fifteenth century continued to haunt the Tudor era." P. H.

Horn Bk 43:763 D '67 120w

"The style, though undistinguished, sometimes seems to echo Winston Churchill. Churchill is one of the sources listed in the strictly modern bibliography with contemporary chroniclers, sometimes named, often alluded to or quoted from, presumably at secondhand. The scratch-board illustrations are attractive, but purely decorative; the maps and genealogical tables are clear and helpful. A straightforward objective account which makes clear a complex part of history. It would also be useful to English classes as background to Shakespeare's history plays." Betty Henderson

Library J 92:4260 N 15 '67 110w [YA]

Reviewed by Thomas Lask

N Y Times Bk R p26 F 11 '68 320w

HAMILTON, RICHARD F. Affluence and the French worker in the Fourth Republic; pub. for the Center of int. studies, Princeton university. 323p $8.50 Princeton univ. press

331 Labor and laboring classes—France

67-11033

"This is a study of the social bases of French working-class politics. Its primary concern is to locate the social structured roots of political attitudes and voting behavior." (Introd) The author has re-analyzed "material from surveys made by two French organizations in 1952, 1955, and 1956." (Publisher's note) Name and subject indexes.

Reviewed by Duncan MacRae

Am J Soc 73:521 Ja '68 600w

"In this well-written and researched—though somewhat naive—book, Dr. Hamilton presents many analyses as to why a majority of French workers vote Communist. . . . [He] is convinced that 'French working-class radicalism is centered in those areas having mixed land-tenure arrangements and farms of varying size and in which aristocratic and clerical influences have declined or disappeared.' If by radicalism Dr. Hamilton means supporting Communist candidates in elections, then one can also describe the Communist party as a highly conservative organization possessing an elite and traditions which have remained virtually unchanged since the organization of that party in France. . . . In France, as well as elsewhere, the entire spectrum of political thought and behavior needs to be understood—and not merely the small area that appeals to the American cold-war obsession with the 'evils' of communism." David Rodnick

Ann Am Acad 375:213 Ja '68 950w

Choice 5:652 J1 '68 140w

"Among professional sociologists, Hamilton's book has already met with some criticism because of its excessive reliance on secondhand materials; certainly, the author's contact with French workers seems to have been minimal. But the fact is that both Hamilton's findings and the general construction he puts upon them are corroborated by the results of several other studies made in different countries and through different methods." John Goldthorpe

New Statesman 75:178 F 9 '68 410w

HAMILTON, VIRGINIA. The house of Dies Drear; il. by Eros Keith. 246p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

68-23059

A story concerning the discoveries of thirteen-year-old Thomas who 'has come with his family from North Carolina [to Ohio] because his father is to teach college history in the town where the abolitionist Dies Drear had operated an important station [on the Underground Railroad]. Moving into Dies Drear's isolated, long-empty house with its sliding panels, secret tunnels, nearby cave hideouts, and tales of ghosts and murders, the family is soon alarmed by the efforts of disreputable neighbors to frighten them away from possibly locating old Dies Drear's treasure." (Horn Bk) "Ages ten to thirteen." (Book World)

Reviewed by E. L. Buell

Book World p12 (children's issue) N 3 '68 210w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:288 N 22 '68 130w

"In depicting Pluto, the bizarre ancient caretaker of the place, and the macabre play-acting devised by his son to scare off the greedy neighbors, Miss Hamilton establishes an almost Gothic atmosphere. Successful in presenting the seemingly occult, she does well, too, with the plain and everyday—the realistic details of household management and the service in the little African Methodist church. Satisfying every demand of the mystery story, the tale far more importantly deals with a boy's searching spirit and the history of a great cause. Thomas's responsiveness to the people in his life, including his twin baby brothers, reveals him to be an unusually sensitive child." V. H.

HAMILTON, VIRGINIA—Continued

Horn Bk 44:563 O '68 210w

Reviewed by J. G. Russell

Library J 93:4731 D 15 '68 240w

"[Here] we have a story about black people, written by a black writer whose first book, 'Zeely' [BRD 1967], won a prize for promoting interracial understanding. Above all, Miss Hamilton tells a corking good story. . . . No matter if the plot unravels too easily. Youngsters, black and white, will gulp the story in a single suspenseful sitting. [The book] is written with poetic precision. Miss Hamilton polishes her sentences with care, develops her characters with imagination and love. . . . [It] is not an angry book—although there is a need for anger too. Instead, Miss Hamilton has found her own way of saying 'Black is beautiful.'" Dorothy Sterling

N Y Times Bk R p26 O 13 '68 350w

"The answer to the mystery comes in a startlingly dramatic dénouement that is pure theater. This is gifted writing; the characterization is unforgettable, the plot imbued with mounting tension. It is in a way irrelevant that the principals are black, for the haunting story and the author's craftsmanship are paramount, but, in a deeper sense, that this kind of book has been written about Negroes is of tremendous importance. Not a problem novel, [this] is memorable literature that gives dignity to black heritage." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:69 N 9 '68 130w

HAMILTON, WALKER. All the little animals.
125p $3.95 Simon & Schuster

68-22967

"The story concerns Bobby, a perpetual boy of 31, who is running away from a stepfather [known as The Fat] who wants to put him in a mental institution. . . . In Cornwall, Bobby falls in with a vagrant zoophile named Mr. Summers whose vocation is burying birds and beasts hit by cars." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Here is an engrossing but strange, almost eerie, first novel. . . . Once one becomes accustomed to the style, the story flows naturally and one accepts mentally retarded Bobby pouring out his thoughts, his history, his ambitions in such a manner and type of language. This is a completely unexpected little gem, which is a masterpiece of writing." D. F. Lawler

Best Sell 28:218 S 1 '68 240w

"The novel has a multitude of quiet visits with the flora and fauna of the Cornish countryside. . . . Setting the narrative in the first person, Mr. Hamilton takes a sizable change: confined within Bobby's rudimentary idiom, he can't rhetoricize the intricacies of Bobby's private psychodrama, but he prevails through understanding in a context so precisely exemplified that we learn from Bobby what Bobby cannot teach. . . . The book is written with . . . an unlaborious touch . . . [and] truthfulness to life." Paul West

Book World p20 S 22 '68 750w

Choice 5:1132 N '68 70w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 10 '68 180w

Reviewed by Margaret Birns

Library J 93:2690 J1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:346 O 7 '68 130w

"[The plot] sounds absurd and it is; though, surprisingly, it is not unreadable. The blurb claims that Walker Hamilton is 'a complete original'; he is nothing of the sort, for the mixture of crude allegory, fantasy, and sentimentality about little animals balancing a puritanical dislike of humans is not new. Yet Hamilton writes well enough at times to make you wonder what he will do next and perhaps that justifies the publication of his novel." Vernon Scannell

New Statesman 75:621 My 10 '68 300w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p45 S 15 '68 150w

HAMILTON, SIR WILLIAM ROWAN. The mathematical papers of Sir William Rowan Hamilton; v3, Algebra; ed. for the Royal Irish Acad. by H. Halberstam and R. E. Ingram. (Cunningham memoir) 672p $37.50 Cambridge

510.8 Mathematics—History

(31-22692)

"This present volume, part of a 4-volume tribute by the Royal Irish Academy . . . [is a] collection of all of Hamilton's papers on algebraic couples, quaternions and their applications, three previously unpublished pieces on Icosian calculus, and inquiries into algebraic equations." (Science) "Volumes 1 and 2 dealt with geometrical optics and dynamics, respectively. The fourth and final volume, promised in a few years, will be on analysis and geometry." (Science) Index.

"[This] is an excellently edited and annotated collection. . . . Valuable for historians of mathematics in the 19th century."

Choice 5:524 Je '68 200w

"The historical contributions are less impressive than those in the first two volumes. As Hamilton is still largely unstudied by historians of science, this book will certainly interest the scholar working on 19th- and early-20th-century science. But the historian needs not only the printed documents as a source for tracing the development of ideas but also careful annotations. Neither editor appears to have history as his primary interest, and their contributions are brief. . . . The comments in the appendices seem to be based primarily on present-day algebra. An interesting review of the applications (including recent ones) of quaternions to physics is brief and incomplete." A. M. Bork

Science 160:663 My 10 '68 1100w

HAMMARSKJÖLD FORUM, 9th, NEW YORK, May 2, 1966. The Dominican Republic crisis 1965; background paper and proceedings [by] A. J. Thomas, Jr., and Ann Van Wynen Thomas; John Carey, ed; pub. for the Assn. of the bar of the city of New York. 164p $6 Oceana

327.7293 U.S.—Foreign relations—Dominican Republic. Dominican Republic—Foreign relations—U.S. Dominican Republic—History

67-14395

"The Hammarskjöld Forums, each consisting of a working paper and a discussion of it by prominent experts, are held by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York. They attempt to single out the legal aspects of current problems in world affairs and determine to what extent the rule of law is actually working to keep the peace. [This working paper] discusses the legal aspects of the actions of the U.S., the Organization of American States, and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[Thomas] and his wife prepared the working paper, which was a very legalistic presentation on a hypothetical plane. A more thorough knowledge of Latin-American history and government would have aided the authors. A. A. Berle (professor of law, Columbia), W. Friedmann (professor of international law, Columbia), and D. V. Sandifer (professor of international relations, American University) joined A. J. Thomas in the proceedings, in which considerable disagreement prevailed. Several times the point was made that this was an international affair, dealing with life and death, and not a debate concerning merely legalistic judgments. Recommended only for advanced students."

Choice 4:1444 F '68 100w

"On the whole, the working paper is a good presentation of the legal issues. However, it should be kept in mind, as Professor Friedmann points out in the Forum proceedings, that the norms of international law are often disregarded in favor of an argument based on power and ideology. Unfortunately, the discussion by Professors Thomas, Berle, and Friedmann, following the working paper, is inadequate for the many legal issues and questions of fact involved. Recommended for specialized collections." T. J. Michalak

Library J 92:1018 Mr 1 '67 220w

HAMMER, FREDERICK S., jt. ed. Analytical methods in banking. See Cohen, K. J.

HAMMOND, GEORGE P. The rediscovery of New Mexico, 1580-1594; the explorations of Chamuscado, Espejo, Castaño de Sosa, Morlete, and Leyva de Bonilla and Humana [by] George P. Hammond [and] Agapito Rey. 341p $12.50 Univ. of N.Mex. press 917.89 New Mexico—Description and travel.

New Mexico—History. Spaniards in the Southwest, New 66-14778

This book records in diaries, reminiscences and reports five expeditions "carried out in the interval between the march of Coronado in 1540-1542 and the occupation of the pueblo country by Oñate in 1598. . . . The documentation includes official reports by the principals and accounts by other participants; petitions to the king and relevant correspondence growing out of the successive undertakings; recommendations by royal officials, the audiencia, and the Council of the Indies; and royal decrees." (Am Hist R) Index.

"Some of [the documents] have been available in other publications, but a number of the most important ones come directly from the Archive of the Indies in Seville and represent a valuable new contribution. All are well annotated. . . . A sixty-page introduction helps set the documents in proper perspective and adds illuminating comment and analysis. This substantial addition to the historiography of the Southwest meets in every way the standard one would expect from the distinguished scholars who produced it." E. A. Beilharz
Am Hist R 73:585 D '67 290w

"Obviously this volume, which brings to near completion the Coronado historical series, will have its greatest appeal in the west, although it will also have value in reference collections dealing with exploration, local history, and Indians. The translation in several respects improves over the difficult original texts. Finally, this is a superbly printed book."

Choice 5:117 Mr '68 110w

"This volume brings together several noteworthy documents in lucid translation, with meticulous editing. It presents a view of the pueblos of New Mexico as they were immediately before the occupation by Juan de Oñate, and it relates the steps leading to Oñate's expedition. . . . The historical significance of this volume lies in its presentation of the immediate background in detail for the founding in 1598 of the first lasting settlement by Europeans, after St. Augustine, Florida, within the bounds of the present United States." L. I. Ferrigo

J Am Hist 54:458 S '67 320w

HAMMOND, N. G. L. Epirus; the geography, the ancient remains, the history and the topography of Epirus and adjacent areas. 847p il pl maps $40.35 Oxford

913.38 Epirus 67-87728

An archaeological investigation of the region.

"Since a hearty dose of background information is supplied, [this volume] actually constitutes a compendium of information on the geology, geography, prehistory, classical archaeology and history, and modern ethnography of this still little known region of Europe. The ethnographic baseline dates from World War II for the Albanian side; from the subsequent decade for the Greek part of the province. The style, the almost extinct flat understatement of traditional British scholarship, reads smoothly and jargon is carefully avoided. All passages in both ancient and modern languages are fortunately kept in the original."

Choice 5:540 Je '68 120w

"Epirus has needed an archaeological and historical survey, and few are better qualified to write one than Professor Hammond. He has visited most of the ancient sites; his wartime experiences gave him an intimate knowledge of the lie of the land. . . . Hammond is probably right in his belief that social organizations then and now are similar but his arguments are not strong. . . . His association of archaeological data with legends is not successful. . . . But his association of Homeric burial customs with the tumuli of Bronze Age Epirus gives food for thought, as does his discussion of the launching of the Dorian invasion. . . . Some of his best chapters deal with ancient sources and their use for ascertaining who lived where and at what time. . . . The book is a major contribution, the only comprehensive work on Epirus." R. J. Buck
Class World 61:105 N '67 260w

"This will be a standard work for a century, and possibly for ever. . . . As a learned instrument, [the book] has, of course, by the mere fact of its publication, become indispensable. It is very highly priced. . . . If the high price is because of the photographs, some of which, invaluable as they are, appear to have been imperfectly reproduced, then insult is being added to injury. The general production and printing of the book are, of course a match for its exemplary scholarship. Professor Hammond's division of his material makes for easy consultation and for clarity of detail, although anyone reading it straight through from the beginning will have a bumpy ride. His prehistoric chapters are the fullest and most interesting, and the historic analysis, though not the archaeological survey, tails off with the coming of the Romans. . . . Through no fault of Professor Hammond's, there have already been contributions to the earliest prehistoric period in Epirus which were published too late to be included, but to the date of its going to press this book seems to be absolutely comprehensive of the known material."

TLS p959 O 12 '67 1300w

HAMPDEN, JOHN, ed. New worlds ahead; firsthand accounts of English voyages. 207p il $3.75 Farrar, Straus

910.4 Voyages and travels. Travelers, English 68-13674

This volume contains fourteen firsthand reports of voyages of discovery and exploration. "They extend in time from Sebastian Cabot's recollections of his 1509 search for a northwest passage to William Bradford's account of the Mayflower's voyage and the founding of the first Massachusetts colony in 1620. . . . [The accounts have been] modernized in spelling and punctuation." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. This book is a revision of Sea-Dogs and Pilgrim Fathers, published in England in 1953.

Reviewed by M. W. Stoer

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 7 '68 150w [YA]

Reviewed by Ivan Sandrof

N Y Times Bk R p12 D 22 '68 200w

"[This] is a well-edited selection. . . . Many of the narrators are themselves seamen . . . and the enchantment of old names and cadences is supplemented by Walter Hodges's drawings. Besides straightforward accounts there are unusual letters (an English Jesuit in India to his father, a prisoner in Japan hoping his account of his adventures may fall into his family's hands). A useful preface discusses the conditions of the age which gave rise to such voyages, comparing it with the space-age."

TLS p1124 O 3 '68 120w

HAMRE, LEIF. Contact lost; tr. from the Norwegian by Constance Ford Toverud. 160p $2.95 Harcourt

67-18866

This "tale of Arctic adventure and ordeal turns on the ability of a hesitant young man to believe in himself. Lieutenant Helge Ramsvik, a new and untried pilot of the Norwegian Air Force, takes a helicopter out over the vast, ice-choked Greenland Sea on a long flight from a vessel of a sealing fleet. An instrument failure (and possibly a pilot blunder) causes the helicopter to stray far off course and far out of radio range of any surface vessel. Its fuel spent, it is forced down on an ice field. The whirlybird's four occupants—one of them a sick man in pressing need of surgery—must somehow regain contact with the fleet or with possible rescue planes. . . . Age twelve and up." (Book World)

Best Sell 27:314 N 1 '67 90w

"[The author] is a colonel in the Norwegian Air Force, and he writes with a fascinating authority about all things aeronautical; the book is also crammed with a multitude of marvelous details about seal migration, Arctic winds and weather and more bizarre varieties of ice than you would have dreamed existed. The yarn is not especially notable for its subtlety of characterization, but it does have plenty of excitement, some almost unendurable suspense and even a dollop of humor." Gerald Gottlieb
Book World p24 N 19 '67 320w

Christian Science Monitor pB12 N 2 '67 100w

"Boys who have read with excitement other books by the author will not be disappointed in a convincing story with authentic details of terrain and airplanes, with well-paced action that creates a maximum of suspense, and with believable characters who are transformed through hope and despair." H. B. C.

HAMRE, LEIF—Continued

Horn Bk 43:769 D '67 180w

Reviewed by Agnes Gregory
Library J 92:4622 D 15 '67 80w

"[This] thrilling story of flight and rescue . . . won the Norwegian State Prize for the best children's book of 1965. For those who like sea, ice, danger and suspense, it is fine. . . . Can be read at one gulp; it deserves its prize."
TLS p1378 D 5 '68 110w

HAN, SUYIN. China in the year 2001. 268p $5.95 Basic bks.

951.05 China (People's Republic of China).
Mao, Tse-tung 67-27150

The author of A Mortal Flower: China, Autobiography, History (BRD 1966) and A Many-Splendored Thing (BRD 1952) discusses agriculture, industry, trade, population and other political aspects of China today. She also examines the thought of Mao Tse-tung, and analyzes China's foreign relations. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby
Best Sell 27:353 D 1 '67 750w

Reviewed by John Israel
Book World p1 Mr 17 '68 160w
Choice 5:410 My '68 130w

"[The author] attempts to represent China as it is seen by the Chinese Communists—late-ly a term of much confusion—and the world with which they have been reluctant to coexist. A facile transmitter of Mao's thought, but by no means a severe critic, she also essays to review the problems and achievements of Communist China under Maoist leadership and to depict the goals towards which it is striving. Despite its dullness and capacity to irritate, this book should not be flung aside, for it does offer a point of view not generally familiar to other than knowledgeable students of the subject." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:76 Ja 1 '68 140w

"[Han Suyin's] book is so full of hopeful exaggerations and bitter distortions that a reader acquainted with the facts of Chinese history would find it shocking. However, although many Americans lack even a rudimentary knowledge of China's history, Dr. Han's message is so shrill that it will prove salutary even to them. . . . Her simplistic view of the 2500 years of 'feudal bureaucratism' and 'antiquated exploitation' before 1949 denigrates China's past and sells the old culture short. . . . Yet her main complaint is quite intelligible: with the nineteenth century, China's traditional civilization let her down. . . . Han Suyin's account of this is full of pathos and self-pity. . . . Self-pity also fosters the fatalistic conviction that America will destroy Mao's creation." J. K. Fairbank

N Y Rev of Books 10:27 Mr 28 '68 1250w

"Han Suyin's world is black and white, virtually predetermined. Mao, she believes, is always correct and never faltering or deviating, as he anticipates every reaction to his moves. . . . As interpreted by Han Suyin, the Cultural Revolution is a race which could end in either Armageddon or Utopia. . . . [In her] view the Cultural Revolution is Mao's answer to rigid bureaucratization and overspecialization of the Communist elite in the initial stages of China's industrialization, but the author's strong emotions do not permit her to explore fully the crucial question she raises. The book, written in anger, makes little pretense of objective scholarship. Troublesome facts are ignored, some errors and much dubious analysis mar the author's exposition. It is seldom clear where Han Suyin begins and Mao Tse-tung leaves off." J. W. Lewis

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ja 28 '68 1250w

Reviewed by M. H. Fried
Sat R 51:38 F 10 '68 1000w
TLS p243 Mr 14 '68 1250w

HANAWALT, LESLIE L. A place of light: the history of Wayne state university: a centennial publication. 512p il $8.95 Wayne state univ. press

378.774 Wayne State University, Detroit—History 67-16849

"In August 1933, Detroit's Board of Education created Wayne University out of several city run colleges. In separate chapters Hanawalt chronicles the histories of these colleges—the Medical School (founded in 1868), Teachers College (opened in 1881), and City College (begun as a junior college in 1917 and made a four-year institution in 1923)—and of the other professional and graduate schools that joined the university." (Choice) Index.

"The few chapters devoted to the university itself center largely on administrative, financial, and curricular affairs, and culminate in the 1956 change over from city to state university. The last chapter, covering the years up to 1968, continues the heavy and uninspired chronicle of institutional development. A book smaller libraries can well do without."

Choice 5:536 Je '68 200w

"As an English professor at Wayne State since 1929, Hanawalt has observed many of the prominent men and events of Wayne's story at close range. Despite a measure of parochial pride, he has not glossed over shortcomings and controversies. And if he cautiously avoids more than a twenty-page sketch of post-1956 developments, he has probed earlier records fully to make candid appraisals of presidents and deans. . . . The notes and bibliographical essay are quite adequate. For historians [the author] might better have generalized further on Michigan's scholastic rivalries, explored Detroit's views of its municipal university, and conveyed a more intimate sense of Tartar classroom and laboratory. But for many, and especially in its treatment of the 1930-1956 period, this centennial study will be enlightening." G. W. Chessman

J Am Hist 55:159 Je '68 400w

HANCE, WILLIAM A. African economic development; pub. for the Council on for. relations. rev ed 326p maps $7.50 Praeger

330.96 Africa—Economic conditions 67-20480

In this revised edition "about half of the volume consists of survey chapters, stressing transportation; the rest deals with specific facets of development in East Africa, Ghana, Liberia, Madagascar, and the Sudan." (Choice) Bibliography. Index. For first edition see BRD 1958 and 1959.

"[The] professor of geography, Columbia, and president of the African Studies Association, has produced a most useful book. . . . The revision has been sufficiently thorough to justify the acquisition of this volume even by libraries that have the earlier edition. Maps and tables support rather than clutter up the text."

Choice 4:1289 Ja '68 80w

"[In the earlier edition, Professor Hance] presented a compact description of the economic situation. . . . [This new edition] is a longer and more detailed volume that is more complex than the average reader may wish to pick up and yet not what scholars in the field may consider of first priority for a specialized collection. The information is primarily from secondary sources with only scattered references to official documents of the countries studied. Recommended for large collections on Africa." M. D. Herrick

Library J 92:2398 Je 15 '67 120w

HANCE, WILLIAM A., ed. Southern Africa and the United States. by William A. Hance [and others]. 171p $6.50 Columbia univ. press

327.68 Africa, South—Foreign relations—U.S. Africa, South—Politics and government. U.S.—Foreign relations—Africa, South 68-18147

Four Africanists have examined "the political and social situation in Southern Africa and its implications for United States and British policy. Vernon McKay analyzes South Africa's racial policies, its military growth, the rise of reaction, and alternatives for the United States in dealing with that country. Edwin Munger describes the unification of the South African white oligarchy and its shifting interest to foreign affairs. Leo Kuper relates the main ideological tendencies and political movements of nonwhite South Africans to the political, economic, and social structure of South African society. Concentrating on the impact of United States investments, William Hance presents the case for and against American disengagement." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Excellent accounts by African experts. . . . Well written, reasonable exposition of complex emotional issues of apartheid, race relations, sanctions, and economic boycott. [The contributors'] conclusion: little hope for a rapid improvement in the political position of black South Africans, though clearly they will share in fruits of economic development. . . . Should be in all college libraries."

Choice 5:681 J1 '68 90w

Reviewed by Louis Barron

Library J 93:1640 Ap 15 '68 120w

"[This volume] is packed with facts, quotes, and statistics. It can be valuable to Americans seriously concerned about the relation of the United States to Southern Africa only if it is realized that some of the authors have a definite bias, and in pursuit of this bias they often omit relevant data. The pagination itself tells an interesting story. The non-white point of view is represented by Leo Kuper in . . . a study which gives a useful historical overview of the increasing political powerlessness of Africans, Indians, and Coloureds and an analysis of the ideological tendencies of each group. While this chapter comprises 20 pages of the book, Munger's discussion of the 'New White Politics in South Africa' takes up 52. Perhaps this difference in emphasis is intended to reflect the reality of the power of the white fifth of the population. . . . Two of the other contributors, Professors Munger and Hance, argue subtly against the basic suppositions of both Professor McKay and Professor Kuper. Munger paints a rosy picture of Afrikaner-English relations. . . . Clearly [he] premises his whole essay on an accommodation to the idea of separate peoples and, indeed, seems to accept the policy of baaskap." Wilfred Cartey

New Repub 158:25 Je 29 '68 750w

HANCOCK, LESLIE. Word index to James Joyce's Portrait of the artist. 145p $6 Southern Ill. univ. press

823 Joyce, James—A portrait of the artist as a young man—Concordances 67-13937

"The index lists alphabetically every word in the Viking edition of A Portrait. Given with each entry is the frequency (as a number in parenthesis) and place of occurrence (page-and-line location). An exception is made of words used more than 999 times; here only the frequency count is noted. A short secondary list, in identical format, contains all the numerous compounds, such as COW in MOOCOW." (Publisher's note)

Choice 5:182 Ap '68 90w

"The value of word indexes of this kind is self-evident. . . . To gain some idea of the size of the vocabulary of the most word-obsessed author of the century is a reasonable end in itself. But one wonders at the value of counting the synsemantemes—the colourless structural words like a and it and his and the. Joyce, though, is the one author in whom synsemantemes tend to be exalted."

TLS p1185 D 7 '67 320w

"This book is a 'first' in several ways: it is the first word index to Joyce's Portrait; the first application of computer science to the complexities of Joyce studies (an IBM 7040); and it may prove to be the first really reliable word index to a Joyce book. . . . It is unfortunate, however, that the computer was unable to distinguish words beginning with capital letters from those of lower case as the newest ones will do; all the words appear in capital letters. Hancock's book is an important scholarly tool which all libraries and Joyceans should purchase."

Va Q R 44:xxvi winter '68 160w

HANCOCK, RALPH. The compleat swindler, by Ralph Hancock with Henry Chafetz. 294p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

364.1 Swindlers and swindling. Fraud 67-22400

This book describes various "forms of swindling and fraud that are most practiced today, from the easy-take to the no-limit raffle. The reader will become aware of swindles as petty as short-changing and as grand as false charity fronts, shady securities deals, and not-so-real-estate offerings." (Publisher's note) Swindler's glossary.

"The salutary aspects of this wonderfully readable—and exceedingly entertaining—study of both the history and the art of swindling in every shape, form, and manner are moot points. . . . First off, we say that the book is a highly instructive guide for larcenous-minded readers; secondly, that it should be put in pocket form and made required reading for all law enforcement officials, and thirdly, that it belongs in public libraries—including university collections—to round out everyone's education with respect to swindling. . . . Guaranteed to titillate and enthrall its readers." P. Sarnoff

Library J 92:2763 Ag '67 120w

N Y Times Bk R p26 Mr 31 '68 250w

Newsweek 71:96 Mr 11 '68 700w

HANCOCK, W. K. Smuts; v2, The fields of force, 1919-1950. 589p $12.50 Cambridge

B or 92 Smuts, Jan Christiaan (65-2414)

The second and final volume of the biography of the South African leader "begins ■■■ Smuts comes back from World War I to take up again the political leadership of South Africa and the long years of opposition to Hertzog." (Library J) Index. For volume one, Smuts: the Sanguine Years 1870-1919, see BRD 1963.

Choice 5:848 S '68 150w

"The breadth of Smuts's interests, ranging from mountaineering and botany to philosophy and politics, and all of them intimately reflected in a remarkable correspondence . . . provide the contemporaneity and spontaneity in a biography that aims, as Professor Hancock remarks, at presenting a picture not of Smuts and his times but Smuts in his times. The result is that in a portrait of a man we have something close to a portrait of an age, at least as it was seen and lived in the inter-war and second world war years. . . . While there remain some volumes of documents from the Smuts archive still to be published, this second biographical volume marks the conclusion of an enterprise undertaken fifteen years ago. It is the crowning achievement of one of the great historians of our time. The portrait of Smuts is wise and perceptive; the writing has the fluent assurance of one who has attained the commanding heights of historical scholarship; and the career of Smuts, which loses little of its strangeness or equivocation with the passage of the years provides the material for an imaginatively creative, and still politically relevant, biographical study."

Economist 226:51 Mr 9 '68 1150w

"In his own way Smuts was as grand a figure as Winston Churchill. This second volume of his biography . . . can be read apart from the first. . . . Had [Smuts] been born later to live longer he might have kept South Africa away from the apartheid to which Hertzog led it; the years of his struggle make fascinating reading and they show that in this land there were, and are, good and true men that the world can respect. . . . The book is recommended generally." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:2856 Ag '68 170w

"I have the feeling a biographer, as distinct from an historian, needs to be a little more curious and, if possible, precise about his subject's motivations and what might lie behind the postures he adopts. In this case Sir Keith is over generous and too willing to take Smuts's words at their face value when not even Smuts himself could always have done that. . . . But you will want to read [the book] and will have to, since there is no other account of the man so complete and so well documented; and you will apply your own critical acumen so that the man Smuts does not slip past you quite as easily as he seems to have avoided Sir Keith." David Lytton

New Statesman 75:340 Mr 15 '68 1000w

"To some [Smuts'] holism smacked of complacency, to others it smacked of imperialism. Professor Hancock's careful analysis acquits him of both charges. . . . Hancock's work, as he modestly admits himself, is an interim account. It is, none the less, immensely valuable for at least two reasons. He is able to correct the record—especially the record of Smuts's Afrikaner critics—at many points which were in danger of entering into a permanent mythology. And he presents a compelling portrait on the grand scale of that true subject of tragedy—a great and good man struggling with adversity."

TLS p147 F 15 '68 1400w

HANDEL, GERALD, comp. The psychosocial interior of the family: a sourcebook for the study of whole families. 560p $10.75 Aldine pub.

301.42 Family

66-15204

The author "attempts to organize a 'general social psychology of the family' in this book

HANDEL, GERALD—Continued

which is largely an anthology of articles by more than 30 workers in this field. The book consists of seven parts: . . . 'A Framework of Analysis'; 'Research Methods'; 'The Family as Mediator of the Culture'; 'The Meaning of Family Boundaries'; 'The Family as a Universe of Cognition and Communication'; 'Patterning, Separateness and Connectedness'; and 'Retrospect and Prospect.' The approach to the 'interior' of the family is holistic, revealing the ways in which meaning in all of its aspects begins and continues to emerge from within the family and the interrelation between itself and the world." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies.

"Of the 23 selections in this interdisciplinary reader, only the introductory and concluding materials are new. The value of the work, therefore, depends on the quality of these and the utility of assembling the selections. Handel's material is good but not worth the price of the book. The readings are of uneven quality, and some outmoded. The idea of analysis of families as wholes is important, but the book is perhaps premature. There is heavy emphasis on schizophrenia, some on neurosis, and very little on normality. Bibliographies, with each selection, will be of value to serious students of the holistic approach of which Handel is a leader. There is no comparable book organized on such a unified conceptual approach. The time for a reader is when available materials are too numerous and scattered—this field is too new."

Choice 4:1414 F '68 130w

"Many of Mr. Handel's favored concepts such as 'pattern of separateness and connectedness,' 'congruence of images,' and 'the boundaries of the family's world of experience' are open to much debate on basic ontological grounds. As such, in addition to being an excellent introduction to this burgeoning field of family existence, this book should provide much opportunity for discussion along these controversial lines. Highly recommended for all general collections in psychology, psychiatry, and group therapy. In addition, the sophisticated reader in the field of social research should find it of considerable value and interest." Louis De Rosis

Library J 92:2590 J1 '67 250w

HANDLER, JOEL F. The lawyer and his community; the practicing bar in a middle-sized city. 224p $7.50 Univ. of Wis. press

340 Lawyers

67-20759

"What has happened to the profession outside the major metropolitan centers? To what extent do lawyers in the smaller communities resemble their colleagues in larger cities? To resolve these questions, Mr. Handler conducted . . . interviews with lawyers in private practice in a middle-sized midwestern city, analyzed the data derived from these interviews, and then compared his findings to those of a similar study of the New York City bar by Jerome E. Carlin, Lawyers' Ethics [BRD 1966]. . . . [Mr. Handler] is concerned with many of the same questions asked of the big-city bar: the legal services performed by lawyers, the division of labor, the economic position [and] the organization of lawyers, the professional and ethical problems of the bar, and the role of lawyers, both as a group and individually, in the civic life of the community." (Publisher's note) Index.

"In analyzing the interrelations between ethics and the social structure of the legal profession, Handler contributes to the cumulation of knowledge rather than merely supplying new data. . . . A sociological study of legal ethics by a law professor raises special expectations. . . . Handler does discuss in some detail the meaning of hypothetical situations and the relevant norms in the context of small-city legal practice, but his broader evaluation is limited to stating the contrast between official ideals and the facts about attitudes and behavior. When it comes to questions of theoretical sociological import, the book also stays close to the findings uncovered without venturing into broader interpretation and explanation. As it stands, however, the volume is an addition of great value to the research literature on the legal profession in America."

Am Soc R 33:315 Ap '68 450w

Choice 5:1174 N '68 200w

"The study has one obvious weakness, which Professor Handler is aware of. It is based on answers to submitted questionnaires. How can one test the reliability of answers to hypothetical questions on ethical and unethical practices? Albeit, at present, it is the best evidence available. Recommended for law libraries, large public and academic libraries." J. J. Marke

Library J 92:4022 N 1 '67 320w

HANFMANN, GEORGE M. A. Classical sculpture; a history of Western sculpture; consultant ed: John Pope-Hennessy. 352p il $12.50 N.Y. graphic

733 Sculpture, Greek. Sculpture, Roman

67-11105

"As an introduction to about 350 topical illustrations, Professor Hanfmann, of Harvard, presents a . . . history of the development of Greek art from its Neolithic and Asiatic beginnings through the archaic and classical styles and on to its influence on Etruscan, Roman, Scythian, Persian, Indian, and early Christian art." (Library J) Bibliography. Index and guide to location.

"Essentially a volume of plates with an admirable, provocative introductory essay by a distinguished scholar-excavator. Despite the brevity of his essay, Hanfmann gives a clear and absorbing account of the place of sculpture in the classical world. Attention focuses on recent discoveries and recent scholarship. . . . Illustrations are chosen with sensitivity as to subject but plates themselves are unclear and deeply shadowed. . . . A catalogue; a fine, thoroughly current bibliography."

Choice 4:654 S '67 110w

"[The plates] are clear, attractive, unhackneyed. . . . A curiosity of the captions is that they indicate the subject but do not identify the whole object. However, full information appears in the notes to the plates which may be read with full comprehension independently of the introduction. They are fascinating gems of description and fresh observation. . . . An innovation to celebrate is the thumbnail repeats of the plates (sometimes a different view) above each page of notes to avoid continual flipping to the plates. . . . Actual faults are minor." M. L. Thompson

Class World 61:47 O '67 320w

Reviewed by J. L. Dewton

Library J 92:2391 Je 15 '67 100w

TLS p776 Ag 31 '67 100w

HANH, THICH NHAT. See Nhat Hanh, T.

HANNA, CHARLES BARTRUFF. The face of the deep; the religious ideas of C. G. Jung. 203p $4.95 Westminster press

150.19 Jung, Carl Gustav

67-10661

This is a general introduction to Jung's religious ideas by a graduate of the Union Theological Seminary. Each of the chapters "tends to be based primarily on . . . one particular book of Jung's writing. His writing is very extensive (approximately twenty volumes), covering fifty years of his professional life. The most important of [his religious] ideas I have tried to distill into the eight chapters of this book." (Pref) Glossary.

"Jung may well have some answers for the 'Death of God' discussions, but Hanna fails to make his point. Psychologically oriented ministers and knowledgeable laymen, religiously oriented psychologists, and students of psychology and religion will find this book of interest. Any person with more than a passing acquaintance with Jung's thought will find little enlightenment. The Face of the Deep is among some of the new ventures to interpret Jung for the general reading public. It meets this goal. But it does not compare favorably with the many significant books which deal, in part, more adequately with Jung's complicated thought, especially the depth of thought about psychology and religion."

Choice 5:38 Mr '68 120w

"[This] work makes a valuable contribution . . . especially in view of the current 'death of God' controversy. Recommended." Shildes

Johnson

Library J 92:1163 Mr 15 '68 80w

HANNAH, H. W. The legal base for universities in developing countries, by H. W. Hannah and Robert R. Caughey. 455p $10 Univ. of Ill. press

378.1 Colleges and universities. Underdeveloped areas 67-20151

"Intended as a companion volume to Professor Hannah's Resource Book for Rural Universities in the Developing Countries [BRD 1966], this book [analyzes] . . . the legal structure of selected universities in developing countries and in the United States . . . [and suggests] the formulation of desirable acts and statutes . . . relating to the legal framework of an institution to the achievement of its educational goals." (Library J) Glossary Bibliography. Index.

"The last chapter of the book presents in 122 sections the topics that should be covered in the legal act establishing a university and in its statutes; the preceding sixteen chapters discuss these topics in great and formal detail. . . . How useful is this long study? First, university legal advisers and some administrators in the United States will find it interesting to check their own university regulations against the outlines and discussions in this volume. Second, U.S. technical advisers assisting in the setting up of new agricultural colleges in underdeveloped countries will find the volume helpful, especially if the new college is intended to follow quite literally the U.S. land-grant model. . . . The problem of the technical adviser in the underdeveloped country, however, is that the material in this study will not help him much to understand alternative models. . . . In many parts of the world the model described in this volume . . . would hardly be acceptable." G. R. Waggoner

J Higher Ed 39:355 Je '68 850w

"Hannah, professor of agricultural law at the University of Illinois, and Captain Caughey of the Judge Advocate General's Corps, United States Army, admirably achieve their aim. . . . This compendium runs the gamut of fundamental items for university statutes—and in considerable detail. [Appendixes include] a list of institutions from which acts were procured, and a chart of authoritative sources within an institution. . . . An authoritative volume, useful to those immediately concerned with the subject." E. P. Stickney

Library J 92:4150 N 15 '67 230w

HANNEMAN, AUDRE. Ernest Hemingway; a comprehensive bibliography. 568p $15 Princeton univ. press

016.818 Hemingway, Ernest—Bibliography 67-14409

"This book is organized into three parts. Part One is a descriptive and enumerative bibliography of Hemingway's work. . . . Part Two is an enumerative bio-bibliography. . . . Part Three, the appendix, lists the place of publication of newspapers and periodicals cited in this work. Most of the sections are preceded by a brief introductory note covering usage, sources, and acknowledgments." (Pref) Index.

"Bibliography, too often unappreciated, has a diligent practitioner in Hanneman. . . . The sections (books, translations, etc.) on Hemingway's writing are chronological, full in description, and stop in the mid-1960's. Oddly, the listing of books on Hemingway is alphabetical by author and is sporadically annotated as is the remainder of the critical portion. . . . [A] crowded, utilitarian scholar's and bookman's aid. Recommended as necessary to Hemingway collections despite the fact that there will be, and have been, posthumous works beyond this bibliography."

Choice 5:607 J1 '68 110w

"While not a 'complete textual study,' English language first editions are fully described; those in foreign languages and other materials receive lesser bibliographic treatment. A basic work, [this] draws together materials and library resources to facilitate reference and research. It is sparsely illustrated—four pages of holograph and first edition titles—but well-indexed. This handsome volume will be purchased by public and academic libraries; it should be available wherever American literature is seriously studied." P. R. Penland

Library J 93:977 Mr 1 '68 110w

TLS p826 Ag 1 '68 200w

"[This] study is truly 'comprehensive' in that it not only covers Hemingway's major fiction, but traces just about everything by the author that ever appeared in print. Thus we now have reliable information on Hemingway's publications in his high school days as well as a complete listing of his later journalistic contributions. . . . An especially valuable section of the bibliography is concerned with library holdings of Hemingway manuscripts and letters; the listing of published letters, prefaces, and similar material is also extremely useful. The second part of the bibliography, no less comprehensive than the first, is devoted to secondary material on the author. . . . [The] study is no doubt to be regarded as the major contribution to Hemingway scholarship in recent years and, probably, for many years to come."

Va Q R 44:cxi summer '68 270w

HANNING, HUGH. The peaceful uses of military forces; pub. in coop. with the World veterans federation. 325p $12.50 Praeger

355.3 Armies. Veterans 67-22282

This volume offers a "statistical account of the use of military forces for nonmilitary purposes in various nations around the world. Mr. Hanning, defense consultant to the [Manchester] Guardian, discusses the policies of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, and 13 lesser powers in using their national forces for disaster relief, civil works projects, international peacekeeping under the UN, and as a training vehicle for strengthening civilian economies by teaching trades and skills to servicemen about to be released or retired." (Library J)

"Based on a questionnaire administered by the Federation, followed by on-site study by Hanning in each of the countries, the result is a factual, authoritative text on civic action programs in the selected countries. Although not for general reading, the subject matter is of value for anyone concerned with civic action, post-service resettlement of veterans, vocational training, placement, and rehabilitation. It is also of interest to a country struggling with development problems and weighed down with defense obligations. . . . Suitable for reference."

Choice 5:681 J1 '68 120w

"Included in the book are informative accounts of the education program of the Iranian Army which sends servicemen to remote villages to teach illiterate peasants to read and write, and the Israeli system of using the army to colonize border areas and teach Hebrew to immigrants speaking a variety of mother tongues. The reader interested in UN peacekeeping activities will find the role of the smaller nations and the special training given their forces for this purpose particularly pertinent. The book is essentially a reference work to be used by the student of international affairs, political science, sociology, or military history. Its theme is constructive, and a rebuttal to protests against the creation and maintenance of national armed forces." R. M. Kennedy

Library J 93:2230 Je 1 '68 190w

HANRIEDER, WOLFRAM F. West German foreign policy, 1949-1963; international pressure and domestic response. 275p $7.50 Stanford univ. press

327.43 Germany (Federal Republic)—Foreign relations 67-13657

"The pursuit of the three major goals of West German foreign policy—security, political and economic recovery, and reunification—is here examined. . . . The author demonstrates that major changes in the international system . . . affected the shape of West German foreign policy, even though the basic goals remained the same. The domestic political response to the pursuit of these goals by the Adenauer Administration is also considered. . . . By applying systems analysis, the author connects international and domestic dimensions of foreign policy goals and examines the degree of overlap between external patterns of feasibility and internal patterns of consensus." (Publisher's note) Index.

"There is no question of course that [the author's] subject is of first-rate importance, especially since most writing on postwar Germany, on both sides of the Atlantic, has been of so little value or permanent merit. On the other hand, Hanrieder's book is also, to say the least, undistinguished. . . . Based largely on secondary works, with no significant new evidence of his own, [it] amounts to little more than a turgid recitation of some of the principal issues in West German politics since the end of the Second World War. . . . Hanrieder's publishers state that his book employs a method described as 'systems analysis.' If so, said method can be confidently reported to be not only invisible but completely harmless." F. L. Loewenheim

HANRIEDER, W. F.—Continued

Am Hist R 73:1561 Je '68 450w

"Hanrieder's interesting study is an attempt to develop 'systems theory' in international relations. . . . The book is not a history of West German foreign policy, as its title might suggest, and cannot be judged as such. Much of the book, however, can be read as a fairly straightforward narrative of the foreign policy decisions of the Adenauer government, and of the domestic political battles that ensued; and even for those who are not concerned with systems theory, there is much useful material here. . . . The author's goals are, however, much more ambitious. . . . [His] analysis of the international system provides many new perspectives on such issues as the Soviet offer of March 1952 to exchange reunification for neutralization of Germany, or the problem of a multilateral nuclear force. The treatment of domestic politics is more conventional." F. R. Willis

Ann Am Acad 374:233 N '67 500w

"We not only have the key issues of recovery, rearmament, and reunification discussed, but we also have a glance at how the author's approach fits in with the approaches of other model builders in the foreign policy field such as Rosecrance Liska, Hass, Rosenau, et al. . . . The bulk of the material which relates to the domestic scene is culled from the writings about the political parties. Hanrieder has also given a careful look at the speeches and writings of major party officials, and the particular problems of the Social Democratic party are described in an interesting fashion. Useful as parallel reading in an upper division or graduate course on foreign policy."

Choice 4:1305 Ja '68 200w

"[The author] examines the events leading to the creation of the two German states and outlines the policies of West Germany within the context of the larger framework of the shifting balance of power between East and West. . . . The book succeeds in clarifying a very complex series of interrelated events. It is primarily intended for the specialist, but a general reader interested in the subject matter will have no difficulties with the text except for the introduction." Klaus Musmann

Library J 92:1498 Ap 1 '67 150w

HANSEN, DONALD A., ed. On education—sociological perspectives; ed. by Donald A. Hansen and Joel E. Gerstl. 300p $7.50 Wiley

370.19 Educational sociology 67-13523

A collection of six essays which deal mainly "with a central area of investigation involving the relation of education to: the study of social institutions, social change, stratification and mobility, complex organizations, and occupations. . . . The final three chapters contain brief commentaries on education, each by a different foreign scholar using the cross-cultural perspective of his own country—New Zealand, Australia, and England." (Am Soc R) Chapter bibliographies. Author index. Subject index.

"The authors themselves admit that they 'are similar in basic perspectives,' what we might label a social organizational approach. While exceedingly useful, especially for understanding the social forces that are shaping educational processes, the authors (perhaps as a consequence) unfortunately neglect almost entirely the topic of socialization. . . . But avoiding the 'enculturation of persons and their assimilation into groups' is somewhat surprising since, as at least one of the authors suggests, this is the legitimate and primary goal of education. . . . [However] it is an exciting book and one which should replace most other introductory texts. . . . The advertisement is misleading. The reader will find little evidence of Durkheim's view of education as the systematic socialization of the younger generation." B. K. Eckland

Am Soc R 33:478 Je '68 1200w

"[The authors] are very competent educational sociologists who have edited as well as contributed personally, in a refreshing manner, various articles on educational sociology dealing with America and other specific cultures. The style is fairly clear, academic, and not pedantic. This publication is primarily written for the realm of higher education and is abundant with sound references from the fields of sociology and education as well as other academic disciplines. Of special interest is the excellent article written by Gerstl, 'Education and the Sociology of Work.'"

Choice 5:842 S '68 140w

HANSEN, HANS JURGEN, ed. Art and the seafarer; a historical survey of the arts and crafts of sailors and shipwrights; tr. by James and Inge Moore. (Studio bk) 292p il pl col pl $28 Viking 709 Ships—Pictures, illustrations, etc.

68-15485

This "survey of the principal arts and crafts associated through the ages with the seafarer . . . [includes such] subjects as ship architecture, models, art in early shipwrightry, wood-carving, . . . votive pictures, ship portraiture, . . . glass pictures, . . . scrimshaw, paper and rope-work, even ships in bottles." (TLS) Originally published as Kunstgeschichte der Seefahrt.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:150 O '68 50w

Book World p6 D 9 '68 50w

"The translation is smooth and the illustrations are excellent, some in color, and many full paged. . . . The text, to which leading authorities contributed, is in keeping with the standard of the illustrations; perhaps the only criticism is the difficulty the reader has in tying captions with illustrations. But this is a slight fault; the book is needed in large and medium-sized public libraries, museums, as well as in any maritime collection." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:3122 S 15 '68 120w

"In a series of plates which are sometimes of breathtaking beauty, . . . it is the complete models, rather than craftsmanly carving, or ship portraits, or even stern-boards, which seem to emerge most attractively. . . . [Every section] is full of out-of-the-way information, and one of the liveliest is that on votive ship pictures. . . . An attempt to assess the current antique market . . . is sure to date quickly. . . . In the interests of compression, one or two sections of the book have become a little distorted—in particular that on scrimshaw work. . . . In sum, it is hard to think of a nautically inclined reader who could not learn something from Herr Hansen and his team, for while the chances are that he would be familiar in depth with some of the subjects treated, it is far less likely that he would be equally at home in every single one."

TLS p936 S 5 '68 750w

HANSEN, KLAUS J. Quest for empire; the political kingdom of God and the Council of fifty in Mormon history. 237p $6.50 Mich. state univ. press

289.3 Mormons and Mormonism 66-26957

The author's thesis is that the political Kingdom of God, promulgated by a secret "Council of Fifty," was an institution of greater significance for Mormon history than polygamy. "Although the 'Council' records were not available to Professor Hansen, he has . . . pieced together . . . a picture of the structure, purpose, function, and scope of the 'Council' in working toward a 'literal, political government in anticipation of Christ's millenium.'" (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"That [Hansen's] attempt fails is in part due to the inaccessibility of the official records of the Council of Fifty . . . which disallows the substance needed by a researcher to deal adequately with a thesis while avoiding the pitfalls of conjecture and continual qualifiers in tentative judgments. Moreover, the book is cumbersome in repeating scope material: accounts of Joseph Smith, the Nauvoo climate, and the accounts of the Saints as found in official church histories. Not fresh enough for graduate libraries, and of little use in undergraduate institutions."

Choice 4:1126 D '67 170w

"The first two chapters are perceptive and interesting analyses of the millennial tradition in America and the role of the Mormon church in that tradition. . . . A clear distinction is made between the Mormon church as an ecclesiastical body and the council of fifty as a political organization. . . . The remainder of this fine monograph is devoted to a detailed analysis of the role of the council of fifty . . . until it ceased to function early in the present century. . . . [This] is a well-written and significant addition to Mormon history and American intellectual history." J. W. Hakola

J Am Hist 55:398 S '68 700w

"This scholarly, exhaustively researched appraisal . . . is a major reinterpretation of Mormon history by a professor of history at Utah State College. . . . This separation of the actual church from the 'Kingdom of God' is a concept difficult to understand, and Professor Hansen could have presented it in clearer form. . . . [His] bias emerges primarily in his portrayal of Joseph Smith as a systematic empire builder rather than as a holy, religious leader. Copious notes and an extensive bibliographic essay indicate the scope of Professor Hansen's research. Academic and large public libraries and comprehensive subject collections will find this book interesting because of Professor Hansen's unusual viewpoint." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 92:2783 Ag '67 180w

HANSEN, PETER S. An introduction to twentieth century music. 2d ed 420p il $7.50 Allyn 780.9 Music—History and criticism. Music—
Analysis, appreciation 67-12261

To the first edition of 1961, the author has added about thirty pages of new material "consisting primarily of longer lists of selected readings at the end of various chapters and information about recent developments (1945-1965): Varèse, Boulez, Stockhausen, and Cage. Often a paragraph of new material is . . . inserted into the old. . . . Three pages of photographs are added to the existing twenty-one." (Music Lib Assn Notes) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This edition] is, for the most part, a minor revision of 16 chapters, an expansion of chapter 17 and the addition of a final 18th chapter which discusses four prominent postwar composers. . . . In general, it seems doubtful whether the relatively small revision warrants the replacement of the first edition which is one of the better books on contemporary music."

Choice 4:850 O '67 120w

"Unfortunately Hansen appears to be unsympathetic to avant garde procedures, and this bias shows through in spite of his intended objectivity. Nevertheless, the additional material does improve the quality and usefulness of this book." Donald Colton

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:276 D '67 270w

HANSFORD, S. HOWARD. Chinese carved jades. 131p il pl col pl $16.50 N.Y. graphic 736 Jade 68-11278

An account based on research "in the writings of Chinese and Western scholars, references in Chinese classics, evidences from archaeological excavation in China, particularly that reported within the last 20 years in learned journals, and the evidence of [the author's] own examination of objects. He traces the design, purpose, and use of jade from the Neolithic to the Ch'ing periods." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of Chinese terms. General index.

"This scholarly study . . . is illustrated with 96 pages of black-and-white photographs grouped after the text, and [eight] color plates. [The] text is compact; it is intended for the serious student of Chinese jade, not the casual collector. Highly recommended for collections in the field." Paul von Krumm

Library J 93:2853 Ag '68 120w

"[The author gives] a remarkably full description of the sources and physical properties of the two stones—nephrite and jadeite—which are jade to us and yü to the Chinese. . . . [and devotes most of the book to] the 'design, purpose and usage' of the pre-Han jade objects. . . . The main criticisms which can be brought against the book is its failure to perceive, much less, do justice to, jade carving as an independent minor art. . . . The history of jade from Han to Ch'ing is compressed into eleven pages. For this brevity the plates attempt to compensate . . . but the text cites little evidence for the dating of any of them. With Ch'ing work there can be little room for argument. . . . The attributions made to 'Tang and Sung, however, beg serious questions. . . . For the pre-Han period this book makes a definitive statement which will no doubt stand for many years."

TLS p1207 O 24 '68 700w

HANSON, KITTY. For richer, for poorer. 192p
$5 Abelard-Schuman

392 Marriage customs and rites. U.S.—
Social life and customs 67-13462

This book "exposes caterers, florists, musicians, photographers, printers, jewelers, cleaners, and others who help to make costs of weddings . . . the third largest expense placed on American families, just behind houses and cars." (Library J)

Reviewed by Richard Conlin

Best Sell 28:189 Ag 1 '68 300w

"Kitty Hanson flubbed. She could have come up with a nuptial sequel to The American Way of Death [by Nancy Mitford, BRD 1963] in this examination of the economics of weddings. . . . She knows that nine-tenths of the business is fraudulent. But at the end her Mitfordist tendencies disappear as she reveals that, despite qualifications, she basically favors the present system. One more document on our society's sickness."

Christian Century 85:969 J1 31 '68 80w

"Large weddings will probably continue because of the prestige attached to them, but the book does conclude with some suggestions for beating the system. Of interest to future brides and, especially, their fathers, who get stuck with the bill." Valeria Gregory

Library J 93:315 Ja 15 '68 100w [YA]

HANSON, LAWRENCE. Renoir: the man, the painter, and his world. 332p pl $8.50 Dodd

B or 92 Renoir, Pierre Auguste 68-21893

A biography of the painter which describes how he "served his apprenticeship as a decorator of porcelain in Paris and at art school met Cézanne, Monet, and Sisley who shared his determination not to succumb to the tyranny of the academicians. Painting portraits for a living, the young artist had less trouble attracting commissions than he did winning serious critical attention. Plagued by gout and illness, his years became an enduring battle against physical affliction which made all the more remarkable the warmth of his painting." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of works mentioned in the text. General index.

"[The author] concentrates in this study on Renoir's Impressionist, and early post-Impressionist period. He makes some illuminating observations on ways of painting which will appeal to the student and interested adult reader. . . . The book is recommended for general readers and for high school and college students who are not majoring in art. One doesn't feel that the last word has yet been said on this group of artists or the specific members of it." Julia Sabine

Library J 93:3126 S 15 '68 170w

"Hanson has produced a chronological, informative, and largely pedestrian account of Renoir—a sad fate for an engaging subject.

Where the book does prove serviceable is in its plodding factuality, its descriptions of the social milieu in which Renoir operated and in its minor sketches . . . of the artist's early patrons. . . . One disadvantage for Mr. Hanson's biography is that it comes several years after Jean Renoir's lively portrait, 'Renoir, My Father' [BRD 1963]. The discrepancies between stories related in Jean Renoir's book and the same stories repeated in Hanson's are wide indeed. . . . Hanson at least supplies the documentary sources for the stories, but since his book came later, he ought to have accounted for the accuracy of his versions and the reliability of his witnesses." J. R. Mellow

N Y Times Bk R p10 N 17 '68 1400w

HANSON, R. P. C. Saint Patrick; his origins and career. 248p $5.75 Oxford

B or 92 Patrick, Saint 68-86672

The author "outlines the history both of Britain and of the Church in Britain in the fifth century, analyzes the sources for St. Patrick's life, and argues that St. Patrick's background and training must be located in Britain, not in Gaul." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of ancient texts.

Reviewed by James Plunkett

Book World p10 Je 9 '68 550w

"In that age of mystery in British history when the Romans were gone and the Anglo-Saxons were not come, every little hint of how men lived is precious. Dr Hanson presents a portrait of the age with freshness, a pleasant scepticism about the speculations of historians, and more than one useful emendation of St Patrick's text."

HANSON, R. P. C.—Continued

Economist 227:v Ap 27 '68 280w

"Hanson, a well-known biblical scholar and historian, is head of the department of theology, Nottingham University, England. His study here is a learned one, based on all the available literature, of the sources of the life of St. Patrick. . . . An excellent piece of work, the book is essential for scholarly history collections; the detailed reasoning and frequent use of untranslated Latin texts make it unsuitable for casual readers." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:2008 My 15 '68 150w

TLS p831 Ag 1 '68 440w

HANSSON, PER. The greatest gamble; tr. by Maurice Michael. 182p $4.50 Norton

940.548 Tomstad, Gunvald. World War, 1939-1945—Underground movements. Norway—History—German occupation, 1940-1945

67-12438

"A Norwegian newspaperman . . . gives here the true story of the double life of Gunvald Tomstad, outwardly a Quisling, who wore the uniform of the Norwegian Nazi organization, but [who] was in reality a Norwegian patriot." (Library J) Translated from the Norwegian Det Største Spillet.

"Hansson vividly recounts Tomstad's dangerous double dealings, thus providing excitement along with truth. He also provides an authentic insight into the hazardous life of the people in occupied Norway. This book, which should be of interest to the many people who like stories of war and espionage, is recommended for public library collections." Walter Wolff

Library J 92:4411 D 1 '67 190w

"The violent emotions of the occupation years blow through the pages of Per Hansson's book. . . . It is a story of stirring adventure, but it is even more absorbing as a psychological study of a man who in the pursuit of his patriotic duty deliberately set out to make himself hated by his family and friends. It ends happily, for Tomstad managed to escape to London when the inevitable discovery came, and after the war married his faithful courier. . . . [The book] reads very well in Mr. Maurice Michael's translation."

TLS p719 Ag 10 '67 550w

HANZAK, J. The pictorial encyclopedia of birds; ed. by Bruce Campbell; Am. consultant: Ned R. Boyajian. 581p $10 Crown

598 Birds. Birds—Pictures, illustrations, etc. 68-11449

The object of this volume "is to present between one pair of covers a survey of the wild birds of the world, and of those which have been domesticated, with a succinct text and photographic illustrations as varied as possible. The birds are arranged in general conformity with the modern scientific classification." (Foreword) Index.

"Any attempt to cover the birds of the entire world both with photographs and text in a 600-page volume is foredoomed to failure. Necessarily, thousands of species must be omitted and even then descriptions of species included must be limited to a sentence or two. In the volume at hand Mr. Hanzak includes, for example, only two wood warblers and no American sparrows. He emphasizes European birds at the expense of American; and game and water birds at the expense of songbirds. In his descriptions he tends to concentrate on exotic idiosyncracies of the species rather than on more useful information. The small number of color plates . . . is disappointing. Mr. Hanzak simply tries to cover too much ground in too little space." Walter Harding

Library J 93:2471 Je 15 '68 130w

"Nearly 1,100 large-scale photographs reproduced in monochrome gravure and forty-five in full color, are the most obvious attractions of [this work], but for reference purposes the text is full of the sort of detail—breeding and feeding habits, evolution, range—that you don't need to be a bird-watcher to appreciate." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:48 My 18 '68 70w

The HARCOURT Brace intermediate dictionary. 895 il maps $7.50 Harcourt

423 English language—Dictionaries—Juvenile literature 68-1860

A new dictionary intended for young readers and writers. "Ages ten to sixteen." (Commonweal)

"Definitions are remarkably lucid and contemporary, with reference to sports and the sciences. Many include histories of terms and their usages. An appendix provides useful lists, tables, charts, and such documents as the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:308 My 24 '68 60w

"This attractive new dictionary should prove useful to intermediate and junior high school pupils, with its greatest values for grades 5-7. . . . Clear, nontechnical instructions in the use of the dictionary are given in the excellent introduction. For children who cannot spell the word they need to look up, there is a spelling chart with plain instructions on how it can be used. . . . The specialists in linguistics and curriculum who have served on the supervisory and advisory boards and the editors who have worked for four years on the dictionary have produced a creditable work. . . . In appearance, it is by far the most attractive of the dictionaries for middle-school children. The trade edition is not very sturdy, however; . . . probably the text edition, published under the title The Harcourt Brace School Dictionary, would be the sturdier choice for library use. It does not carry the appendix . . . which contains the Declaration of Independence, the presidents of the United States, the metric system, etc., but these are hardly necessary in view of the number of sources in a library collection which offer that information." S. L. Kennerly

Library J 93:2550 Je 15 '68 550w

"A bright lexicon for youth. The greater sophistication of its more than 46,000 entries and definitions reflects an improvement over recent competitors. Among the book's commendable features are usage labels, synonyms, and a goodly sprinkle of etymologies. Judicious use of red ink makes the 1,300 illustrations and the display type even more inviting." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:44 My 18 '68 80w

HARDIE, MARTIN. Water-colour painting in Britain; ed. by Dudley Snelgrove [and others] 3v: v2. The romantic period. 244p il 159pl 3col pl $20 Barnes & Noble

759.2 Water color painting. Water colors 67-31910

"This is the middle volume of [a] study of British water colors from their origin through Victoria's reign. . . . The life and work of hundreds of artists are documented along with separate chapters on the leading lights of the period such as Joseph Turner, John Constable, John Cotman, Richard Bonington, and Thomas Girtin." (Library J) For volume one see BRD 1967.

"Mr. Hardie devotes chapters to the Associated Artists, the Old Water-Colour Society, and the foundation of numerous other groups especially established for artists working in the medium of water colors. Many of the 235 illustrations are from the collections of the British Museum, the Victoria and Albert Museum, and the Mellon Collection. . . . [There are] important comments on technique and the tricks of water color painting rendered by individual artists. There is little question that this work will be indispensable to dealers, appraisers, collectors, and art historians, it is thus recommended without reservation for art libraries." W. J. Dane

Library J 93:2848 Ag '68 200w

"In each essay [Hardie] records all that is needed to be known of the artist's life, with quotations from letters, a judgment by contemporary and modern critics such as Ruskin or Oppé and, most important of all, a detailed analysis of the technique. As a painter himself, he is well qualified to do this, and his descriptions of the methods are extremely lucid. . . . This clarity also informs his judgment. . . . For the first time the question of contemporary faking is raised. . . . Hardie is careful, even too careful, not to reveal where his own preferences lie, unless, perhaps, with Palmer, and the reader will not find easily final judgments on favourite painters. This is perhaps well, with a book that is intended to remain a standard work."

TLS p1079 N 16 '67 800w

HARDING, ANTHONY, ed. Classic cars in Profile, 2v. See Classic cars in Profile

HARDING, JAMES. Sacha Guitry: the last boulevardier. 277p pl $6.95 Scribner

B or 92 Guitry, Sacha 68-27786

A biography of the French actor-manager which describes how "Guitry earned the name 'boulevardier,' for he was a stylish, witty man who had great éclat (and five wives—in succession). . . . He wrote and produced more than 120 plays (he often played the lead, opposite his current wife); wrote and directed 32 films—three of them classics of French cinema. He was a collector of fine art, poet, novelist, sculptor, and close friend of the great." (Publishers' Weekly) Published works of Sacha Guitry. Lists of plays and films. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Sister M. G. Duffy

Best Sell 28:389 D 15 '68 340w

"This good biographical study and account of French theater and cinema history is recommended for general purchase." W. H. Matthews
Library J 93:3550 O 1 '68 170w

"Guitry's English biographer . . . adds a new dimension to the portrait of the French actor. . . . Harding admires him—and would have shown it just as plainly without his criticism of Colette and Claudel. . . . We also admire Harding. His delightful book has just the right racy touches and tart aphorisms. It evokes picturesquely the good old Paris of opera cloak and hat 'and stick, glamorous Mistinguett, 'La Vie Parisienne,' Moulin Rouge and Bal Bullier." W. G. Rogers

N Y Times Bk R p72 N 24 '68 850w

HARDING, THOMAS G. Voyagers of the Vitiaz Strait: a study of a New Guinea trade system. 282p il pl maps $7.50 Univ. of Wash. press

381 New Guinea (Territory)—Commerce 67-13115

This University of Michigan dissertation provides "ethnological data on the exchange system dominated by the coastal Sio and island Siassi peoples of the Vitiaz Strait area of Northwestern New Guinea. Harding employs historical sources from the 19th century through the present day to trace the extent of this trading system and its changes through time." (Choice)

"This study enriches and deepens knowledge of Melanesia trade circles. [Harding's] conclusion—that the high population density of the area is produced by the development in marginal ecological areas of technological specialized 'cultural niches' which, in turn, are produced by the 'suprahousehold' production which is, in turn, produced by the status achieving activities of Sio and Siassi political leaders—remains unproved. Since this line of Sahlin determined circuitous causality occurs only in the final chapter, it does not affect the excellent ethnographic contributions which will be valuable for students of primitive economics and of Oceania."

Choice 5:88 Mr '68 170w

"An interesting but all too brief part of this account is the Sio concept of work, wealth, and economic obligation. . . . The book suffers from a too hasty consideration of the data. A more lengthy perusal might well have provided more insights. In predicting the final demise of the trade system within a decade, if not sooner, the author might have given more weight than he does to the relationship between trade and the politics of local big-man-ship in sustaining it." D. C. Bettison

Pacific Affairs 41:143 spring '68 190w

HARDING, WALTER. Emerson's library; pub. for the Bibl. soc. of the Univ. of Virginia. 338p $10 Univ. press of Virginia

818 Emerson, Ralph Waldo 67-17628

"This is a catalogue chiefly of the books now preserved in Concord by the Concord Antiquarian Society, but it includes other books once owned by Emerson in so far as their identity and location can be determined." (Va Q R) Entries include "basically the author, short title, place of publication, publisher, date, and when indicated, the pagination. Names of editors, translators, and illustrators have been retained. The presence of autographs and annotations in the volumes is indicated, as is the provenance of the volumes when known. . . . The entries are arranged alphabetically, generally by author; the catalogue itself is followed by an index of titles, editors, translators, and the like." (Pref) Index.

Am Lit 40:110 Mr '68 90w

Choice 4:1364 F '68 60w

"Professor Harding's bibliographic material is careful and complete. Scholarly libraries will want this volume." A. M. Fasicck

Library J 92:4158 N 15 '67 60w

"This catalogue is both interesting and valuable to the student of Emerson's writing, although it is not by itself a sufficient guide to his reading, since in his youth and early manhood the books he read were drawn mostly from libraries. Probably half of these books were published after 1850."

Va Q R 44:xxiii winter '68 100w

HARDMAN, RIC. Fifteen flags. 566p $7.95 Little

68-17269

The author of this novel is a free-lance writer and film-maker. He "tells the story of Captain Hunkpapa Jack Carlisle, the Sioux who rediscovers his Indian heritage on the plains of Siberia and [of his] . . . love affair with a Czech countess; . . . of Maryenka Shulgin, a Russian candy seller who marries Sergeant Harry Austin; . . . and of Lieutenant Ira Leverett, the civilian-soldier [whose action] . . . brings him into direct conflict with the American command. . . . The author has [also] assembled a cast of people who lived at the time; General William S. Graves, commander of the American Siberian Expeditionary force; Admiral Aleksander Kolchak, leader of the White Forces, the Cossack Atamans, Semenov and Kalmykoff, among others." (Publisher's note)

"[Hardman] knows how to tell a story; but, what is vastly more to the point, he is craftsman enough to know how to tell a story worth the telling. . . . In essence [the plot] centers on an almost totally unknown incident in history, America intervention in the Russian Bolshevik Revolution from 1918 to 1920 . . . [when] President Wilson dispatched troops . . . to the Lake Baikal region of Siberia with the classically nebulous responsibility of protecting the Trans-Siberian Railroad against anyone. In all there were fifteen nations involved in varying degrees to make their presence felt concerning the outcome of the Russian Revolution. The novel is not history, however, and that is its greatest virtue. It is people and good old fashioned adventure." H. T. Anderson

Best Sell 28:181 Ag 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by J. K. Hutchens

Book World p14 Je 9 '68 430w

"Hardman has staked out for himself a fascinating subject. He has handled it, I regret to say, with more energy than art. It is not that he has scamped his homework: the traces of his eager research are (for a novel) all too painfully present. It is just that he has saddled himself with an unmanageably large cast of characters, real as well as fictional, [and] has allowed himself the luxury of myriad digressions. . . . On rare occasion [his] descriptive and action passages are sharply realized, but these bright spots are lost. . . . [The reader] will emerge somewhat the wiser in the curious ways of governments and armies. . . . But were the book half as long, it just might be twice as good." E. V. Sutherland

Library J 93:2253 Je 1 '68 310w

"The action in this long novel does not move resolutely in any particular direction, any more than did the half-hearted Allied military action, but there should be more than enough pictorial encounters to keep Columbia Pictures happy. . . . Carlisle's passion for a Czech countess, who regards him as an exotic novelty, may not be in the Vronsky-Anna Karenina class, but Hardman is at least as fond of trains as Tolstoy, and he makes the most of them. When Carlisle and his countess leave in the last train from Irkutsk, trailed by sadistic White Cossacks, [the novel] gets up a full head of steam." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 O 6 '68 210w

TLS p1329 N 28 '68 280w

HARDMAN, RICHARD L. See Hardman, Ric

HARDT, JOHN P., ed. Mathematics and computers in Soviet economic planning; eds. and coordinators: John P. Hardt [and others]. (Yale univ. Yale Russian and East European studies) 298p $7.50 Yale univ. press

338.9 Russia—Economic policy. Economics, Mathematical 67-13435

The volume "surveys, analyzes, and evaluates the Soviet work [on programming problems, on the theory and management of systems, and on optimality questions] . . . during roughly the first decade of the 'reintroduction' of mathematical methods in Soviet planning, 1956-65." (Am Econ R) The papers are: 'Judy, 'Information Control and the Soviet Economic Management'; . . . Trembl, 'Input-output Analysis and Soviet Planning'; Ward, 'Linear Programming and Soviet Planning'; and Montias, 'Soviet Optimizing Models for Multi-period Planning.'" (Library J)

"A comprehensive introduction by Herbert S. Levine places the discussions and their results in perspective. He stresses notably that the Soviet work in the use of mathematical methods in economics has thus far been 'primarily derivative and not outstanding' and that the elapsed time since the beginning of this Soviet 'revolution' has perhaps been too short for drawing a definitive balance sheet on its impact on planning and management practice.

The volume presents a highly stimulating and competent discussion, one which significantly advances our knowledge and understanding of Soviet planning and management theory and practice." Nicholas Spulber
Am Econ R 58:998 S '68 950w

"A collection of papers delivered at a University of Rochester Conference in 1965. Although the conference was for the purpose of bringing together a group of experts to examine critically the current state of computer and mathematical model application in the Soviet Union, the results are not too formidable to make most of the papers interesting to someone having a modicum of mathematics and economics. . . . For the most part, intelligent comments, a well written introduction, and an appendix on the status of Soviet computer hardware round out the volume. Since the Soviet Union is currently in the process of economic reform, this work is a valuable contribution in assessing the chances of the opponents of the Liberman reforms. . . . Recommended for graduate collections, and those having strong undergraduate programs in economics and political science."
Choice 5:532 Je '68 260w

HARDWICK, RICHARD. Charles Richard Drew; pioneer in blood research. 144p lib bdg $3.63 Scribner

B or 92 Drew, Charles Richard—Juvenile literature. Negroes—Juvenile literature. Physicians—Juvenile literature 67-24049

A "biography of the Negro doctor and scientist whose work led to the establishment of a blood plasma bank which served as a model for the system used by the American Red Cross in World War II. [Glossary. Bibliography. Index.] Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"The two things that Charles Drew wanted to live down were his football playing days at Amherst and his work with blood plasma, particularly near the end of his life when he was a surgeon and teacher. However, it is precisely those two elements that will keep the attention of the young reader. As a Negro, Dr. Charles Drew had many firsts, including a degree of Doctor of Science in Medicine. A great teacher and individual researcher, Charles Drew was killed very early in his career in an automobile accident. Readers will find the story both inspiring and informative."
Best Sell 27:430 F 1 '68 90w

"A laudatory and fictionized biography. . . . In telling the story of the injustices borne by Drew because of his race, the author also shows how discrimination has affected the advancement of the Negro in the United States. Writing in a light style and using much dialogue, Mr. Hardwick includes many anecdotes of Drew's personal life, particularly of his sensational athletic career at Amherst. Even so, he is unable to convey the full impact of his deserving subject's personality. The only biography of Drew written for young people, this is a worthwhile addition, at least until a more vivid one comes along." B. S. Miller
Library J 93:291 Ja 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by N. R. Campion

N Y Times Bk R p26 My 19 '68 120w

HARDY, SIR ALISTER. Great waters; a voyage of natural history to study whales, plankton and the waters of the southern ocean. 542p il col il maps $10.95 Harper

574.92 Marine biology. Discovery (Ship) 67-26583

The author "was chief zoologist on the Royal Research Ship Discovery during her two years of cruising in Antarctic waters between 1925 and 1927. He has used his journal for those years to give a narrative thread to his book . . . taking off from the experiences and observations of the voyage to explain our contemporary knowledge. . . . The primary objective of the Discovery expedition was to accumulate information about the activities of whales, which then supported a considerable industry in Antarctic waters. . . . The ship was testing many different kinds of equipment for collecting animals and measuring physical conditions at great depths." (N Y Times Bk R) A guide to the Discovery reports. Index.

Reviewed by R. H. Stavn

Library J 93:1644 Ap 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by N. J. Berrill

Natur Hist 77:79 Ag '68 450w

"Hardy is the grand old man of oceanic biology. . . . [This] is an absorbing and informative book. The journal provides continuity and gives a direct feel for the trials and triumphs of this historic voyage; and then insertions introduce, quite painlessly, an enormous amount of information about the inhabitants of the seas. . . . Whales, understandably, get a great deal of attention." Marston Bates
N Y Times Bk R p7 Mr 17 '68 700w

New Yorker 44:184 Ap 13 '68 150w

"It is too bad that expense prevented the inclusion of more of [Sir Alister's] sensitive paintings in this abundantly illustrated book. The publishers have produced a good-looking volume, but have served the author and his readers ill in the plethora of distracting and careless misprints, not only in scientific names but also in names of people and places and in common English words. Among the pleasures of Great Waters are the occasional personal glimpses of scientists known to many of us by their work, and to some of us personally."

W. E. Schevill

Science 160:659 My 10 '68 420w

Sci Am 218:135 Je '68 850w

"The results of [the Discovery I trip] and subsequent voyages in Discovery II are recorded in the thirty-three formidable volumes of Discovery reports which would be unintelligible to the layman even if they were accessible to him. Sir Alister Hardy's aim is to open these closed books and tell their adventurous story in vivid human terms. . . . [It is the] sense of being privileged to experience the wonders of hard adventure in a hostile but beautiful environment that gives this work of an old man its tang of youthful freshness and enables it to carry its very considerable load of scientific analysis lightly enough to attract the attention of even the casual reader. Like many other men who have worked in the Antarctic Sir Alister fell under the spell of its new world of light. Unlike most of them he is enough of an artist in words and water colour to describe what he saw. Above all he had the zest to make fine line drawings of many of the bizarre and intricate creatures that were trawled or dredged in his nets. . . . The deep and watchful humanity of this most welcome book brings a little known branch of science firmly and squarely to the novice and the concern of the layman."

TLS p1090 N 16 '67 950w

HARDY, BARBARA, ed. Middlemarch; critical approaches to the novel [by] Mark Schorer [and others]. 192p $5.75 Oxford

823 Cross, Mary Ann (Evans)—Middlemarch 67-9278

"The eight essays in this collection (there are two by the late W. J. Harvey, and one each by Mark Schorer, Jerome Beaty, Derek Oldfield, Hilda M. Hulme, Barbara Hardy, and J. M. S. Tompkins) represent a wide range of critical techniques. Historical criticism and scholarship consider the intellectual background of the novel and its contemporary reception; analytical criticism deals with the text, the language, and the structure, and . . . common-sense criticism . . . looks at the way the surface of detail functions in a typical chapter." (TLS) Index.

"[The] introduction is knowledgeable and very earnest about critical approaches. . . . The essays themselves (all original) are predictably varied. . . . All in all, an average specimen of the genre, which is normally manifested in series and one author issues of journals; necessary for seminars, prophetic and monitory but not essential for undergraduate English majors."

Choice 5:952 O '68 240w

Reviewed by A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 74:683 N 17 '67 500w

"[These essays] are all of them moderate, painstaking and scrupulously judicious. The book is not a substitute for existing studies of George Eliot's achievement. It is a set of testimonies and examples: testimonies to the richness of the novel, and examples of some ways in which that richness may be mined. The examples are all excellent. . . . though probably not all will appeal strongly to uncommitted readers. . . . This obviously is not a book for the straying mind. . . . Perhaps one could say that Professor Hardy's collection of critical approaches was written for grown-up critics. For those readers, the book will have the quality of good conversation with gifted colleagues."

TLS p52 Ja 18 '68 700w

HARDY, G. H. A mathematician's apology: with a foreword by C. P. Snow. 153p $2.95 Cambridge

510 Mathematics

[67-21958]

This book is "a third reprint with an appreciation by Lord Snow which was specially written for this book but has also appeared in his Variety of Mer [BRD 1967]; it paints a portrait, not only of Hardy as mathematician and lover of cricket, but of his great partnerships with Littlewood and Ramanujan." (TLS) For the original edition see BRD 1941.

"This touching, candid and sharp self-portrait by an aging artist—one can describe Hardy in no other way—appears after 10 years out of print, with a brief new account of the man by an old friend."

Sci Am 218:148 Mr '68 40w

"[Hardy] was one of the preeminent mathematicians of the first half of this century, and writes in a most illuminating way about it. . . . [This] book, in short, deserves the immortality [it] appears to have achieved."

TLS p1266 D 28 '67 200w

HAREVEN, TAMARA K. Eleanor Roosevelt: an American conscience. 326p pl $7.50 Quadrangle bks.

B or 92 Roosevelt, Eleanor (Roosevelt)

68-10834

This biography analyzes "some of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt's main projects and interests, to show her lasting influence on politicians (including her husband), diplomats, labor leaders, young people, great masses of ordinary people, and the world in general. Three of Mrs. Roosevelt's main preoccupations discussed here are her concern for unemployed destitute women in the depression, her commitment to Negro rights, and her work with the United Nations." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

Christian Century 85:874 Jl 3 '68 70w

"Hareven, an Israeli, . . . has the advantage in her present biography of being able to examine her subject with impartial foreign eyes. And in so doing she has produced the most objective book to date on Eleanor Roosevelt. . . . I am particularly grateful to Professor Hareven for her chapter on Arthur Dale, Mrs. Roosevelt's homestead project in West Virginia, where all the First Lady's good intentions went down before those more practical aspects of life that she so easily ignored. Elsewhere Professor Hareven scores Mrs. Roosevelt for her quiescence, albeit reluctant, when American citizens of Japanese descent were herded into concentration camps in World War II; but . . . the author says nothing of Mrs. Roosevelt's silence in the face of the United States Government's refusal to admit the desperate Jewish refugees of the thirties." Francis Russell

Christian Science Monitor p9 N 12 '68 750w

Reviewed by Bernard Sternsher

J Am Hist 55:677 D '68 460w

"Miss Hareven emphasizes . . . Mrs. Roosevelt's public life. She has used primary sources—correspondence, speeches, and so on—to a large extent although she was hampered by the unavailability of much of the correspondence during the postwar years. Some unevenness of style does not detract seriously from the book's value. It contains all the scholarly apparatus, and is recommended for the informed layman and the specialist. . . . Should be included in public, college, university, and special collections." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 93:1998 My 15 '68 190w

HARGREAVES, JOHN D. West Africa: the former French states, 183p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

966 Africa, French West—History 67-14841

This is an "historical survey of the eight states of former French West Africa and the former French mandate and trust territory of Togo. . . . While the common experience of these countries under French rule is the principal rationale for the study, the author ranges . . . into the precolonial past to identify the ecological features, social evolutions, religious movements, and other historical developments that have contributed most to shaping the present." (Am Hist R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The presentation is lucid, details are carefully selected and integrated, and the work is outstanding in its use of the most authoritative and up-to-date studies, unpublished as well as published. . . . Inevitably there are imbalances and omissions. Niger and Mali, for example, are given much less attention than the coastal states. In some cases the author had no choice, given the existing scholarly lacunae. Other omissions and emphasis are debatable. Accounts of the French empire builders overshadow the remarkable military and state-building achievements of their antagonists. . . . And, even though the author's focus is the multifold impact of the French presence, he shies away from setting forth explicitly the enormous influence France continues to exercise over most activities of its former colonies. [This is] an important contribution to closing the communications gap between French, British, and American scholars specializing on French-speaking Africa; [it] is both an admirable summary of contemporary scholarship and a long stride toward the future." G. E. Brooks

Am Hist R 73:560 D '67 380w

"To compress the history of nine complex states into 168 pages without losing sight of their differences is a scholarly tour de force. Hargreaves, noted British colonial historian (Prelude to the Partition of West Africa [BRD 1964]), distinguishes between West African states oriented toward the Sahara and those oriented toward the Atlantic; he judiciously traces the shaping forces of Islam, French rule, and political independence. [This is] destined to become the standard short history of the area for college and general readers."

Choice 4:1156 D '67 110w

HÄRING, BERNARD. Acting on the word. 274p $5.95 Farrar, Straus

248.8 Monasticism and religious orders

68-24595

In this volume, "Fr. Häring deals with the challenge of the religious life in the age of renewal. Part of his treatment of this question . . . is derived from conferences and lectures he has given to religious groups in this country. . . . The approach is predominantly theological. . . . [and the] main theme is the necessity of vigilance in the gospel sense, i.e., the willingness to seize and exploit God-given opportunities as they are presented." (America)

"[The author's treatment] displays an admirable sense of balance and gentleness. . . . As is natural in a work composed partly of lectures, there is a great deal of repetition and verbosity. . . . One is in fact reminded of sitting through a series of lectures. The principles are presented, the examples are appropriate . . . but the real, practical application must wait for the question and answer period. Unfortunately, a book has no such period. Perhaps, good theologian that he is, Mr. Häring has chosen . . . to raise more questions than he attempts to answer." Stafford Poole

America 119:218 S 21 '68 750w

"Although the results tend to be somewhat rambling and repetitious, there is much solid material here which will be useful for the religious and those directing their efforts at renewal." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:2878 Ag '68 110w

HÄRING, BERNARD. The Christian existentialist; the philosophy and theology of self-fulfillment in modern society; containing the Deems lectures delivered at N.Y. univ. in 1966. 102p $4.50 N.Y. univ. press

141 Personalism, Christianity—Philosophy 68-13027

"This book is an expansion of a series of lectures . . . on personalism and existentialism in Christian ethics. The book does not claim to present totally new ideas. However, I have used this opportunity to express more fully and precisely a synthesis of the type of personalism that underlies my whole approach to Christian ethics, and to reveal some important implications for ecumenical dialog and the Christian commitment in the secular city." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

"The main thesis of . . . the distinguished professor of moral theology at the Lateran University, Rome . . . is that there is an essential unity of thought between personalistic existentialism, morality, and Christianity. Personalistic existentialism is concerned with self-fulfillment. As in Buber and Marcel, the self is only fulfilled in loving relationship with God and neighbor. Both in the teachings of Jesus and as an implication of the revelation of God in Christ, Christianity defines this loving relationship as the highest good. Hence both existentialism and Christianity agree that true morality finds its concrete expression in love. Although this book makes no attempt at originality, it does provide a useful summary of much contemporary thinking both within and without the Roman communion. Written with verve and clarity, it should find a wide audience among undergraduates and scholars alike."

Choice 5:1148 N '68 120w

Christian Century 85:359 Mr 20 '68 40w

"[Father Haring] makes an attempt to understand the problems of modern man as he faces a growing socialism which seems to pose a threat to the individual; the relationship of religion and morality; the questions concerning conscience and freedom; and . . . Christian existentialism as found in the events of salvation history. This book is well written and [the author] speaks to all people of our times. It will be an excellent addition to pertinent library collections." Richard Walz

Library J 93:756 F 15 '68 120w

HÄRING, BERNARD. Shalom: peace; the sacrament of reconciliation. 308p $5.50 Farrar, Straus

265 Penance

68-11424

The author, a German moral theologian, explores "penance, contrition, confession and absolution. . . . In addition, he devotes several chapters to the formation of the Christian conscience, with emphasis on the personal and communal responsibility that a person must have before he can begin to apply the general rules to his own situation." (America)

"[This book] does not pretend to prophesy for the future or to anticipate any major changes. . . . The importance laid on the sacrament as a liturgical event by which we joyfully worship God, as a means of continual conversion and grace, and as a powerful factor in spiritual development alone makes the book worthwhile. [Fr. Haring's] advice is useful to confessor and penitent alike. . . . [He] has succeeded in applying the spirit of Vatican II to the sacrament of penance." R. J. Bastian

America 118:164 F 3 '68 340w

"Now, this we like: a mainline Catholic thinker is trying to rescue the act of confession from its culturally acquired gloom-and-doom context and to replace it with the original (New Testamental) setting and mood of shattering joy. Certain parts of the book will take Protestants along only for the ride, but the over-all effect substantiates a point of profit for all Christians."

Christian Century 85:146 Ja 31 '68 70w

"Here Catholic moral theology, set in the context of the life and liturgy of the church, becomes understandable to the non-Catholic. . . . As [the author] ranges through the moral issues with which a confessor must grapple—from the pill to the hidden ideologies of a pluralistic society—Protestant readers may often be tempted to thank God that they are not bound to ecclesiastical law. Yet they may also be made aware that Catholic moral theology wrestles more strenuously and realistically with what it means to have the mind of Christ in the contemporary situation than Protestants are willing to admit." Kenneth Hamilton

Christian Century 85:399 Jl 10 '68 410w

Reviewed by Richard Walz

Library J 93:84 Ja 1 '68 120w

HARKABI, Y. Nuclear war and nuclear peace; tr. from Hebrew [by Yigal Shenkman; and ed. by Alan Dowty and Derek Orlans]. 303p $7.50 Davey; Israel program for scientific trs.

355.02 Atomic warfare. Strategy. Deterrence. Military policy 66-7826

A translation of a book on "military strategy, originally published in 1963 in Hebrew for an Israeli audience. [The author], an Israeli army general, has assembled a . . . survey of Western strategic literature to that date." (Choice) Among the topics discussed are "deterrence and its implications; surprise; preemptive and preventative attack; the problems of quantities of nuclear weapons; limitations of war; . . . disarmament and arms control; the cold war; . . . [and the] stability of the international system. . . . The book is a required textbook in the course on international relations at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem." (Publisher's note) Questions on the text. Bibliography. Index.

"This compendium of nuclear strategy greatly alleviates a dearth of introductory material for national security policy studies—an increasingly popular topic in political science curricula. In scope, selection, and synthesis it surpasses for textbook purposes its only real competitor, Morton Halperin's still-useful, but more simplistic and less thorough, Contemporary Military Strategy. . . . Ever since a few denizens of the 'think factories' got around to examining the premises of a successful deterrence it has been well understood that this is pre-eminently a psychological phenomenon. Image-formation, tacit bargaining, signalling and communication, education-of-the-enemy, involuntary incentives to attack, and similar abstract mental constructs receive from Gen. Harkabi their full due of attention." J. V. Hilberg

Am Pol Sci R 61:1178 D '67 800w

"The emergence of new issues since 1963 makes a translation into English seem less rewarding. Even for a 1963 summary, the conceptual organization of the volume, moreover, is not as helpful as it might be, failing to bring out the logical interlock of modern strategic problems as, for example, does G. Snyder's Deterrence and Defense [BRD 1962]. . . . Although one would have expected to get Harkabi to give some Israeli strategic views, especially on nuclear proliferation which may so imminently concern the Middle East, this also is not to be found."

Choice 4:1176 D '67 140w

"[The author] finds that the danger of war lies precisely in the certainty that the other side will not initiate a nuclear holocaust. . . . Harkabi's book is of special interest to students of strategy. . . . For academic libraries, appropriate special libraries and for many public libraries." K. J. Frohlich

Library J 92:1017 Mr 1 '67 80w

HARKNESS, GEORGIA. Disciplines of the Christian life. 111p $3 John Knox press

248.4 Christian life

67-10344

The Methodist minister and "teacher of theology has revised for this book several of her articles which have appeared in [publications such as The Christian Century and the United Church Herald]. In Part 1 'Foundation,' she probes some basic issues of faith. . . . In Part 2, 'Procedures,' she describes the believer's role in his relationship with God." (Library J)

"[The author] has done outstanding scholarly and practical writing in this area of concern in the past. But this book lacks either scholarly or practical importance. It is out of touch with the new movements in practical religious life. It may have limited importance for some church groups but is not recommended for academic libraries."

Choice 4:1255 Ja '68 70w

"Dr. Harkness has not attempted a theological treatise but rather has aimed her message toward the sincere believer or the reader who is simply willing to believe. . . . Recommended for public library religious collections, and for Y. A. collections." Ronald Turner

Library J 92:1936 My 15 '67 180w [YA]

HARM, RAY. The Ray Harm nature sketchbook; written and il. by Ray Harm. 138p $7.95 World pub.

574.9769 Natural history—Kentucky 67-22914

"A season-by-season excursion into the Kentucky forest by a naturalist and wildlife painter. Accompanying the author's drawings and paintings are his comments and observations of the animals he paints with . . . tips on tracking and observing animals in the wild." (Natur Hist)

"An extremely simplified account of the natural history of Bernheim Forest in Kentucky. . . . The text makes no pretext of being authoritative and mistakes are minimal, although three errors of fact occur in as many paragraphs in a short section pertaining to bats. The reproduction of the sketches is fair at best, undoubtedly a source of irritation to the author and certainly so to the viewer. Best suited for the juvenile section of a public library. Surpassed in quality by any one of more than a dozen publications related to the natural history of eastern North America."

Choice 5:810 S '68 120w [YA]

"[This] sketchbook is like a pleasant walk in the woods with a folksy companion to describe the way. Mr. Harm gives the reader brief basic notes on birds, insects, mammals, snakes, and wildflowers, as well as instructions on how to carve a willow whistle, along with Mrs. Harm's recipe for persimmon pie. This is a good light introduction to wildlife for young and old." Jean Abuhove

Library J 93:1645 Ap 15 '68 70w

Natur Hist 77:73 F '68 70w

HARMON, REBECCA LAMAR. Susanna, mother of the Wesleys. 175p il $4.50 Abingdon

B or 92 Wesley, Susanna (Annesley)

68-11463

The author describes how "Susanna Wesley bore 19 children and raised 10 to maturity, educated them in their early years herself, composed religious manuals, ran an extensive household on meager funds and was a loyal and devoted wife to her stern, improvident clergyman husband." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"This biography of one of Christianity's influential ladies is amiable and matter-of-fact, but it overlooks many of the psychological issues that Wesleyan biographers have often raised."

Christian Century 85:52 Ja 10 '68 30w

"The lives and accomplishments of two of Protestantism's major figures, John and Charles Wesley, are described with feeling and understanding . . . in a smooth, informal narrative that not only tells us much about an unusual family but about 18th-century English life as well." N. K. Burger

N Y Times Bk R p18 Ap 7 '68 100w

HARMSTON, FLOYD K. Application of an input-output framework to a community economic system. by Floyd K. Harmston and Richard E. Lund. 124p $4 Univ. of Mo. press

330.01 Economics, Mathematical 67-63043

"Using interindustry techniques and a gross sales, dollar-turnover approach, [the authors] establish a theoretical framework for analyzing a community economic system of any size. Initially, the work treats the 'economic base,' then formulates an input-output framework. Latter sections of the work apply the input-output work to community economic systems and discuss the problems of data collection." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Clopper Almon

Am Econ R 58:238 Mr '68 250w

"A well written and basically non-quantitative contribution to the rapidly growing field of urban economics and regional systems and planning. . . . Useful reference in courses dealing with growth and development, urban and regional economics."

Choice 5:97 Mr '68 80w

"In this book . . . the intersectoral multipliers reflecting relationships among industries are actually based on dollar turnover rather than production functions. A working example of the method is provided, and its many practical uses are discussed. Problems of data collection, analysis, and use in forecasting are also considered. Simple instructions for making a business and industry survey are also included."

J Pol Econ 75:900 D '67 170w

HAROLD, PRESTON. The shining stranger; an unorthodox interpretation of Jesus and His mission; introd. by Gerald Heard. 443p $7.50 Wayfarer press; for sale by Dodd

232 Jesus Christ

67-20775

"Harold takes as his premise that St. Paul's interpretation of Jesus as Messiah, and the miracles Jesus is reported to have worked, estrange the Christian in today's world. As fact is separated from theory and Jesus' own words are examined, a new answer to the mystery of Messiah takes shape, and the miracles are brought into new perspective. St. Paul is not demeaned, for the answer to the mystery of Jesus is one that St. Paul could not give. The concept of Jesus offered in this book could not evolve until the twentieth century when the writings of Darwin, Freud, Einstein, and many other scientists had been circulated throughout the world, and science itself had evolved its new perspective." (Publisher's note) Index.

"While the book contains much dense underbrush (such as innumerable pages dealing with physics, hypnosis, and economics), it makes a stimulating case for a reinterpretation of Jesus on two significant counts. (1) Harold affirms that Jesus 'broke the mold'—rather than was the fulfillment—of the 'Messianic' image, in order to make available his matchless potential for every individual human being; (2) accurate and adequate appropriation of this potential on the part of the individual requires correction of the historic distortion of the Apostle Paul in his insistence on rigorous theological interpretation."

Choice 5:512 Je '68 200w

"The pseudonymous author has read, marked, learned, but not inwardly digested an astonishing range of writings . . . [His book] amounts to an anthology of strangely juxtaposed brief excerpts: thoughts about physics, and psychics, natural law and self-development; ideas that verge on theosophy and esotericism, all loosely related to other concepts which the author suggests are inspired by Jesus's career. . . . Gerald Heard, who contributed the introduction, expresses enthusiasm from a Southern Californian point of view, and critics of the book will identify its many ideas with the religiousness reputed to infuse that region." M. E. Marty

Sat 50:46 S 16 '67 550w

HARPER, GLENN T. German economic policy in Spain during the Spanish civil war, 1936-1939. (Studies in European hist) 152p $6.75 Humanities press

327.43 Spain—History—Civil War, 1936-1939. Spain—Foreign relations—Germany. Germany—Foreign relations—Spain

Based on "the published German documents and what Spanish materials are available, . . . [this book reassesses] the relations between the Nazi and Spanish Nationalist governments from 1936-39. . . . [The author shows] that Nazi interest in the Spanish Civil War was prompted by practical, not ideological, motives . . . [and] that Franco, equally motivated by national interest, sought to gain German aid in the civil war without surrendering Spain's independence and natural resources to German control." (Choice)

"Harper's doctoral dissertation is the most extensive study that has been made of [this area]. . . . It is commendably objective. . . . With one or two exceptions, its details seem accurate, and its ultimate conclusion—that Franco escaped diplomatic and economic subjection to Hitler—is indubitable. Yet this is so well known that it raises some question concerning the importance of Harper's theme. . . . [His main achievement] is to place German assistance in slightly better perspective with regard to the general progress of the war than has been done in broad accounts of the conflict. Except for . . . this, the story he tells will be perfectly familiar to those who have read the other books on the Spanish Civil War published during the past decade." S. G. Payne

Am Hist R 73:834 F '68 370w

"This book is designed for an audience with some knowledge of the issues and the literature."

Choice 5:1028 O '68 160w

HARPER, ROBERT A., Jr. ed. Metropolis on the move. See Gottmann, J.

The HARPER encyclopedia of science; ed. by James R. Newman; managing ed: Jerome Wyckoff; associate eds: Roger G. Menges [and] Edmund H. Harvey, Jr; bd. of editorial consultants: John Tyler Bonner [and others]. rev ed 1379p il col il col pl maps $35 Harper

503 Science—Dictionaries. Technology—Dictionaries 67-22504

This "is an exposition of all branches of science and technology in a single alphabetic sequence of more than 4,000 entries. First issued as a four-volume set [BRD 1963 this] revised second edition has now been published as a single . . . tome." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

"[This work] is not aimed at the raw beginner. Someone who knows almost nothing about science may find it rough going. . . . Aside from the sophisticated vocabulary, the writing is always good and often very good. . . . The articles are compactly, occasionally telegraphically written, so they cannot be skimmed. This is a book to consult for specific information, not one to browse through. . . . Mathematics gets ample coverage, . . . space technology is slightly underrepresented. . . . but it more than makes up for that with its fine coverage of the areas of astronomy that often get slighted. One specific complaint: The encyclopedia has a 14-page listing of science books, by subject, in the back. It probably would have been much more useful to have suggested additional readings after specific articles. On the other hand, the tables—of measurements, enzymes, Nobel Prize winners, minerals, and more—are extremely useful and well-done." Edward Edelson

Book World p3 F 11 '68 800w

"[The first edition] was nearly as infinite as science itself in alphabetically mixing technical, historical, and biographical information. The illustrative matter was, in the main, pertinent, clear, and sometimes in color. Indices, cross references, and the bibliographies sufficed. All these qualifications remain true in the present revised edition. . . . Changes are enough to possibly warrant purchase: e.g. new articles and four-color pictures. Yet more rewriting could have been done. The moon entry, for example, is not full enough considering the progress of the last five years. Fresh illustrations could have been stripped-in to contemporize the overall flavor (e.g. recent jet airplanes). The bibliography has been halfheartedly updated; some 1966 titles are included."

Choice 4:1214 Ja '68 250w

"There are [however] a number of new articles, . . . articles which one might have expected to be updated have not been, such as on the Mössbauer effect, and on the computer. The bibliography, arranged by broad area of scientific interest, has been extensively updated and rearranged; there have also been some changes in the excellent illustrative material. Although this cannot be characterized as a major revision, the overall excellence of this work plus the heavy present and potential use of it, makes this revised edition an essential acquisition for public and academic libraries." J. K. Lucker

Library J 93:741 F 15 '68 200w

"The principles of New Mathematics, the courtship of fishes, the analysis of quasars, the definition of definition, the seeding of clouds, the rules of scientific method, and the inclusion of a thousand biographies hint at the book's scope. The authenticity and clarity of the writing and illustrations, and the thoroughness of the encyclopedia's cross references and index, make it an epochal research facility." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:41 N 18 '67 100w

Sci Am 218:148 Mr '68 30w

HARPER'S BAZAAR. Harper's bazaar. See Trahey, J., ed.

HARRINGTON, H. D. Edible native plants of the Rocky Mountains; il. by Y. Matsumura. 392p $8.95 Univ. of N. Mex. press

581.978 Plants. Edible. Botany—Rocky Mountain region 67-29685

A "guide to native edible plants in the Rocky Mountain area, including Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, parts of Utah, Nebraska, Montana, and Arizona. . . . Instructions are given in identifying plants with botanical well common names. One chapter covers poisonous plants, the effects produced by these plants, and some general observations to bear in mind regarding the general category. The edible plants are discussed in chapters dealing with their uses, i.e. those which can be used in soups, salads, etc." (Choice) Bibliography. Index to scientific names. Index to common names.

"Each edible plant considered is illustrated. Illustrations are excellent for identification purposes. The material is presented in such a way that it can be clearly understood by the layman. Anyone anticipating a camping trip in this particular Rocky Mountain area would be wise to take along a copy."

Choice 5:644 Ji '68 150w

"This botanical guide furnishes entertaining historical information, and much of practical value as a reference for students and outdoorsmen, though it is hardly a wilderness survival manual. . . . Most of the text is non-technical and thorough. Edible plants include those that the early Indians used and that might today nourish hunters and hikers. However, there are some minor criticisms of the book; it has a meager index and occasionally instructions fail to specify seasonal use of a plant. Since many of the plants are found in many regions, the book will be of a wide interest. . . . For libraries with outdoor enthusiasts." Anita Nygaard

Library J 93:1012 Mr 1 '68 100w

HARRINGTON, MICHAEL. Toward a democratic left; a radical program for a new majority. 314p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

309.173 U.S.—Social conditions. U.S.—Economic conditions 68-18872

The author of The Other America (BRD 1962, 1963) and The Accidental Century (BRD 1965, 1966) discusses the "need for new political alliances that will be able to force the government to take constructive action on the . . . domestic and international dislocations that face us. He favors a reorganization and a change in political parties by establishing a 'First party' within the structure of the present political scene, a party that would stress the democratic Left. He describes this [as] 'a program and a movement which socialists and radicals can—and must—support but which appeals to the more traditional American aspirations for reform as well.' This party would be built by the cooperation of black power, white youth, white collar labor unions, the new Leftists, and the visible upsurge in the religious movement [and] . . . would be able to change policies by democratic means and through the political pressure of all these groups." (Publishers' Weekly) Index.

Reviewed by P. J. Weber
America 118:675 My 18 '68 800w

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson
Best Sell 28:74 My 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by Milton Viorst
Book World p18 S 15 '68 550w
Christian Century 85:487 Ap 17 '68 140w

Reviewed by S. R. Davis
Christian Science Monitor p9 My 18 '68 600w

Reviewed by Staughton Lynd
Commonweal 88:506 Jl 26 '68 1350w

Reviewed by M. E. Marty
Critic 27:90 O '68 450w

Reviewed by E. P. Stickney
Library J 93:1150 Mr 15 '68 180w

"As a catalogue of social ills the book should make interesting reading for the Canvases of the middle class. But as a program for action it is irrelevant to political reality. . . . Harrington is seeking to improve upon the Roosevelt New Deal coalition by both strengthening and liberalizing it. . . . [However] even if the Roosevelt coalition could be reassembled in a new, improved version, it would make little difference. All that such a New Majority could do would be to elect a liberal Democratic President. . . . What Harrington really needs is not a Presidential New Majority but an assembly of little new majorities: a majority in each of a majority of Congressional districts. His book fails to deal with this reality of Congressional politics. . . . If Harrington really wants to build a creative, leftist alliance of influential proportions (and he does), then he has to develop an alliance that directly challenges and eventually undermines the existing American state. This he does not propose to do. . . . [He] looks at the future with a short-term, uncreative perspective, and he therefore ends up offering virtually nothing new on the programmatic level." Tom Christoffel

Nation 206:736 Je 3 '68 1500w

Reviewed by Edward Chase

New Repub 158:30 Je 1 '68 1300w

Reviewed by Christopher Lasch

N Y Rev of Books 11:3 J1 11 '68 2800w

"[Harrington is a] brilliant pamphleteer, making use of some fundamentally Marxist ideas and some piercing insights of his own to provide an exceptionally lively description of current social problems, both domestic and international. He illuminates every problem he discusses, and he does so in readable, jargon-free prose. . . . The case for more government spending and more government planning is worth reading in the political season. . . . Having achieved the intellectual triumph of making radicalism once again seem fresh and pertinent to national issues, Harrington is equally effective in his undogmatic approach to international problems of political violence and economic underdevelopment. . . . This book is addressed to the next generation, but political events have moved so swiftly in recent weeks that a major breakthrough to a new political setting may be near. . . . Once again the author may have written a more topical book than he would have thought possible when he began it." W. V. Shannon

N Y Times Bk R p1 My 19 '68 1550w

"Harrington is no mere Cassandra: he is a problem-solver and a way-pointer. . . . Not as a 'visionary,' but as a man sophisticated in economics. Harrington argues cogently for an 'un-economics' based on practical considerations of decency and justice. No urgent problems can be solved, he maintains, unless we 'challenge the primacy of the profit motive as the principle of social and individual life.' Alternatively, he argues for the necessity of going 'beyond the New Deal,' for the use of 'public monies' for 'public purposes,' for a massive program of 'planned social investments.' [His book is] a manifesto as well as a radical critique and polemic." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:106 Ap 15 '68 480w

Reviewed by Spencer Pollard

Sat R 51:20 My 25 '68 550w

"[The author] does not sufficiently prove his thesis. . . . Many of his statistics come from Government reports, and he naturally leans most heavily on the bleakest. Still, some of the citations are deeply disturbing. . . . [He] demands a change in human nature—and an American willingness to accept the taxes and the 'well-intentioned, genteel totalitarianism' of a Government giving first priority to the 'criteria of social need.' He does not say exactly so, but seems to be well aware that no such large cooperative society has ever been achieved without strong coercion. . . . In all this, Harrington does not write with the conviction of a man who believes that his vision will come to pass. But as in The Other America, his book does ring with an urgent and passionate concern about problems that deserve serious attention."

Time 91:107 My 24 '68 1500w

HARRIS, BERNARD, jt. auth. The American take-over of Britain. See McMillan, J.

HARRIS, D. R., jt. ed. Africa in transition. See Hodder, B. W.

HARRIS, FRED R. Alarms and hopes: a personal journey, a personal view. 173p $4.95 Harper

309.173 U.S.—Social conditions. U.S.—Economic conditions. Poverty 68-17035

"A member of the President's National Advisory Committee on Civil Disorders, Senator Fred Harris examines in this 'personal view' the waste and destruction spawned by poverty in America. . . . [His] hopes lie in the treatment of causes rather than symptoms through more federal antipoverty activity, redefined priorities for spending of tax money, and a challenge to every man to reassess his values and to recognize his responsibilities to others." (Library J)

"After personally visiting and studying many city slums and ghettos, after talking with hopelessly poor dwellers in midwestern villages and rural areas, Senator Harris has written a report which should give pause to all citizens of the Great Society. He shows 1968 to be a year of crisis in American history and does so with unbiased sincerity and clarity. . . . This forceful and eminently sincere report spotlights the seamy side of Great Society. . . . and high time! Highly recommended to libraries and to all citizens with any I.Q. at all." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 28:120 Je 15 '68 400w

"The incidents and statistics which [the author] cites are rendered especially meaningful by careful delineation of the social attitudes and trends which are their real cause. The chapters on the American Negro and the riots, particularly, lend new perspectives to issues of great national concern." Henry DuBois

Library J 93:2680 J1 '68 100w

New Yorker 44:120 Ag 24 '68 120w

HARRIS, GEORGE S. The origins of communism in Turkey. 215p il $7 Stanford univ. Hoover Inst. on war, revolution & peace

335.4 Communism—Turkey. Communist party (Turkey) 67-26980

A "monograph on the intellectual and political antecedents and on the first (1919-25) period of legal existence of the Turkish Communist party." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Harris, drawing on an impressive amount of contemporary Turkish and Soviet material, gives a carefully drawn outline of various contending political ideologies. . . . and successfully establishes the place and significance of the Communist party and its appeal both to the Kemalist leadership and the minuscule 'proletariat' of Turkey. Although the author is obviously unequipped to generate empirically valid hypotheses about the quality and applicability of the Communist alternatives to the indigenous Moslem élites' program of nation-building and political modernization, some of his observations about the Communist International's Middle Eastern policies in the twenties are useful for purposes of comparative arguments about Soviet foreign policies toward Nationalist China and colonial areas [in that period]."

Choice 5:546 Je '68 200w

"This book, based on painstaking and scholarly research, deals with a little known but rather fascinating aspect of recent Turkish history. It should be read both by those interested in the early spread of communism after the Bolshevik revolution and by those interested in the development of Ataturk's Turkey. Throughout the book, Mr Harris illuminates his analysis by carefully relating the activities of the Turkish communists to the course of events in Turkey itself as well as to evolution of Russian policy."

Economist 227:52 Je 22 '68 200w

HARRIS, GEORGE WASHINGTON. High times and hard times; sketches and tales; ed, with introd. essays, by M. Thomas Inge; drawings by Mary Alice Bahler. 348p $7.95 Vanderbilt univ. press

813

67-21655

This volume brings together all the writings of the East Tennessee humorist which were originally published 1854-1869, except for those stories which appeared in the partial collection "Sut Lovingwood." Yarns Spun by a 'Nat'l Born Durn'd Fool' published in 1867. Bibliography. Index.

Am Lit 40:111 Mr '68 50w

"A valuable and handsome book. . . . Judicious and perceptive essays introduce the four sections: 'Sporting Epistles,' 'Sketches, Tales and Letters,' 'Yarns,' and 'Satires.' Footnotes clarify the historical and political allusions and define Sut's obscure or local usages, a great help to anyone interested in regional English. The book illustrates how Harris first discovered Sut as an effective artistic humorous creation and how he manipulated him, often with heavy hand, for satirical attacks on modern progress and on anyone or anything that threatened the Democratic party or the notion that the antebellum South was a superior civilization. . . . Highly recommended for all libraries."

Choice 5:622 J1 '68 150w

HARRIS, JOHN. Illustrated glossary of architecture, 850-1830 [by] John Harris & Jill Lever. 78p 224pl $12.50 Potter, C.N.

720 Architecture—Dictionaries 67-22528

The first part of this volume defines terms used in British architecture during the period

HARRIS, JOHN—Continued

covered. These terms are illustrated by photographs arranged in a sectional way and in chronological order. Bibliography.

"In the admittedly limited range of the volume's coverage . . . an extensive vocabulary is listed, defined, cross-referenced, and related to excellent photographs placed in the second part of the book. . . . The definitions of terms are concise and clear, compiled from the many varying and sometimes quite contradictory ones found in standard glossaries. A valuable reference for the student, casual or serious, of architectural history."

Choice 5:463 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by David Gebhard

Library J 92:2756 Ag '67 100w

HARRIS, KENNETH. About Britain; phot. by Michael Peto. 227p $10 Houghton

914.2 Great Britain—Civilization. Great Britain—Description and travel 68-26737

Harris, a "journalist and interviewer on TV and for the newspaper, the Observer, [comments] on the Britain of today." (Library J)

"[The author] has drawn on his reporting skills to comment perceptively [on Great Britain]. . . . In addition he presents succinctly historical background detail enabling the reader to understand more clearly why certain things have happened or have developed in certain ways. Michael Peto's photographs are an integral part of the work and create an effective balance. Those who have visited Britain or are planning to will find much of value here. This is not a guidebook in the strictly formal and limited sense of the word; using it will be like having the services of a wise, urbane courier in exploring Britain and its way of life. Recommended for general purchase." Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:1898 My 1 '68 160w

"Mainly intended for visitors from abroad, and particularly for those who want to go wider and deeper than the usual tourist round, [this] manages to be both attractive and informative. The photographs . . . are particularly well chosen, abounding in celebrated national subjects like the Lake District, the Portobello Road and Miss Eleanor Bron; they steer a successful course between the routine and the irritatingly off-beat. The racy style of the text is less assured, though it is no disadvantage to find Mr. Harris writing us up instead of down, and coming to the unfashionable conclusion that the greatest asset of the British is their self-confidence."

TLS p532 Je 15 '67 130w

HARRIS, LEON. Only to God; the extraordinary life of Godfrey Lowell Cabot. 361p pl $8.95 Atheneum pubs.

B or 92 Cabot, Godfrey Lowell 67-25482

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. A. Garraty

Am Hist R 76:1653 Je '68 550w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 220:132 D '67 850w

Choice 5:402 My '68 270w

HARRIS, MARVIN. The rise of anthropological theory; a history of theories of culture. 806p $16.50 Crowell

572 Anthropology—History 68-17392

The professor of anthropology at "Columbia University has written here a treatise and critical evaluation of anthropological theory which comprises the diverse developments of the last 200 years." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Dr. Harris' interesting and frequently disrespectful summary of the permutations of ideas about culture since the eighteenth century has a more than historical purpose. The author would have anthropologists go beyond the unreflective pack-ratting of data and resume the search for patterns of activity from which generally applicable theories of human social development may be derived. He would also have them give up the pretense of objectivity in favor of judgments on the practical (not moral) effectiveness of any given culture. The implication is that anthropology can and should make useful contribution to international schemes for economic improvement." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:134 S '68 110w

"This book not only supplements Robert H. Lowie's History of Ethnological Theory [BRD 1938], but surpasses it in scope, analysis of the factors which influenced seminal thinkers, and the effects of field ethnography on theory. The work has the advantage of historical perspective, and includes an assessment of such important figures as Morgan, Boas, Spencer, Malinowski, Kroeber, Murdock, Steward, White, and Levi-Strauss. Mr. Harris's evaluation will undoubtedly create a fireworks display of anthropological debate, but his book will emerge as a major reference in the field. Recommended for all students of social science." Harold Blau

Library J 93:1912 My 1 '68 130w

"The author performs an important service here in countering academic anthropology's tendency to ignore its roots in the Enlightenment. His discussion of the eighteenth-century writers is particularly well taken, and he reports their work with apparent care and sympathetic understanding. But as he moves into the modern arena to combat the academics, the book turns into a free-swinging critique rather than a history of ideas. . . . Everybody is told off eventually—sometimes mistakenly and misdirectedly. His treatment of cultural evolutionism (both classic and 'neo-') was, much to my surprise, unsympathetic and inept. . . . Thus the book simply peters out. Since it begins so interestingly with the great philosophers and ends with only critiques of contemporary triviality, the book is mistitled; what it describes is the demise of anthropological theory." E. R. Service

Natur Hist 77:74 D '68 450w

"This is a frankly controversial book whose often rather prickly polemic for a minority viewpoint in contemporary anthropology will raise a great many hackles. But in the absence of an adequate history of the discipline, it must at least temporarily preempt the field. More positively, it is in its own right a big book, an informative, interesting, and stimulating book which does indeed often illuminate the past of anthropology even as it seeks to redefine its present. Nevertheless, it is a book whose methodological assumptions seem to me in some respects profoundly unhistorical, and whose substance is at many points open to serious question—even, ironically, in terms of Harris's own point of view." G. W. Stocking

Science 162:108 O 4 '68 2700w

HARRIS, MICHAEL DAVID. Always on Sunday; Ed Sullivan: an inside view. 215p $4.95 Meredith

791.45 Sullivan, Edward Vincent 68-19031

"Harris, CBS network press representative for the Ed Sullivan show, here follows Mr. Sullivan's career in journalism, his efforts as a producer on Broadway, in radio, and in Las Vegas." (Library J)

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson

Best Sell 28:147 J1 1 '68 280w

"A bloated tower of trivia." Robert Lasson

Book World p5 Je 9 '68 750w

"The book is filled with minutiae of [Sullivan's] relations with the great and small of the entertainment and sports worlds. Mr. Harris emphasizes Ed Sullivan's part in breaking the barrier for Negro players on TV, his unpublicized aid to the poor, his happy home life, and especially the shyness that led to his nickname, 'Great Stone Face.' He does not overlook Mr. Sullivan's vulnerability to adverse criticism, nor his well-publicized feuds. . . . In the final chapter he gives a detailed account of how the show is put on the air. The book is recommended for general purchase." W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:1998 My 15 '68 180w

HARRIS, RICHARD COLEBROOK. The seigneurial system in early Canada; a geographical study. 247p $10 Univ. of Wis. press

333.3 Land tenure. Canada—History—To 1763 (New France) 66-11799

This book "is concerned with patterns on the land produced by the legal system, rather than the legal system itself. Harris wants to know why some seigneuries were hundreds of square miles in extent while others were tiny, whether or not the seigneurs lived on their concessions, what role they played in settling their seigneuries, and what revenues they obtained. . . . [He concludes] that the seigneurie was not an important unit on the land, and the seigneur not such a dominant figure in the society" (Choice) Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Every college library should purchase this fine book. . . . [The author is] asking new questions of data long available. As a result his revisionist conclusions are quite fresh. . . . Harris has organized the book carefully, focusing on the period 1663-1760. His key terms, easily subject to confusing ambiguity, are clearly defined. Excellent tables, maps, bibliography."

Choice 4:215 Ap '67 220w

"Despite the sub-title this work is quite as much a contribution to history as to geography. French Canada retained a feudal system of land tenure until the mid-nineteenth century, some sixty years longer than the parent system persisted in France. . . . It has been tempting to assume that a unique scheme of pyramided feudal relationships based on land tenure was the central fact of French colonial existence during the seventeenth century. . . . Dr. Harris has exploited with daring and discrimination hitherto neglected records in the archives of Quebec and Montreal. The book contains valuable tables and charts illustrating settlements, clearances, distribution of population, wheat yields and sales of seigneuries. Less strategically placed are the footnotes." G. S. Graham

Engl Hist R 83::407 Ap '68 340w

HARRIS, SYDNEY J. Leaving the surface. 412p $5.95 Houghton 814 68-16895

The author of Majority of One (BRD 1957) presents another "collection of essays and epigrams from [his] 'Strictly Personal' column in the Chicago Daily News." (Library J)

"This is another delightful, thought-provoking collection. . . . [Harris'] brief essays cover a wide range of topics of interest to those searching for sanity in a mad world. He is a level-headed, tolerant philosopher, with an incisive wit that gets to the gist of a problem. He has an astonishing ability to express his thought in concise, clearly understood terms. The reader will find his imagination quickened, his conscience stirred, and a mood of self-examination evoked by this book as by Mr. Harris's other books. Warmly recommended for public libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:1495 Ap 1 '68 90w

"Harris is essentially a sturdy defender of what Theodore Roosevelt called 'the old moralities.' But he is enough of a philosopher to distinguish between form and essence, and he is well-enough acquainted with modern thought to realize that many forms of the old moralities are obsolete and actually belie the essence. So he is enough of an image-breaker to give piquancy to observations that are, in fact, truisms. A page of Harris may contain nothing new and yet leave the reader with a pleasing sensation of sharpened perception. . . . [This] is not a book to be read through at a sitting. Rather, it is 'sippin' liquor' to be rolled upon the tongue and savored before—if ever—being swallowed." G. W. Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p47 Ap 28 '68 400w

Reviewed by S. W. Little

Sat R 51:78 Je 1 '68 200w

HARRIS, T. GEORGE. Romney's way; a man and an idea. 274p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Romney, George W. 68-13399

The author's central theme in this biography of the governor of Michigan is that "Mormonism enters into everything he does in life, both public and private." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[An] excellent campaign biography." Godfrey Sperling

Christian Science Monitor pB1 Ja 13 '68 600w

"For anyone interested in learning about George Romney the man, the history of his family, and the courtship of his wife Lenore, [the author] . . . has provided this handy source. But if the reader seeks an analysis of George Romney, auto manufacturer, governor, and presidential candidate, he must look elsewhere for this is certainly not a definitive biography. Despite these limitations, Mr. Harris explains much about the personality of the man who would be the first Mormon president of the United States. Those chapters are best which have benefitted from Mr. Harris's interviews with Mr. Romney and his wife. . . . The book comes apart once Mr. Harris has Romney safely in the governor's mansion. . . . An interesting portrait of a unique man." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:985 Mr 1 '68 300w

"Harris, a staff man from Look, has that indispensable faculty of the competent journalist, a sure instinct for the detail that will interest the greatest number of readers. . . . The subtitle assures us that Romney's way consists of a Man and an Idea. The Man is here portrayed to the life, and a very attractive man he is, but the Idea eludes this reader." G. W. Johnson

New Repub 158:26 Ja 13 '68 650w

Reviewed by M. L. Coit

Sat R 51:37 Ap 6 '68 450w

HARRIS, WILLIAM C. Presidential reconstruction in Mississippi. 279p il maps $8 La. state univ. press

973.8 Reconstruction 67-24418

A description of political, economic and social conditions and developments in a southern state during the two year period of the Presidential plan of reconstruction which followed the end of the Civil War. This plan was superseded in 1867 by the Congressional reconstruction plan. Bibliography. Index.

"In a well organized, tightly written book, an ideal monograph, [the author] surveys the whole scene in a prostrate, defeated state. His treatment of the political situation, in which the old Whigs win control they never had achieved during the antebellum days, is clear and informative. His well balanced exposition and interpretation of the Black Codes are the work of one whose treatment of race relations is judicious. And the chapters on problems of the economy—agricultural depression, absence of banking and currency, restoration of railroads, and reconstruction of levee system—are illuminating. . . . Belongs in every college library."

Choice 5:256 Ap '68 200w

"A valuable addition to the literature of Reconstruction. . . . The author emphasizes Whig, 'conservative,' white opinion. There is little on Negro and pro-Republican (including Union League) opinion and political activity; nor is there much on the Democrats. Harris thinks that cooperation between state civil officials and the federal military in 1865 might have prevented the 'settlement of the Negro problem based on tradition rather than on the sober realities of postwar adjustment.' Materials on Negro labor, credit, agriculture, railroads, and levees provide important additions to earlier works. Harris sees indebtedness as an 'insuperable problem' facing Mississippi in the immediate postwar period. . . . [This volume] should appear on every reading list in courses on Reconstruction and southern history." G. J. Gibson

J Am Hist 55:406 S '68 550w

HARRISON, GEORGE RUSSELL. The conquest of energy. 297p il $6.95 Morrow

531 Force and energy 68-8401

The former dean of the School of Science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and author of What Man May Be; the Human Side of Science (BRD 1956) "describes what is known about energy, its behavior and its control, relating elementary theory to the practical results which affect our daily lives. He includes descriptions of [its sources and forms including the] . . . problems and economics in transporting [it. He also describes] . . . atomic energy, the probable direction of research for new energy sources, and new ways to convert energy from one form to another." (Library J) Index.

"An admirable presentation of a complex subject in a readable and understandable manner. Not only is a mass of facts involved, but also scientific concepts and theories. However, while a technical education is not necessary to understand this material, it would help if the reader were at least technically minded. On the negative side, the book suffers from almost too much detail under each chapter heading." S. M. Lewis

HARRISON, G. R.—Continued

Library J 93:3572 O 1 '68 200w

"There is the danger that exposure to Harrison's blandly uninteresting prose and his overfamiliar and often inane matter will conquer the energy needed to read [this book]. . . . There is a good deal of basic stuff buried away here, about things like photosynthesis and fission and fusion, but it would be better off in a real textbook with helpful diagrams. This book ought neatly to divide the reading public into those too ignorant to read it and those too well informed to do so." H. C. Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p33 N 24 '68 230w

HARRISON, KEITH. Points in a journey; and other poems. 63p $3.75 Dufour

821

67-28706

A first collection of poems by an Australian writer who won the Masefield Prize for Poetry in 1954. Some of these poems have already been published in various literary journals.

"[The author] writes with a good eye for the things around him. . . . He deals with the uncertain ties of human relationships and the experiences of childhood." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 40w

Reviewed by John Carey

New Statesman 72:483 S 30 '66 90w

HARRISON, KENNETH. The brave Japanese. 280p il $6.45 Tri-Ocean bks.

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Prisoners and prisons. World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives 66-17473

An "account of the author's experience as a Sergeant in the Australian army, fighting against the Japanese in Malaya and as a prisoner of the Japanese in Malaya, Singapore, Thailand, on board ship and finally in Japan." (Pacific Affairs)

"This work is somewhat exceptional among the many of its type—memoirs of life in the Japanese P.O.W. camps in Southeast Asia—since it is written, all things told, in a remarkable spirit of good humor. . . . Of interest mainly to those who have themselves been confined behind military barbed wire."

Choice 4:1302 Ja '68 120w

"Well written and interesting. . . . this account has been written twenty years or more after the events described in it took place, and the author's feelings for the Japanese have clearly mellowed a great deal during the intervening years. The book is full of incidents of Japanese cruelty and brutality, but the author with the lapse of the years has been able to forget the sadism and barbarism and to remember only the bravery and to remember it with envy. . . . [Recommended] to anyone interested in a study of human nature against a background of misery, hunger, sickness and exhaustion." O. L. Roberts

Pacific Affairs 40:385 fall-winter '67-'68 220w

HARRISON, WILLIAM C. Dr William Harvey and the discovery of circulation; il. by Laszlo Kubinyi. 42p $2.95; lib bdg $3.24 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92 Harvey, William—Juvenile literature. Blood—Circulation—Juvenile literature 67-10267

This biography covers "Harvey's early life in Folkestone and at Canterbury Grammar School and Cambridge; his studies at Padua and work at Bartholomew's Hospital, and the publication, when he was fifty, of his findings on the circulation of the blood." (TLS) Index. "Grades three to five." (Library J)

"Important information about the events of [Harvey's] time [is] supplemented with delicately drawn informative illustrations. The account of Harvey's investigation of the circulation of the blood is sketchy and does little to develop an appreciation of the man as a scientist. Like the others in this series, this is too brief to give more than a very superficial idea of how Harvey lived and how much he contributed to the art of diagnosis." Alphoretta Fish

Library J 92:1734 Ap 15 '67 80w

"[This] is a sober account which does convey the respect for the truth and the attentive observation necessary to a great scientist, but it is too much concerned with small incidents of Harvey's life and not enough with his scientific discoveries. [The illustrations] help to recall the period; at least one diagram of the heart should have been included to make the atrium/ventricle cycle easier to understand."

TLS p1165 N 30 '67 100w

HARSHBARGER, GRETCHEN FISCHER. McCall's garden book; written especially for McCall's by Gretchen Fischer Harshbarger. 520p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster

635 Gardening

68-11985

This book seeks to provide "everything you need to know to create a flourishing garden for your home, step by step, season by season, plant by plant, wherever you live. How to grow luxuriant lawns, flowers, shrubs, trees, fruit, vegetables, even if you have never gardened before." (Harper) Bibliography. Index.

"A beautifully organized treatise on gardening that covers practically every aspect of growing things, even though it seems directed to the 'lady-hobbyist' rather than the professional or amateur male gardener. . . . [There are] practical chapters on vegetables, herbs, fruits, indoor gardening. A treatise by Dr. Robert Schery on Soils and Plant foods, pruning and repairing, is followed by one by Dr. Cynthia Westcott on plant diseases and pests. . . . A thoroughly helpful book for professional and amateur gardeners, adequately illustrated by drawings and photographic plates."

Best Sell 27:435 F 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:152 Mr '68 190w

Reviewed by E. C. Hall

Library J 93:1644 Ap 15 '68 160w

HART, A. TINDAL. The man in the pew, 1558-1660. 221p il $6 Humanities press

274.2 Great Britain—Church history. Great Britain—Social life and customs 66-28388

An "examination of rural religious life in [England during this period]. . . . Hart surveys village life, the role of the squire, church-wardens, and parish clerks as well as the ordinary Englishman, Anglican and Nonconformist. The work is based upon ecclesiastical records, letters, and diaries of the period." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Good illustrations effectively supplement the text; a decent bibliography, although it lacks some of the good recent scholarly books. A good purchase for the undergraduate library."

Choice 5:253 Ap '68 130w

"This book gives the impression of being a labour of love. . . . In fact Mr Hart gives the impression of describing the parish, as it were, before the Fall. . . . [If the picture drawn] is a little optimistic even for the seventeenth century, [Hart] does admit in his chapter on non-conformity that the forces of dissent were already invading the garden. The full quotations from parish records and the detailed descriptions of the functions of the various parish officers make the book interesting reading to anyone concerned with local history, and informative to the general reader."

Economist 221:696 N 12 '66 200w

HART, CLIVE. Kites: an historical survey. 196p il col pl $12.50 Praeger

629.133 Kites

67-20415

From the origin of the kite in China more than two thousand years ago, the author surveys its history, concluding with modern accomplishments "where kites have been used in studies of electricity, meteorology, and in the development of aerodynamically sound lifting and flying devices." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:330 My '68 120w

"This book is a winner on three scores: it is interesting; it is authentic in a subject area where false statements abound; and it leaves a clear trail of illustrations and bibliographic testimony for further exploration. . . . For wide library purchase since this is the only adequate book on the subject." M. M. Ferguson

Library J 92:4171 N 15 '67 150w

"This is an account of the kite so particular, so expert, so complete, so lively that it deserves young readers, who may come to hold it as their earliest model of what a monograph can be. It is the first good history of the kite. . . . Professor Hart writes as he flies kites, with high pleasure, an expert's skill and an easy hand." Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 217:148 D '67 270w

HART, HENRY H. Marco Polo, Venetian adventurer. new ed 306p $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press
B or 92 Polo, Marco 67-15585

This book is a revised and enlarged edition of Venetian Adventurer (BRD 1942). It discusses "Marco Polo's life, his book, and his Venetian and Asian environments. . . . It is intended 'to release the man Marco from the mass of dusty documents and weighty scholarly tomes which have tended to obscure him' and is a result . . . [of] personal visits and . . . research by the author in Venice, other parts of Europe, and Asia." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Revision is slight, embracing only correction in matters of fact, detail, footnoting style, occasional changes in phrasing, the addition of chapter epigraphs, an appendix, and an updated bibliography. Eighteen of the original 28 illustrations plus two new ones grace the volume. Highly recommended for libraries without the original." Choice 5:389 My '68 100w

"[Hart] has taken full account of the vast literature on the subject which has appeared in the last 25 years, but he has not distorted his account of the journeys of the Polos with lengthy discussions of the numerous unsolved problems remaining. [He] writes well and his book is suitable for the general reader. The notes, which are not numerous, are inserted largely to explain certain points in the text and to point out the opinions of other scholars. This book, the product of mature scholarship, will be of great interest to a wide variety of readers. It should be purchased by public and academic libraries." H. L. Adelson
Library J 93:181 Ja 15 '68 150w

HARTH, PHILLIP. Contexts of Dryden's thought. 304p $8.50 Univ. of Chicago press 821 Dryden, John 67-30129

"Wary of prevailing explanations for Dryden's political and religious skepticism, Professor Harth of the University of Wisconsin examines . . . the philosophical positions implied and stated in the two long poems, Religio Laici and The Hind and the Panther. When exposition of his views requires it, Mr. Harth cites passages from the other poems, the plays, and Dryden's prose. Eschewing the 'history of ideas' formulas, he rejects the simplistic notion of Dryden's thought (justified by appeals to his 'intellectual milieu' and first argued by Louis Bredvold) as a logical outgrowth of his putative allegiance to Pyrrhonism." (Library J) Index.

"[This] shrewd, well-written analysis of a modest, diffident Dryden will interest mainly scholars of English Restoration literature and is recommended for university and large public research collections." J. R. Willingham
Library J 93:1144 Mr 15 '68 150w

"What Mr. Harth argues for [here] is nothing less than a radically new interpretation of Dryden's theological-philosophical views, and it is, for the most part, a compelling and successful argument. . . . [There is a tendency] toward puffiness of statement, and prolix repetition of points. . . . More crucially, at many points Harth makes [the two poems] appear altogether too much like mere poetizings of polemical tracts. . . . A major fault lies in Harth's failure to put sufficient stress on Dryden's concern with some of the dangerous tendencies occurring within the contemporary Christian rationalist movement itself. . . . In spite of these strictures, this book is a major achievement, illuminating as it does the rich storehouse of Dryden's thought in a way which must be reckoned with by every future student of Dryden." Yale R 57:X summer '68 1000w

HARTJE, ROBERT G. Van Dorn; the life and times of a Confederate general. 359p maps $8.95 Vanderbilt univ. press 973.7 U.S.—History—Civil War—Biography.

Van Dorn, Earl 67-16280

The author "relates that his book, the outgrowth of a Vanderbilt thesis, was conceived in the belief that a study of military figures of secondary importance will shed considerable light on the scenes of action in which they participated. His subject is Mississippian Earl Van Dorn—West Point graduate, veteran of the Mexican War and the Indian frontier, Confederate Major General." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] is better on the commander's generalship than on Van Dorn the man, and he is more effective in discussing 'The Life' than he is the 'Times' of his subject. . . . Although not a profound or distinguished biography, this adequately researched study of the . . . southern general has been long awaited. There are a few factual errors, and the scholar would like a little heavier documentation in footnotes. . . . At times overly dramatic, the style is often clumsy, stilted, and cliché-ridden. While the maps are helpful, a few more would have been useful, and the uncritical bibliography should have been broken down into categories. Although containing the limitations mentioned, and being perhaps a trifle too hard on Van Dorn, this biography should remain a standard one of this controversial Confederate commander for some time." W. W. Hassler
Am Hist R 73:923 F '68 550w

Reviewed by T. H. Williams
Ann Am Acad 376:189 Mr '68 650w

"Van Dorn's relative unimportance, his failings at Pea Ridge and Corinth, the circumstances of his death—assassination by an outraged husband—and the scarcity of source material have deterred any earlier biographers. . . . The author has struggled gamely . . . but too often has been forced to fill gaps with conjecture, and fails to fulfill his objective. Van Dorn remains of secondary importance, as does this volume." Choice 4:905 O '67 150w

"This work provides a detailed and carefully researched account of all of Earl Van Dorn's operations and a much needed insight into the sources and nature of the generalship of this significant Confederate commander. . . . This book is a disappointment in some respects. The paucity of personal letters contributes to the author's failure to make Van Dorn come alive as an individual. Van Dorn's operations are rarely placed in the context of the military situation of the time, something that seems promised by the title. There are a disconcerting number of inconsistencies, errors, and gaps in documentation." Archer Jones
J Am Hist 54:673 D '67 260w

HARTKE, VANCE. The American crisis in Vietnam. 163p $5.95 Bobbs

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 67-18650

Indiana's Democratic Senator reviews the history of American involvement in Vietnam.

"A political work, designed to convince the public and those responsible for foreign policy decision making in this country that the present U.S. policy towards Viet-Nam should be radically altered. There is no new information here: background material on the Viet-Nam conflict has been taken from secondary sources and specific recommendations for changes in policy directions have been heard elsewhere. Any of the later books of Bernard Fall are more informative; both Shaplen and Schlesinger are more convincing. However one may commend Senator Hartke for his courage in speaking out against policies of his own political party, this is not an outstanding contribution to the literature on Viet-Nam." Choice 5:1221 N '68 90w

Christian Century 85:921 Jl 17 '68 30w

"[The author] concludes with no more concrete proposals for ending the war than a call for honorable negotiations. In this reviewer's opinion, the book is so vapid in style, so puerile in thought, and so superfluous in content that few libraries will be interested in it." Collin Clark
Library J 93:2839 Ag '68 150w

HARTSHORN, J. E. Politics and world oil economics; an account of the international oil industry in its political environment [Eng title: Oil companies and governments]. rev ed 410p maps $10 Praeger 338.2 Petroleum industry and trade 67-13871

This "analysis of the structure and operations of the oil complex all over the world . . . attempts to provide an objective understanding of this industry and the circumstances in which it is forced to exist by governments that function as either consumers, producers, or co-owners of pipelines." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. This is the second edition of a work first published in 1962.

"Although written for the general reader, undergraduate students will gain insight into the struggle for prerogative in world oil and likely developments in the changing relations between oil companies and governments. An excellent reference for term papers relating to economics of the world petroleum industry and international relations in oil. . . . Revised edition updates tables and references. . . . Some chapters are revised or rewritten." Choice 5:1009 O '68 150w

"The book is scholarly and well written and ranks with the relatively few volumes that have delved into the international political and economic influences upon the petroleum industry. It will have appeal in collections concerned with international finance and the political implications of international economic activity." Paul Wasserman
Library J 92:2152 Je 1 '67 150w

HARTSHORNE, CHARLES. A natural theology for our time. 145p $3.50 Open ct.
210 Natural theology 66-14722

"This book consists of revised versions of four Morse Lectures delivered by Professor Hartshorne at Union Theological Seminary in New York in 1964. . . . Hartshorne argues that empirical proofs for the existence of God fail, because they involve an inappropriate definition of the deity. Once this definition is properly set forth a number of proofs are available, any one of which ought to lead a rational individual to believe in the necessary existence of God." (J Philos) Index.

"An expansion of Hartshorne's earlier work, The Logic of Perfection [BRD 1963], winner of the Lecomte du Nouÿ award for 1962-63, [this work] contains one of the most telling criticisms of the absolute conception of God as developed in the writings of Aristotle, Augustine, Anselm, and Aquinas. According to Hartshorne, the mistake of this traditional conception is to regard the divine perfection as complete actuality and, therefore, unsurpassable even by God. In place of this static conception, Hartshorne insists that although God is unsurpassable by another, he is self-surpassing. In spite of the difficulty of this book, it, like Hartshorne's other writings, is a must for college libraries." Choice 4:1256 Ja '68 150w

"The concept of God that is proposed here is not entirely clear. . . . As to the proofs for the existence of God which Hartshorne provides, they are unconvincing. . . . Though Hartshorne is vitally concerned with proving the existence of God, . . . it is refreshing to find a theologian who admits that religion does not stand or fall with proofs for the existence of God, and this raises the question, too rarely discussed, whether such proofs are at all relevant to religious activity. Hartshorne seems to believe that there is some such relevance, but he does not elaborate on this crucial point. Though I disagree with many of the claims defended in this book, I find it refreshing and provocative. . . . [It] deserves careful consideration." S. M. Cahn
J Philos 65:231 Ap 18 '68 1000w

HARTWELL, R. M., ed. The causes of the industrial revolution in England; ed. with an introd. by R. M. Hartwell. 177p $4; pa $2.85 Barnes & Noble 338.0942 Great Britain—History—19th century. Great Britain—Economic conditions 67-114057

There are gathered here seven articles which have previously appeared in such publications as Annales, Economic Development and Cultural Change, and The Economic History Review. Bibliography.

"A reprinted article by the editor [is] rendered somewhat redundant by a section of his introduction. Well selected for coverage, beautifully written articles of high quality, but none of an econometric caste; . . . highly recommended for library acquisition and potential course adoption in economic history and economic development. . . . The outstanding feature in this volume is Hartwell's introduction which could become a minor classic, both in the development literature of balanced and unbalanced growth and in that of the industrial revolution proper." Choice 5:530 Je '68 130w

"It is difficult to see what purpose a book of this sort can serve. It is not, in fact, presented in the form of a debate, nor does the introduction . . . make the sort of lucid connexions which could draw the material together into a significant whole. Indeed, lucidity is a quality signally lacking in the editorial contribution. . . . The most rewarding part of the book, for those who have not already read it, is the stimulating essay by F. Crouzet on 'England and France in the Eighteenth Century: A Comparative Analysis of Two Economic Growths'. But one thought-provoking paper does not make a debate, nor can it do much to redeem what is, in toto, a rather stale and pedestrian approach to a key area of historical inquiry." TLS p90 Ja 25 '68 500w

HARVARD UNIVERSITY. Library. Houghton Library. The Houghton library, 1942-1967. See Houghton library

HARVARD UNIVERSITY. William Hayes Fogg Art Museum. Ingres centennial exhibition, 1867-1967. See Ingres, J. A. D.

HARVEY, DONALD J. France since the revolution. 366p $8.95; pa $4.50 Free press
944 France—History. France—Politics and government 68-12831

In this description of French history from 1789 to 1967, the emphasis is on the "search for a . . . political structure; the economic and social adjustment to industrialization; the formulation and implementation of a foreign and military policy; . . . the quest for empire and the debate over colonial policy; and finally, the role, status, and contributions of the intellectuals." (p. 3) Bibliography. Index.

"Harvey (Hunter College) has written a merely competent survey of French political history. It is stylistically dull and has minimal bibliographies and indexing. . . . And since the book is a text, it probably has no place in a library collection." Choice 5:1028 O '68 50w

"Here is a much needed book—a readable, competently written, one-volume history of France since the Old Régime. . . . I wish that the [author] had been more concerned with political theory and literature (Chateaubriand, DeMaistre, Cocteau, and Malraux are not in the index), but in 350 pages we cannot expect everything. What Mr. Harvey does cover he treats with insight in a clear, and at times almost sprightly, prose. Public, college, and university libraries should purchase this enjoyable [account]." Garland Downum
Library J 93:2862 Ag '68 150w

HARVEY, SIR PAUL, ed. The Oxford companion to English literature; 4th ed. rev. by Dorothy Eagle. 961p $12.50 Oxford

820.3 English literature—Dictionaries. English literature—Bio-bibliography. Literature—Dictionaries. Literature—Bio-bibliography [67-111134]

"The main work in preparing this new edition has been to bring the entries for the twentieth century up to date. Many new writers have become established . . . and a few who were accorded [originally] only brief entries are now recognized as major figures. New articles have been written for these and old ones have been expanded. . . . As far as possible the latest or best editions of important works have been noted, as well as recent biographies or editions of correspondence. A few alterations in the text have been made where modern scholarship has thrown new light (in Old English or Shakespearean studies for example) . . . [and] a certain amount of weeding and pruning has been done." (Pref to fourth ed) For the first edition see BRD 1932, 1933; for the second, BRD 1937.

Booklist and S B ■ 64:1154 Je 15 '68
1850w

Choice 5:463 Je '68 100w

"Mrs Dorothy Eagle, who has revised the book while keeping its original character, has expanded the entries where they were tentative before, notably and wisely among American and Irish writers. Shaw has not been rewritten, but Yeats receives the full treatment. New or expanded entries for O'Neill, Scott Fitzgerald, Hemingway and Pound ensure dollar earnings for the book. . . . [This] is still an indispensable and incredibly cheap reference book for those in search of plots and stories from Shakespeare, Dickens, and Co., and lives of the canonised literary saints. . . . There is an adequate entry on Existentialism, but a mothly attempt at Marxism, with nothing about its subsequent effect on literature. There is not much then about the larger movement of ideas, and ditto about later stylistic experiments."

Economist 225:1233 D 23 '67 550w

"While the 50 pages of appendixes and tables on censorship, copyright, and calendars are of certain interest to all users, American readers will find Table IV, 'Feasts and Saints' Days Frequently Used in Dating Documents,' of great value. This work is still unexcelled as the best ready reference for identifying pseudonyms and characters in works of English literature, and for providing good information for undergraduate use; for example, see the clear, concise entry on the Praetorian Guard. . . . While I am disappointed with the triteness of the text of some entries, for example those on John Donne and Joseph Conrad, I think Sir Paul Harvey's work is still an indispensable reference. An excellent bargain at the price and needed in all academic and public libraries." R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:978 Mr 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:62 My 18 '68 20w

"Mrs. Eagle's task has been to bring Harvey, last revised by Harvey himself in his seventy-eighth year (1946), up to date. . . . It is a tribute to a great encyclopedist that so little has called for change. . . . A few wrong or doubtful dates have slipped by. . . . Some questionable assertions are repeated from earlier editions. . . . But slips like this are rare. The principal changes since the 1946 edition are designed to bring into fresh focus the elderly and the lately dead, and to introduce newcomers. Osbert Sitwell is treated with more respect, Proust and Joyce, Gide and Croce, with greater understanding. . . . Mrs. Eagle deserves the highest credit for the skill, judgment and scholarship with which she has modernized a classic."

TLS p1168 N 30 '67 1850w

HARVEY, VIRGINIA I. Macramé: the art of creative knotting. 128p il $8.50 Reinhold

746.2 Macramé 66-24539

"Macramé is a French word meaning knotted lace. . . . After an introductory section on the background and uses of macramé, Mrs Harvey gives . . . detailed instructions for making hats, bags, curtains, scarves, and other articles. She includes drawings and photographs to illustrate procedures and finished products." (Library J) Bibliography. Glossary and Index of knots.

"A very interesting and successful book. . . . The material is well-organized and logically presented. . . . Most important in a book of this type are the illustrations and technical instructions. These are very good and easily understood by the beginner. At the same time, the book is inspirational for the more advanced textile designer-craftsman. The variety of illustrations and the contents—from contemporary to historical products—give the learner a well-balanced overall view of the possibilities and range of the craft. The illustrations are technically good, especially the drawings which illustrate the various types of knots and steps used in the knotting process. The book's only weak points are the colored photographs and color theory. . . . This book is a must for the library as a resource and also will make a good contribution to the individual craftsman's personal library." D. B. Van Dommelen

J Home Econ 60:391 My '68 300w

Library J 92:2468 Je 15 '67 60w [YA]

Reviewed by Nadine Purcell

Library J 92:2554 Jl '67 150w

HASAN, YOSUF FADL. The Arabs and the Sudan: from the seventh to the early sixteenth century. 298p pl $8.95 Aldine pub.

962 Sudan—History. Arabs in the Sudan
67-17614

The author investigates "the transformation of the population of the northern Sudan from Hamitic-speaking Christians into Arabic-speaking Muslims." (TLS)

"This important book has a double significance: on the one hand it deals with a long-neglected period in the history of the Sudan; on the other it marks the emergence of a new generation of Sudanese historians. . . . [Hasan] has been able to combine his thorough knowledge of Arabic sources and the traditions, both oral and written, of the northern Sudanese with the rigorous historical analysis associated with Western historiography. . . . [The] work will be welcomed by all scholars of the Middle East and Africa for its detailed narrative, dispassionate judgments, and clarity of presentation." R. O. Collins

Am Hist R 73:1215 Ap '68 550w

"Hasan, a . . . professor at the University of Khartoum, was especially well qualified to undertake the difficult research necessary to produce this volume, which is a major contribution to its field. . . . It is a reliable and readable work, quoting mainly Arabic sources and containing a superb bibliography and index. A valuable addition to libraries seeking to develop their African and Middle Eastern holdings without having to acquire rare, expensive, and often outdated source books."

Choice 5:666 Jl '68 140w

"Where it is drawn from the literary sources Dr. Hasan tells this complicated story with clarity and skill. His study of the tribal affiliations of the immigrants is largely based on Sudanese traditions and genealogies and is inevitably somewhat less lucid and convincing, but his book never fails to hold the interest and will be essential to all students of the histories of Egypt and the Sudan."

TLS p634 Jl 20 '67 800w

HASKINS, CARYL P., ed. The search for understanding; sel. writings of scientists of the Carnegie inst. pub. on the sixty-fifth anniversary of the Institution's founding. 330p il $6 Carnegie inst.

508 Science. Carnegie Institution of Washington
67-8508

This volume contains twenty-two articles whose subjects include "astronomy (five papers), genetics (two), embryology (three), plant biology (two), geochemistry (one), archeology (one), and . . . the history, philosophy, and organization of science (six). . . . [The] paper by George Harrison Shull on the method of raising hybrid corn appeared in 1909; the most recent one, by Merle Tuve, reflecting on the implications of complementarity for physics and the humanities, appeared in 1966." (Science) Among the contributors are V. Bush, G. Sarton, R. P. Kraft, A. V. Kidder, C. S. French, G. W. Corner, G. E. Hale, W. S. Adams, and A. D. Hershey.

"[These papers] are well written and may be easily understood by the layman. They have been selected to show not only the scientific accomplishments, but also some of the philosophies of many of the Institution's scientists. Good background reading for insight into 'big science.'" R. E. Swinburne

Library J 92:3431 O 1 '67 150w

"Almost without exception, the papers testify that the aim of scientific work is understanding, rather than the amassing of information and formulas. . . . This [is a] highly diversified volume of essays. Each reader will single out his own favorite paper. As a sociologist of science, I am almost bound to choose Abelson's brilliant piece 'Conditions for discovery.' It is one of the most perceptive analyses of the effective microenvironment of scientific work that I have encountered among the many reflections by physical scientists upon their own experience and that of their colleagues. . . . If this volume is a prototype of the institutional festschrift, then I say let's have more of them." Robert K. Merton

HASKINS, C. P.—Continued

Science 160:640 My 10 '68 1500w

HATCH, RICHARD A., ed. An early view of the land-grant colleges. See Convention of friends of agricultural education in 1871

HAUGEN, EINAR, ed. Fire and ice; three Icelandic plays, by Jóhann Sigurjónsson. Davíð Stefánsson, and Agnar Þórðarsson; with introd. by Einar Haugen. 266p $5.95 Univ. of Wis. press

839

67-20760

The three plays are: The wish, by Jóhann Sigurjónsson, translated from Danish and Icelandic by Einar Haugen; The golden gate, by Davíð Stefánsson, translated from the Icelandic by G. M. Gathorne-Hardy; and Atoms and madams, by Agnar Þórðarsson, translated from the Icelandic by Einar Haugen. The first is "a Faustian-Penthean drama of defiance of human limitations; . . . [the second] is a romantic drama of a lady who goes to the Golden Gate to save a stumblemum husband; . . . [while the third] is a satire on postwar prosperity." (Library J) "Haugen, in addition to doing two of the translations, has provided a general introduction (and bibliography) also individual introductions (and bibliographies) to each of the three plays." (Mod Lang J)

Reviewed by L. S. Thompson

Library J 92:3656 O 15 '67 100w

"Let us admit at the outset that none of these plays is 'great drama,' according to any fairly rigorous definition of that term; furthermore, though all of them are interesting for historical, sociological, and other reasons, no producer in the United States would be well-advised to stage any of the three unless he were guaranteed a large audience of Icelandophiles. But if the publication of this volume will make no stir in the world of American theater, students of Scandinavian literature will certainly be gratified to have these three plays available in such a convenient form, two of them translated into English for the first time, and the third presented in an entirely new translation. . . . [Haugen's] essays are one of the most attractive features of the book: the general introduction gives a quick but solid sketch of the history and present state of theater in Iceland, the other three introductions furnish remarkably complete information on the careers and accomplishments of the three playwrights." R. N. Ringler

Mod Lang J 51:505 D '67 1400w

HAUGHTON, ROSEMARY. Dialogue: the state of the church today [by] Rosemary Haughton and Cardinal Heenan. 182p $3.95 Sheed

282 Catholic Church

68-17362

The English author and the chief prelate of England "wrote this book out of a common desire to begin bridging the communication gap between the laity and the hierarchy. Format: each writes an essay reflecting on the post-conciliar scene; then each writes a commentary on the other's views; finally, Cardinal Heenan rounds off the volume with [an epilogue]." (America)

"The two authors wrestle with some important issues—authority, how to be a bishop, where the Spirit is pushing us, contraception, the place of criticism, the nature of orthodoxy. Whether or not either author greatly advances the discussion of any of these issues is beside the point. The chief value of the book, it seems to this reviewer, is its demonstration of points of view. Each author sees the Church through a different set of goggles. Mrs. Haughton . . . would like to see the bishops love the Church into a more mature responsibility. Cardinal Heenan . . . would like to see greater respect for authority and more attention paid to what is already right with the Church. The book operates upon the reader as a kind of therapy. You find yourself agreeing in great part with both. . . . Unfortunately, the format of the book does not allow this process to evolve as richly as it might have. . . . [Still,] the exchange is well worth a quick reading. It is something we need more of in these times—an antidote to incipient extremism." Dennis Hamm

America 119:50 J1 20 '68 270w

Reviewed by Terry Brock

Critic 27:67 Ag '68 1750w

Reviewed by Brian Wicker

Encounter 31:74 S '68 400w

"As an exercise in dialogue, possibly because the rules are not kept all the time, especially by the Cardinal, the talking describes a full circle and returns to where it began. The divisions are not healed but more clearly defined. The lasting impression for the outsider, or at least one who has not kept a cuttings book of every public attack in the press on the English hierarchy, is an obsession in the Cardinal's mind that amounts to a persecution complex. . . . The second weakness, and it is one that afflicts both authors and limits Dialogue as a whole, is the inability to get away from the Council. . . . Roman Catholics may have headaches: they did not begin with the Council." TLS p657 Je 20 '68 650w

HAUGHTON, ROSEMARY. Why be a Christian? 140p $3.95 Lippincott

201 Christianity

68-24192

The author attempts to identify "the 'feel' and 'quality' of Christianity—or its absence—in real human situations and [to show] how faith transformed the Biblical peoples and how [this is relevant today]." (Publisher's note)

"There is a depth of insight and an intensity of feeling behind the simple, everyday expression that often only reflection and a second reading reveal. The words are commonplace, the expression easy, but the meaning is profound. . . . This little book formulates some excellent questions that many Christians ask themselves today, and it gives satisfying enough answers; but one would like to have heard much more. There are good insights about man's desire to live a full life and excellent analogies on salvation, but [the author] doesn't develop enough the qualities of the [Christian] life. . . . A third of this book presents a clear and penetrating summary of salvation history that is not really necessary." Louis Lambert

America 119:361 O 19 '68 480w

"In her own unique style, Mrs. Haughton, author of numerous theological books, once again has given us a book which helps answer the question: What is going on in the church? . . . This book is very well written, interesting, and open to the general reader." Richard Walz

Library J 94:82 Ja 1 '69 150w

TLS p657 Je 20 '68 80w

HAUGLID, ROAR, ed. Native art of Norway. 175p il col il $15 Praeger

745 Folk art, Norwegian. Art industries and trade—Norway

67-21845

A history of folk art "from the Viking Age down through the centuries . . . [accompanied by a] description of the country's four major arts: wood carving, both ecclesiastical and domestic; rose painting; . . . weaving; and folk costumes." (Library J) Index.

"A valuable volume. . . . Each of the well written parts is excellent with a short but thorough text and an abundance of well explained plates . . . It can be of invaluable help and great interest to scholar and uninitiated alike, but for the middle-group, the students of folk art, it has a sad defect. There is not one reference in the volume and the index is short. Aside from this flaw, one cannot lavish enough praise on the authors for this lively, entertaining, and information packed work." Choice 5:1124 N '68 80w

"The authors, each of whom has written one section of this book, are authorities in their respective fields. From 8 to 12 pages of each part are devoted to text, followed by numerous color and black-and-white plates showing various works in great detail. Text and illustrations are well coordinated. Art and museum libraries will find this attractive book useful." S. L. Steen

Library J 92:3406 O 1 '67 110w

HAUSMAN, RUTH L. Hawaii: music in its history; il. by Hide Doki. 112p $6 Tuttle

780.9969 Music, Hawaiian—Juvenile literature. Hawaiian Islands—History—Juvenile literature 67-15317

"The evolution of Hawaiian music from unaccompanied hulas and riddle songs to 'Farewell to Thee' is told . . . and illustrated with the scores and lyrics of 33 songs. . . . Appendixes give Hawaiian pronunciation and describe island musical instruments. [Bibliography. Index.] Grade five and up." (Library J)

"[The author] is a supervisor of music in the Philadelphia Public Schools. She lived in Hawaii in 1961 and there became aware of the dearth of material on the music of historical Hawaii. . . . Attractively bound and printed . . . the text provides a very brief historical comment and a simplified scoring of the songs, with chord suggestions for guitar or ukelele." Best Sell 28:203 Ag 15 '68 210w

"A collection of Hawaiian songs that are easy to play and fun to sing. . . . Emphasis is mostly on the Western influences in Hawaiian music. The sketches decorate and sometimes add information to the text." M. E. Ward Library J 93:3970 O 15 '68 90w

HAUTZIG, ESTHER. The endless steppe; growing up in Siberia. 243p $4.50 Crowell

B or 92 World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives—Juvenile literature. Poles in Siberia—Juvenile literature 68-13582

This autobiography begins in 1941. "When she was 10, Esther and her family, Polish Jews of wealth and prestige, were torn from their home in Vilna, herded into a cattle car and transported to a frontier village in Siberia. . . . [She describes her life] in wooden barracks, in crowded dung huts. . . . [She also tells of] going to school, of discovering the Russian classics, of learning Russian, of becoming editor of the school paper. . . . And when the five long years of exile were ended [in 1946] she left some of her heart behind in Siberia. . . . Ages twelve to sixteen." (Book World)

Best Sell 28:64 My 1 '68 110w

"This is a magnificent book. Amazingly free of bitterness and hate, it radiates the optimism, the resilience of the human spirit as typified in its vital young author. To share the trials and hardships she and her family suffered and the remarkable way they faced them together is a rewarding experience for any age." Polly Goodwin

Book World p5 (children's issue) My 5 '68 460w

"An unassuming, forceful memoir which transcends the category of juvenile. It should appeal to readers of many ages and tastes for decades to come, as a rare epiphany of human gallantry." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:302 My 24 '68 50w [YA]

"The account of the exiles' endurance is a great human document of individuals sharply etched with love and affection and humor, of the minutiae of their existence remembered with clear sensitivity, and of their deepest and most poignant emotions. The story of their bitter struggles for the barest essentials, the sharing of tiny quarters with others, reveals bravery and, remarkably, even festivity. . . . A rare, affecting, and deepening reading experience, the book will take its place with Anne Frank's [Diary of a Young Girl, BRD 1952]. Nonny Hogrogian's evocative jacket is a perfect invitation to all readers, beginning at ten years—the age at which Esther began to grow up." Virginia Haviland

Horn Bk 44:311 Je '68 470w

Reviewed by E. S. Cullen Library J 93:3982 O 15 '68 100w

"It isn't that Mrs. Hautzig is a bad writer, Mrs. Hautzig isn't a writer. No blame attaches." Lore Segal

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p2 My 5 '68 650w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland Sat R 51:42 My 11 '68 130w

HAUTZIG, ESTHER. In the park; an excursion in four languages; pictures by Ezra Jack Keats. unnp $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

413 Parks—Juvenile literature. Language and languages—Juvenile literature 68-10067

"A sunny day in the park in New York, Paris, Moscow or Madrid and what to do, ■■■ and eat in English, French, Russian and Spanish. The introductory and closing statements are in English and the objects found in the park are presented in all four languages with pronunciation. . . . There is a list of additional words and ■ pronouncing Russian alphabet appended. . . . Preschool to grade three." (Library J)

"Good fun for the child who is entranced by the magic of words. . . . Keys to pronunciation are less than perfectly accurate—but how does one transliterate the French for 'squirrel' without ■ phonetic alphabet?" M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:309 My 24 '68 60w

"Keats' bright, inventive collage and gouache illustrations are a perfect evocation of ■ day in the park." J. C. Dick

Library J 93:2729 J1 '68 80w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland Sat R 51:36 S 21 '68 100w

HAUTZIG, ESTHER. Redecorating your room for practically nothing; il. by Sidonie Coryn. 203p $4.50 Crowell

747 Interior decoration—Juvenile literature 67-8949

"This is intended as a guide to the teenager who wants to redecorate her room, using hand-me-downs and inexpensive materials. After some general advice on decorating, separate chapters cover redoing old furniture, making curtains and bedspreads, working on headboards, accessories, closets [and bureaus], and instructions for various kinds of painting, sewing, and hardware attachments. [Index]. Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"[Mrs. Hautzig] offers a bounty of simple and inexpensive suggestions. Her outlines of materials needed and clearly diagrammed procedures should seem convincing, ingenious, and enticing; as also are fresh ideas for . . . a variety of accessories for room and closet. Teenagers avid to blazen their rooms with posters and psychedelic colors will find these ideas basic and practical for supplying the necessary background." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:196 Ap '68 110w

"Not all of the suggestions or materials would fit into a limited budget, and some of the handyman projects seem over-ambitious for accomplishment by most young teen-agers, and some are either downright unaesthetic or impractical. The diagrams and drawings and step-by-step directions are often not precise enough for a beginner. . . . This book attempts too much; separate how-to books for individual skills would be more helpful to the beginner, and The Seventeen Book of Decorating [BRD 1961] has better general decorating advice for the same age-group." N. Y. Orr

Library J 92:4622 D 15 '67 180w

HAVERSTICK, JOHN. The progress of the Protestant; a pictorial history from the early reformers to present-day ecumenism; design by Al Corchia, Jr. 273p $14.95 Holt

280 Protestantism 66-22065

In text and pictures the author tells the story of Protestantism "from 16th-century denominational explosion to 20th-century ecumenical implosion, from Luther, Calvin and Zwingli to Barth and Tillich, Billy Graham and Martin Luther King." (N Y Times Bk R) Index. Chart of Protestantism.

"The bizarre is emphasized over balance. . . . Haverstick's is, nonetheless, one of the best pictorial presentations of Protestantism. It is compact, coherent, dramatic. The script . . . is pithy and engaging. But . . . it remains sketchy. . . . Variety is one of the author's strong points: here one finds everything from Mother Goose characters to . . . the Millerites awaiting the Second Coming. But breadth does not compensate for superficiality. . . . All too frequently Haverstick's penchant for the eye-catching phrase distorts a historical event. . . . One can do only so much with a picture book. But although penetration in depth is lacking here, [it] can serve as a good introduction for those who know little about Protestantism, while to those with more extensive knowledge it offers zest and spice." C. L. Manschreck

Christian Century 85:1142 S 11 '68 600w

Reviewed by G. M. Ruoss

Library J 93:2216 Je 1 '68 200w

HAVERSTICK, JOHN—Continued

"This is a large, handsomely produced, lap-sized volume that not only covers the major individuals, developments and controversies of Protestantism's near half-millennium but has room for such related topics as medieval Catholicism, Eastern Orthodoxy, 'Moby Dick,' 'Green Pastures,' Darwin, Freud and Vatican II." N. K. Burger

N Y Times Bk R p18 Ap 7 '68 130w

"John Haverstick has collected a splendidly varied group of illustrations, many of them little-known woodcuts from Catholic and Protestant martyrologies and carefully organized them under subjects. Strung together in a long chain, they create a cumulative, exciting and highly educative effect. . . . On whatever aspect of the subject he turns his sharp eye Haverstick has something pertinent to say and a batch of illustrations to illuminate his story. My one complaint about this beautiful, impressive book . . . is that many of the pictures are not dated. . . . And, although Mr. Haverstick is fair and judicious, he does perhaps gloss a bit the more fearsome aspects of Protestantism. . . . Nevertheless, these pictures are so vivid and the coverage so comprehensive that the book cannot fail to stir the imagination and make one think again about the strangeness of our past." J. H. Plumb

Sat R 51:31 Ap 27 '68 1350w

HAVIGHURST, WALTER. Alexander Spotswood; portrait of a governor. 118p $3.95 Colonial Williamsburg; for sale by Holt

B or 92 Spotswood, Alexander 67-14348

This book covers the career of the colonial governor of Virginia from 1710 to 1722. The author describes how he "built the Governor's Palace at Williamsburg, pursued Blackbeard to his death on the Outer Banks of North Carolina, established a colony for immigrant Germans along the frontier at Germanna, and led the Knights of the Golden Horseshoe over the Blue Ridge mountains in 1716." (Va Q R) Bibliography. Index.

"This interesting biography combines fine writing with stimulating scholarship. Since Spotswood is little known the volume will also open up interesting pages in the early history of Williamsburg. Very little background is given, but a fine picture of Spotswood's twelve years as governor of Virginia is drawn. His contributions to the advance of the colony were many; but the author does not hesitate to point out some of the more critical aspects and the feelings of some of Spotswood's enemies. Grades seven to ten."

Best Sell 27:466 Mr 1 '68 90w

"It is difficult to imagine an audience for this brief sketch. . . . It is not a scholarly study. Havighurst's style is smooth and graceful, but he fails to bring Spotswood to life and does not adequately describe the governor's problems. . . . The book is not nearly as incisive as the other brief gems in this fine series about colonial Virginia and does not supplant [L.] Dodson's 35-year-old biography [Alexander Spotswood, governor of Colonial Virginia, 1710-1722, BRD 1933.] Analyses and syntheses are shallow or absent. College instructors may recommend this book to students who are interested in Spotswood, but this meager biography should be supplemented with, at least, [R.] Morton's Colonial Virginia [BRD 1961] and [J.] Greene's Quest for Power [BRD 1964]." Choice 5:676 Jl '68 120w

Reviewed by L. B. Wright

J Am Hist 55:630 D '68 230w

"This small volume captures reasonably well the romantic high spots of the Governor's career, but it does not touch upon the rough edges, his venality, his concern for the absolute protection of British prerogative, nor does it fairly present the Virginia gentry. A part of the Williamsburg in America Series, the book chooses to emphasize the high spots and to ignore the low."

Va Q R 44:lxviii spring '68 280w

HAVILAND, VIRGINIA. Favorite fairy tales told in Japan; retold; il. by George Suyeoka. 89p $2.95 Little 398.2 Fairy tales. Folklore—Japan—Juvenile literature 67-18112

A retelling of One-Inch Fellow; The good fortune kettle; The tongue-cut sparrow; Momo-taro, or The story of the son of a peach; The white hare and the crocodiles. "Grades three to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:182 N 10 '67 20w

"[These five tales] not only serve as an excellent introduction to the folklore of Japan but also, because of their great popularity, form a logical foundation for the appreciation of other Japanese myths and folk tales. . . . Told with warmth and simplicity the stories achieve a balance between the fantastic and the realistic: One-Inch Fellow becomes tall in minutes, but the wicked old woman who is cruel to the sparrow can only become more kindly 'by degrees.' The vivid . . . illustrations capture the fun and action of the stories but are touched also with the mystery of a vanished ancient time." S. D. Long

Horn Bk 44:173 Ap '68 130w

"The 13th book in this folk tale series provides a fine literary and visual experience for younger readers. The retellings . . . have retained their oriental aspects, and the full-page illustrations in orange, green, black, and white are up to the standard expected for this series." Dorothy Gunzenhauser

Library J 92:4612 D 15 '67 60w

HAWES, DONALD, jt. ed. Thackeray: the critical heritage. See Tillotson, G.

HAWES, JUDY. Ladybug, ladybug, fly away home; il. by Ed Emberley. unsp $3.25 Crowell 595.7 Ladybirds—Juvenile literature 67-15399

The author "tells of the importation of ladybugs from Australia, where they had been found to be instrumental in controlling the pest that was damaging orange trees; and briefly describes their morphology and habits." (Sat R) "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"A refreshingly simple presentation. . . . Left out, unaccountably, is [the ladybug's] life history—how the eggs change from larva to pupa to adult." M. E. Selsam

Book World p10 Ja 7 '68 50w

Christian Science Monitor p11 D 21 '67 50w

Horn Bk 44:78 F '68 10w

"With amazingly few words the author has written an accurate and sufficiently comprehensive introduction to ladybugs for the youngest readers. In addition to the scientific information given, there are discussions of superstitions about these insects and their helpfulness to man. The illustrations complement the text perfectly." L. L. Clark

Library J 92:4603 D 15 '67 60w

Reviewed by Paul Walker

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p57 N 5 '67 90w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:35 D 16 '67 80w

HAWES, JUDY. Why frogs are wet; il. by Don Madden. 35p $3.50 Crowell 597 Frogs—Juvenile literature 68-21605

An "introduction to the life of frogs, their adaptation since prehistoric times, physiology, growth cycle and feeding. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"An easy-to-read, straightforward text with the marvelously humorous drawings of Don Madden. The result is irresistible—even to the most hesitant young reader." Julian May

Book World p34 (children's issue) N 3 '68 20w

"A good scientific introduction. The lively illustrations in two colors complement the text well." J. F. Waters

Library J 93:4394 N 15 '68 30w

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p53 N 3 '68 60w

HAWKER, J. P. Radio and television: principles and applications. 399p $12.50 Hart

621.3841 Radio. Television 68-31948

The book "begins with the fundamentals of electricity, including electrical currents, basic circuitry and its components, e.g. resistors, conductors, transducers, transistors, etc. and moves on to the more elaborate applications of these to radio and TV, with emphasis upon home-type receivers. . . . [There are] definitions, similes, analogies, and numerous diagrams and illustrations. . . . [of] the electronic terms and concepts." (Choice) Chronology. Index.

"This book on the electronics of radio and television is of special value as a reference or a self study course for the amateur enthusiast or the untrained engineer/technician in radio and television who needs, or desires, a greater knowledge of radio/TV electronic theory. . . . Four appendices complement the technical discussion. An excellent work for the amateur or the 'semi-pro' electronic technician."

Choice 5:1154 N '68 100w

"Hawker's purpose in this popular introductory book is to teach the principles and applications of modern home-use radio and television equipment. His clear and well-illustrated discussion of the fundamentals of matter and electricity . . . gets the book off to a good start. In subsequent chapters he discusses . . . receiving equipment, frequency modulation, power supplies, stereophonic sound, shortwave radio, television principles and color, tape recording, and aerials. . . . Recommended for public and secondary school libraries." Robin LeSueur

Library J 93:2512 Je 15 '68 110w

HAWKES, DAVID. A little primer of Tu Fu. 240p $3 Oxford

$95.1 Tu Fu

67-105047

Professor Hawkes "takes thirty-five of Tu Fu's poems and for each of them gives the text in characters and Han yu pinyin romanization, a background note on title and subject, an explanation of the form and structure, a word-for-word translation, a couplet-by-couplet commentary and finally another rendering into [prose]. There is also a romanized vocabulary for the book as a whole." (TLS)

"A matter partly of convention is the printing of the final translation in prose form, which seems a pity. Since one of the things Professor Hawkes has amply demonstrated in his notes is the elaborate artistry of the poet, it seems a shame to blur it by printing the lines in a prose lump. And, despite the translator's modest statement that the translations are intended solely as cribs. . . . they are not only smooth and readable but often very moving." R. E. Teele

Poetry 112:283 JI '68 360w

"With the help of this excellent introduction to the poetry of Tu Fu anybody prepared to make a little effort can go directly to the Chinese and appreciate for himself something of the style and flavour of a poet who, though a loyal member of the eighth century ruling class, wrote so honestly and so well that even some Cultural Revolutionaries must be assumed to love his work. Professor Hawkes's method is straightforward, sensible and thorough. . . . The poetry itself is difficult and rewarding. Tu Fu uses his words with a deliberate concentration that forces the reader to stop and think. . . . What the selection does bring out is the political nature of Tu Fu's poetry; nearly all the pieces reflect to some extent the chaos as the illusory splendour of the T'ang collapsed in decades of civil wars whose utter futility contrasts strongly with the revolutionary struggles racking China today."

TLS p916 S 28 '67 550w

"This is the sort of book which has been needed for a long time—a volume of carefully and competently selected Chinese poems which includes, for each poem, the original Chinese in good, clear characters, the English alphabet Mandarin rendering . . . and finally, a literate translation. Mr. Hawkes has had the eminent good sense to restrict himself to only one of China's great T'ang poets. One is inclined to wish, however, that he had not made his decision in favor of pin-yin to render the Mandarin sounds."

Va Q R 44:xxli winter '68 100w

HAWKES, JACQUETTA. Dawn of the gods: with phot. by Dimitrios Harissiadis, and other illustrations. 303p $17.95 Random house 938 Greece—Antiquities. Crete—Antiquities.
68-28566

The author's thesis in this "historical narrative of Minoan and Mycenaean times . . . is that the 'great achievements of Classical Greece' had their genesis when a 'predominantly feminine force,' the civilization of Minoan Crete, 'united with a predominantly masculine one' provided by the Indo-European Greeks who entered the peninsula about 2000 B.C." (Book World) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by M. I. Finley

Book World p15 O 13 '68 700w

"As a narrative, the book is admirable—lucid, scholarly, beguilingly written, and, what is so vitally important here for the reader who desires enlightenment, reasonable yet properly cautious in its tentative conclusions. . . . The chief excellence of [Miss Hawkes'] book, apart from its merit as a narrative, lies in the evocation of the Minoan scene, and in the force with which it brings home to us the astonishing nature of that society. . . . Her theory is a brave, and by no means an unsatisfying, attempt to offer some explanation of the psychological conditions leading to that astonishing moment when the glory of ancient Greece illumined the world." Eric Forbes-Boyd

Christian Science Monitor pC1 N 26 '68 700w

"[The author] looks for feminine influence where she can find it, and approves of it when found. To her, the gentle and peaceable Minoan civilisation is a feminine one, and its charm and beauty arise from that fact. . . . The Mycenaeans, on the other hand, were dominated by kings and warriors; . . . [theirs was an] essentially male character. . . . The distinction between the two cultures is real; the theme is pleasant and well argued, but not entirely convincing. . . . Whether or not one follows her main theme, the author has given a very good discursive account of the two civilisations, admirably written. . . . The book is very handsome, illustrated by large numbers of black-and-white and coloured photographs; . . . these are well chosen and exceptionally beautiful."

Economist 228:58 S 21 '68 370w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway

Nation 207:662 D 16 '68 20w

"The author has long experience of writing about archaeology . . . so her work avoids the commoner faults of professionals trying to 'write down'. . . . We are given a very sympathetic account of Greek Bronze Age life and art which is broadly accurate and always eloquent. . . . It is when the question of continuity with Classical Greece is explored that the professional must wince, and wince often at so much built on so little, the 'dare we suggest' which becomes the cornerstone of an argument. . . . Points of detail which in picture books one might excuse have here to be criticised. . . . But there is a great deal here to be enjoyed, by the initiate and by the layman; the writing is lucid and cool." John Boardman

New Statesman 76:359 S 20 '68 800w
TLS p1336 N 28 '68 850w

HAWKINSON, JOHN. Pastels are great! 48p $3.50 Whitman, A.

741.2 Pastel drawing—Juvenile literature

68-22193

In the text of this book of instruction, "accompanied by drawings, eight pastel strokes are explained. Procedures for the special use of each stroke and lessons on values or shades are followed by examples of combining strokes to form animals, people and landscapes. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"[A clear text with] an interesting presentation of an art form suited to the skills of elementary grade children." Agnes Gregory

Library J 93:3304 S 15 '68 70w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:64 N 9 '68 50w

HAWLEY, CAMERON. The hurricane years. 567p $7.50 Little

68-24244

Judd Wilder, "a successful corporation executive in his mid-forties—the 'hurricane years' that give this novel its title—is abruptly struck down by a heart attack. Prodded by Aaron Kharr, a doctor whose research has convinced him that mounting stress is often the root cause of under-fifty heart attacks, Judd is impelled to appraise himself . . . to search his past for the cause of his attack, to find a clearer and safer path to a more satisfying future." (Publisher's note)

"Are Americans more vulnerable than other people to heart attacks? . . . This is the in-quily which led Cameron Hawley to the writing of [this novel] (after he himself had suffered a heart attack), and he is as deeply concerned with the causes which prompt a man to knock himself out for a corporation as he is with the aftermath. . . . This story may be regarded by some as too didactic and too long; I think it is saved from both charges by its humane and compassionate qualities, and by its characterization." Edward Weeks

HAWLEY, CAMERON—Continued

Atlantic 222:128 S '68 300w

"Interest is sustained by the incidents, since with the exception of Dr. Kharr and, in a lesser degree, his assistant, Dr. Raggi, none of the characters assume a positive personality. The author's attachment to psychosomatic medicine leads him dangerously close to recklessly excessive wordage from which only his own craftsmanship rescues him. However [this] is a significant book. It has every chance of being even more popular than [the author's] 'Executive Suite' [BRD 1952] and 'Cash McCall' [BRD 1955]. . . . Hawley's very readable and perceptive analysis of individual responses to pressures and tensions has relevancy for his readers." C. P. Collier

Best Sell 28:235 S 18 '68 550w

"While the hospital is the focal point of the book, the reader won't feel himself confined there. There is a great deal about Wilder's early life in Iowa, where his father was a newspaper publisher, and his subsequent career in an army film unit and the theater, before he drifts into the advertising business and his snug-as-a-bug berth with Crouch. And while there is no high excitement in the book—no shootings, no explicit sex, no particular suspense after it becomes apparent that Wilder will survive at least this particular brush with death—nonetheless there is an engrossing quality to this quietly told tale which will keep you reading." Robert Cromie

Book World p5 S 29 '68 700w

Reviewed by Gene Kubal

Library J 93:4306 N 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p36 S 22 '68 200w

HAWTHORNE, AUDREY. Art of the Kwakiutl Indians, and other Northwest Coast tribes. 410p il col il maps $25 Univ. of Wash. press

970.3 Kwakiutl Indians, Indians of North America—Art 67-13111

Curator of the Museum of Anthropology of the University of British Columbia, the author uses as the basis for this book the museum's collection of masks, headdresses, totem poles, wooden dishes, boxes, rattles and other objects of Northwest Coast tribes. She has endeavored to present the entire range of craftsmanship within each type, to provide "the opportunity to compare essential styles with their variations and to assess differing degrees of craftsmanship. . . . Second, Mrs. Hawthorne has [attempted to relate] each object to its place in the ceremonial life of the Kwakiutl. . . . Information gathered from the pioneer works of Franz Boas, Edward S. Curtis, and others on the relationship of [their] ceremonies to the social structure of the Kwakiutl has been supplemented by interviews with contemporary Indians." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Whereas the illustrative material . . . is the most comprehensive presentation of Kwakiutl 'works of art' used in everyday life, ceremonial, and potlatching, the text, by contrast, is rather sparse. . . . There is no denying Hawthorne's expertise . . . nor the obvious value of her attractive and instructive book. All the more reason for disappointment with her cogent but superficial commentaries on the creators and users of the artifacts, the stylistic attributes, the techniques of production and use, Kwakiutl attitudes on 'Art' (as distinct from artifacts), the cultural and social contexts, and other problems in art and anthropology either insufficiently articulated or omitted. Although a fascinating and perhaps a unique book, it can hardly be considered definitive. . . . For anyone interested in art in primitive societies—and for art and anthropology libraries."

Choice 5:335 My '68 210w

"[This] is probably the most authoritative source on the ceremonial arts of the Northwest Coast tribes. . . . [The] text is excellent because it synthesizes and organizes the ethnological data of the area and provides classification of masks and other art forms based upon both style and function. Since much of the collection was obtained within the last 20 years, some of the carvers are known and their individual styles may be compared. A valuable work for the scholar and art student." Harold Blau

Library J 93:1130 Mr 15 '68 140w

"[In this book] Audrey Hawthorne has shown that even at this late date new and useful information can be obtained on Northwest Coast Indian art and artists. . . . The basic orientation of [this] book, however, is . . . toward providing an illustrated catalogue of the Northwest Coast pieces at the University of British Columbia. . . . There are thirty-two full-color pages of some of the most dramatic pieces, including outstanding examples of the Kwakiutl Cannibal Society bird masks of which Mrs. Hawthorne's museum probably has the world's best collection. Altogether over one thousand specimens are illustrated by photographs, accompanied by texts providing general cultural background and specific information on the ceremonial arts of the Kwakiutl and their neighbors." Michael Harner

Natur Hist 77:70 Ap '68 1050w

HAWTHORNE, NATHANIEL. Poems; ed. by Richard E. Peck. 34p $7.50 Alderman lib.

811

67-25642

This book contains twenty-nine poems, including four lines of previously unpublished juvenilia from the Barrett Collection in the Alderman Library.

Am Lit 40:110 Mr '68 60w

"Richard Peck and the Bibliographical Society of the University of Virginia have jointly done American literature a notable service in here demonstrating conclusively that the wisest choice Hawthorne ever made was to devote himself to prose. [Hawthorne's poems] are short and bad, built chiefly by weather-beaten phrases and jingling rhymes. . . . A few lighter verses, including two watery limericks, display the much-neglected comic side of Hawthorne. But on the whole, as Peck points out in his fine introduction, the verses here disintegrated . . . have value mainly for the biographer, not for the connoisseur of poetry—though the connoisseur of books will find a treat in the printing and design."

Va Q R 44:xx winter '68 140w

HAWTHORNE, PETER. The transplanted heart; the incredible story of the epic heart transplant operations by Christiaan Barnard and his team. 192p il $4.95 Rand McNally

617 Transplantation of organs, tissues, etc. Barnard, Christiaan Neethling. Heart 68-22792

This is a presentation "of the first human heart transplants. . . . The life stories of the donors, the recipients, and the surgeons and the circumstances that brought them all together are reported by a free-lance journalist now living in South Africa." (Library J)

"A thorough presentation. . . . The excitement of the events manages to break through the author's clumsy, repetitious prose. Hawthorne contributes a real feeling of the pride that South Africans take in Dr. Barnard's achievement. However, the book will be bought only for its timeliness; the author shows little insight into the meaning of the transplants and offers little perspective on their legal and ethical implications." Valeria Gregory

Library J 93:2135 My 15 '68 130w [YA]

"[The author] tells the story with few of the usual journalistic clichés and his book is fine, easy reading for the layman. He does not dwell on surgical procedures; rather he gives the reader glimpses of the personalities of Dr. Barnard and several of his colleagues, of heart recipient Louis Washkansky, of heart donor Denise Darvall, and makes some remarks on the case of heart recipient Philip Blaiberg. He briefly discusses medical problems of organ transplants in general, and presents some of the moral implications of transplantation." J. H. Zar

Library J 93:2252 Je 1 '68 80w

"[This book] was written in a month, journalistic slickness and headlong haste are evident on every page. It has a breathless, adulatory style, occasionally lapsing into irritating informality. . . . There are mindless, space-filling anecdotes, and an occasional ghastly moment—as when the young Chris Barnard is described as a youth cutting open beetles with a pocket knife. The book has no new information worth knowing. Surprisingly, there is also no viewpoint, no insight into the significance of the operations. To be fair, there is a paragraph or two of commentary in a chapter titled "The Future." But one misses a cogent statement of where in the progression of medical advances, Barnard and the others should be placed." J. M. Crichton

New Repub 158:28 My 25 '68 1700w

HAWTREY, RALPH. Incomes and money. 232p $7.50 Barnes & Noble

330.942 Great Britain—Economic policy.
Currency question—Great Britain 67-1050

The author criticizes British postwar monetary policy. "Nearly half of this book is devoted to a restatement of [his] monetary theory of the business cycle. . . . He believes [that] appropriate British monetary policy is of key importance for international stability. . . . contrasts the British and German experience. . . . [and] relates the lack of success of incomes policy to the undervaluation of sterling." (Am Econ R)

"The basis for [the author's] claim that the pound is undervalued appears in a few summary tables relating earnings and productivity in various countries. . . . Unfortunately, it is difficult for the reader to trace through Hawtrey's computations. As further evidence of the undervaluation of sterling, he cites ' . . . over-employment in Britain and unemployment in America.' Nowhere does he examine the actual U.K. export performance in the 1950s and early 1960s. This discussion is unconvincing. . . . It is easy to take issue with this work. But we should remember that Hawtrey wrote this book more than twenty years after retiring from a long career in the U.K. Treasury. It is splendid that he has been able to keep abreast of the events of the day and to give us the benefit of his analysis." T. M. Klein
Am Econ R 58:612 Je '68 900w

Choice 5:1009 O '68 190w

"Sir Ralph is surely the only economist who can refer, on page one of a new book, to a previous work published fifty-four years earlier. He said then, and continues to say, that the effective regulation of credit is the key to stability. . . . Throughout, the lessons for today are pointed out and a postscript brings the discussion right up to the July measures. Clearly these views command little general support. But this is not a good reason for disregarding them; on the contrary, an attack on orthodoxy coming from someone with such a rich perspective on current events deserves respectful attention."

Economist 222:333 Ja 28 '67 250w

"[The author's] analysis may be interpreted as an argument that there is a purchasing power parity of money throughout the world, and that existing monetary standards are over-valued, or under-valued, according to whatever norm is used. How the norm is originally established is unclear. . . . What perhaps is interesting in this lengthy book is the extent to which Professor Hawtrey's ideas have dominated the views of those members of the Treasury responsible for policy, but who are themselves unversed in economics. A close reading of this book should explain a great deal about recent economic policy."

TLS p665 J1 27 '67 400w

HAY, DENYS. Europe in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. 421p maps $7.95 Holt

940.1 Europe—History—476-1492. Europe—Civilization. Middle Ages—History 66-23561

In this history of the period, the author, professor of medieval history at the University of Edinburgh, "identifies the major social groups, then outlines the principal changes in political life, and finally surveys the unifying forces of religion, culture, and commerce." (Publisher's note) Appendix: Genealogical tables of rulers. Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"A book with many attractive qualities. Hay, writing with clarity and precision, is in full command of the directions and results of recent research. He gives ample space to topics often slighted in surveys—eastern Europe, Scotland, Scandinavia, and the Iberian peninsula. His conclusions are consistently prudent and persuasive. On the other hand, certain characteristics of the book limit its value for the undergraduate. Unlike W. Ferguson's survey Europe in Transition (BRD 1964), this book is heavily weighted in favor of political and institutional history. Literature, thought, and art are treated in brief and scattered sections, which convey little idea of their character and development. The dense factual narrative is unlikely to attract young readers. . . . A valuable reference for advanced students, especially on topics of a political and institutional nature."

Choice 4:1165 D '67 140w

"Professor Hay's treatment of the period achieves an admirable balance. . . . [He has] drawn on a wide range of authorities for his survey, and he is too good an historian to allow his readers to indulge in the fallacy that this period should be judged in the first instance either as a decline from the civilization of the high Middle Ages, or as a preparation for the age of the Renaissance and Reformation that followed. For this reason, the positive picture which is given in the opening section of this book is of especial value. The difficulty of compression seems to have become almost insuperable in Professor Hay's chapters on the political history of the several European countries—a difficulty successfully surmounted in the concluding section of the book."

TLS p710 Ag 3 '67 700w

HAYAKAWA, S. I., ed. Funk & Wagnalls modern guide to synonyms and related words. See Funk & Wagnalls modern guide to synonyms and related words

HAYCRAFT, MOLLY COSTAIN. My lord brother the Lion heart. 320p $5.95 Lippincott

Joan, Queen of Sicily—Fiction. Richard I, King of England—Fiction 68-14130

This biographical novel tells "the story of Joan, the daughter of Henry II and Eleanor of Aquitaine. Married at the age of twelve to William, king of Sicily, she became a widow after twelve years of happily married life as his queen. . . . Joan's brother, Richard the Lion-hearted, . . . became king [of England] shortly after William's death and one of his first acts was to ask Joan to accompany the crusade to the Holy Land as companion to his bride, the Lady Berengaria of Navarre. . . . Joan's love for her brother, Richard the Lion-hearted, and her solicitude for his success and well-being are the sustaining thread of the novel." (Best Sell)

"There is really not much to be gained from a reading of this novel. There are interesting passages, descriptive of the palaces, the landscapes, the people, and the customs of the various cities and countries through which the Crusaders' adventures take them. The narrative plods at times. On the whole the characters do not come off well, although the women seem to have more reality than the men. Joan herself dominates the narrative." Alice McCahill
Best Sell 28:56 My 1 '68 500w

"Peopled with all the personages and legendary figures of the twelfth century, this feminine view of the Kings' Crusade adds the awful hues of pestilence and violence to the gentler concerns of women. Written by a woman for women, the historical novel remains true to human motivation and the atmosphere of times past. In the words of the author, ' . . . I have needed to invent very little, for the truth, in this case, is much stranger than fiction.'" Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:342 Je '68 200w

"Mrs. Haycraft has produced a welcome addition to historical fiction. [Her] research has been meticulous and is used without self-consciousness as an integral part of the story. . . . [She] has blended romance lightly—the love shared by Joan and Count Raymond of St. Gilles—but it never dominates. . . . [She] communicates the drudgery and excitement of the times with a personal insight into the actions of the characters. This book is suitable for young and old alike; it is a well-written novel that brings history alive without unnecessary revisions." Carol Shine
Library J 93:1161 Mr 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:2132 My 15 '68 50w [YA]

HAYDEN, DONALD E., ed. Classics in linguistics; ed. by Donald E. Hayden and E. Paul Alworth and Gary Tate. 371p $10 Philosophical lib.

410 Language and languages 67-11571

"This volume brings together selections from the work of . . . linguists of this century. In addition, [W.] Jones' historically significant 'Third Anniversary Discourse' [of 1786] is reprinted in full. Summary descriptions of eighteenth-century theories and nineteenth-century comparative studies are included, and in order to illustrate the differences between modern linguistics and pre-Jonesian speculation, a selection from classical Greece and one from Renaissance Italy are provided." (Publisher's note)

HAYDEN, D. E.—Continued

Choice 5:944 O '68 170w

"[The editor] makes no attempt to touch upon all the important areas of language study or to represent the diversity of all the major theorists. . . . The book is not for the specialist . . . [it is] intended for the student and the serious reader [and is] an excellent introduction to modern linguistics." G. A. Cevaseo

Library J 92:4157 N 1 '67 250w

HAYDEN, ROBERT, ed. Kaleidoscope; poems by American Negro poets; ed. and with an introd. by Robert Hayden. 231p $3.95 Harcourt

811 Negro poetry. American poetry. Poetry—Collections 67-18543

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:207 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by Julia Loginski
Library J 93:305 Ja 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:85 My 11 '68 100w

HAYDEN, TOM. Rebellion in Newark; official violence and ghetto response. 102p $3.95 Random house; pa $1.95 Vintage

301.451 Newark, New Jersey—Riots. Negroes—Newark, New Jersey 67-29906

"This book describes the riot that shook Newark, New Jersey, from July 12 to 17, 1967 [and] . . . seeks to clarify why America is the only affluent Western society where insurrection is a regular happening in its major cities." (Introd) A portion of this book appeared previously in somewhat different form in The New York Review of Books.

Choice 5:272 Ap '68 180w

Reviewed by Ralph Whitehead
Commonweal 87:450 Ja 12 '68 500w

"Tom Hayden, co-author with Staughton Lynd of The Other Side [BRD 1967], has written a moving, gripping account. . . . The stories of beatings of Negro policemen and reporters, of stripping and robbing passing Negroes, of indiscriminate shootings, of arrest and beating in jail, and the countervandalism of the white police and guardsmen are told through eyewitness accounts with mounting indignation. His presentation does not take into account the official side of the story. Yet it reveals a hatred so raw and naked, of race against race, that all Americans should be frightened enough to do something about it." M. S. Byam

Library J 93:92 Ja 1 '68 150w

"A brilliant little book, which is the more forceful for its understatement and economy of style. . . . What Hayden has done is describe not merely a riot . . . but a people in the process of learning how to defend itself. . . . [The book] has its flaws, some of which are more disturbing than others. The last chapter, which calls for greater ghetto autonomy and for various reforms, does not deserve much discussion and is blandly liberal. . . . The omissions and the disingenuousness do not destroy the value of this fine piece of reporting, but they will, I fear, reduce its effectiveness among those who need it most." E. D. Genovese
Nation 207:87 Ag 5 '68 600w

"[This book fails to explain insurrection] because it refuses to explain the importance of the Black Power movement. . . . [Instead, Hayden] has written a polemic against the political power structure of Newark and its police department. . . . To substantiate his allegations, the author interrogated some of the Negroes involved . . . and when official statements conflicted with those of the people he interviewed, Hayden accepted without question the latter. Serious charges have been made against the police and National Guard who occupied the ghetto section . . . but these important accusations lose some of their credibility when presented with the analysis and conclusions that the author advances. . . . Despite its bias, the book might have served a useful purpose had Mr. Hayden analyzed the negotiating that went on between Mayor Adonizio and the black militants following the first night of unrest. But again he falls short." Scott Tepper

Sat R 50:41 S 30 '67 800w

HAYEK, F. A. Studies in philosophy, politics and economics. 356p $6.50 Univ. of Chicago press

300.1 Economic policy. Social policy 67-18436

A collection of papers, articles and speeches taken from "the author's work over the last twenty years; many of the essays are published for the first time, and others have been . . . revised since they first appeared. The various studies are arranged into three parts corresponding to the fields indicated by the title. . . . The subjects dealt with in these essays range from the history of ideas to the problems of town-and-country planning, and . . . many aspects of social science. . . . [Hayek is] Professor of Economics at the University of Freiburg." (Publisher's note) Some of the material in this book has appeared previously in such periodicals as The Economic Studies Quarterly, and the University of Chicago Law Review. Index.

"It would be a very rare political scientist who could not find at least one of these essays interesting and relevant to his own interests. . . . I should add that some of Hayek's points, especially in the philosophy section were not particularly meaningful to me. . . . One of the more interesting chapters . . . concerns The Road to Serfdom [BRD 1944, which] . . . constitutes an instructive chapter in the sociology of ideas. . . . Although the positions taken by [the author] on science, socialism, and economic policies have not been notably popular among academics his stature as a scholar is unassailable. . . . This volume amply conveys his high esteem for economic liberty and political freedom." W. C. Mitchell

Am Pol Sci R 62:968 S '68 1100w

"[Some of the] essays in this volume do not attain much in the way of systematic coherence. . . . [The Appendix] reprints three stimulating review-essays: on Schumpeter's history of economics; on the significance of the Webbs; and on Professor Harrod's life of Keynes. . . . [Dr Hayek's] scholarship is impeccable, and to judge from his extremely interesting essays on behaviour patterns, Gestalt perception, and Darwinian evolution, he can give both the anthropologists and the psychologists a run for their money. He also has some highly pertinent observations on the topic of cultural relativism. . . . If [his] rather old-fashioned liberal dogmatism grates on the nerves of a socialist, at least his defence of civilised values against the propagandists of the new illiteracy can be unreservedly welcomed." George Lichtheim

New Statesman 74:726 N 24 '67 2650w

"[Professor Hayek] seeks to synthesize different aspects of knowledge and areas of experience into a comprehensive philosophy of society. . . . He gives us what, in one of the essays in this collection, he pleads for—a liberal Utopia. The strength of his utopianism lies in the determination with which he pursues the implications of his principles far beyond the limits that the merely practical vision might see as reasonable. Its weakness lies in the narrowness, the lack of generosity, of the social ends he espouses. For the liberty he defends is very different from the liberty dear to those he claims to be following—Tocqueville, Mill, Acton; and his intolerance of other social ends and those who value them is strange in one who places himself in the true liberal tradition."

TLS p791 Jl 25 '68 1450w

HAYES, ALFRED. The end of me. 178p $4.95 Atheneum pubs.

68-12539

Written in the first person, this is the story of "Asher, aged fifty, whose career in California and whose second marriage have both gone on the rocks. He flees to New York, where he . . . takes up with his unattractive nephew, Michael, a sullen twenty-six-year-old poet, and Michael's off-beat girl, Aurora. Eventually Au-

... ends up in Asher's bed. . . . [But] the generation gap is too wide. . . . Aurora leaves him and she and Michael play a cruel joke on him. Asher goes back to looking out of [his hotel] window." (Sat R)

Reviewed by V. J. Collmore
Best Sell 27:471 Mr 15 '68 280w

"In short staccato sentences Mr. Hayes, best known for The Girl on the Via Flaminia [BRD 1949], portrays the ever-widening gulf between young and old and the former's seeming disdain for economic security, in contrast with older, 'successful,' more sophisticated generations. Mr. Hayes is biting, sardonic; unfortunately, at times, his characters seem like little more than caricatures. Short on plot, this book would be likely to appeal only to admirers of contemporary fiction." D. H. Cloudsley

Library J 93:571 F 1 '68 160w

"You can regard this novel (its author seems to) as a confrontation between the values of middle-age and those of youth. Personally I view it as something narrower, a study of the impact of a couple of psychopaths on a bruised but basically normal personality. The age-question seems to me a red herring. But as a minor study it's beautifully done." Gillian Tindall

New Statesman 75:844 Je 21 '68 290w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p37 Mr 17 '68 170w

"Mr. Hayes did well to place this witless charade in New York, where the reader can watch the background while he waits, in vain, for something real to start happening in the story."

New Yorker 43:138 Mr 30 '68 130w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Easton
Sat R 51:44 Mr 30 '68 120w

TLS p669 Je 27 '68 480w

HAYES, HELEN. On reflection; an autobiography [by] Helen Hayes with Sanford Dody. 253p pl $5.95 Evans, M.&co.; for sale by Lip-pincott

B or 92 68-54122

The author of A Gift of Joy (BRD 1965) presents these memoirs "as a legacy for her grandchildren, to be read one day when they are grown. . . . [She describes] the family stories, the backstage anecdotes and her recollections of spiritual struggle." (Publisher's note)

"Some of the material presented is deeply moving, much is affectionately witty, but all is important to the author whose life it shaped. . . . Don't miss this memorable book!" Sister Gregory Duffy

Best Sell 28:303 N 1 '68 600w

"As a good performer should be, [Miss Hayes] is also mistress of the throwaway line, and uses it effectively in her remembrances. . . . [It] is a thoroughly readable small volume, chiefly because it is liberally sprinkled with Miss Hayes's own salty wit and graphic images. Lines on stage may be written for her; off-stage she comes through with her own, and they are just as pungent. And if her readers want glimpses of the people she has known well, Miss Hayes offers warmly evocative memories. Memories of such folk as Marlene Dietrich, Harpo Marx, Alexander Woollcott, John Drew, Beatrice Lillie, Katharine Cornell, Lynn Fontanne, and a host of others." N. E. Taylor

Christian Science Monitor p13 D 7 '68 500w

"Joy in living is the theme of this autobiography of the first lady of the American theater. . . . Her life with Charles MacArthur, . . . and with their children, fills a big part of the book. She points out that hard work at her profession, her outside activities, and her faith, which she sometimes viewed skeptically but which was always there in some form, have helped her through personal tragedies and over rough places. This heartwarming book is for general purchase." W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:3126 S 15 '68 180w

"Candid moments are few in this externalized account, which seems more concerned with glamorous personalities, places, pet dogs and other anecdotal jottings than with the serious subject matter of life and theater. . . . [There is a] Victorian distance between [the author] and the brilliant clowns, courtiers, strolling notables and strolling performers she encountered. One feels her gallant and sincere effort to understand them, tolerate them, even enjoy their boisterous unconventionality. Yet in spirit Miss Hayes never seems entirely present, no matter how emphatically she wants us to believe that in spite of a few distressing moments, her life has been mostly cakes and ale and excitement. Doubtless much of it was, but the professed excitement just doesn't manage to break through the lacy prose." Stanley Young

N Y Times Bk R p84 N 17 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 51:59 N 23 '68 650w

HAYS, BROOKS. A hotbed of tranquility; my life in five worlds; with an appreciation by Donald G. Herzberg. 238p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

$17 U.S.—Politics and government—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. Humor 68-15266

A former Congressman from Arkansas, at present a professor at Rutgers, presents humorous stories and anecdotes which he collected during his work in the law, social work, the church, the classroom and in politics. The latter predominate. Index.

Reviewed by Eugene Holtman
Library J 93:1133 Mr 15 '68 200w

"This will undoubtedly be one of the most delicious political books of the year. . . . Because Brooks Hays is a deeply serious man, he is also a deeply witty man. He cannot resist the comic perspective and he uses humor, not as a technique of acquiescence, but as a strategy of gentle subversion. . . . He is a master of hill-country idiom and folklore, with its rich, unexpected, throwaway jokes. By my calculation this book covers at least eight worlds: the hill country, the courtroom, the church, campaigning, Congress, the executive branch, academia and overseas. [Hays] bathes each of these worlds with laughter and makes of humor, in his own phrase, 'a healing exercise.'" Arthur Schlessinger, Jr.

N Y Times Bk R p10 Je 23 '68 650w

HAYWOOD, RICHARD MANSFIELD. Ancient Rome. 650p il maps $7.50 McKay

937 Rome—History. Rome—Civilization 67-15532

This "is the second of two volumes on ancient history. Volume I, Ancient Greece and the Near East [BRD 1965], traces the history of the ancient Near East and of Greece, ending with Alexander the Great. The present volume encompasses . . . aspects of ancient Roman history, including its art and literature as well as its political, economic and social facets [from earliest times to 717 A.D." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Haywood (N.Y.U.) has followed in the footsteps of many other scholars in his book on Roman civilization. Obviously the work is intended also to be used as a textbook in Roman history. As such it is readable and covers the necessary topics but is lacking in clarity in some of the most important topics such as the explanations of the functions of the various officials of the Republic. . . . One must take exception to the numerous opinions and value judgments offered as fact. . . . The bibliography is far too short. . . . [H.] Mattingly, Roman Imperial Civilization [BRD 1959] provides much the same basic information but with better emphasis on some aspects and with different attitudes towards the historical facts."

Choice 5:247 Ap '68 210w

"[The historian of Antiquity] must reproduce the ancient tradition which is often legendary and always personal and at the same time he must be scientific and concerned with general causes and with the social and economic conditions and developments. Haywood does all that . . . he does in fact much more, because he includes discussions of art, architecture, and literature, and above all because he writes with firm moral principles which allow him, to mention just one instance, to offer a fine appreciation of the great Cicero." A. E. Raubitschek

Class World 62:24 S '68 140w

HAZELWOOD, ARTHUR, ed. African integration and disintegration; case studies in economic and political union; issued under the auspices of the Oxford Univ. Inst. of economics and statistics and the Royal Inst. of int. affairs. 414p maps $12 Oxford

382 Africa—Economic conditions. Africa—Politics 67-114056

"Ten variations upon a familiar scheme: having recently acquired independence, African states are unlikely to surrender sufficient autonomy to make interstate economic and political cooperation meaningful. [Among the contributions are] summaries of pan-Africanism and integration (Catherine Hoskyns), the amalgamation of Cameroon and the Somali Republic (Edwin Ardener and I. M. Lewis), and an economic analysis of East Africa (Arthur Hazelwood). [These] illustrate problems of unity; the incipient disintegration of Nigeria is . . . treated by James O'Connell." (Choice) Index.

"Chapters on economic unity in French-speaking equatorial Africa and the former Central African Federation (Peter Robson and Hazelwood) suffer from almost complete inattention to political factors. Some of the most interesting cases of integration and disintegration—formation of Tanzania; the separation of Rwanda and Burundi; sporadic efforts at Maghreb unity—are largely ignored. Lack of a consistent or well worked out analytic framework greatly diminishes comparability; the case studies are juxtaposed, not analyzed systematically. . . For specialized collections."

Choice 5:380 My '68 220w

"Many of the individual contributions are of outstanding quality. For example, no one would be likely to excel Dr. I. M. Lewis in displaying and analysing, with a happy blend of erudition and enthusiasm, the remarkably successful process of integration in the Somali Republic. And on the Federal Republic of Cameroon few could write with such knowledge and authority as Mr. Edwin Ardener. The success of a book of this kind, however, depends not only on the individual contributions but also on the extent to which they form a coherent whole. On this count, too, this volume deserves high praise."

TLS p295 Mr 21 '68 420w

HAZLITT, MARGARET. The journal of Margaret Hazlitt; recollections of England, Ireland, and America; ed. and annot. by Ernest J. Moyne. 195p il $4.50 Univ. of Kan. press

828

67-24358

This journal by "the sister of William Hazlitt, the English essayist, was written in her old age. In it she describes the years from 1783 to 1787 during which the Hazlitt family visited America. She wrote the journal for her nephew, the son of the essayist, so that instead of being a common diary or log of daily events in her life, it is a detailed account of the Hazlitt family's experiences in America shortly after the Revolutionary War." (Library J) Genealogy. Index.

"Unfortunately this 110-page journal is one long list of names and places unenlivened either by content or style (Moyne, in his notes, helps at identification but adds little to the interest or significance). Moyne's introduction does little more than present the most basic information about the Hazlitt family and their trip. Though the travel literature on America in the late 18th-century is sparse, the very meager fare here offered is of little value. . . Moyne admits that Margaret 'never had a chance to develop her talents' and that 'her life was extremely undiversified.' Half a century later 'she looked back' on her trip 'with great nostalgia.' This is hardly a good reason for libraries to purchase this volume."

Choice 5:1018 O '68 220w

"Because [Margaret Hazlitt's] father was a clergyman associated with Unitarianism, she gives much information relevant to the condition of religion in America at the time. The journal may prove interesting to readers who are concerned with the American culture of this period. The journal itself comprises only about half the book; the remainder includes copious notes, a biographical introduction, and an appendix, 'An Account of the State of Rational Religion in America,' written by her father. Recommended for libraries devoted to literary and historical scholarship." D. B. Schneider

Library J 92:4146 N 15 '67 210w

"Since the bulk of [the journal] was published in one form or another by [William] Hazlitt's grandson, W. Carew Hazlitt, all Hazlitt's biographers have had access to this essential source of material about his early life and, especially, his few years of childhood in America. The complete journal, now published for the first time and most elaborately annotated by Ernest J. Moyne, makes no major fresh contribution to knowledge about Hazlitt. But it does leave a fresh impression and alters the focus. Margaret's hero . . . was not her brother who became famous but her forgotten father. . . It is his dark, rugged and cordial countenance which dominates the scene."

TLS p917 Ag 29 '68 1550w

HEADINGTON, CHRISTOPHER. The orchestra and its instruments; with drawings by Roy Spencer. 95p $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

785.06 Musical instruments—Juvenile literature. Orchestra—Juvenile literature 67-23357

This "book describes various orchestral instruments, their physical as well as tonal and temperamental characteristics and their use in the orchestra. The history of their development is treated . . . and examples are given of their use in well-known musical passages. There is also a . . . chapter on the role of the conductor and one highlighting historical uses of the orchestra. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:430 F 1 '68 60w

"[A] runner-up for the British Carnegie medal . . . [this] book is illustrated with numerous excellent photographs showing boys and girls as instrumentalists and with clear helpful line drawings. . . [It] is outstanding for its lucidity, economy, objectivity and eye appeal." L. B. Jones

Library J 93:[3316] S 15 '68 140w

HEADSTROM, RICHARD. Nature in miniature; il. by the author. 412p $10 Knopf

574.9 Nature study—U.S. 67-11122

"The former curator of entomology at the Worcester Museum of Science and Industry has written here a month-by-month natural history guide to pond, meadow, woods, and brook. He suggests observers use the hand lens and a few other simple tools. He covers representative wildflowers, bristleworms, molds, fish scales, insect galls, witch hazel, some species of crabs, and . . . other wonders of nature. In brief, the reader will learn what to look for, the description of particular items, and their functions." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:810 S '68 210w

"Through a glass starkly, maintains Richard Headstrom, endless wonders and miracles of nature are brilliantly revealed, which the naked eye alone cannot distinguish or even fathom. Naturalist-author-artist, he has for years pursued his indefatigable quest with the aid of a hand glass, or a pocket lens, and his rich harvest of observation is encompassed in this massive and thoroughly absorbing record. While his knowledge is immense, he never lectures, but subtly seems to permit the reader to discover for himself the metamorphoses in vegetable, insect, and animal life during the changing seasons of the year. . . Scattered through the lucid text are . . . delicate, detailed pen-and-ink drawings by Mr. Headstrom, that form a wonderful accompaniment to his revelations." Holger Lundbergh

Christian Science Monitor pB11 My 2 '68 750w

"After reading this book, the reader should really understand what he is seeing in nature as opposed to merely looking at a plant or animal. [The book] enhances the appreciation of nature for Mr. Headstrom shows it as a world of beauty, form, and abstraction through the hand lens. His text is concise, detailed, and scientifically accurate; yet it is informal and for the most part nontechnical. . . The book is highly recommended for public libraries and special libraries in botany, and it will be enjoyable reading for a large reading audience beyond the veteran or beginning naturalist." D. S. Kalk

Library J 93:1644 Ap 15 '68 190w

"Within the framework of each month [the author] starts from big, obvious natural events, such as the birth of mammals or the migration of birds, and works down to the minutiae that call for the use of a lens. . . . The result is a book that sprawls, wanders, and tries to take in too much territory. It often has a school-text tone that may annoy the adult reader, and it is so salted with technical language that the amateur may boggle, even with its appended glossary of almost 500 terms. The author's illustrations, almost 100 panels of clear, detailed drawings, both supplement and help clarify the text. . . . In summary, this is a rather pedestrian and random compilation of material from many sources. It deserves shelf space because it brings together a great deal of material otherwise scattered through whole shelf of reference books." Hal Borland

N Y Times Bk R p39 Mr 17 '68 330w

HEADY, EARL O. A primer on food, agriculture, and public policy. 177p $4.95; pa $1.95 Random house

338.1 Agriculture and state. Agriculture—U.S. 67-12746

A professor of economics examines "the economic and social problems of agriculture in the United States today. . . . He explains the peculiarities of the nature of the demand for food, the impact of technological change on food production and prices, influences on the farm labor force, and the interplay of all of these factors with the process of economic growth. . . . [He discusses] how United States government programs have dealt, traditionally, with the results of agricultural problems rather than, properly, with the causes of these problems." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Heady writes with a high degree of authority on recent U.S. agricultural policy. . . . On many subjects the general economist or agriculturist will find lucid explanations, but he will be disappointed by the lack of documentation. On some subjects the lack of presentation of ramifications will make statements appear erroneous, i.e. amount of labor used in agriculture being the index of efficiency. Rather than using this as a primer of 'do-it-yourself' instructions, the lay person needs to read the volume under the supervision of the economist in order to avoid erroneous conclusions or do a great deal of reference reading."

Choice 5:1182 N '68 100w

"For Mr. Heady, the problems faced by American agriculture are reducible to one simple fact. There are too many farmers. The agricultural plant has become so efficient that the smaller relatively less efficient producers are unable to compete successfully and serve only as a drag on the market. Mr. Heady's solution is to encourage these farmers to abandon their farms and to compensate them for the hardship involved. Many of his specific plans, especially that calling for federal compensation for non-agricultural vocational training and guidance programs in rural schools, have considerable merit. But his over-all policy goal, the reduction of agricultural manpower, is based upon a narrow view of the nation's manpower needs, and a series of economic half-truths." Marc Landy

Commonweal 88:213 My '68 1000w

HEADY, ELEANOR B. When the stones were soft: East African fireside tales; il. by Tom Feelings. 94p $3.50 Funk

398.2 Folklore—Africa, East—Juvenile literature 68-13081

"This supplements Mrs. Heady's earlier collection of folk tales from East Africa, Jamba, Sungura [BRD 1966], with 16 hitherto unrecorded stories. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"A good contribution to today's prolific publishing of African folk tales. . . . Coming from Kenya, Uganda, and Tanzania, they concern everyday life and explanations of nature. Each tale is briefly introduced in a conversational manner and related to the subject about which Mama Semamingi will tell a tale. She knows so many stories that the children believe she must have been on earth 'when the stones were soft.' The volume has distinctive full-page line-and-wash paintings in soft grays, by a young Negro artist who has worked in Ghana. One for each tale, plus a frontispiece—they not only project an atmosphere greatly enhancing the stories but also show specific elements of African culture and wildlife." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:415 Ag '68 130w

Reviewed by Harold Lancour

Library J 93:1799 Ap 15 '68 70w

"Mama Semamingi is the narrator. And of course she knows all the hows and whys; she even remembers when the stones were soft. One suspects that Tom Feelings, who illustrates the book so beautifully, also remembers." Jean Fritz

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 My 5 '68 90w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 S 21 '68 80w

HEALY, KATHLEEN, jt. auth. The demon and the dove. See Van Kaam, A.

HEATTER, BASIL. The sea dreamers; il. by Raymond Burns. 165p maps $3.50 Farrar, Straus

910.4 Voyages and travels—Juvenile literature. Seafaring life—Juvenile literature 68-13676

"For centuries men dreamed of circumnavigating the globe. Here . . . are eight of those dreams come true—the exciting adventures of such modern-day Magellans as Slocum, Blackburn, Voss, Gerbault, Pidgeon, Robinson, Long, and Chichester. Excerpts from the sailors' personal accounts are . . . threaded into the narrative. [Index] Grade six and up." (Library J)

"Though the accounts are too brief to do more than whet readers' appetites and much is old material for sea-story buffs, the exciting style of writing and the author's own obvious enthusiasm make this appealing to seadreamers of all ages, particularly boys." R. J. Folcarelli

Library J 93:1811 Ap 15 '68 80w

"No matter what the speeds or dimensions, there is drama in the breaking of barriers; and this collection of some of the better known small-boat adventures does well at capturing their excitement. There is perhaps an overemphasis on the gee-whiz approach and the fortitude of the men is played far above their other, more individualistic qualities. One might have wished for more of the romance and the exotic atmosphere of the ports visited, but what is here is well-presented." Bill Robinson

N Y Times Bk R p18 Ag 11 '68 190w

HEBDEN, MARK. The errant knights. 246p $4.95 Harcourt

68-24391

In this novel of suspense, "Aunt Hetty Bartelott cannot constrain her compassion for a young Spanish boy, obviously pursued, and desperate for a hiding place in the streets of Puebla del Ducque, and she motions him into the ancient Rolls, and pulls the robe over him. That impulse makes impossible the leisurely trip through Spain she had planned for her husband, the redoubtable Hector, their nephew Alec, and his wife Sibley. Only slowly do they learn why Cesar is the quarry of a cruel hunt, and why they must protect him, and themselves, from the chills and danger that seem to abound in sunny Spain." (Library J)

"An uneventful and tame vacation is turned into an exciting and perilous race through Spain with the police close behind. To add to the suspense . . . a group of anarchists . . . also join in the chase. Those who fancy British humor may find this a delight."

Best Sell 28:265 O 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 Jl 22 '68 120w

"[Hebden] has made as successful an excursion into the perils of foreign travel as in his first book [The Eyewitness, BRD 1967]. . . . Hector's vivid flights of imagination are as magnificent as his ancient Rolls." M. K. Grant
Library J 93:2900 Ag '68 110w

Reviewed by George Merrill

Library J 93:4740 D 15 '68 130w [YA]

"Hector, retired professor of Latin who wields an incendiary pipe like some ill-controlled Roman candle, is present in most of [the book] . . . for comic relief. This he provides most successfully by being at least three chapters behind the action at all times. . . . Adequate suspense here, reinforced with chuckling good humor." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p66 S 8 '68 170w

HECHT, ANTHONY. The hard hours; poems. 103p il $5; pa $2.45 Atheneum pubs. 811 67-25474

These new poems are accompanied by selections from the author's first book, A Summoning of Stones (BRD 1954). Some of these poems have appeared in various literary periodicals such as the Quarterly Review of Literature, Transatlantic Review, and Voices.

Reviewed by Peter Davison
Atlantic 221:142 F '68 170w

"With Anthony Hecht and his newest book . . . I feel that indefinable but unmistakable thing, a personal and poetic center of gravity permitting him to move with freedom through varied forms and subjects, even as Robert Lowell does, giving to each its exact due. He can handle the tightest verse forms with measured ease, as in 'Samuel Sewall.' . . . At the same time, Hecht can compose the multi-part architecture of 'Rites and Ceremonies,' a majestic poem on the destiny and endurance of the Jewish people, concluding on a tone of prayer that very few living poets could bring off." Chad Walsh

Book World p6 D 24 '67 270w

Reviewed by Philip Booth
Christian Science Monitor p9 F 1 '68 800w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson
Harper 237:74 Ag '68 220w

"There is not one poem which falls below a very high level of excellence, be it a lengthy wasteland vision, a wry comment on Matthew Arnold, a tragic ditty, a deft and precise imitation of Baudelaire, or a conceptual echo of Keats. This volume also contains a visual treat: a reproduction from the limited edition of 'The Seven Deadly Sins' with woodcuts by Leonard Baskin. Mr. Hecht is one of the most accomplished of modern poets. His work displays a verbal magic, a precision of image, a clear sense of form, and, above all, a solidity of idea which ranks him among the best." T. E. Luddy

Library J 93:86 Ja 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by John Thompson
N Y Rev of Books 11:35 Ag 1 '68 400w

Reviewed by William Meredith
N Y Times Bk R p24 D 17 '67 300w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 43:137 Mr 30 '68 50w

"Most of Hecht's earlier poems and some of his new ones seems to me essentially contrivances; learned, allusive, skillful, but hollow; by which I mean they are like shells within which the felt experience is loose and unsupported, so that it rattles and tends to diminish. But some of his poems, especially the sequence called Rites and Ceremonies, are so well controlled yet so fierce that in them the irony fades out, the rhetoric, left free, clings to the experience, and the formal fury binds us so tightly that our only hope of escape is to realize the poem in ourselves—and thus to submit to it. Altogether, [this] is a book I am glad to have, both for these few moving poems and for its representation of what is characteristic as well as best in the tail-end of a literary era." Hayden Carruth

Poetry 112:424 S '68 240w

Reviewed by Daniel Hoffman
Reporter 38:52 F 22 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Miller Williams
Sat 51:33 Mr 9 '68 220w

"In Mr. Hecht's poetry it is necessary to say that his gift for language is almost indiscriminate. In 'Le Masseur de ma Soeur' it is a gift for Stevens's language, in 'Captain Sewall' and 'Discourse concerning Temptation' a gift for Mr. Ransom's language, and in 'La Condition Botanique' a gift for Mr. Auden's language. . . . The great merit of the new collection is that . . . Hecht, at least in five or six poems, is speaking with his own voice. He is no longer a ventriloquist. This deeper vein of feeling (for it is that, rather than the termination of relationships) issues here in three noble poems, 'More Light', 'And Can Ye Sing Baluloo', and 'It Out-Herods Herod'. The last poem is a quiet, sad, grateful meditation on children and fathers and the collusion of chance for the redemption of all."

TLS p1106 N 23 '67 500w

Reviewed by Laurence Liberman
Yale R 57:601 summer '68 1000w

HECHT, MARIE B., jt. auth. Aaron Burr. See Parmet, H. S.

HECHT, MARIE B., jt. auth. Never again. See Parmet, H. S.

HECKMAN, RICHARD ALLEN. Lincoln vs. Douglas; the great debates campaign, 192p $5 Public affairs press

973.6 Lincoln, Abraham. Douglas, Stephen Arnold. U.S.→Politics and government—1815-1861 67-23952

This book covers "all the important speeches of Lincoln and Douglas in 1858 as part of the debates. . . . [Heckman] outlines the political situation during the 1850's. . . . He discusses the conflicting divisions of the Democratic party, the nation's interest in the Illinois campaign, and the bitter infighting among the Republicans. He investigates both the records and the rumors concerning attempts to enlist Douglas in the new party." (Am Hist R)

"Since Paul M. Angle edited a complete reprinting of the debates only nine years ago [Created Equal? BRD 1958], a comparison of his work with Heckman's is inevitable. . . . Angle prefaced each [speech] with a short introduction. Heckman, instead of copying them word for word, analyzes each in turn. This reduces the wordage necessary for reprinting them by 356 pages—a tidy saving for many readers. . . . [In providing contemporary political background] Angle, with many quotations from Lincoln's masterful speeches, achieves the best literary effect. Heckman, intent on giving Douglas equal recognition, presents a thoroughly objective account, though his excess of details often detracts from the readability of his text. . . . His concise account of the first publication of the debates in book form is the best and most complete summary in print. . . . He is a thorough master of his subject's literature, he has tapped obscure sources hitherto neglected, and with this book he earns a prominent place among the best students in the field." Jay Monaghan

Am Hist R 73:922 F '68 400w

"[Heckman] believes that [the importance of the debates] has been exaggerated and tries to place them in better perspective within the total framework of the campaign of which they were a part. It is a difficult task, both because the ground has been so frequently plowed and because of the repetition inherent in the debates. Heckman belabors the obvious in providing the general setting, but handles the repetition skillfully. His abundant footnotes, often as interesting as the text, indicate the painstaking scholarship of his research. . . . When disputable questions of fact or interpretation arise, the author presents the evidence, but does not always indicate which view he finds the most persuasive. A welcome addition to the literature of the 1850's. Undergraduate libraries should buy it."

Choice 5:550 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by Holman Hamilton
J Am Hist 54:666 D '67 380w

HECKSCHER, GUNNAR. The intellectual in politics. See MacDonald, H. M.

HEENAN, JOHN CARMEL, jt. auth. Dialogue: the state of the church today. See Haughton, R.

HEIDEGGER, MARTIN. What is a thing? tr. by W. B. Barton, Jr. and Vera Deutsch; with an analysis by Eugene T. Gendlin. 310p $8.50 Regnery

142 Kant, Immanuel. Transcendentalism 67-31050

"A translation of Die Frage nach dem Ding, originally published in 1962, this is the first appearance of lectures given at Freiburg in 1935-1936 under the title Grundfragen der Metaphysik." (Choice) Indexes of names, German, Latin and Greek terms.

"[This book] comes from (and helps illuminate) the period of Heidegger's 'turn.' More than half the work is a close study of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason. . . . [It] constitutes an important addition to the fast growing published work of the most important 20th century philosopher. Translating Heidegger is always difficult. This endeavor is competent. . . . Essential for all libraries with holdings in philosophy."

Choice 5:496 Je '68 300w

"The present book, containing lectures on basic questions of metaphysics, . . . is quite important in its own right, without reference to the clarification on the history of Heidegger's thought which it can provide: the sorts of 'thing' he investigates include tools, man, works of art, the state, and the world. It is a pity then that the production is so second-rate, the translation often unclear or inappropriate, the indexes so unhelpful. But the content wins out: the reinterpretation of the cogito ergo sum in the light of the mathematization of metaphysics, alone, is worth the book's price." J. M. Perreault

Library J 93:2008 My 15 '68 200w

HEIJKE, JOHN. An ecumenical light on the renewal of religious community life: Taizé. 203p $4.50 Duquesne univ. press

248.8 Taizé Community 67-15785

"This volume introduces the reader to the history, vocation, and ecumenical dimensions of the . . . Protestant Community of Taizé. Part One is a brief résumé of the background and early history of the Taizé community under the inspiration of its founder and present Prior, Roger Schutz. The second part . . . surveys the community's understanding of the community of goods, celibacy, authority, community life, and the Rule of Taizé. The third section deals with the ecumenical spirituality and activities of the Taizé monks. Finally, the book concludes with a reflection on the prayer and liturgical life of the community." (Choice) Bibliography. Indexes of names and of subject matter.

"Written by a Catholic theologian who has been engaged for the past eight years in an intensive study of Anglican and Protestant religious communities . . . this volume is a valuable and extremely interesting contribution to the ongoing dialogue on the renewal of 20th-century religious life. Taizé's refreshing insights can contribute immensely to the desired aggiornamento of Catholic religious communities. . . . Recommended."

Choice 4:1001 N '67 180w

Christian Century 84:475 Ap 12 '67 20w

HEIMANSON, RUDOLPH. Dictionary of political science and law. 188p $6 Oceana

320.03 Political science—Dictionaries. Law—Dictionaries 67-14401

A "professor and law librarian at the Cleveland Marshall Law School [combines] . . . law and political science in a format of large category and short definition." (Library J)

"Well meant but diffuse and off-centered dictionary. . . . [The author] has developed a reference tool that failed to make up its mind between political science and law, between the novice and the graduate student. . . . Some entries are composed in clear language while others are rather dense or require a legal background for understanding. A great help though is the citations of landmark cases. But Heimanson's lexicon is not needed by libraries because much of its information is already on hand (e.g., Shay's Rebellion). It has the curious feel, too, of a student notebook."

Choice 4:1224 Ja '68 110w

"While there are legal or political science dictionaries of greater length and breadth, [the author's] idea of combining the two has much virtue. One could find fault with his breakdown of the United States Code into 49 titles rather than 50; however, he has done a careful work of selection and definition, which will reward the hurried student looking for reliable information. For public and academic libraries." E. J. Bander

Library J 92:4140 N 15 '67 100w

HEINEMANN, ROBERT B. The fourth R; a return to learning for sidetracked adolescents, by Robert B. Heinemann and Marilyn Bernstein. 212p $6 Beacon press

371.9 Exceptional children. Education—Experimental methods 67-14105

The authors, who established Remedial Scholastic Services in Cambridge, Massachusetts, "narrate their efforts to recover adolescents who, because of a history of failure, no longer consider educational achievement to be any part of their own self-fulfillment. Through portrayals of encounters with their students, the authors present repeated applications of their conviction that a lesson in progress should be interrupted whenever one of their badly disturbed charges is having difficulty. These interruptions are followed by attempts to get the troubled student to identify his problem, a task requisite for his coming to know himself." (Choice)

"The most valuable feature of [this book] is its copious rendering of situations in which disturbed students struggle to find a reason for becoming committed to classroom activities. Particularly appropriate in a course on the teaching of disturbed adolescents or a course which attends to the relationship between educational psychology and classroom practice."

Choice 4:1293 Ja '68 210w

"Unlike most research reports, this one is literate and vigorous; engaging incidents elucidate philosophy, strategy, and results. [The authors] earn the reader's deepest respect through the prodigious energy, patience, warmth, and psychological insight which they bring to their task." David Moe

Harvard Ed R 38:375 spring '68 1750w

"Unfortunately, the explosive techniques employed are only vaguely presented through the fictionalized stories of eight students. A presentation of clinical case studies and detailed analysis of success and failure would have made the findings truly meaningful, albeit less dramatic. Recommended for large education collections." Patricia Schuman

Library J 92:1924 My 15 '67 200w

Reviewed by John Calam

Sat R 51:88 My 18 '68 110w

HEINHOLD, MARGARETE BAUR-. See Baur-Heinhold, M.

HEINL, ROBERT DEBS. Victory at high tide; the Inchon-Seoul campaign [by] Robert Debs Heinl, Jr. 315p pl $8.95 Lippincott

951.9 Korean War. 1950-1953 68-11129

An account of the tactics and strategy employed by the United States Navy and Marine Corps in the 1950 conquest of two cities during the Korean War. The author also "analyzes the effects of ill-digested Armed Forces unification on the Korean War and . . . [presents] views of Douglas MacArthur and other U.S. military leaders." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"War book buffs will revel in this well weighted and subjective account of the Inchon-Seoul campaign, others will tremble at the depths and strengths of inter-service rivalry here revealed and the military recalcitrance to civilian power. . . . The book is fascinating in its myriad details of armed service administration and, perhaps unwittingly, it is the best admonitory account of the fall of MacArthur from his soaring, well-nigh majesty of power, to his lowly state as a compulsorily retired old soldier. Excellent map as a front endpaper; plenty of diagrams, superb photographs, all from military sources."

Choice 5:1192 N '68 140w

"Colonel Heinl, a retired officer who served in the South Pacific during World War II and with the First Marine Division during the Korean War, has included in his account . . . material on the In Min Gun (North Korean Peoples Army) which has not been common knowledge. This book will appeal to those interested in American military history and interservice rivalries—particularly regarding the Marine Corps—not to those concerned with the diplomatic background." J. M. Elrod

Library J 92:4502 D 15 '67 130w

HEINSHEIMER, HANS W. Best regards to Aida; the defeats and victories of a music man on two continents. 267p il $6.95 Knopf

B or 92 Music—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. Publishers and publishing 68-23964

The author tells the "story of his forty-five-year association with the musical world as seen from inside the offices of three . . . music publishers: Universal Edition in Vienna and Boosey & Hawkes and G. Schirmer in New York. . . . While relating the ups and downs of his own life in the world of music the author touches . . .

HEINSHEIMER, H. W.—Continued

upon the lives and careers of such figures as . . . Alban Berg, Leonard Bernstein, . . . Gian Carlo Menotti [and] Arnold Schoenberg." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Shrewd, knowing, sympathetic to all sorts of people, with the sense of timing of a first-rate stand-up comic, Heinsheimer does not analyze much: he narrates; but the chapters on Kurt Weill and Bela Bartok and the passages on Paul Hindemith do add a little to our knowledge of major figures. Every once in a while Heinsheimer tries too hard for a gag; . . . but the gossip about music publishing—historical and recent—is amiably informative; and there are three wonderfully funny pages on why and how bad operas get produced." Martin Mayer

Book World p6 O 6 '68 330w

"This [is a] delightful collection of reminiscences and anecdotes. . . . [The author's] two previous books, Menagerie in F Sharp [BRD 1947] and Fanfare for Two Pigeons [BRD 1952] covered chiefly his American experiences. Here he repeats himself somewhat but concentrates for the most part on his European years. His slightly breathless style sweeps the reader along with him into a world of composers, new compositions, and first performances. Recommended especially to public libraries." Barbara Henry

Library J 93:2876 Ag '68 130w

New Yorker 44:244 N 30 '68 200w

HELPER, RAY E., ed. The battered child; ed. by Ray E. Helfer and C. Henry Kempe; with a foreword by Katherine B. Oettinger. 268p il $12.50 Univ. of Chicago press

364.15 Child welfare 68-16695

An examination of recent legal, sociological, pediatric and psychiatric developments in the study of the abuse of children, this book contains chapters on "the history and incidence of child abuse; the responsibility of physicians; . . . the role of the radiologist and pathologist in detecting the cause of injuries . . . the types of parents who abuse children; the help to be given by psychiatric and social workers and . . . the duty of the law and law-enforcement agencies. . . . [The editors believe that] the integrated medical, psychiatric, social, and legal approach . . . is essential to solving the problem." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by T. S. Szasz

Atlantic 222:127 O '68 1950w

"[The editors, who are professors of pediatrics] present a full-length study in depth of this pressing problem. The contributors are experts in the field who have a good command of the research. S. X. Radbill essays a brief history of child abuse and infanticide placing the subject in perspective. D. G. Gil discusses the incidence of the problem together with the demographic characteristic of persons involved. R. E. Helfer, F. N. Silverman, and J. T. Weston cover the medical aspects of the problem. Thus this book will be of service to a variety of professional people." P. W. Brouse

Library J 93:2684 J1 '68 260w

HELFMAN, ELIZABETH S. Signs and symbols around the world. 192p il $4.95 Lothrop

419 Signs and symbols—Juvenile literature 67-22596

The author begins "with an explanation of her subject, then traces the history of signs and symbols from primitive picture writing to alphabets, to numerals and other signs, to signs in religion and magic, trademarks and brands, signs in science and industry, road signs, sign-writing for today, and a forecast of possible signs and symbols for tomorrow." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"[Mrs. Helfman] is careful to note that the most successful road signs, for instance, should be standardized internationally, that signs in industry can be misleading unless they, too, are standardized, and makes several important observations about computer programming. The book is well illustrated by line drawings and a few photographic plates."

Best Sell 27:393 Ja 1 '68 150w

"This is a fascinating history of communication and a source for answers to some of the questions young people ask about the development of language. Mrs. Helfman has organized her material so well and developed it in such an interesting manner that the book would be a stimulating addition to any collection." Ruth Roth

Library J 93:882 F 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by N. K. Burger
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p40 My 5 '68 200w

HELFMAN, HARRY. Fun with your fingers; working with sticks, paper, and string; il. by Robert Bartram. 47p $2.95; lib bdg $2.94 Morrow

745.5 Handicraft—Juvenile literature 68-12691

"Eleven projects using paper, sticks and string—and of course some young fingers—are . . . explained and illustrated. . . . Among them are weaving on a cardboard loom, printing with an ink pad and a string-wrapped block of wood, constructing a string design by wrapping string around random nails in a board, and making a paper mobile." (Book World) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"The book was promptly seized and thoroughly tested by this reviewer's 8-year-old daughter and a new young friend who speaks only French but had no trouble following the illustrated directions. They had a wonderful day." Jean Baron

Book World p13 My 26 '68 120w

"The author presents clear instructions for simple crafts, with illustrations to reinforce each explanation. . . . All can be found in other craft books but not always in a format so attractive and understandable to this age group. Although the instructions are more specific than are found in Harvey Weiss's craft books, creativity is engagingly encouraged." M. A. Wentroth

Library J 93:2539 Je 15 '68 100w

HELIAND. The Heliand; tr. from the Old Saxon by Mariana Scott. 205p $6 Univ. of N.C. press 839 66-64041

"A translation into a modern free form of alliterative verse, of the [9th century] Old (Continental) Saxon poem Heliand, meaning 'The Savior.' The original is a retelling in 6,000 lines of the life of Christ." (Choice)

"This translation, the only one available in English, sticks very closely to the literal meaning of the original. Scott has also made a serious effort to preserve the literary quality of the original and to convey a sense of its artistic success. . . . The deliberate attempt at reproducing the 'primitive, naive atmosphere of the original' is based on a critical generalization with which not all readers of the poem will agree, and the archaic English it produces in the modern translation is a retrogression to a 19th-century style of translation which recent translators of Anglo (Insular) Saxon poetry have rightly and laboriously worked away from. The most unfortunate thing about this translation is that the foreword is nothing but a theory of translation. . . . This omission would seem to make the book almost useless except for the occasional student who wishes a translation as an aid to study. Nevertheless, it must be acknowledged and welcomed as a substantial and sincere effort at making this fine poem available to a lay audience."

Choice 4:425 Je '67 240w

"A translator, in trying to preserve or recreate the spirit and tone of the original, while at the same time making the translation somehow fit into and be understandable to his own time and culture, must to a certain extent betray them both. Miss Scott is to be commended for recognizing this and for choosing a definite approach. The Heliand should be useful to students of comparative literature, history, and religion, who have not had an opportunity to learn Old Saxon." R. L. Kyes

Mod Lang J 52:46 Ja '68 950w

HELLEINER, GERALD K. Peasant agriculture, government, and economic growth in Nigeria. (Yale univ. The economic growth center. Publication) 600p $9.25 Irwin

330.9669 Nigeria—Economic conditions 66-27463

Based on study and research in Nigeria, the author "describes and explains the economic development of Nigeria from 1900 to the present, with particular emphasis on the period following the Second World War. The focus is . . . on economic problems and the approach is a quantitative one. . . . Peasant, or 'traditional' agriculture . . . is at the very center of the historical development process in Nigeria. The other principal dynamic element in Nigeria's economic growth has been the government. . . . [This study emphasizes these] two sectors of the economy—peasant export agriculture and government." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"It is refreshing and surprisingly provocative to see serious attempts to evaluate the oft overlooked place of traditional agriculture in accelerating and maintaining economic growth. In the areas of agriculture and government upon which Helleiner concentrates, his findings and analysis offer the most detailed and complete data since those of the IBRD's report on its Mission to Nigeria published in 1955. The 350 pages of text are accompanied by 31 pages of useful bibliography and some 204 pages of statistical appendix. . . . Three chapters should be of particular interest to the agricultural and land economists as they investigate peasant agriculture, its nature, principal exports and its position in the economic development of Nigeria. . . . For those in African studies, development, and agricultural economics . . . [this book] contains a wealth of economic data and analysis." R. E. Mallakh

Am Econ R 57:1336 D '67 550w

"The incongruities of economics in the underdeveloped world are well illustrated in this thorough volume about Nigeria. The 'big business' of that country was the peanut industry. In the late 1950's, Shell-BP found oil and that, obviously, changed the situation. . . . Substantial parts of the book are devoted to the problems of such traditional products as peanuts, oil palm, cocoa, cotton, and rubber; to their marketing; and also to the questions of public developments and revenues. A chapter is devoted to the particularly important problem of distribution of public revenues among the various federation members." Emil Lengyel

Ann Am Acad 337:190 My '68 440w

"A long and readable review of economic aspects of Nigerian experience useful for both general or specialized students of economic development and of Africa. . . . Although not directly treating Nigeria, the more micro analysis of J. C. DeWilde, et al, Experiences with Agricultural Development in Tropical Africa, should be used to temper the conventional but somewhat tarnished development theory that is here integrated into the text. The frank discussion on the quality of statistics should be required reading but doubtless will be ignored by many who discover the 94 pages of statistics in the appendix. Excellent bibliography; good index." Choice 4:1289 Ja '68 160w

HELLER, EDNA EBY. The art of Pennsylvania Dutch cooking; il. by Ray Cruz. 243p $4.95 Doubleday

641.5 Cookery, American. Cookery, Mennonite 67-19067

The author describes Pennsylvania Dutch social customs and presents nearly 300 recipes as well as suggested menus and sources of local food products. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Yvonne Horton

Christian Science Monitor p8 N 29 '68 100w

"Amish vanilla pie, schnitz un knepp, Montgomery pie, chicken corn soup: the richness of Pennsylvania Dutch cuisine makes the ordinary American diet seem penny pinching and spare. . . . Judging only from the texts Miss Heller's book seems better [than R. R. Tyndall's Eat Yourself Full, BRD 1967. It is] a good purchase." Sally Poundstone

Library J 93:1142 Mr 15 '68 130w

"Good both for summer and the year round, because of its authentic, nonsynthetic food," Mrs. Heller is of Mennonite descent, and she grew up with the people and the food she describes. . . . I only wish she had identified the place of origin of her recipes more often. Pennsylvania Dutch cookery is one of our few culinary styles that has somehow survived the great egalitarian trend in food. The food itself is extremely good, since Mrs. Heller has refined the heavier dishes (which are really farmer's cooking) without altering their character." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p22 Je '68 160w

HELLER, JOSEPH. We bombed in New Haven; a play. 196p $4.50 Knopf

822

68-23943

A play "in which a group of men go on bombing missions. The play's setting is any theater and city in which it is presented, and the time is always the present. . . . [The] actors play actors who are playing roles." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. J. Murray

Best Sell 28:219 S 1 '68 700w

Christian Century 85:1032 Ag 28 '68 20w

"An abstract play reminiscent in tone of [Heller's] novel Catch-22 [BRD 1962]. . . . Mr. Heller's tragicomedians seem to be in search of a purpose. The strangled efforts by the characters to break out of their respective roles result only in total histrionic unionization. . . . Although the play is rich in gallows humor, it is in effect a dramatic tragedy. . . . Now is the time for theater libraries and libraries of the humanities to add it to their collections." L. A. Rachow

Library J 93:2894 Ag '68 220w

"A dud of the first magnitude. . . . Here indeed is moral substance, but not the substance I'm concerned about first. No author's moral substance is entertaining or convincing without the presence of another kind, which is that of his métier. . . . And the trouble with [this play] is that it does not have any theatrical substance that could be said to be the equivalent of the verbal substance of Catch-22." T. F. Driver

Sat R 51:22 Ag 31 '68 2500w

HELLER, LOUIS B. Do you solemnly swear? foreword by Abe Fortas. 491p il $6.95 Doubleday

347 Law as a profession. Trials. Courts—U.S. 67-20910

"This book grew out of a series of lectures given by New York Supreme Court Justice Heller at New York Law School on the subject of 'How To Try a Case.' It contains chapters on 'Preparation For Trial,' 'Selecting the Jury,' 'Opening to the Jury,' 'Direct Examination,' 'Taking Exceptions,' 'Cross Examination,' 'Closing to the Jury,' and 'Image of the Profession.' It also contains an abbreviated transcript of one trial from beginning to end, and . . . transcripts of telling testimony, many from Judge Heller's own experience." (Library J) Index.

"The reader may obtain from [this book] a complete understanding of the trial lawyer's work. . . . [The author] provides lawyers with a storehouse of procedures, strategies and hints, a storehouse that represents the accumulated experience of many years. There is great insight into the use and misuse of witnesses, of exhibits and other matters, the writer emphasizing the striking parallel between military strategy and trial procedure, trial planning. The book concludes with a plea for improved education of attorneys. . . . [Those] considering the law as a career would find with difficulty an exposition equally exhaustive and competent. . . . Highly recommended for libraries as well as individual buyers." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 27:459 Mr 1 '68 480w

"The book is a bit too long, a tactical error Judge Heller makes much of, but it is a book that can be helpful to the neophyte trial lawyer and law student, and a worthy addition to sizable law libraries." E. J. Bander

Library J 93:768 F 15 '68 110w

"This book is only incidentally reminiscent, because Judge Heller still graces the bench. It is pre-eminently a work of entertainment that rises far above triviality and offers an engrossing picture of justice in action." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:50 Ap 27 '68 50w

HELLER, WALTER W., ed. Perspectives on economic growth. 237p il $5.95; pa $1.95 Random house

339 U.S.—Economic policy 66-11981

"This collection of essays is not meant to present conflicting sides of various issues. . . . Rather it is meant as the presentation of the latest thinking and findings along the mainstream of professional economic thought on the broad question of economic growth." (Pref) Contents: Growth and economic policy, by G. L. Perry; Measuring the impact of the 1964 tax reduction, by A. M. Okun; Monetary and fiscal policies for economic growth, by W. L. Smith; Economic growth as an objective of government policy, by James Tobin; U.S. economic growth and world leadership, by R. N. Cooper; Recent U.S. economic growth and the gain in human welfare, by R. J. Lammman; Investments in human capital and economic growth, by W. G. Bowen; Technological advance, economic growth, and public policy, by R. R. Nelson; Fixed investment and economic growth, by R. M. Solow. Index.

HELLER, W. W.—Continued

"In these nine essays, economists in sympathy with Mr. Heller, if not disciples of his, analyze and present the findings of the 'latest' economic thought on the problem of sustained economic growth. They present the apparent goals of full employment based on an increase in research and development and modern plant expansion. But they find it less easy to discern ways to get the country 'going again' and keep its economic machine well oiled. . . . This volume joins the rapidly growing body of literature oriented to the problem of where Americans are headed. It is time that we have more answers rigorously diagnosed and vigorously applied." G. M. Gressley

Library J 93:2233 Je 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by Wassily Leontief

N Y Rev of Books 11:31 O 10 '68 1150w

"John F. Kennedy conducted the 1960 Presidential campaign largely on the economic issue of growth. . . . Of the 10 economists here involved, the editor, W. W. Heller, was Kennedy's choice of chairman for the Council of Economic Advisers; one writer, A. M. Okun, is the present Council chairman; another, J. Tobin, is a past member of the Council; and six of the remaining authors have served as Council staff members. Here is an authoritative presentation of the economic attitudes of the men who operated the New Economics." Robert Lekachman

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ag 18 '68 800w

HELLMAN, HAL. The art and science of color; il. by Mark Binn. 175p $5.95 McGraw

535.6 Color—Juvenile literature 67-22957

The author discusses color "from the basic physics of light to modern applications of color in science and technology. [He describes] photosynthesis, luminescence and phosphorescence, color mixing using lights and pigments, how the human eye perceives color, use of color theory by the Impressionists, and the history of pigments used in art from the cave-men to the present. . . . Also discussed here are problems of matching and specifying colors, and increasingly sophisticated methods of reproducing color in photography and television." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:466 Mr 1 '68 90w [YA]

"[This] book deals more with the physics of vision than with its physiology. [It] is at the pre-mathematical level, but covers very broadly the causes of color, both objective and subjective. . . . Coverage, in short, is excellent. There are a few mistakes, annoying . . . rather than critical." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:575 O '68 280w

"This fascinating, well organized account of the formation, perception, and uses of color is written in clear, simple language. The only treatment available for this age level which is as comprehensive and up to date as standard texts, it presents the material in an entertaining fashion. The book is illustrated by many well-chosen diagrams and a four-page insert of color photographs. There are interesting suggestions for do-it-yourself experiments with simple apparatus." Paul Goldstein

Library J 93:1811 Ap 15 '68 90w

HELLMAN, HAL. High energy physics; Helen Hale, editorial consultant; il. by Edward A. DeVille. 192p $4.75 Lippincott

539.7 Nuclear physics—Juvenile literature 68-10761

"This book discusses nuclear and particle physics in a . . . presentation which includes . . . recent developments in the field. Some of the topics covered are nuclear forces, symmetry, accelerators, and particles. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

"The science teacher will be happy to recommend this book to his students. . . . There are numerous photographs and drawings, there is also included a good bibliography of magazine articles and books. The billion-volt particle accelerators have produced several hundred 'fundamental' particles. Science students will enjoy this lucid account of their discovery and uses." F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 28:172 J1 15 '68 70w

"The writing style is interesting, though technical, and incorporates anecdotes concerning important scientists. The illustrations are many and helpful." P. W. Alley

Library J 93:3982 O 15 '68 60w

HELLMAN, HAL. Light and electricity in the atmosphere; il. by The Etheredges. 223p $4.50 Holiday

551.5 Meteorology—Juvenile literature. Lightning—Juvenile literature. Electricity—Juvenile literature 68-31963

"After introducing the early history of electrical research, this book discusses atmospheric phenomena such as lightning and thunderstorms, the glow called point discharge, or 'St. Elmo's fire,' the ionosphere whistlers (natural radio waves), the solar wind, radiation belts and the earth's magnetism, unidentified flying objects, ball lightning, plasmas (electrified gases), the auroras, and airglow." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to ten." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 28:172 J1 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by F. M. Branley

Library J 93:3982 O 15 '68 90w

"The atmosphere crackles with many wonders, and Hal Hellman has captured them all in this lively and informative book. An experienced science writer with a degree in physics, he has chosen to describe and explain the fantastic phenomena that sharp-eyed observers can see overhead, and he does so with clarity, authority and enthusiasm. . . . In passing, he expresses a conservative and convincing view of Unidentified Flying Objects, deftly suggests dozens of safe home experiments with electricity and sketches most of the basic principles of electrical theory. The book is illustrated with period cuts, photographs, and a number of useful diagrams." Robert Silverberg

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p18 My 5 '68 150w

HELMERICKS, CONSTANCE. Down the wild river north; il. by Michael Allen Hampshire. 501p $8.95 Little

917.12 Northwest, Canadian—Description and travel 66-22680

"Mrs. Helmericks, author of several books about life in the Arctic, canoed down the Peace and Mackenzie rivers in northern Canada a few years ago with her two teen-age daughters as companions. . . . [This is the] account of their adventures, the country they passed through, and the people they met." (Library J)

"Away from concrete cities, away from the pressure of too many people depredating too much nature, go three adventurous members of the Canadian Rivers Expedition . . . equipped with canoe, tent, and all the paraphernalia needed to subsist under the clean, clear sky, on a river trip which will span two summers and reach from British Columbia to the Northwest Territories. Their sojourn in the wilderness is a five-hundred-page account which moves with the heady speed of a canoe riding a flood current. A passionate cry for conservation, this adventure pulsates with the dangers and beauties of unknowns just around the bend of the river or at the next portage." Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:340 Je '68 220w

"[The author's] story is too long, drawn out by repetition and needless detail; her use of fatuous sobriquets is overdone; and, regrettably, there are numerous errors. The first two criticisms will probably not upset the average reader, who may not even be aware of the third. . . . Regardless of these complaints, [this] is a good readable story, and is apt to be popular in public libraries." N. I. Corley

Library J 93:1898 My 1 '68 170w

HEMAN, PETER, ed. The painted Romanesque ceiling of St Martin in Zillis. See Murbach, E.

HEMBRY, PHYLLIS M. The bishops of Bath and Wells, 1540-1640; social and economic problems. (London. Univ. Hist. study) 287p maps $8 Oxford

283 Bath and Wells (Diocese)—History. Church of England [67-87719]

"This book is concerned with the bishops of Bath and Wells as administrators rather than as theologians or fathers in God. . . . [The author presents] the years 1535-1646 as a climactic period in the history of the Anglican episcopate. Her concern is with the social and economic consequences of these trends in this one diocese. . . . In her analysis of the episcopal revenues [she] brings together data about receipts from manorial estates and from such sources as the profits from lead mines and markets and fairs. . . . [She also describes] conflicts within the bishops' families and with the townsfolk of Wells and the local gentry [and tells of] the problems created by a post-Reformation married clergy." (TLS)

"A sound, useful monograph. . . . On the basis of an exhaustive examination of surviving records, variously located in the Wells Cathedral Library, Wells Diocesan Registry, Somerset Record Office, the British Museum, the Bodleian Library, and the Public Record Office, comprising Chapter Act Books, parish registers, compoti, land leases, fines, and other relevant manuscripts, [Dr. Hembry] discerns a successful lay attack on the bishopric's resources, which resulted in a 55 per cent loss of income, without reference to price rise, by 1560. . . . [However, the author's] skills are not sociological but those of the local historian, family historian, and biographer. She relieves the necessary tedium of L.S.D. computations of lands and leases with an expert topographical re-creation of sixteenth-century Wells and penetrating character sketches, such as that of Bishop Peirs." M. J. Tucker

Am Hist R 73:472 D '67 380w

"By confining the scope of her inquiry to one diocese Dr. Hembry has provided scholars with a generous store of grass roots material. . . . No one can complain that [she] has given short measure. She has used a wealth of documentation to throw light on every aspect of episcopal income and expenditure, of the fiscal shifts and expedients to which political pressure or the need to provide for a wife and family might drive a harried or a greedy prelate during the century between the Reformation and the Civil War. . . . And she has not allowed her preoccupation with social and economic questions to lure her into forgetting that she is writing about people. . . . No ecclesiastical or economic historian should miss this book."

Economist 223:xiii Ap 15 '67 280w

Reviewed by F. R. H. Du Boulay
Engl Hist R 83:598 J1 '68 260w

"The problems discussed break fresh ground, and the results of research are rich in information and revealing in their conclusions. . . . Bath and Wells is probably a typical example of [the] Tudor bishoprics, and this study provides an encouraging illustration of the kind of information probably awaiting discovery in other dioceses for this period. . . . The research involved . . . has not been easy. . . . By much labour in archives, public and private, [Dr. Hembry] has assembled a rich store of relevant information in a form as readable as it is scholarly. Its highest merit is that it provides a model for similar investigations among the records of other contemporary bishoprics."

TLS p1256 D 28 '67 700w

HEMINGWAY, ERNEST. By-line: Ernest Hemingway; selected articles and dispatches of four decades; ed. by William White. 489p $8.95 Scribner

818

67-15483

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Am Lit 39:59 Ja '68 60w

Reviewed by Malcolm Bradbury
New Statesman 75:386 Mr 22 '68 500w

TLS p219 Mr 7 '68 900w

HEMINWAY, JOHN HYLAN. The imminent rains; a visit among the last pioneers of Africa, by John Hylan Heminway, Jr; line drawings by Hilary Heminway. 169p $6.95 Little

916 Africa—Description and travel

68-17277

The author writes of his 1967 travels by Land Rover through Africa visiting some of the remaining individuals who were among the first white men to settle in Africa.

"One would not go to this book for a political or social analysis of the changing moods of Africa. Its mood is lyrical and nostalgic rather than analytical. Most of the men interviewed indulge in fond memories of the past where civilization, as we know it, was still remote and separate from Africa. . . . One might expect more colorful anecdotes from such a book, since it dealt with a diversified group of people. But, strangely enough, there is a surprising sameness about them all which at times makes the book seem too facile. Just the same, the book offers (especially to nature lovers) some very pleasant hours of reading." Peter Corodimas

Best Sell 28:224 S 1 '68 380w

"Heminway allows the characters to speak for themselves, and their discussions range from crocodile hunting to their relations with black Africans. The book suffers, however, from Mr. Heminway's unsuccessful attempt to make it a literary gem: bits of sentimentality and low humor frame the margins of pages upon which generalizations about Africa and Africans are haphazardly strewn. As an introduction to some white pioneers' memories of 'Africa as it used to be' and to some of their thoughts on the present, it is a notebook worth reading."

H. K. Flad

Library J 93:2656 J1 '68 150w

"The relics of a vanished White Africa that Mr. Heminway turns up are of all kinds—hunters, missionaries, farmers, derelicts—and their views of the past and the future are very different. . . . An interesting book."

New Yorker 44:139 S 7 '68 170w

HEMPHILL, W. EDWIN, ed. The papers of John C. Calhoun, v3. See Calhoun, J. C.

HEMS, JACK, jt. auth. The vivarium. See Hervey, G. F.

HENDERSON, ISABEL. The Picts. 228p il pl maps $7.50 Praeger

913.41 Picts. Art, Pictish. Scotland—History 67-15744

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:397 My '68 150w

Reviewed by T. G. E. Powell
Engl Hist R 83:581 J1 '68 160w
TLS p138 F 8 '68 230w

HENDERSON, LARRY. Vietnam and countries of the Mekong. 224p il $3.50; lib bdg $3.31 Nelson

915.9 Asia, Southeastern—Description and travel—Juvenile literature. Vietnam—Description and travel—Juvenile literature. Asia, Southeastern—History—Juvenile literature. Vietnam—History—Juvenile literature 67-24670

An "account of the current scene in Vietnam, Laos, Burma, Cambodia, and Thailand. The Canadian journalist's personal observations are interspersed with information on the region's historical background and present problems. [The emphasis is on Vietnam. Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:393 Ja 1 '68 140w

"A deft and lively account. . . . Both positive and negative effects of the Western presence in the Mekong countries are brought out, and the intricacies of international relations are explained briskly and clearly, without oversimplification. The photographs illustrate various aspects of these countries from architect-

HENDERSON, LARRY—Continued

tural splendors to ordinary present-day activities. The author's approach is vigorous and realistic and has an obvious undercurrent of concern and idealism which should strike a responsive chord in young people." P. A. McKenzie

Library J 93:1322 Mr 15 '68 100w

"[This] book should be required reading at the junior high-school level. There is no proselytizing. The presence of the American in Vietnam is portrayed with great understanding. There can be no finer introduction for a child to the many different kinds of people and the way they live in Southeast Asia." Robin Moore

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p48 My 5 '68 250w

Social Studies 59:298 N '68 40w

HENDERSON, PHILIP. William Morris; his life, work and friends; foreword by Allan Tenko. 388p 82il 8 col pl $9.95 McGraw

B or 92 Morris, William 67-22695

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 118:617 My 4 '68 80w
Choice 5:482 Je '68 100w

Reviewed by Lewis Mumford
N Y Rev of Books 10:8 My 23 '68 1550w

Reviewed by John Russell
N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 21 '68 700w

Reviewed by Brendan Gill
New Yorker 44:201 S 14 '68 1700w
Va Q R 44:lxv spring '68 1400w

HENDRICKS, J. EDWIN, jr. auth. Liquor and anti-liquor in Virginia, 1619-1919. See Pearson, C. C.

HENDRICKSON, JAMES E. Joe Lane of Oregon; machine politics and the sectional crisis, 1849-1861. 274p $6.50 Yale univ. press

328.73 Lane, Joseph. Oregon—Politics and government. U.S.—Politics and government—1815-1861 67-13436

Lane was the first governor of Oregon Territory and the first United States Senator from the state. "The author states that his study is not a biography of Lane but an analysis of his political career in relation to political developments in Oregon and to the sectional controversy of the 1850s." (J Am Hist)

"Hendrickson, (University of Victoria, British Columbia) has made use of the hitherto unused Lane Collection of the Lilly Library, Indiana University, Bloomington. The use of this new material, with its emphasis on Lane's career after 1855, makes this work essential as a corrective and addition to [earlier works]. Recommended for all Western history and Civil War collections."

Choice 4:1044 N '67 170w

"The author carries his subject very effectively through the maze of territorial politics. He pays particular attention to the Salem Clique. . . . The handling of some aspects of the 1850s, however, leaves something to be desired. There is reference to the 'ambiguity' in the Kansas-Nebraska Act but no mention of the inclusion of the Supreme-Court clause in that measure for the purpose, in part at least, of ultimately resolving that ambiguity. . . . Lane's attitude toward sectionalism and secession would have been revealed in much clearer perspective than it is, had there been an adequate examination of his long speech of March 2, 1861. . . . This study, based on good sources, creates a clear-cut image of Lane, the politician." H. H. Simms

J Am Hist 54:667 D '67 460w

HENDRICKSON, WALTER B. What's going on in space? by Walter B. Hendrickson, Jr.; il. by James Heugh. 48p $2.75; lib bdg $2.89 Harvey house

629.4 Astronautics—Juvenile literature

68-10713

This book "covers the basics of rockets, orbits, and the space environment and also summarizes the United States space program.

The exploratory, weather, and manned satellites are discussed, as are the anticipated manned ships for exploration of Mars and Venus. [Index.] Grades three to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:339 Je '68 190w

"[An] attractively designed book . . . [which] does have shortcomings. A fair amount of what goes on in space is of Russian origin, but this book only briefly mentions Sputnik I and Lunik III; none of the other Russian programs are even alluded to. The description of the Van Allen Belt is inaccurate, and some of the explanations are simplified to such an extent as to be misleading." O. V. Fortier

Library J 93:1799 Ap 15 '68 100w

"The text is easily read and factually accurate with routine illustrations of rockets, satellites and planets. But it [is] basically just another of these books that keep appearing with calculable frequency of a full moon."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 My 5 '68 40w

HENISCH, BRIDGET ANN. Medieval armchair travels. 154p il $6.95 Carnation press

809

67-6588

Four popular topics of medieval tales are described: 'Alexander the Great's efforts to fly and to explore undersea; Noah's adventures in the Ark; Jonah's life in the whale; and the travels of the Three Kings. [The author] . . . has used as sources for the commentary art and contemporary writing; black-and-white plates and line drawings are included." (Library J)

"Among the many trivial books on the Middle Ages, this is a particularly attractive one. [Henisch] has dug with interest and zeal among Middle English (and as far afield as German and Ethiopian) tales. . . . The writing is mock serious and consciously lighthearted, with numerous quotes from the sources and many illustrations. . . . No college library need bother with this, but it might be interesting for a high school or junior college collection."

Choice 4:1305 Ja '68 90w

"[Bridget Henisch] shows how men wrestled shrewdly and imaginatively with the practical and doctrinal problems presented by these episodes. A charming book, beautifully designed and printed. For scholarly and some general collections." Dorothy Sinclair

Library J 92:4155 N 15 '67 140w

HENKIN, LOUIS. How nations behave; law and foreign policy; pub. for the Council on for. relations. (Columbia univ. Inst. of war and peace. Study) 324p $7.50 Praeger

327 International relations. International law 67-24681

A study of the ways "international law determines, or governs, or modifies, the policies of governments and how nations behave toward each other." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1366 D '68 110w

"This book is a welcome antidote to the currently fashionable tendency to dismiss the influence of law in international relations. . . . The work falls short in Mr. Henkin's speculation as to the consideration international law receives during the formulation of policy. But this failing is more than offset by his cogent analysis of the benefits of international law and a convincing condemnation of unilateralism in an interdependent world. The general reader and the scholar would each profit by exposure to Mr. Henkin's arguments." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 93:2666 Jl '68 120w

"Those who seek peace through law should read [this book]. Professor Henkin is both a theorist and practitioner of international law. . . . [He] insists that ideological conflicts and Cold War tensions sometimes lead nations to disregard international law as in the Soviet intervention in Hungary and American involvement in the Dominican Republic. Yet, contrary to common impressions, the United Nations' Charter by outlawing war by sovereign states except in self-defense has profoundly influenced the vast majority of nations. If the new President looks to international law to transform foreign policy, he can learn from the informed and measured approach of Professor Henkin."

K. W. Thompson

Sat R 51:41 S 14 '68 180w

HENNELL, THOMAS. The witnesses; with drawings by the author; introd. by Humphry Osmond. 251p $7.95 Univ. bks.

616.89 Schizophrenia 66-22830

"Thomas Hennell, an English artist, was a schizophrenic. He wrote The Witnesses upon his recovery and it was first published in 1938. Hennell was killed in World War II." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[This] account by a recovered schizophrenic patient [is] preceded by a very lengthy introduction by Dr. Humphry Osmond, in which he relates how much the book has influenced his research on biochemical factors in schizophrenia. Osmond finds remarkable parallels between Hennell's description of his illness and the kinds of experiences reported by investigators who have taken mescaline, LSD, and adrenochrome. To a certain extent, the introduction makes the narrative itself rather anticlimactical, since Osmond quotes from it quite liberally, and, in addition, has much to report about his own role in research on psychedelics. For the general reader this book is one of many which offers a glimpse of the inner world of a mental patient. It will appeal most to those readers, lay and professional, who wish to know more about the role it played in stimulating the research of Osmond and his colleagues."

Choice 5:412 My '68 130w

"On the book jacket it is stated that this book 'guided research leading to a major breakthrough in the treatment of schizophrenia.' To this reviewer's knowledge there has been no major breakthrough in the therapy of schizophrenia. . . . The writer was a schizophrenic who recorded his verbal processes in the course of his psychotic episode. As such, it is a credible account. And, as with all such accounts [it represents] the patient's efforts at self-therapy. A patient caught in the throes of psychosis makes no effort at recording himself. This requires at least a modicum of perspective, of self-delineation. Clearly, Mr. Hennell was so involved. . . . This book is recommended only for those very specialized collections in psychopathology." Louis De Rosier

Library J 93:562 F 1 '68 140w

HENNESSY, JAMES POPE. See Pope-Hennessy, James

HENNESSY, JOHN POPE. See Pope-Hennessy, John

HENRIQUES, ROBERT. The commander; an autobiographical novel of 1940-1941. 318p $5.75 Viking

68-13247

In 1940-1941 the author "was a captain in a British Commando unit. In this autobiographical novel, he is Captain David Lamego, who at 35 is too old to be commanding such a unit. The training is rigorous; the men, fully trained for action, are forced time and time again to stand and wait at the last moment. Captain Lamego, often unsure of himself, bungling occasionally, worries about discipline and training, and his knowledge of the unit's mission which he can tell no one, not even his officers." (Library J)

"For about 250 pages of a 313-page work we are confronted with descriptions of commando training, the comradeship of the commandos, the psychological adjustment of the men, and above all the waiting for the word to go into action. . . . Finally, Operation Anchorite is ordered and, by this time, however, my interest had flagged. I had awaited too long for the event which would finally test David's courage and initiative and had felt that the moment for that had gone by. But nothing had happened and I had grown more than a bit weary of Britishisms and of characters who had remained undeveloped and scenes which had begun with promise and had ended flatly. . . . This work is neither outstanding autobiography, nor good fiction. What was apparently a fine talent and a thoughtful mind became lost between the two genres." F. L. Ryan

Best Sell 27:441 F 15 '68 650w

Reviewed by S. S. Swanson
Library J 92:4523 D 15 '67 170w

Reviewed by C. D. B. Bryan
N Y Times Bk R p5 Mr 10 '68 900w

"In many ways the best [part of this novel] is the horrendous detail of incredible training methods which force David Lamego . . . and his men to the ragged edge of exhaustion and beyond. . . . The pity is that . . . it never really leaves the ground. Like the Commando raid for which David's men train beyond endurance, it doesn't quite come off. You keep waiting for something better (and better written) but it is not there. Why should this be? I think the answer comes down to a certain awkwardness of wording, particularly in the dialogue. . . . Another flaw is that we never really know what any of the characters except David is like, even looks like in most cases. . . . The story has enormous suspense, however, and would make a cracking good movie, especially the Commando training techniques." R. L. Tobin

Sat R 51:34 Mr 2 '68 350w

"[This] is an honest and wholly absorbing piece of self-analysis, making direct use, as the author says in his prefatory note, of personal experience, but adapting incidents, blending in sub-plots and adding invented characters. . . . The narrative is at times oppressively preux-chevaleresque in tone, but this can readily be forgiven. Who after all could have stronger title to the role of preux-chevalier than a commando-leader of thirty-four, carrying on top of the enormous burden of his self-inflicted task the responsibilities which, in such a situation, must drag at a loving husband and father? The strange atmosphere of those days—that blend of screwed-up tension and other-worldliness—is wonderfully evoked, and the prickly, elusive problems besetting a sensitive man charged in such circumstances with the leadership of a corps d'élite are subtly analysed."

TLS p1205 D 14 '67 330w

HENRY, FRANÇOISE. Irish art during the Viking invasions (800-1020 A.D.). 236p il pl col pl maps $15 Cornell Univ. press

709.415 Art, Irish 67-15300

The present work, the second volume of the author's study of early Irish art, "dealing essentially . . . with sculpture and manuscript illumination, includes 112 black-and-white illustrations, 16 color plates, and numerous line drawings. The text contains . . . stylistic analyses of the major work of early Irish art." (Choice) Index. For the first volume, Irish Art in the Early Christian Period to 800, see BRD 1966.

"A happy publishing event. Henry, Director of Studies (Archaeology and History of Painting) at University College, Dublin, [is] recognized in the scholarly world as an expert in the field of Irish art. . . . Useful for the general reader, and should figure in college and university libraries."

Choice 5:475 Je '68 110w

Christian Century 84:1466 N 15 '67 50w

"The book is arranged in six chapters, the first concerned with the often convoluted situation in Ireland, political, economic, and religious, which arose out of the Viking raids and the development of the Norse kingdoms there. . . . The four chapters that follow are the heart of the book, and deal with Sites and Architecture, the Decoration of Manuscripts, Metalwork, and Carvings. . . . The two longest chapters are those on the manuscripts, where pride of place is held by the Book of Kells, and the carvings, where the stone crosses stand supreme. . . . Much of Mrs. Henry's discussion of the crosses is directed towards their iconography and the plastic representation of human figures. . . . The possibility of influence from England, France, Italy, the Holy Land, and Byzantium is cautiously and briefly discussed. . . . However clear and learned the text, a book of this kind depends heavily on its illustrations. These are many and fine."

TLS p420 Ap 25 '68 1300w

HENSLEY, JEANNINE, ed. The works of Anne Bradstreet. See Bradstreet, A.

HENSLOW, JOHN STEVENS, jr. auth. Darwin and Henslow. See Darwin, C. R.

HENTOFF, NAT. A doctor among the addicts. 135p $4.50 Rand McNally

616.86 Nyswander, Marie. Narcotic habit

68-11406

"Hentoff discusses the problems of narcotics and addicts, telling of the . . . Methadone Maintenance Treatment Program started and maintained in Harlem by Dr. Marie Nyswander, who feels that this drug can be an important means of rehabilitating the addicted. . . . The book includes a brief history of drugs, drug laws and addiction in the United States; a shorter version appeared in the New Yorker magazine in 1965." (Library J)

HENTOFF, NAT.—Continued

Reviewed by Valeria Gregory
Library J 93:2135 My 15 '68 80w [YA]

"In a concise, clear account Mr. Hentoff traces the dedicated work of this doctor and the growing acceptance of the Methadone treatment." Lawrence Kingsbury

Library J 93:2682 J1 '68 180w

"As the success story of an extraordinary physician, Nat Hentoff's account is mostly good news; as an expose of our national head-in-the-sand attitude over much of the past 50 years it is shockingly bad news." Jean Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p14 D 22 '68 290w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:37 S 21 '68 140w [YA]

HENTOFF, NAT. I'm really dragged but nothing gets me down. 127p $3.95 Simon & Schuster

68-29762

Set in New York City, this "is the story of the decisions that must be faced by a high school senior [Jeremy Wolf] approaching the draft for a war he is opposed to." (Sat R) "Grade ten and up." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Martha Bacon
Atlantic 222:148 D '68 800w

"This is another young people's novel on current social problems and as usual the author will only give the questions and not the answers. Hentoff seems to know the teen-ager of today and his vernacular. . . . Though the characters are vivid, there is little of plot and the book as a whole does not seem to offer anything to young people who are interested in answers; they already know the questions." Best Sell 28.277 O 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Robert Cross
Book World p13 D 29 '68 260w
Christian Century 85:1603 D 13 '68 40w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon
Commonweal 89:290 N 22 '68 40w [YA]

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:713 D '68 150w

Reviewed by D. G. Stayn
Library J 93:4414 N 15 '68 270w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds
Nat R 20:1280 D 17 '68 120w

"Although timely and important in theme, the book falls short as a novel for basic reasons. It lacks driving power; it becomes, instead of a story that moves the reader, a philippic that instructs. The welding of a moral and philosophic discussion to a dramatic form is never easy to do but done well that is precisely what makes great books great. Because the surface of this one remains so flat, the characters so blurred, the arguments so objective, the impact of Mr. Hentoff's theme is largely ineffective." John Weston

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p2 N 3 '68 330w

"A novel that looks at the generation gap, a novel that encompasses Black Power advocates, a minister preaching draft resistance, marijuana—in short, today's scene, teen and otherwise. What is surprising—if you haven't been keeping up with what's happening in juvenile literature—is that Mr. Hentoff's novel is a 'young adult' book for ages '12+.' 'The barriers are as far down as they can get,' according to Mr. Hentoff." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 51:34 S 7 '68 650w

"The book is an attempt to put a little chest hair on that artificial category of literature known as 'young-adult novels.' Hentoff injects such themes as Viet Nam, racism, generation gap, civil rights, [and] drugs. . . . Sex is still a no-no, although the vocabulary is raunched up with such words as 'bastard,' 'damn it,' and 'hard-on.' . . . In this slight assignment [Hentoff] overcomes his modest talents for fiction with competence, concern and sympathy. But to what worthwhile end? Surely today's 'young adults' do not need such pallid dramatizations of their problems when Simon and Garfunkel and the Beatles do it so much better."

Time 92:110 O 11 '68 410w

HENTOFF, NAT. Onwards! ■ novel. 141p $3.95 Simon & Schuster

68-19942

A novel about Aaron Philips, "a fortyish New York intellectual caught between the men of the Old Left—the whitehaired labor leaders and visionary pacifists who have been 'marching' for forty years or more—and the new activists, the dropouts and the Black Power advocates. His complicated wife hits at his irresolution; his students prod his fading liberalism; and he himself, faced with the new politics and his own advance into middle age, begins to realize that he must find his own ways to act politically and to affirm the meaning of his existence." (Publisher's note)

"Mr. Hentoff has written a small novel about the embarrassments of being a middle-aged academic liberal. It appears that he never decided whether to aim for satire or lament, and ended by shooting the air." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:124 Je '68 50w

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea
Best Sell 28:86 My 15 '68 550w

Reviewed by Edward Margolies
Library J 93:2259 Je 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 206:801 Je 17 '68 170w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:701 J1 16 '68 320w

"[The scenes] are staged with precision, humor and refreshing political sophistication. The dialogue can be superb. . . . The book's success, however, depends entirely on Aaron Philips, because the minor characters lack any individuality apart from their ideologies, and because their political positions, however carefully rendered, are not intrinsically interesting. They, too, are abstractions that fail to dislocate our stock associations. Hentoff nicely relates Philips's growing political involvement to his complex emotional ties to his wife, giving him dimensions far beyond the others. . . . 'Onwards!' would work better as a play, where Hentoff's striking ability to contain abstractions in dramatic scenes and dialogue would keep us from reflecting too deeply on the subtleties of motivation. Nonetheless, a novel that deals with left politics so perceptively should be welcomed." Christopher Koch

N Y Times Bk R p34 My 19 '68 700w

HEPLER, LOREN G., Jr. auth. Order and chaos. See Angrist. S. W.

HERBURGER, GÜNTHER. A monotonous landscape; seven stories; tr. by Geoffrey Skelton. 184p $4.95 Harcourt

68-12576

This collection of stories, the author's first book, describes "average men and women in a variety of everyday situations; for example, a successful TV personality who searches for some meaning in life; a real estate agent who has an unnatural attraction for a 14-year-old girl. There is also a story about a former concentration camp that has now been turned into a tourist attraction." (Library J) Originally published in German under the title Eine gleichmässige Landschaft.

"Nothing much happens in the stories in this collection. But this need not be considered a fault of the stories. In place of having things happening (that is people doing things, having conflicts, changing) situations exist. The situations themselves are not charged with any great tensions or unusual circumstances, nor are the characters involved in these situations moved to any great passions or sharp alterations. Instead, the point of the stories lies in this very static condition. . . . This is, perhaps, the meaning of the title: No matter where you look you see pretty much the same thing, even if it is in Germany. . . . There may be deeper meanings. . . . But, even if there are not, Herburger's limited view still manages to convey some of the nastiness of this world." F. L. Ryan

Best Sell 28:133 Je 15 '68 500w

Reviewed by Hugh Nissenson
Book World p10 My 5 '68 500w
Choice 5:964 O '68 190w

Reviewed by J. K. Fugate
Library J 93:1161 Mr 15 '68 160w

"The title story is a grimly terrifying first-person narrative which lays bare the soul of a potential sex murderer. . . . Another story deals with the appalling things that happen when an old spinster, unhinged by loneliness and emotional starvation, is entrusted with the care of a baby by the young couple who share her house. . . . 'A Morning in Milan' offers us, for the only time in the book, a picture of a sexual relationship that has some genuine tenderness in it; the partners are two German homosexuals trying to establish a life for themselves in exile. Every good thing is poisoned at the roots, in the world Mr. Herburger is showing us. . . . All this makes it sound like a depressing book. In fact, it is rather exhilarating. The reason for this lies partly in Mr. Herburger's skill [and] we must add a word of praise for G. Skelton's very painless translation. . . . Herburger has that robust German humor, tinged with unexpected ironies, which is as modern as Günter Grass and as old as 'Simplicissimus.' . . . This collection is thoroughly worth reading." John Wain

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 28 '68 1200w

"Like Günter Grass, Uwe Johnson, and Alexander Kluge, Herburger is a member of Gruppe 47 the versatile circle of writers and poets that instructs and occasionally inflames German youth. . . . The author won the Young Generation Prize of the City of Berlin [for these stories]. . . . Crisply but sometimes carelessly translated [they] have a wide range in theme and color, though the techniques are conventional. Four are rather good; two are excellent. 'Forest Park Cemetery,' structured on terse, epigrammatic dialogue teeming with innuendo and bitter irony, is the most dramatic piece in the volume, comparable to the best short fiction of Heinrich Böll and Alexander Kluge. . . . With its reflexive mortuary imagery 'A Monotonous Landscape' resembles Conrad's Heart of Darkness, and penetrates as deeply into the dark human psyche." E. M. Potoker

Sat R 51:30 Je 15 '68 1300w

HEREN, LOUIS. The new American commonwealth. 366p $7.95 Harper 320.973 U.S.—Politics and government 67-28806

In this explanation of how the American political system works, the chief Washington correspondent of The Times of London "explores the powers of the Presidency, the Congress, the Supreme Court (as well as the federal and state judiciaries), the State Department, the Department of Defense, the National Security Council, our states and cities, the parties, and the sovereign people. His major theme is the enormous increase in the power of the President; how it was acquired—at the expense of other elements of the government—and how it is exercised." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey
America 118:613 My 4 '68 100w

"The adaptation of old political forms to new conditions is [Heren's] theme. . . . [He] looks beneath the surface of constitutional provisions to examine the way in which institutions actually work. . . . Against the background of his analysis of government, Heren describes the uses of power. His account of the national security policy which unites the functions of diplomacy and defense is particularly enlightening. The deepest impression left by [his] observations is of the enormous stability maintained by the most sophisticated political system in the world. Heren writes with lucidity and wit; his book is distinguished by accuracy of observation and also by the understanding that is the product of reflection and comparison." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:139 F '68 450w

Reviewed by Anthony Hartley
Book World p7 F 25 '68 900w

Choice 5:870 S '68 220w

"Wise advice from a British point of view to Americans who are on the verge of losing all faith in their nation's political institutions." Christian Century 85:146 Ja 31 '68 70w

Economist 227:48 Je 8 '68 600w

"An excellent detailed study of American political history from 1932. . . . [The author's] thesis evolves around the aggrandizement and exercise of presidential power at the expense of other government elements beginning with President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. There is an interesting appendix which summarizes the political history of each of the 50 states. Although a little too academic for the average reader, this book is recommended ■■ a provocative study of our recent political heritage." W. C. Kiesel

Library J 92:4422 D 1 '67 200w

Reviewed by J. M. Burns
New Repub 158:25 Mr 16 '68 1150w

Reviewed by D. J. Boorstin
New Statesman 75:871 Je 28 '68 1000w

Reviewed by R. W. Stock
N Y Times Bk R p48 My 12 '68 300w

Reviewed by Jonathan Kapstein
Reporter 38:45 Ap 18 '68 1600w

"Heren offers considerable journalistic value: he provokes Americans into looking outside the framework of favorite myths. But if Americans are not the impulsive, brash upstarts that they themselves and a good deal of the world have taken them to be, just who are they? A notably patient people, Heren believes, infinitely capable of compromise, whose society is less the product of revolutionary fiat than of constant evolutionary adjustments over the years. America has not just aged, according to Heren; it started old. Far from being steamy insurrectionists, the Founding Fathers were really 'eighteenth century English gentlemen' who thought of themselves as engaged in a more or less orderly 'transfer of power.' . . . In a two-out-of-three-cheers mood, Heren defends the basics of U.S. foreign policy by pointing out that 'great powers have always accepted the necessity to intervene.' . . . The essential question in Heren's mind is whether 'sheer bigness' of modern government will 'create problems that may well be beyond the wit of man to solve.'" Time 91:94 F 9 '68 700w

"[The author's] judgments tend to be intuitive, and they are not likely to prove universally persuasive. . . . [His] technique is that of the irritating dogmatic statement. . . . But it is not enough to offer striking interpretations . . . and then move quickly on before the reader can examine the ground. . . . Mr. Heren advances one major proposition that the American Presidency is 'a latter-day version of a British medieval monarchy'. . . . There is less in the theory than meets the eye. . . . The serious point missed by the author is that, following his metaphor, the President of the United States has no divine right to rule. The philosophy is that of Coke, precisely not that of a medieval monarch: the President is always subject to law and must act under law. . . . [This] idea is basic to the whole psychology of American politics. . . . The ringing declarative style of this book makes it necessary to point out a few of its misstatements." TLS p780 Jl 25 '68 1650w

HERITAGE FOUNDATION. The Heritage foundation collection of silver. See Flynt, H. N.

HERLIHY, DAVID. Medieval and renaissance Pistoia; the social history of an Italian town, 1200-1430. 297p $10 Yale univ. press

914.5 Pistoia—History. Pistoia—Social conditions 67-13437

This study provides "new data . . . on the population growth and economic expansion of the 12th Century, the leveling off of the same trends in the 13th Century, and their . . . decline in the 14th Century. . . . [It shows] that the mortality rate (from plague, and so on) was highest, in 1427, among the young and the old . . . [and] provides an . . . economic and social survey." (Library J)

"One feels an open-endedness in the author's discussion of social transformations during the more than two centuries of Pistoian experience. Equally humanistic is his sensitivity to the increased participation of women in the Tuscan world of the Renaissance. Also, he is well aware of Pistoia's singular position in the burgeoning empire of Florence. . . . What Herlihy shows, which to my mind is exceedingly valuable, appears in the last two chapters of his book. . . . [He] demonstrates the vitality of the civic milieu for Pistoians, whether seeking political fortunes in Florence or remaining at home . . . [and indicates how a] civic outlook existed alongside a hearty appetite for ceremonial and liturgical splendor." M. B. Becker

Am Hist R 73:118 O '67 500w

"[The book suffers] from attempting too much. Herlihy's topical analysis is appropriate to the conclusions . . . but it is less satisfactory as a vehicle for the general 'social history of an Italian town,' although it says much of general interest. The final chapters, which deal with politics and culture, seem mechanical and impressionistic, in comparison with what has gone before . . . and the book lacks a conclusion. This is an excellent monograph, but, for me, it does not manage to weave the various strands of its analysis into a synthetic description of Pistoian life in the later Middle Ages and the Renaissance." W. J. Bouwsma

HERLIHY, DAVID—Continued

Ann Am Acad 374:224 N '67 490w

"Herlihy's command of the archival materials is impressive, and he has used it to illuminate many of the vexed questions of Renaissance scholarship, particularly civic humanism, economic development, and population curves. On the last item he is the leading American authority for this period. An important book, detailed, yet highly readable, which must be part of any serious Renaissance collection."

Choice 4:1165 D '67 120w

J Pol Econ 75:901 D '67 230w

Reviewed by I. M. Berger

Library J 92:1482 Ap 1 '67 220w

HERMAN, EDWARD S. America's Vietnam policy; the strategy of deception by Edward S. Herman and Richard B. Du Boff. 123p $3.75 Public affairs press

327.597 U.S.—Foreign relations—Vietnam.
Vietnam—Foreign relations—U.S. 66-29854

"There is a pressing need for a systematic analysis that attempts to reconcile the words and deeds of our Vietnam policy makers. The present volume represents an effort to fill this gap. It draws together a considerable body of information on the positions taken and the actions carried out by the United States (and its antagonists), and seeks to identify the real obstacles to peace in Vietnam. While particular attention is paid to Washington's stance toward negotiations since escalation of the war to North Vietnam early in 1965, such related matters as the aims of the administration, its strategy of escalation, and the earlier history of U.S. diplomacy in Vietnam are also examined." (Pref)

"This is a concise book which seeks to place the onus for the worsening Vietnam conflict almost entirely on the United States and South Vietnam. The authors' contention that the Johnson administration has steadfastly refused to pursue negotiations seriously would be on a more solid foundation if they had investigated in greater detail the roles of Hanoi and Peking as they support the war in the South. . . . The footnotes are good, as are these appendices: 'The Failure to Hold Elections in 1956,' 'Independence,' 'Aggression by Whom,' and 'Genocide in Vietnam?' But the study is handicapped by lack of a bibliography and index. Good as a dissenting opinion for public and college libraries." M. L. Abramson

Library J 91:5628 N 15 '66 170w

"The sub-title of [this] book . . . 'The Strategy of Deception,' indicates its character. It reflects the indignation shared by so many intellectuals about what has been termed the credibility gap which has been created by administration statements about Viet Nam. A polemic, based on an examination of two years of 'this record of duplicity and misrepresentation,' leaves no room for a more balanced analysis of policy. Such a remark as Schlesinger's that Viet Nam was 'a triumph of the politics of inadvertence' could not be found in this over-simplified indictment." F. H. Soward

Pacific Affairs 40:342 fall-winter '67-
'68 210w

HERMAN, STANLEY M. The people specialists; an examination of realities and fantasies in the corporation's view of people, and the plain and fancy specialties and specialists that arise therefrom. 320p $6.95 Knopf

658.3 Personnel management 67-18606

The primary purpose of this book "is not so much to describe a particular group of business technologists called personnel men, although such descriptions will be included. Rather, it is to portray the personnel relations function. What comes out of that broader intent is really a description of the organization environment for those who live within it, and an explanation of why it is the way it is." (Intro) Index.

"Mr. Herman's virtue is that his treatment of the field recognizes that the statistics and the people specialists themselves deal with human beings. Of course, he is a personnel man (of some distinction, the blurb says) and has a panacea—therapeutic management. . . . But his book is not for professionals; rather for those of us who labor in the well-ordered vineyards of large corporations. It engenders healthy disrespect for everything in the company booklet." R. C. Wald

Book World p10 S 15 '68 650w

"Some of [Herman's] suggestions smack of the basic simplicity of the Hawthorne experiment (which he mentions) and, overall, he does little more than state some progressive personnel concepts in an interesting manner. His short historical summary of personnel administration is good, as are the many excerpts he cites from speeches and documents. He urges that personnel men first accept themselves, then work for the corporation by sensing and representing the interests of the people in the organization and to interpret and support society as it relates to the corporation. This is a book for the general workingman and for the personnel specialist." J. A. Phillips

Library J 93:3001 S 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by John Brooks

N Y Times Bk R p8 O 20 '68 850w

HERNDON, JAMES. The way it spozed to be. 188p $4.50 Simon & Schuster

371.9 Negroes—Education 68-12171

"This is an account of a young man who . . . came down from the mountains to teach in a metropolitan California junior high school—100 per cent ghetto, 98 per cent Negro and 100 per cent 'deprived.' . . . Assigned to English and social studies classes of different abilities in the seventh, eighth and ninth grades, he was caught between the demands of a regimented, order-centered administration and the restless, unrestrained sensation-seeking kids who 'can't take it.' Chaos resulted. . . . His solution was a kind of permissiveness where he could study the children in order to teach them something of interest to themselves, however far removed it might be from the standard curriculum. At the end of the academic year he was dismissed." (Best Sell) A portion of this book originally appeared in Harper's magazine in a different form.

"Perhaps the worth of [this book] lies in [the author's] description of the values, mannerisms, atypicalities of speech and dress and home life of the ghetto children. Their imitation of white culture and use of the word black in an complimentary manner amazed him. The frequent obscenities added nothing to the report, and were incongruous with the theme of the book." L. J. Lennon

Best Sell 27:479 Mr 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by Martin Mayer

Book World p7 Ap 14 '68 600w

"A most dramatic coverage of the metropolitan ghetto school in action. . . . Interpretations may be as numerous as readers. Style is unique and refreshing. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:1014 O '68 140w

"Using the A to H system, on the basis of other recent books about Harlem and Boston ghetto schools, one could I think, rate James Herndon's account . . . about C. Mr. Herndon has pertinent things to say—in particular about the futility of an A to H classification. . . . But he scatters his ideas haphazardly through a series of vignettes and appears detached both from the children and, in a way, from his own convictions. His perception is keen, his concern for the children genuine; yet both seem modified by a mixture of self-mockery and slightly fatalistic inertia." P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 21 '68
650w

"In his book, which is purely descriptive, Mr. Herndon offers no solutions, but he does employ vivid anecdotes to point up the tensions of black children anxious for school routines which are 'The Way It Spozed To Be.' Two urgent needs emerge: the necessity of finding more effective ways for educating deprived children, and the need to salvage the many first-year teachers who either quit or are fired just when they are beginning to know what to do to have their classrooms 'look like a real class.'" Marian Wozencraft

Library J 93:546 F 1 '68 260w

Reviewed by Nat Hentoff

New Repub 158:30 Mr 30 '68 1550w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Rev of Books 10:28 My 23 '68
2000w

HERNON, JOSEPH M. Celts, Catholics & copperheads; Ireland views the American Civil War, by Joseph M. Hernon, Jr. 150p $6.25 Ohio state univ. press

941.5 U.S.—History—Civil War. U.S.—Foreign opinion 67-25692

The author examines "the reaction in Ireland to the American Civil War and deals principally with the dominant issues arising in Irish public opinion . . . [in order to show] the connections and analogies . . . [drawn] between domestic and foreign issues." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"Not necessary for the high school and small college library, but should be added to the large university collection."

Choice 5:1192 N '68 130w

"Hernon argues that Irish public opinion during the Civil War was predominantly pro-Confederate. Irish nationalists ignored the slavery question and identified the Confederate cause with their own desire for independence. Most Irish unionists . . . also favored the Confederacy. . . . A Confederate victory presumably would promote [their] interests, as a united America might one day seriously threaten British power and prestige. . . . This study, therefore, attempts to illuminate some of the 'subterranean contradictions that worked within the nineteenth century liberal and nationalist minds.' It also analyzes, in brief, the attitudes of Irish-Americans. . . . Finally, Hernon raises, but does not resolve, the question of the Civil War's impact on social reform movements in England and Ireland. . . . [He] demonstrates a capacity for looking at Anglo-American relations in an original way." R. O. Curry

J Am Hist 55:402 S '68 350w

HERRESHOFF, DAVID. American disciples of Marx: from the age of Jackson to the progressive era. 215p $7.95 Wayne state univ. press

335.4 Socialism—U.S. Communism—U.S. 67-11584

Beginning with "an account of the first Marxists in America: Orestes Brownson, Joseph Weydemeyer, Friedrich Sorge, and Daniel De Leon, among others. . . . [the book] deals with the way in which Marx's ideas were interpreted and modified in the United States from about 1848 to the beginning of the twentieth century. The book concerns not only the impact of Marxism on America, but also the effect of America on Marxism. There is a chapter on the first International in America. . . . The concluding chapter studies the relevance of previous labor radicalism of twentieth-century activities, and moves from the Marxist antecedents of the American Socialist and Communist parties through Eugene Debs and Earl Browder." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Herreshoff's essay on aspects of radical thought in nineteenth-century America is spirited, incisive, and suggestive. . . . In spite of [an] incomplete and somewhat perplexing selection of dramatic personae, Herreshoff provides many interesting and valuable insights into the predicaments of nineteenth-century American radicalism. His reading of Emerson's social thought, for example, is fresh and perceptive, though he strains a little perhaps in claiming parallels with Marx. His account of the struggle between Sections One and Twelve of the International in the 1870's is particularly lucid and convincing. . . . [The book] should attract scholars concerned with the intellectual history of American politics." Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Am Hist R 73:1240 Ap '68 300w

Am Lit 39:593 Ja '68 50w

"The focus is almost entirely on only four men: Brownson, Weydemeyer, Sorge, and De Leon. Alas, the author's reach so far exceeds his grasp as to render virtually valueless what might have been a very illuminating study. . . . The writing is uninspired. It is neither smooth and clear nor stabbing and arresting, but simply murky and leaden. The meaning of such terms as 'progressive' and 'left-liberal's,' as used by the author, is obscure. . . . The book strikes this reviewer as being not only thin in substance, but also as being drained of tight analysis, intense passion, and bold interpretation." R. M. Miller

Ann Am Acad 376:186 Mr '68 550w

"Herreshoff's scholarship is sound, and his search for Marxist protagonists and associates conscientious, but his doctrinaire approach gives fairly sterile results. For example, his effort to discern Marxian attitudes in such figures as Emerson and Thoreau reveals intellectual strain and is more confusing than enlightening; 'socialism' meant different things to these worthies, and to the more embroiled Orestes A. Brownson. Marxism was more truly a force in the careers of Joseph Weydemeyer, Friedrich Sorge, and Daniel de Leon, but these and others were peripheral to larger American social trends. There is an American story in their lives and frustrations, but it is not probed here. A footnote in the academic literature of American dissent, mainly of use to graduate students in labor and American studies."

Choice 4:1312 Ja '68 120w

Reviewed by Murray Polner

J Am Hist 55:647 D '68 300w

"[This] book covers much more than orthodox Marxism. . . . Marxism in America was imported by the German emigrants or refugees of the 1840s and 1850s, people like Weydemeyer and Sorge. They never could understand the American environment. . . . Indeed, whether Dr. Herreshoff wants to make the point or not, the socialism he describes was almost always an immigrant socialism. So the history of socialist ideas and convictions, except for the very faithful, is a depressing one. . . . There are some minor errors that could be noted. Minden is not in the Rhineland. . . . Millerand was Alexandre, not Etienne; and the University of Halle is not, in the ordinary sense of the term, a seminary. But this is a scholarly if depressing book for sympathizers with the American left, as we may assume from the dedication Dr. Herreshoff is."

TLS p758 Ag 24 '67 850w

HERRMANN, ALBERT. An historical atlas of China; general ed. Norton Ginsburg; prefatory essay by Paul Wheatley. new ed 88p col maps $12.50 Aldine pub.

912.51 China—Historical geography—Maps Map65-13

A revised edition of An Historical and Commercial Atlas of China (BRD 1936). Bibliography. Indexes.

"One of the finest contributions to the growing interest in the study of the Far East. A considerable gap . . . in the field is filled by the careful editorship of Ginsburg and by the prefatory essay of Paul Wheatley. Over 50 well constructed, clearly printed maps highlight Chinese development politically and economically from prehistoric times to the present. A considerable number of additional marginal inserts give details of particular locations significant in Chinese history. Ten pages of cultural and economic distribution maps of modern China present material not readily available elsewhere in this format."

Choice 4:1103 D '67 140w

"The republication of this volume—with additional plates on population, industry, and resources—could . . . be considered a major event. Of course, Sinology has made great strides since the 1930's, and some of Professor Herrmann's views have been rendered invalid by later scholarship. For this reason, Professor Wheatley, of the University of California, has written a lengthy prefatory essay that should be consulted when using the atlas. Recommended to large public and all academic libraries." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 92:1819 My 1 '67 120w

"Those who want to get detailed information about Chinese historical geography will have to continue to look elsewhere, to original sources and modern reference works in Chinese and Japanese. At the same time Herrmann's maps will continue to serve an indispensable function for those who lack access to these materials. . . . A number of new maps dealing with aspects of strictly contemporary China have been added. . . . and a map showing the distribution of Chinese population in Southeast Asia. . . . My one real regret about the present production is that a more thorough job of revision was not done on the bibliography. Professor Wheatley does include a good many up-to-date bibliographical references in the notes to his introduction but this only covers a selection of special points. It is particularly surprising in view of one of Professor Wheatley's strictures on Herrmann that practically no references to Japanese works are included." E. G. Pulleyblank

Pacific Affairs 40:352 fall-winter '67-'68 850w

HERSEY, JOHN. The Algiers Motel incident. 397p il $5.95 Knopf; pa $1.25 Bantam bks.

301.451 Detroit—Riots. Negroes—Detroit. Detroit—Police 68-31842

"On the fourth day of the 1967 Detroit riots the newspapers reported that three Negroes had been killed [by policemen] in a sniper battle at the Algiers Motel. The author interviewed participants and examined police and court records of the incident and describes the event in detail. [Mr Hersey considers that] this episode contained all the mythic themes of racial strife in the United States: the arm of the law taking the law into its own hands; interracial sex; . . . racist thinking by 'decent' men who deny that they are racists; the societal limbo into which, ever since slavery, so many young black men have been driven in our country; ambiguous justice in the courts; and the devastation in both black and white human lives that follows in the wake of violence." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by R. A. Schroth
America 119:108 Ag 17 '68 1100w

"In broad strokes at the beginning Mr. Hersey seems to make it an issue of black innocence against white sadism, but as the interviews, interrogations, and testimony continue, one begins to wonder. Part of Mr. Hersey's difficulty is in trying to think and react as a Negro would. . . . I think Mr. Hersey is too emotional in his exoneration of the behavior of the young blacks, and I think that the fragmentary pattern of the report is too theatrical. . . . One has to fit the pieces together as in a crossword puzzle making due allowance for the confusion, illiteracy, or lying of the witness, and in the process I come to question not Mr. Hersey's selections, but his conclusions. In his account of the white justice that followed he is on firmer ground, for it was a travesty, the evidence and due process bent to exculpate the police and the technicalities invoked by the judge . . . disgraceful." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 222:92 Ag '68 600w

"To give his book the smells and colors of its setting, Hersey has larded his pages with descriptions of the lives of the Negro youths. For a reader intensely curious about these jumbled lives, the extended dialogues are fascinating. But streams of narrative soon enlarge into a river of accounts. . . . That thread of continuity, so important to the strength of a documentary book, gets hidden in the onslaught. . . . In brief, Hersey in putting together his book confronted a hopelessly rotten system. It was a system which automatically disbelieved the stories of black people. . . . Hersey came to the conclusion that the Negroes might never get justice, like many poor people black and white, in this 'system'. Thus his own sense of idealism drove him to write this book and take the risks of boring his readers with stretches of detail and prejudicing the forthcoming trial. Yet the subject remains intrinsically compelling." Stephen Schlesinger

Atlantic 222:124 S '68 1550w

Reviewed by R. F. Grady
Best Sell 28:189 Ag 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by Mark Strage
Book World p5 Je 30 '68 700w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p11 Jl 3 '68 600w

Reviewed by R. L. Terrell
Commonweal 89:92 O 18 '68 800w

Reviewed by W. A. Smith
Library J 93:3113 S 15 '68 290w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri
Library J 93:[3338] S 15 '68 220w [YA]

Reviewed by Nat Hentoff
New Repub 159:36 Jl 20 '68 1200w

Reviewed by Hugh Brogan
New Statesman 76:636 N 8 '68 950w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg
N Y Rev of Books 11:24 Ag 1 '68 1850w

"In what must rank as one of the more disorganized books of the last few years, John Hersey does little to enlighten us. . . . Not until Part V does the book settle down to the real story, recounting—to the limited extent of the author's knowledge—what happened in the Algiers Motel on the night of July 25. And this is by far the best portion. . . . [However] Mr. Hersey apparently did not avail himself of the material provided in the Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders. (There are factual errors in the book that could have been corrected by a reading of the report). . . . If the full story of the Algiers Motel is ever brought to light, it may be one of greater shame and terror than even Mr. Hersey conceives. . . . It is unfortunate that [he] did not wait until after the trial, and until after he had an opportunity to research the case more thoroughly, to write his book. As it stands, 'The Algiers Motel Incident' is a book that remains to be written." Robert Conot

N Y Times Bk R p3 Jl 7 '68 1500w

"Rushed through the presses in the near-record time of five weeks, Hersey's book is based on months of personal investigation and contains evidence never before made public. . . . He ransacked every available piece of documentation. Thus armed, he tried to work out a tentative scenario of events and, more important, used his data and his interviews to build up what may be the truest picture yet of the white policeman's role in the ghettos. Hersey's book is not a brief against individuals. He frequently admits uncertainty on major points. But . . . [his] collage of interviews, fact and intuition finally jells into a forceful dossier against racism in the U.S. system of justice. His best chapter is a sketch of the milieu of 19-year-old Aubrey Pollard one of the victims." R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 72:88 Jl 1 '68 900w

"The complex and subtle issues emerge in [this book] as openly—but also as confusingly—as they do in the riot commission report. They complement each other in facts, attitudes, and opinions. . . . [Mr. Hersey] follows the course of the trial of the police—though with what appears insufficient credit to the police department for investigating and suspending its own men—in the obviously prejudiced Recorder's Court. . . . [His book] is no Hiroshima [BRD 1946]. It is unfair to compare the two books because the implications of atomic warfare are obvious while those of riotous warfare, rooted in racial grievances have many ramifications. Mr. Hersey has not helped matters by choosing a mosaic method of narration that continuously breaks the chronology and makes a fairly simple set of facts dense and difficult to follow. . . . Yet [he] succeeds in emphasizing that the Negro does not receive equal justice in the streets or in the courts. Mr. Hersey also reveals with the greatest awareness the circumscribed lives of both victims and police, black and white." Herbert Mitgang

Sat R 51:24 Jl 6 '68 1200w

HERSEY, JOHN BRACKETT, ed. Deep-sea photography. 310p il maps $17.50 Johns Hopkins press

778.7 Photography, Submarine. Oceanography 66-16038

This collection of twenty-five papers discusses "the use of photography as a tool for the scientific study of the deep sea. It presents the development of the art of underwater photography. . . . and illustrates its use in several branches of oceanography." (Pref)

"Everyone connected with this work should be very proud of the results. The . . . papers cover the state of the art as we know it. . . . The text is replete with many excellent photographs, both black-and-white and color. It even includes a selection of stereo photos and a stereo viewer for use by the reader. There is probably no other comparable volume which summarizes so comprehensively and neatly the field of deep sea photography. . . . Many people, even with just a passing interest in this field, will find much to interest them. At the end of the volume there is an appendix tabulating the principal facts about the deep sea photographs reproduced throughout the book including position, date, depth, equipment, and approximate scale of each illustration. Each section has its own list of pertinent references."

Choice 5:992 O '68 160w

"About 40 percent of the pages deal with instrumentation, methodology, and representative examples of applications. . . . Approximately 10 percent of the pages present the results of physical studies of currents and light scattering, and the remaining 50 percent are about equally divided between geological and biological studies. There is, of course, some overlap between these areas. Individually, some of the pieces are brief to the point of superficiality; others stand as major contributions to our knowledge of the geological and biological deep-sea environment; and a few are redundant. . . . But as a whole, the book hangs together remarkably well, with . . . logical chapter organization and adequate cross references added by the editor. . . . There is something here for all oceanographers and a wealth of material for textbook and liaison writers." E. G. Barham

Science 160:1437 Je 28 '68 750w

HERSH, SEYMOUR M. Chemical and biological warfare; America's hidden arsenal. 354p $7.50 Bobbs

358.3 Chemical warfare. Biological warfare 68-15808

After sketching the history of chemical and biological warfare (CBW) "and the formulation of American policy, Mr. Hersh describes the chemical and biological agents and their devastating effects; he writes about the military bases, commercial corporations and universities where classified research is taking place and where production and tactical utilization are being explored; about the work being done by other countries, and about the use of CBW today." (Publisher's note). Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"If one believes that the United States could . . . embark upon a course of unilateral disarmament in this area; then this book will be ideal for bolstering one's convictions. A simple change of the words 'the military' to 'the Communists' would make this book resemble a John Birch Society pamphlet. . . . Obviously sincere attempts to explain the rationale behind CBW research and development are almost sneeringly brushed aside. . . . On the other hand, facts and statements that support the author's thesis are greeted with rapture. . . . Hersh himself admits that the controls that alone would make CBW disarmament safely possible are almost impossible to develop." C. J. Thoman

Best Sell 28:167 J1 15 '68 700w

Christian Century 85:789 Je 12 '68 60w

"Hersh has painstakingly researched Congressional testimony, historical documents, scientific papers, newspaper clip files, and relied on numerous interviews. His access to classified materials suggests that many of the insiders share his deep misgivings. The result is the only comprehensive work on a subject of growing importance. . . . [It] is useful not only as a layman's guide to an unexplored universe of weapons, but also as a study of a super-secret military research establishment and the complicity of large sectors of the scientific and academic community. . . . This is the rare book which is both technically precise and readable, passionately critical, yet thoroughly researched." Robert Kuttner

Commonweal 88:572 Ag 23 '68 950w

"[The author] has gone further than [R.] Clarke [in The Silent Weapons, BRD 1968] in giving more information on the formulation of American policy and information on what other countries are doing. His footnotes are often revealing and helpful. [He] tends to describe more of the devastating effects of chemical and biological agents. He has provided information which gives the controversy-charged subject more potency for arguments of the advocates of 'love not war.' In his startling investigation he has been kinder and more understanding about the effects of chemical and germ warfare. His chapter on the use of these agents in Vietnam may be startling, but he gives all the facts about defoliants and gases. [This] book should be made available."

M. B. Wenger

Library J 93:2253 Je 1 '68 190w

Reviewed by Gerald Leach

New Statesman 76:841 D 13 '68 450w

"[The author] provides a detailed examination of the vast C.B.W. enterprise that the Defense Department has constructed in this country—an enterprise that stretches from the basic research laboratories of many of our most estimable universities on through hidden-away production facilities and secret testing grounds. . . . Though military security makes it difficult to ascertain which ones have actually been incorporated into the military arsenal, Hersh notes that Army researchers have shown especial interest in a number of diseases [and] offers ample evidence that research into C.B.W. . . . extends not only to research, but also to production and stockpiling. . . . Meriting the most serious attention, but unfortunately neglected by Hersh in an otherwise admirable work, is the question of motive in the U.S. pursuit of a C.B.W. arsenal." D. S. Greenberg

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 9 '68 750w

HERTZBERG, ARTHUR. The French enlightenment and the Jews. 420p $12.50 Columbia Univ. press

301.45 Jews in France—History. Enlightenment 68-18996

A lecturer in history at Columbia University and rabbi of Temple Emanu-El in Englewood,

New Jersey, presents a "search for the roots of modern anti-Semitism in the economic, political and intellectual history of Jews in France in the century before 1789 and in the writings of some 18th century French intellectuals. . . . The author depicts how the Jews of 18th century France made their living and preserved their culture . . . and to some extent their separatism and how they were regarded by French gentiles." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1206 N '68 160w

Reviewed by Jacob Katz

Commentary 46:94 O '68 1950w

Reviewed by R. L. Rubenstein

Commonweal 88:632 S 20 '68 1900w

"This book is the first winner of the newly created Amram Award given by the Jewish Publication Society for the best nonfiction book on a Jewish theme. Rabbi Hertzberg has filled an important lacuna in Jewish history. [His] well-written volume certainly will have appeal for specialists in Jewish history, and will be read by the informed layman."

Judah Adelson

Library J 93:1480 Ap 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Max Geltman

Nat R 20:1331 D 31 '68 1100w

"The first two-thirds [of this book] is a good, sober, classical account of what Jews were up to in their communities of Bordeaux, Bayonne, Avignon and Alsace Lorraine, with an occasional sideglance at Paris. The literature on these matters is immense . . . and Hertzberg has made good use of it all, including the archival resources of the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York and of several French depositories. He adds little that is new, and there are points on which a considerable number of questions may be posed. Most of all, French Jews are not sufficiently placed in the context of the larger society, and this leads to debatable interpretations. . . . [Hertzberg] has not, however, shown us what the roots of modern European anti-Semitism are, and I submit that he cannot do this upon his present assumptions, the connections between ideas and action being more complex and less abstract than he will allow. . . . [He] is most disturbing when he makes anti-Semitism into an adjunct of left wing politics, in the manner of J. L. Talmon and Hannah Arendt." Jeffrey Kaplow

New Repub 159:17 Ag 10 '68 1500w

Reviewed by H. R. Trevor-Roper

N Y Rev of Books 11:11 Ag 22 '68 4050w

"The results of [Dr. Hertzberg's] investigation are dramatically original. . . . His contention is as alarming as it is simple: 'some of the greatest founders of the liberal era modernized and secularized anti-Semitism.' Voltaire, Diderot, and D'Holbach stand squarely arraigned, tried, and convicted of the grossest manifestations of prejudice. . . . As long as Dr. Hertzberg prosecutes his brief against individual writers his case is irrefutable. When he tries to extend the indictment to the principles of liberalism, his charges fail to stick. Voltaire's halo may have slipped but his gospel is not yet anathema. He was a carrier of the bacillus rather than the source of infection. . . . [However] the Jews were no more united than their liberators. Dr. Hertzberg's definitive account of the community in eighteenth-century France is full of unpalatable reminders of the factiousness that has plagued the Diaspora. . . . His provocative and illuminating work touches the quick of Jewish history." Simon Schema

Sat R 51:33 Je 22 '68 1050w

HERTZEN, ALEKSANDR IVANOVICH. See Herzen, A.

HERVEY, GEORGE F. The vivarium [by] George F. Hervey & Jack Hems; il. by Eileen M. Hill. 88p $3.75 Transatlantic

639 Terrariums

[67-91839]

This guide "gives the general principles of vivaria and the essential information about amphibians and reptiles that are suited to live in them. . . . Scientific names as well as popular ones are given." (Library J)

"[This is] designed as a practical guide rather than a scientific reference book. . . . The authors give that elusive bit of information—why small turtles sold in dime stores and chame-

HERVEY, G. F.—Continued

leons brought home from Florida seldom survive. . . . This concise book [is] a very useful addition to both school and public libraries." M. L. Blackwell

Library J 93:4157 N 1 '68 120w

"A good downright guide to the keeping of frogs, toads, lizards, newts, salamanders, tortoises in civilized captivity. Full of wit and common sense. . . . it has throughout an encouraging tone."

TLS p1164 N 30 '67 80w

HERZEN, ALEXANDER. My past and thoughts; the memoirs of Alexander Herzen; tr. by Constance Garnett; rev. by Humphrey Higgins; with an introd. by Isaiah Berlin. 4v 1908p $30 Knopf

B or 92

68-12634

These memoirs cover the years 1812-1870 and describe the author's youth in Russia and his life as an expatriate writer and publisher in Europe. This revised edition of the English translation originally published in 1924 contains nearly 230 pages of additional material selected from Alexander Herzen's Collected Works (Moscow: Academy of Sciences, 1954-1965) and other sources. Genealogical table in volume one. Index in volume four.

"The first full-scale edition of [this work] to appear in America marks one of those occasions on which American publishing distinguishes itself. . . . These are beautiful books: nicely bound, handsomely printed, shrouded by dust-jackets of a quiet elegance, and provided with a masterful introduction by Sir Isaiah Berlin. . . . [This] is a work that stands in need of little explication; its sweep and grandeur are unmistakable. . . . In large measure it is autobiography, but it also contains polemic, essays, vignettes, profiles of famous contemporaries; meditations on history, on revolution, on the national character of the English, French, Italians, Swiss, Germans and of course the Russians; letters and diary entries are inserted, as are magazine articles, introductions and prefaces to books. . . . Indeed, the traditional language of praise seems rather feeble for this extraordinary mine of graceful, magnificently intelligent prose. . . . The fascination of [these volumes] derives from the quality of Herzen's mind, an instrument of exceptional firmness, force, subtlety and supreme clarity." Joseph Epstein

Book World p7 Ag 11 '68 1950w

Economist 228:35 Ag 24 '68 700w

Reviewed by John Berger

Nation 207:405 O 21 '68 2000w

"Alexander Herzen is one of the masters of autobiography. He was also the most powerful radical journalist in Europe during the 50s and 60s of the 19th century, and famous for the brilliance of his conversation. . . . Herzen entrances as his discursive talk entranced. He has the novelist's gift for sharp portraiture and incident, for the analysis of feeling, for the comic and the tragic; and to these he adds the judgment of a nature that has not been poisoned by the emotional calamities of his life. He has the touch of the master in politics. Herzen may ramble, but on every page there are the reflective asides of a man who has lived and thought to the full. . . . The central theme of his Memoirs is exile. . . . [He is] very acute about political fright in England and this chapter is well worth reading today." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 76:49 Jl 12 '68 850w

"Herzen: the name is synonymous with all that was enlightened, cultivated, noble in nineteenth-century Russia. And while his essays and novels were superlative, it was these memoirs which placed him in the literary hall of fame, next to his giant contemporaries, Dostoevski, Tolstoi and Turgenev. . . . On one level the memoirs are a bitter condemnation of Russia under the czars, on another they are a profoundly personal self-expurgation. That was part of Herzen's genius; he was able to pirouette with perfect ease from lyrical poetry to ironic polemicism. And this new, revised edition . . . does much to bring out Herzen's extravagant, yet sensitive, use of language. . . . In his memoirs, Herzen characterized with genius the life of the European exiles, the politics of the time, and the life of ideas. . . . In distilling ■ life he had so fully flavored and understood, [he] created ■ profound and liberating classic of humanism." F. Y. Blumenfeld

Newsweek 71:106A Ap 15 '68 650w

TLS p1305 N 21 '68 1400w

HESKY, OLGA. Time for treason. 184p $3.95 Dodd

68-13601

"A night watchman is brutally murdered at the Weitzmann Institute in Tel Aviv and a fire occurs in one of the laboratories. Gag, an independent powerful group of government agents [headed by Pappa Barzilai], suspects that the two incidents are symptoms of danger to the nation and pits itself against the murderer." (Best Sell)

"[The author] has a colorful setting, neatly drawn characters, and a fast pace."

Best Sell 27:457 Mr 1 '68 60w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1507 Ap 1 '68 90w

"I did enjoy the guided tour of Israel [but] characters are shallow, and plotting is ridiculously inadequate; but that didn't stop 'Milk and Honey' from succeeding on Broadway; and Hesky may well find a comparable audience of Israel lovers." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p18 Mr 10 '68 40w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:33 My 25 '68 30w

TLS p1242 D 21 '67 20w

HESS, GARY R. Sam Higginbottom of Allahabad; pioneer of Point four to India. 177p il maps $5.50 Univ. press of Va.

B or 92 Higginbottom, Sam. Allhabad. University. Agricultural Institute 67-17631

A biography of an American missionary and of the agricultural institute he "founded in 1912 and to which he devoted nearly 40 years of his life. . . . [The author] interviewed many persons who were connected with Higginbottom, examined his personal correspondence, and consulted Higginbottom's papers now located at the University of Virginia library." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Essentially a portrait of a dedicated Presbyterian missionary who understood his mission in terms of practical economic uplift and whose remarkable fund-raising talents helped his vision to materialize. . . . Hess belongs to the 'warts-and-all' school of biographers. Although he does not slight Higginbottom's considerable personal achievement, he also pictures a man whose authoritarian personality made it difficult for him to get along with subordinates, who suffered a tragic estrangement from his children, and whose cultural outlook was decidedly 'middlebrow.' Hess's style is unembellished, clear, and factual. . . . The main value of [his] study is his detailed coverage of Higginbottom's career. . . . [It] deserves a place on the shelves of university libraries." Mark Naidis

Am Hist R 73:884 F '68 440w

"The book serves both as an introduction to the development of Christian agricultural missions in India and as a commentary, from an unusual point of view, on the character and extent of rural development administration during the last three decades of British rule in India. . . . The book is attractively written. Its major weakness is the tendency to view Higginbottom's career in isolation from its historical context. The result is a rather specialized biography unsuitable for small, undergraduate libraries not supporting courses dealing with Christian missions overseas."

Choice 4:1296 Ja '68 150w

"The successful biographer must often tread the difficult middle ground between deliberate assassination and helpless boot-licking. Hess is not a successful biographer. He is an unabashed apologist for Sam Higginbottom and the variety of Christian missionary he represented. Higginbottom embodied all those attributes which India need not have borrowed from the United States; to wit, intolerance, bigotry, and religious fanaticism. It is futile to avoid questioning the utility of the missionary who, like Higginbottom, was wholly contemptuous of Indian society, being largely motivated by a literal and personal interpretation of Christ's admonition to feed the hungry and cleanse the lepers. Yet Hess asks no questions and provides no answers." E. I. Brodtkin

Pacific Affairs 41:306 summer '68 290w

HESS, LILO. The curious raccoons; story and phot. by Lilo Hess. 46p lib bdg $3.31 Scribner
599 Raccoons—Juvenile literature 68-29363
The author-photographer "presents the characteristics, habits and life cycle of [a raccoon family]. . . . Grades one to three." (Library J)

"This simple narrative . . . [is accompanied by] high quality, well-chosen photographs which make this book more eye-appealing than Here Come the Raccoons by [A. E.] Goudey [BRD 1960] and Raccoons by [B.] Kohn [BRD 1968]." Helen Armstrong

Library J 93:4394 N 15 '68 50w

"Lilo Hess has snapped some truly expressive photographs of a raccoon family (a mother and three kits) as the bandit-masked, ring-tailed creatures poke their noses into garbage cans, corn cribs, running brooks and wasps' nests. There's much nature lore unobtrusively slipped into a sympathetic narrative which trails the raccoons for a year as they discover the ways of the wood and avoid the dangers from animal predators and human hunters."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p53 N 3 '68 60w

HESS, LILO. The remarkable chameleon; story and phot. by Lilo Hess. 45p lib bdg $3.12 Scribner

598.1 Chameleons—Juvenile literature 68-16120

"This book teaches basic science concepts through focus on one animal, the chameleon. . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

"Exploding many widely-held misconceptions about chameleons, the author explains their unusual habits in smoothly brisk prose. Of particular interest is the explanation of how the chameleon does and does not change its skin pattern and coloration. Highly practical advice is given on the care of pet chameleons. Capturing the chameleon in many poses, Miss Hess has produced an excellent book to add to her other outstanding nature titles." Rose Henninge

Library J 93:2539 Je 15 '68 100w

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p50 My 5 '68 110w

"The photographs are sharp and clear, the writing matter-of-fact." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:39 My 11 '68 110w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 219:127 D '68 150w

HESS, ROBERT D. The development of political attitudes in children [by] Robert D. Hess and Judith V. Torney. 288p il $9.75 Aldine pub.

320 Political science. Education—U.S. Public opinion. Citizenship 67-18819

This book "reflects the outcome of a number of studies of the political socialization of children conducted over the last ten years by political scientists, sociologists, and child psychologists at the University of Chicago. The authors describe data obtained from testing approximately 12,000 school children in grades two through eight in city schools in four major regions of the United States." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. G. Eliasberg
Ann Am Acad 337:215 My '68 800w

"In a subsequent publication by two political scientists the political implications of this important study will be discussed. Although the present work is a bit weak analytically, the importance of the findings is such that it ought to be in all libraries dealing with (a) public opinion (b) children's social development."

Choice 5:870 S '68 220w

"[This] will be a central study in this literature for the next decade, at least. . . . Its data will provide a baseline against which others will try to find exceptions. The age norms contained here will be useful for almost everyone. But the explanations offered for them, both in terms of the agents responsible for attitude acquisition and change and the process at work, must be treated quite skeptically. In general, they reflect only a superficial analysis of the available data, seasoned with a large measure of conventional wisdom. As a final note, the book, unhappily enough, is difficult to use as a reference source, despite the excellent descriptive data.

The index is so brief and vague that it is no help, and the organization of the book is loose, so that related bits of data are not always contiguous. . . . The bibliography is very brief and with some distressing flaws."

D. O. Sears
Harvard Ed R 38:571 summer '68 3900w

"[The data presented here] show that political attitudes are formed in the elementary school and do not change much in high schools, the most rapid growth taking place between grades three through five. The authors state that, contrary to general belief, it is the school rather than the home which exerts most influence on the child's political socialization. . . . [They] suggest that what is needed is a revising of the civic curriculum in ways comparable to new advances in the teaching of mathematics and the sciences. The study was supported by the Research Program of the U.S. Office of Education. As a whole it is scholarly and thorough." Marian Wozencraft

Library J 93:1892 My 1 '68 300w

"[This] report, written with all the gracelessness of a doctoral thesis, is full of charts and graphs largely incomprehensible to the statistically untutored. But [the] verbatim interviews with grade-schoolers are pungent and entertaining."

N Y Times Bk R p32 F 11 '68 180w

HESS, ROBERT D., ed. Early education. See Conference on preschool education, Chicago, 1966

HESS, STEPHEN, jt. auth. Nixon; a political portrait. See Mazo, E.

HESS, STEPHEN. The Republican establishment; the present and future of the G. O. P., by Stephen Hess and David S. Broder. 440p il $7.95 Harper

329.6 Republican party 67-22499

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:263 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by R. E. Bauman
Nat R 20:95 Ja 30 '68 600w
Va Q R 44:1xxi spring '68 200w

HESS STEPHEN. The ungentlemanly art; a history of American political cartoons, by Stephen Hess and Milton Kaplan. 252p $14.95 Macmillan (N Y)

973 U.S.—Politics and government. Cartoons and caricatures 68-23634

In this survey of the work of caricaturists in America from pre-revolutionary times to 1968, the authors describe "the careers of the statesmen, soldiers, and politicians who provided the cartoonists with cause for merriment or disdain, [and] also give a . . . picture of the mass media through which the cartoonists have reached their audiences." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The charm and enlightenment of this book lie partly in the immediacy it recreates of attitudes now mostly forgotten, partly in the ingenuity of cartoonists in unstuffing the pompous, and partly in its side play as a record of manners and costumes. Primarily, however, its interest resides in those issues in American political history that most inflamed the passions of the citizenry and in those apathies which cartoonists helped (for better or worse) to fan into flame. . . . [This account] is readable, well-documented and profusely illustrated with more than adequate reproductions." Russell Lynes

Book World p4 N 17 '68 950w

"This presents a nice problem for libraries who recently purchased the Cooper Square reprint of A History of American Graphic Humor by William Murrell . . . [which] covers much the same material as this new survey, and in considerably more depth in both text and illustrations. Hess and Kaplan have the advantage of currency, taking the history from Murrell's cutoff point of 1930 up to the mid-1960's. They offer an excellent introductory survey chapter, extensive notes and a good bibliography. The reproduction of illustrations is much better here than in Mr. Murrell's volume, albeit a given amount of duplication is apparent. And, finally, the coauthors offer a more pleasing style. Small libraries without the Murrell text will buy automatically, others will have to ponder." Bill Katz

HESS, STEPHEN—Continued

Library J 93:4285 N 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Mitchel Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p26 N 3 '68 240w

HESSE, EMILY. How to raise a superkid; il. by Peter Hesse. 151p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

649 Children—Management 68-15938

The author criticizes American parents for pushing for achievement in children just for their own (the parents') satisfaction.

Reviewed by Peg Bracken

Book World p12 My 19 '68 500w

"In the epilogue, Emily Hesse . . . gives sound advice to parents regarding child rearing, and says, 'The concept of Superkid as outlined in this book may seem a little exaggerated. . . . Indeed it does and boring, too! . . . The slang, and flip style of writing, the exaggerated situations presented become monotonous and uninteresting. Most parents seeking help from books on child rearing would, in this case, stop far short of the epilogue, thereby missing the straightforward advice and wise counsel offered in the last few pages. Other recent titles in this category deal with the subject more effectively.'" E. P. Nichols

Library J 93:2511 Je 15 '68 200w

"Mrs. Hesse's own game of 'Superkid' falls something short of perfection. Other influences are at work. Her three convincingly real children develop along lines quite unpredicted at the start of the game. Yet they develop charmingly, as does Mrs. Hesse's essentially serious book. The fact that the work is also very funny, and that parents, teachers, and kids (super or otherwise) will enjoy it, should not obscure its importance to an adult generation bent on achieving appropriate, equitable educational opportunity for all." John Calam

Sat R 51:56 J1 20 '68 100w

HESSE, HERMANN. Beneath the wheel; tr. by Michael Roloff. 187p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

68-23744

Fourteen-year-old Hans Giebenrath is a gifted boy of humble origins who lives in a small German village. He "is pushed to excel by his ambitious father and teachers. . . . [He wins a scholarship to] the state Protestant seminary. . . . When studious Hans becomes the friend and confidant of the rebel poet Hermann Heilner his vision of the world is enlarged and his sense of values undergoes subtle changes. Both boys experience the anguish and uncertainties of sensitive youths. Heilner, the poet, is expelled and then Hans, too, is sent home, an 'overworked little horse, no longer of any use.'" (Publishers' Weekly) Originally published 1906 entitled Unterm Rad.

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 119:564 N 30 '68 40w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

Best Sell 28:286 O 15 '68 360w

"In reading this novel we see what is really wrong with all of Hesse's fiction, even the better novels like 'Demian.' He is not really interested in the novelistic texture at all—in the page-by-page depiction of characters, scenes, incidents, hard concrete objects—but in the 'half-asleep dream of a higher life' for which the novel is only a vehicle. Scenes fail to come alive. . . . Most serious of all, there are no real characters, only walking puppets who embody certain fairly obvious allegorical forces. Hans is spirit, soul (German Geist), Heilner is flesh, creativity (German Natur). . . . We understand that Hans is sensitive, and that the school is cruel. But just how is he destroyed? . . . Still, the novel is real enough to make us glad we weren't going to school in Germany in 1890." Donald Heiney

Christian Science Monitor p9 O 15 '68 750w

"[This novel] deals with the development of a gifted, sensitive adolescent boy not equal to the driving demands of home, school, and the obtuse adult world. . . . This theme was in vogue at the time of the book's publication, and other German writers also used it. Hesse's story contains autobiographical elements. It shows the careful structure and fine psychological understanding characteristic of the author. The translation . . . is competent, but does not bring out the lyrical qualities of Hesse's style. Libraries interested in German literature will want to acquire the book." E. H. Lenel

Library J 93:3155 S 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by D. J. Enright

N Y Rev of Books 11:13 S 12 '68 340w

"[This book], first published . . . when Hesse was twenty-nine, deals unabashedly with the ferment of the adolescent soul. Like the subject it treats, this traditional Bildungsroman has its ups and downs. . . . Death resolves Hesse's clashing dualisms of spirit and flesh, action and meditation, art and scientific speculation. This short novel may not compete with Demian or Steppenwolf for the attention of scholars or the young, but it is nevertheless a minor masterpiece and, thanks to the excellent translation, . . . can be read for sheer pleasure. Hesse's peculiarly supple lyricism, his brittle irony, and his stunning descriptions of nature are marvelously carried over into English." E. M. Potoker

Sat R 51:40 S 28 '68 800w

Time 92:111 O 18 '68 1350w

HESSE, HERMANN. Narcissus and Goldmund; tr. by Ursule Molinaro. 315p $5.95 Farrar, Straus

68-17291

This novel by the author of Steppenwolf (BRD 1947) and Siddhartha (BRD 1952) is set in medieval Europe during the plague. Goldmund, a student at the Mariabronn Cloister, is impressed by the character of scholarly Brother Narcissus, and wishes to become a monk. Narcissus advises him that he is unsuited for monastic life. Goldmund sets out on a journey, becomes a master woodcarver and has many amorous adventures. He eventually returns to the cloister where he creates a masterpiece. Goldmund again journeys forth, but comes back to die. Originally published in German in 1930. First published in English under the title Death and the Lover (BRD 1932) and in 1959 in England entitled Goldmund.

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

Best Sell 28:87 My 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by Walter Kaufmann

Book World p6 J1 14 '68 180w

Choice 5:965 O '68 140w

Reviewed by Donald Heiney

Christian Science Monitor p9 My 11 '68 350w

Reviewed by Klaus Musmann

Library J 93:1915 My 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 20:613 Je 18 '68 500w

"This novel is not really about the Artist versus the Intellectual at all. It is about wanting women. . . . If Siddhartha is a cool canticle raised to the ideal of Ego Transcendence, Narcissus and Goldmund is a jangling rage in praise of heterosexuality. . . . One does feel Narcissus fighting his impulse to fall in love with Goldmund, and senses him inverting those impulses into thought. But the Narcissus-Goldmund syzygy is by and large maintained by a coolly symmetrical, organizational principle which makes the book's structure Narcissus-like while the details are Goldmund-esque in their sensuous, 'psychedelic' richness. . . . Hesse's habitual dualism is trivial academic rubbish: rubbish derived from a truth, perhaps, but still rubbish. . . . Narcissus and Goldmund and all they stand for are all mixed up together, bound together in their opposition. But despite his faults, Hesse is a graceful and generally unpretentious artist." Stephen Koch

New Repub 159:23 J1 13 '68 2500w

Reviewed by D. J. Enright

N Y Rev of Books 11:10 S 12 '68 950w

"[Hesse has become] the novelist and poet of puberty, appealing to . . . the adolescent soul. . . . It may be that the Nobel Prize . . . helped bury the deserved [reputation] of Hesse. Yet, at his best, [he] was a great writer in precisely the modern sense: complex, subtle, allusive; alive to the importance of play, to the desperate yet frolicsome game of writing. In his best works, and 'Narcissus and Goldmund' is the very best, there is . . . a resounding 'thank you' to life, despite the catch in the voice. . . . What makes this short book so limitlessly vast is the body-and-soul-shaking debate that runs through it, which it has the honesty and courage not to resolve: between flesh and spirit, art and scientific or religious speculation, action and contemplation, between the wayfaring and the sedentary in us." John Simon

N Y Times Bk R p5 My 19 '68 700w

"Hesse's prose, ranging from lyricism to allegory, and from unabashed sentimentality to an intellectuality of a high order, is not easily rendered into another language. . . . The present version . . . is close to perfection. The weighty symbolism exemplified by the title [is] characteristic of the novel and yet, by the alchemy of narration, does not detract from its charm. The panoramic sweep and pervasively lyrical atmosphere give Narcissus and Goldmund a unity that absorbs its technical flaws. Oedipal situations, homosexuality, hermaphroditism, and necrophilia lurk skin-deep under the pages, but Hesse lifts the contrapuntal play of conflicting forces onto a plane as close to music as words will come. What lingers in the reader's mind is a melancholy melody, a romantic Ned full of wanderlust for a trip into the id." Joseph Bauke

Sat R 51:32 My 4 '68 420w

HESTON, EDWARD L. The press and Vatican II. 134p il $4.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

262 Vatican Council, 2d

66-14630

English-language press officer for three years at the Vatican II Council, the author describes "the trial-and-error attempts to establish a press policy and to maintain lines of communications between the Vatican and the press. The first experimental steps, the initial errors in evaluating the importance of the press and the immediacy of reporting the news as it broke are followed through to the eventual achievement of a rapport between the men who made the news and those who reported it." (Publisher's note)

"[Father Heston] has avoided the chatty 'inside' approach. [Instead] the book is straightforward, almost schematic, with no pretense to anything other than telling it as he saw it. In that sense, it will be disappointing to some. But for anyone needing a no-nonsense instant guide to press workings at Vatican II, the book is welcome."

Choice 4:1369 F '68 140w

TLS p1042 N 2 '67 160w

HETH, EDWARD HARRIS. The country kitchen cook book; formerly The wonderful world of cooking. 238p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

641.5 Cookery, American

68-14847

This book is a reprint of The Wonderful World of Cooking (BRD 1956). It is divided "into four parts, each for a season of the year." (Best Sell)

"Many a different and happy recipe for good eating [is] introduced and connected by chatty accounts of Mr. Heth's life on a farm in the Welsh Hills of southern Wisconsin, a section that has a strong German influence on its local cuisine, tempered here and there by recipes of the Rich Lady's chef, Eugene, who is of the great French tradition. One need by no means have a country kitchen to prepare and enjoy the foods here temptingly . . . described. The book will be as welcome for sheer reading pleasure as it will be a source of new delights."

Best Sell 28:54 My 1 '68 100w

"Heth was a man who retired to a house and country garden in Wisconsin. He tells us of his neighbors and what he and they did with their seasons and their foods. The meals are perfect for their purpose, and the recipes are for glorious, nostalgic country food. Some of it is very sophisticated in its simplicity—e.g., the Morel Bisque, the Pot Roast with Fresh Dill and the Green Currant Pie. All of it is utterly desirable, and not too complicated to prepare." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p22 Je 2 '68 200w

HETHERINGTON, HUGH W., ed. Cavalier of old South Carolina. See Simms, W. G.

HETHERINGTON, JOHN. Melba; a biography. 310p il $7.50 Farrar, Straus

B or 92 Melba, Dame Nellie, originally Helen Porter Mitchell

68-16259

Biography of the Australian-born opera star who died in 1931. Bibliography. Index.

"What makes John Hetherington's biography an important one is his obvious affection for his subject, balanced by his open-eyed understanding of her failings. . . . [He] brings us Melba whole. He has also used other people's memories to give us just for a moment a feeling that we know what that 'voice of pure crystal' (Sarah Bernhardt) sounded like." Pamela Marsn

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ap 11 '68 800w

Economist 226:51 Ja 13 '68 90w

"The literature about the singer is extensive, but there is room for a thorough and careful study such as this which tries to establish facts and correct myths. There is more here about Melba's Australian years, as a student, on tour, and in semi-retirement, than usual, and this study is more reliable factually than Wechsberg's Red Plush and Black Velvet [BRD 1962]. Public libraries of all sizes should consider it as should performing arts collections." G. L. Mayer

Library J 93:2481 Je 15 '68 140w

New Yorker 44:111 Je 15 '68 220w

"The present biography is fuller and more formal [than previous ones] and if it has a justification for its larger scale, it is that it is written from an Australian angle and from that angle the singer played a part in making Australia self-consciously a nation. But it is too long and repetitive, especially on Melba's character, and not quite specific enough on the music. It is well written, without quite avoiding sentimental hindsight (the little-did-she-know formula); the names and descriptions of other musicians are invariably correct."

TLS p1204 D 14 '67 290w

HETTER, PATRICIA, jt. auth. How to turn eighty million workers into capitalists on borrowed money. See Kelso, L. O.

HEUMAN, WILLIAM. Famous coaches. 151p il $3.50 Dodd

920 Coaching (Athletics)—Biography—Juvenile literature. Sports—Biography—Juvenile literature

68-21897

"Skeletal biographies of 15 baseball, football, track, and swimming coaches . . . predominantly from earlier eras. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Each account gives the bare details of the man's career and is filled out with anecdotes that capture something of [his] personality and ideals. Sports' enthusiasts will enjoy this book."

Best Sell 28:113 Je 1 '68 100w

Library J 93:2130 My 15 '68 50w

HEUVELMANS, BERNARD. In the wake of the sea-serpents; tr. from the French by Richard Garnett; with drawings by Alika Watteau. 645p $10 Hill & Wang

591 Sea-serpents

67-24779

"The history of [the sea-serpent] is a web of fiction, fancy and fact. . . . [The author] picks out each strand of the web [and] examines it in a . . . critical analysis running from 1639 to 1965. . . . He considers each sighting or report, and categorizes it as hoax, exaggeration, mistaken identity, or plain DT's. In a full chapter he gives a condensed version of his book on the giant squid." (Library J) This is an abridgment and translation of the author's Le Grand Serpent-de-Mer and his Le Kraken et le Poulpe Colossal.

"Dr. Heuvelmans offers a monster of a book on reliable sightings of sea monsters. The monsters are so far unknown to science, but that, Dr. Heuvelmans argues persuasively, is science's hard luck." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:150 O '68 50w

"[This] book is complete almost to the point where the reader feels that [it] tells him more than he needs to know. . . . Quaint line drawings and a fine bibliography help pace a work which . . . sometimes drowns in its own detail. An important flaw is Mr. Heuvelmans's French pride which prompts him to wave the Tricolor too vigorously for some rejected French scientists. Still, the highlight of the book is the scientific acceptance of not one, but several, sea-serpents: Longnecked, Merhorse, Many-humped, Many-finned, Super-otter, Super-eel, Marine-saurian, Father-of-all-the-turtles, and Yellow-belly. . . . For popular collections." D. M. Simms

Library J 93:2889 Ag '68 250w

HEUELMANS, BERNARD—Continued

Reviewed by Willy Ley

Natur Hist 77:71 D '68 800w

"[The author] is a knowledgeable zoologist who has studied his subject with encyclopedic thoroughness. . . . He remains agreeably calm and rational throughout. . . . Heuelmans goes through the various sea-serpent reports with a compulsive completeness. He puts to one side, quite ruthlessly, the foolish and the hoaxish. . . . The book becomes a fascinating detective story as Heuelmans presents the facts that slowly build to his own final conclusions. By accepting 357 of the reports as reasonably worthwhile and dividing them into groups that are consistent among themselves, he concludes that there is no one particular sea-serpent. . . . Is the book a sober, rational and painstaking study of a scientific mystery and is it, in many places, fascinating? Yes. . . . Absolutely." Isaac Asimov

N Y Times Bk R p46 N 10 '68 1150w

"This scholarly work has been translated from the French . . . but the English version is not exactly the same book. The first volume of the French version was devoted to the kraken and the giant squid; this has been condensed to a single chapter, and additional sightings of sea serpents have been added. While it may be true, as the translator says, that 'no material passages have been omitted, certainly some delightful immaterial passages seem to have fallen by the wayside. . . . Every research vessel should have a copy of this volume in its library, although it may be necessary to chain it to the bulkhead to keep it from going ashore in someone's duffel bag.' J. W. Hedgpeth

Science 162:787 N 15 '68 650w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:129 D '68 300w

HEWETT, ANITA. The bull beneath the walnut tree, and other stories; il. by Imero Gobbato. 155p $3.95 McGraw

67-23477

These eighteen original stories introduce such characters as "the singing witch whose song is a trap for the unwary, the hunter Shuffty who hangs a tiger out to dry, the shrewd hedgehog who rewrites the hare and tortoise legend, a guitar-playing mouse, and the big black bull of the title story. . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

"Miss Hewett writes with fine-sounding words, with an ear for rhythm, pattern and repetition, and her tales have a smooth roundness of story structure. Drawings by Imero Gobbato interpret the stories with exaggerated tempo and emotions." Virginia Haviland

Book World pt 2, p36 (children's issue) N 5 '67 160w

"Obviously intended (because of the large, clear type) to invite beginning readers, these . . . tales will also be welcomed by adults searching for new stories to read aloud to young children. Some of the tales, dealing with princesses, witches, and enchantments are close to the folk-tale tradition; others are modern stories of fantasy or humor, which, despite occasional whimsical touches, have freshness and charm." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 43:588 O '67 70w

Reviewed by C. A. Hough

Library J 92:3178 S 15 '67 90w

"[These] stories have an economy of language and offer rhymes and sounds to roll on the tongue while reading aloud. Yet on the whole the collection is bland; there are no unpredictable dark forces and no villains at work. The illustrations have zest and downbeat humor."

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 21 '68 70w

HICK, JOHN, ed. The many-faced argument; recent studies on the ontological argument for the existence of God; ed. by John Hick and Arthur C. McGill. 373p $8.95; pa $2.95 Macmillan (N Y)

189 Anselm, Saint, Abp. of Canterbury. God 67-12340

"This volume is a collection of . . . papers by 13 scholars, including Karl Barth, Bertrand Russell, and Charles Hartshorne. . . . Introductory chapters trace the history of the [ontological] argument and explain the relationship of the papers . . . [whose emphasis is] on St. Anselm's formulation of the argument, which is . . . reproduced at the beginning of the book." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of topics. Index of names.

"McGill, whose fluency in the history of Christian thought refutes current notions about the irrecoverability of past understandings, selected and translated recent studies of the argument between Anselm and Guanilo. Hick, who theologizes amid the rubrics of empiricist linguistic analysis, selected recent restatements and refutations of the proof. Two of the most engaging essays are by the editors themselves, who introduce their selections and make proposals of their own. . . . [McGill's authors] seek to rescue Anselm's proof from simplistic reductions . . . by unfolding the theological basis and intent of the argument. Hick's authors . . . refute the proof by reference to the canons of empiricist logic or restate it by claiming a unique exemption or modal peculiarity for this argument. The reader may—and no doubt will—make his own choices among these forms of argument. But a further value lies in inspecting the stand-offs as such, for they reveal fundamental alternatives bearing on the very nature of argument or proof." R. H. Luecke

Christian Century 85:1475 N 20 '68 900w

"Though Cartesian and Leibnizian interpretations are slighted, Hegelian uses of the argument are well represented. The scholar will find this collection convenient; to the serious student it will be invaluable. The bibliography is excellent." J. K. Amrhein

Library J 92:2579 J1 '67 160w

HICKS, DAVID. David Hicks on decoration [text collaboration by Gwen Robyns]. 152p il col il $12.95 Macmillan (N Y)

747 Interior decoration 67-25299

In the author's view "interior decoration is the art of achieving the maximum with the minimum. It is the art of making the most of your house, your rooms, and your possessions. It must create a background for living for each individual house and owner." [His book covers] . . . use of color and lighting, the selection of furniture, fabrics, carpets, and accessories, the special challenges of kitchens, bathrooms, halls, and staircases, the special pleasures of the well-designed garden." (Publisher's note)

"[Hicks] has written an interesting personal work. . . . One learns a great deal about the preferences of the author and how he has decorated various interiors. . . . This book is not intended as a guide to decorating, and Hicks makes this clear in the introduction. If the reader keeps this in mind, he will find it to be an enjoyable record of one aspect of the taste of our times. The text has been kept to a minimum, and the 143 color and monochrome illustrations are all extremely good."

Choice 5:335 My '68 150w

"[The author] makes practical suggestions which, although not generally for the do-it-yourself person, could be of value to the decorator, who probably will immediately put to use Mr. Hicks's sound ideas. Mr. Hicks writes in a direct, informal and informative manner. His chapter on lighting should be required reading for every decorator. Recommended for any collection in the field of interior decorating." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:4495 D 15 '67 110w

HIGBEE, JAY ANDERS. Development and administration of the New York State law against discrimination. 396p $10 Univ. of Ala. press

340 Discrimination 66-25022

The author proposes "to trace the circumstances under which the New York State Law against Discrimination was enacted. . . . to outline the law's original provisions and later amendments, to describe the organization and functions of the State Commission against Discrimination—later renamed the State Commission for Human Rights—and to provide a detailed account of its varied activities." (Ann Am Acad)

"The great strength of this book is its thorough coverage of the subject matter. The case-by-case survey of the conciliation activities and the litigation in which the commission was involved, both almost encyclopedic in scope, are particularly valuable. . . . This book should prove an indispensable reference work for all scholars or men and women professionally interested in working in this area of human relations." Frederick Shaw

Ann Am Acad 337:208 My '68 480w

"The value of this treatise is sharply diminished by its emphasis on description rather than analysis or theory. . . . Regrettably, this limitation has reduced the book to a compilation of details with little guidance for evaluating their importance. Nearly half of the volume consists of a summary of individual cases handled by the State Commission. . . . While this may be an important source book, the definitive study of state civil rights activities remains to be written."

Choice 5:681 J1 '68 180w

HIGGINBOTHAM, JOHN, tr. Cicero on moral obligation. See Cicero, M. T.

HIGGINS, MARY, ed. Reich speaks out on Freud. See Reich, W.

HIGGINS, R. A. Greek terracottas. 169p il pl col pl $26.50 Barnes & Noble 738.3 Terra cotta [67-31958]

This volume seeks "to provide information on the development of styles in terracottas on the mainland and on the islands of Greece. Although Mr. Higgins is a deputy keeper in the British Museum, he has not confined his studies to the . . . collection of terracottas there, but includes pertinent examples from many other groupings. He begins each section of the text with an introduction in which he sketches the background and stylistic development of terracottas from different areas; he then proceeds to more detailed information. [The book contains] a bibliography, index of sites, index of coroplasts or terracotta makers, and a general index." (Library J)

"Despite the somewhat misleading title, the book deals only with figurines and not with architectural terra-cottas. Not only the first major work in English on the overall development of Greek terra-cottas, it is among the very few in any language. . . . The text is clear, precise, and free from the tedium that mars much of contemporary archaeological writing. The bibliography is an especially noteworthy model of clarity and facility. Should be in any university or college library and in any above average public library."

Choice 5:765 S '68 150w

"[This book] is admirably organized to provide information . . . to the student and research worker in the field. For large art and archaeology collections." Julia Sabine

Library J 92:4400 D 1 '67 150w

"Dr. Higgins's skeletal account of Greek terracottas is by no means a complete, still less a fully illustrated account of the subject (it is not so solid as his recent British Museum terracotta catalogue), but it is full enough to give scholarly help in sorting out the principal types a collector is likely to come across. His sixty-four pages of black-and-white illustrations give a strong impression of the differences between local schools; and the emphasis on this distinction of styles is the chief merit of the text. . . . Dr. Higgins is systematic and careful, and has a healthy respect for the limitations of archaeological knowledge, but his work is neither inspiring enough for a general exposition nor full enough for most of the purposes of scholarly research. There are four magnificent colour plates. . . . Should one not expect more for seven guineas?"

TLS p112 F 1 '68 1150w

HIGGINS, REYNOLD. Minoan and Mycenaean art. 216p il col il $7.50 Praeger 709.39 Art, Cretan. Art, Mycenaean 67-27569

A "survey of the art and architecture of the principal Bronze Age civilizations of the Aegean, not only . . . the important Cretan and Mycenaean cultures but also the culture of the Cycladic Islands. The period covered begins shortly after 3000 B.C. and ends with the Dorian invasions of mainland Greece." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Higgins, a distinguished archaeologist, gives an impartial account of the excavations and their controversies as well as a lucid analysis of the stylistic problems of the objects. . . . His chronology, always sticky in Mycenaean-Minoan matters, has the advantage of being easier to grasp than most and no pretense is made of its being definitive. Good bibliography, index, and a descriptive list of plates are all most helpful to the beginner. The rather florid reconstruction drawings of De Jong are balanced by other, more sober renderings and site photographs so that the chances of these reconstructions creating too flashy an image of Mycenaean architecture and life are desirably lessened. The book, in sum, is good and should be a part of every college and public library's collections."

Choice 5:335 My '68 180w

"Architecture plays a distinctly subsidiary role in [this] review. Higgins is more concerned with sculpture, frescoes, pottery, terracotta figurines, ivories, bronze statuettes, gold and silver plate, jewelry and seals. The last two are handsomely illustrated and Higgins draws on the newly unearthed materials with care and insight. The large-scale illustrations of the seal-stones are superb. . . . Higgins provides information on the latest finds at Ceos . . . the rich finds from Kato Zakro, the marvelous recovery of Pylos and of the Bronze Age palace at Lerna, and the unusual finds at Thebes. The chief regret is [his] lack of concern with the nature of these Aegean societies and of the role which the art works played." A. G. McKay
Class World 61:248 F '68 230w

Reviewed by F. M. Lauristen

Library J 92:4142 N 15 '67 130w

HIGH, DALLAS M. Language, persons, and beliefs; studies in Wittgenstein's philosophical investigations and religious uses of language. 216p $4.75 Oxford

149 Wittgenstein, Ludwig. Language and languages. Religion and language 67-28127

The author explores some aspects of the twentieth-century philosopher's teachings in language and attempts to relate these to an analysis of the religious use of language. "The book has two parts. The first considers Wittgenstein's cardinal concepts of the function of language. . . . Meaning and use, language games, agreements in judgment, and the fiduciary conditions of speaking and thinking are discussed. The second part applies Wittgenstein's theories to religious thought and discourse, particularly to traditional Christian creedal and doctrinal affirmations." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Attacks scepticism and fideism, tracing 'the sickness of language and sensibility in our time' to mistakes about language. . . . The first half of High's book is a lucid introduction to these Wittgensteinian ideas, making it a useful book for laymen and undergraduates. The second half, putting old theological wine into these new philosophical skins, is somewhat inconclusive, arguing that saying 'I believe' is a performance and so not an assertion of some true or false belief, that believing is thus an activity (not, say, a state), that God is a speaker too."

Choice 5:1148 N '68 160w

"I think [this book] contains a good deal too much by way of unexplained metaphor and unsupported assertion to be really useful to the trained philosopher. The layman, on the other hand, if he is not put off by the many distracting references to the contemporary literature (Mr. High's book began life as a Ph.D. thesis), may find much that is interesting and thought-provoking." Alvin Plantinga

Commonweal 88:420 Je 21 '68 1200w

HIGHSMITH, PATRICIA. Those who walk away. 229p $4.50 Doubleday 67-11292

This novel "concerns a husband whose wife has committed suicide and a father-in-law who blames him for her death. B tries to murder A; A, surviving, decides to remain dead." (N Y Times Ek R)

"The conversations are stilted; the action slow; the characterization unconvincing; and the setting patchy."

Best Sell 27:12 Ap 1 '67 50w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:1857 My 1 '67 40w

HIGHSMITH, PATRICIA—Continued

"Patricia Highsmith is at her best in exploring a curious symbiosis—almost always of two men. . . . [Here] the peculiar resultant duel, played against a detailed depiction of Venice, is as absorbing as it is inconclusive. There is really no reason why the novel might not have ended 30,000 words earlier—or gone on for another 30,000. . . . But it is often illuminating—and always compelling." Anthony Boucher
N Y Times Bk R p40 Ap 30 '67 60w

TLS p491 Je 1 '67 320w

HILDICK, E. W. Louie's lot. 146p $3.95; lib bdg $3.76 White

68-10662

Louie is "a milk delivery man . . . in a small English town. Fourteen-year-old Tim Shaw passes the arduous tests to fill a vacancy in Louie's squad but finds that succeeding on the job is even more difficult. . . . An explanatory preface . . . of English slang expressions [is included]. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J) This was published in England in 1965.

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin
Book World p14 O 13 '68 200w

Reviewed by John Gillespie
Library J 93:2113 My 15 '68 140w

"[This] lively adventure story is written with adult humor that doesn't condescend to youth, yet makes clear that no matter how momentous troubles seem, the world is not really coming to an end." R. F. Shepard
N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 4 '68 160w

"A new type of hero emerges in this exuberant story . . . in which the action has the quality of a Breughel painting, with crowded figures and tumultuous action. . . . The writing is vivacious, the characters and dialogue enchanting." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 80w

HILL, CHRISTOPHER. Reformation to Industrial revolution; the making of modern English society, v 1, 1530-1780. 256p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

309.142 Great Britain--Economic conditions.
Great Britain--Politics and government.
Great Britain--Social conditions 68-10693

"England was the first country to change from an agrarian to a modern industrial economy. Mr Hill's theme is the complex interaction of political and economic development which explains how this came about, and why Britain rather than France or the Dutch Republic was the first country to make the jump into the modern world." (Economist) Bibliography. Index.

"The traditional approach to social history, typified by H. D. Traill, G. M. Trevelyan, and A. S. Turberville, though it ignored demography and statistical analysis and leaned toward the anecdotal and gossipy, had the virtue of breathing life into an age. Hill's approach, despite ingenious illustrative quotations, seems to be history without people. Hill also gives the bulk of space to the 17th century, slighting the 18th, but then he feels that the Stuart age witnessed the crucial turning-point in English society, the end of medieval social institutions. Superb, though short, survey. Scanty bibliography."

Choice 5:1029 O '68 200w

"Mr Hill's book is a remarkable achievement. He handles an immense amount of material with such skill that it is possible to read his account with a growing sense of excitement at the logic and apparent inevitability of events. At the same time he gives a mass of detailed information on trade figures and shifts in markets; he discusses the influence of London on the provinces, the improvement in water communications, the rapid rise of Liverpool based on the interconnection of slaves and cotton; and he analyses the terrifying effects of the slave trade on the ethics of public and private life. [His] genuine concern for the lives of ordinary people enlarges his approach, and also that of his readers."

Economist 225:183 O 14 '67 600w

Reviewed by David Jordan

Library J 93:1894 My 1 '68 140w

"This new book not only deals with the 17th century and the struggle of gentry and merchants to destroy the Stuart monarchy but also comprehends the 18th century. . . . Here Mr Hill passionately lines up with Marxists of the modern period such as Hobsbawm and Thompson, and also with the humanitarian views of the Hammonds. . . . What is disappointing about [this volume] is that he gives so little space to elucidating [the] crucial transformation of the bourgeoisie from the heroic age of progressive Puritanism 'to a society in which Puritanism had gone sour'. Such a transformation may have taken place; but it cannot be presumed. Another disappointment is that Mr Hill does little to redeem his promise at the outset to show how and why English history differed from that of the rest of Europe." K. G. Davies

New Statesman 74:368 S 22 '67 550w

Reviewed by Asa Briggs

N Y Times Bk R p38 N 3 '68 480w

"[The author's] thesis is a demonstration of how the Puritan and Glorious Revolutions laid the foundations for industrial take-off. In these upheavals the commercial and gentry interest won a wholly new position of influence in the formation of national policy. . . . England's economic liberty, from the mid-seventeenth century, was unique in Europe, and this was the essential basis for the first industrial revolution a century later. This thesis, erected on a strongly-drawn contrast between pre- and post-Revolution economic policy, is repeatedly underlined by reference to the changes which took place between 1641 and 1688. . . . Besides [a] vigorously argued interpretation Mr. Hill's readers will find many useful examples and summaries. . . . But while Mr. Hill's gift for apt quotation is as striking as ever, it can lead to problems. When is the quotation intended as illustration, when as proof? . . . Other objections could be made. . . . This work is clearly intended for the sixth form and undergraduate audience, and Mr. Hill's intention is clearly to provoke them into argument. . . . [He] has fulfilled an important function of a good general history."

TLS p1169 N 30 '67 1100w

HILL, FRANK ERNEST. The automobile; how it came, grew, and has changed our lives. 212p pl $3.75 Dodd

629.209 Automobiles--History 67-2940

"A general survey of the origins, development, and technological impact of the automobile in the United States." (Choice) Index.

"The account is written with clarity, but the style and vocabulary is directed to a high school audience rather than college students. Essentially a superficial treatment of the rise of the Ford and General Motors companies, the work includes much of the information found in . . . Allan Nevins and Frank Hill: [Ford:] the Times, the Man and the Company [BRD 1954; Ford:] Expansion and Challenge [BRD 1957; Ford:] Decline and Rebirth, 1933-1962 [BRD 1963]. Some attempt is made to bring the story up to date by including modern methods of road building, the smog problem, and traffic hazards."

Choice 5:88 Mr '68 110w [YA]

"The author devotes some attention to the influence of the automobile on farm life and on the war effort. Clear descriptions of modern cars, trucks, buses, highways, and the buildings and facilities needed by their drivers is followed by a chapter on the problems of today and tomorrow—of traffic, new roads, and the high accident rate. This interesting chronological account is lively enough to appeal to the general reader and can also serve as supplementary social science reading. . . . Grades six to ten." B. B. Lane

Library J 92:4261 N 15 '67 150w

HILL, G. F. Renaissance medals; from the Samuel H. Kress collection at the National gallery of art. See United States. National gallery of art

HILL, GLADWIN. Dancing bear; an inside look at California politics. 303p $6.50 World pub.

979.4 California--Politics and government

68-15329

The New York Times bureau chief in Los Angeles has written an "account of the historical and contemporary factors influencing California's apparent political eccentricities. He begins by explaining how widespread corruption under the pervasive influence of Southern Pacific Railroad officials led to reforms which placed strong controls over the two-party system." (Library J) The book "ranges over more than a hundred years of California history, with the major emphasis on the years from Hiram Johnson to Ronald Reagan." (Sat R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A journalistic account. . . . There seem to be two major themes, neither clearly stated or worked out. The first is that the California electorate has developed a 'style' of politics characterized by what he calls 'pragmatism' and nonpartisanship; hence, the unpredictable nature of California elections. The second is that this 'style' may mirror the future for the country, because California is becoming a larger part of the whole and because the social characteristics of the country are becoming those of California."

Choice 5:1221 N '68 220w

"A popular, fast-moving account. . . . Mr. Hill discusses leading politicians at some length, although he adds little to commonly known facts. An occasional pedantic phrase and a staccato style hinder the readability of this book which is basically a brief introduction for the general reader." S. A. Epstein

Library J 93:2510 Je 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by W. C. McWilliams

N Y Times Bk R p10 My 19 '68 550w

"[Hill] details the workings of [California] politics and concludes that 'emerging from all these curiosities in the end is an exceptionally serviceable government, superior in many respects to the products of conventional politics.' The author believes his Dancing Bear puts on a good show and that it is destined to go on national tour. I have no quarrel with Hill's listing of the 'curiosities,' which he does with verve and style, but only with his conclusion that it is 'superior.' In place of his wry optimism I have an uneasy fear. . . . But that is a disagreement on interpretation, not facts. Hill presents these cogently and wittily. His sketches of California personalities, especially those of Earl Warren, William F. Knowland, Richard Nixon, and Ronald Reagan are incisive. And he does a service by reprinting Nixon's celebrated post-1962 election press conference. Whether or not one agrees with Hill's prospectus for the future, Dancing Bear is an important book." Leo Katcher

Sat R 51:37 Je 29 '68 500w

HILL, ROBIN. Australian birds; with a foreword by the Prince Philip, H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh. 281p il $30 Funk

598 Birds—Australia

68-23736

This book seeks to describe and illustrate "every known Australian bird, including introduced species and [vagrants]. . . . The birds are arranged in their natural orders and genera and an explanation of their classification is given where necessary. There is a . . . discussion on the problems of nomenclature and classification and comparative checklists." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Indexes of common and scientific names.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:157 D '68 60w

"Detailed color drawings flit through [this book] published in a large format (9½" x 13½") that gives [Hill's] realistic pictures the full play they merit. The penguin, the albatross, the skua, and thirty pages of parrots and cockatoos add interest to the well-organized highly informative, yet pleasantly informal text." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:68 N 16 '68 50w

"Mr. Hill has in the majority of his paintings caught the attitudes and characteristics of his subjects as only an artist closely familiar with his birds in the field could possibly do. . . . [However a number of his] illustrations are definitely too large. . . . [Nevertheless] there can be nothing but praise for the many beautiful illustrations which this volume contains, or [for Mr. Hill's] presentation of the text. . . . Particularly useful is the way the author gives an opening explanatory essay under the ordinal or family headings. That makes for easy and interesting reading. . . . [This is] a book which any birdlover whether amateur or professional can read with enjoyment. Mr. Hill, having presented his fellow ornithologists with this enormous tome, should now turn his attention to producing a real field handbook."

TLS p306 J1 25 '68 900w

HILL, RUANE B., jr. ed. The farther vision. See Koenig, A. E.

HILLEGAS, MARK R. The future as nightmare; H. G. Wells and the anti-utopians. 200p $5.75 Oxford

823 Wells, Herbert George. Science fiction—History and criticism 67-28128

The first half of this study is concerned with "the part of Wells's work that exhibits his preoccupation with the future . . . [chiefly] The Time Machine, The Island of Dr. Moreau, 'When the Sleeper Wakes,' and The First Men in the Moon. Professor Hillegas then discusses the literary descendants of these tales [and examines] anti-utopias and apocalyptic stories by both science-fiction writers and others usually considered more in the mainstream of literary effort." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Philip Klass

Book World p1 D 31 '67 700w

"A noteworthy study. . . . The thesis that 'the great anti-utopias are both continuations of the imagination of H. G. Wells and reactions against that imagination' is documented by comparative analysis of anti-utopias by mainstream writers . . . as well as the works of genre science fiction writers. . . . The evolution of the Wellsian utopia following the cautionary anti-utopias is clearly stated. . . . An excellent companion for [N.E.] Eurich's Science in Utopia [BRD 1968]. Both books should make good supplementary reading for students of science, sociology, political science, and literature."

Choice 4:1116 D '67 180w

"Mr. Hillegas's book is so lacking in new investigation, in imagination and cogency, as itself to constitute a warning to utopians not to expect too much of mankind. . . . [He] hardly does more than point out what has long been obvious. . . . Because he gives no sign of being concerned with the substantive points about Utopias or mechanization, Mr. Hillegas continually reduces all arguments to biases. . . . [He] has thought about neither of the two constituents of utopia: fantasy and history . . . [and] never adequately considers the difference between saying of a literary work which uses the past . . . that it is 'credible' or 'persuasive' and using the same words for a work set in the future. . . . [He] shows no awareness that there are any problems about credibility; as far as he is concerned, it is merely a matter of Wells's sprinkling his futures with a little local color. . . . Mr. Hillegas sees life through the spectacles of books. Moreover his spectacles need adjusting." Christopher Ricks

N Y Rev of Books 10:32 Mr 14 '68 850w

"[Mr. Hillegas] sets out to defend Wells against the common charges of blind belief in progress, infatuation with gadgets, political credulity and optimism. One readily accepts the contention that [Wells's early] novels and stories are the reverse of optimistic. . . . [However Wells's later works] overtly prophesy and propagandize, and even Mr. Hillegas's vigorous defense leaves me cold. . . . [The closing section] examines some of Wells's heirs: the Huxley of 'Brave New World' [BRD 1932] The Orwell of 'Nineteen Eighty-Four' [BRD 1949], the Russian Evgenii Zamyatin, and others. Their indebtedness to Wells is shown to be much greater than I, for one, had realized. . . . [This] is an essential and totally readable contribution to the long-standing discussion of a great flawed writer of our time." Kingsley Ames

N Y Times Bk R p6 O 22 '67 1100w

Reviewed by W. E. Moore

Science 160:647 My 10 '68 420w

TLS p437 Ap 25 '68 400w

Va Q R 44:xxxxii spring '68 100w

HILLIARD, FREDERICK HADAWAY. Christianity in education. See Christianity in education

HILLIARD, ROBERT L., ed. Radio broadcasting; an introduction to the sound medium. 190p il $6.95 Hastings house

384.54 Radio broadcasting 67-18381

"The introduction summarizes a history of radio. The remaining five chapters, each written by a different author, concern themselves with programming, producing-directing, operations, writing, and performing." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Hilliard has utilized various authors to outline the basic concepts and facets of radio. . . . [They are] authoritative and have written succinctly in their respective areas, perhaps too succinctly, for each chapter covers only the essentials. The work is an excellent, easy-to-read overview of radio, more a primer for those with no knowledge of radio than a complete study of the medium. . . . Excellent complement to Hilliard's Understanding Television."

HILLIARD, R. L.—Continued

Choice 5:184 Ap '68 130w

Reviewed by R. A. Hamm

Library J 92:4000 N 1 '67 120w

HILLMAN, JAMES. Insearch; psychology and religion. 126p $3.50 Scribner

253.5 Psychology, Pastoral. Soul 67-24042

The American "director of studies at the C. G. Jung Institute in Zurich, Switzerland. . . . [presents an interpretation] of Jung's psychology . . . [shaped] from lectures to clergymen on their vocation as pastors and counselors. . . . In two chapters he focuses upon the unconscious as experience and as a moral problem. In another chapter he deals with man's inner femininity and its relevance for religion." (Library J)

"What makes [this] book so different and worthwhile is that instead of defining boundaries and spheres of competence, it explores the common ground of soul or psyche, holding together what has customarily been separated or at least distinguished. The result is a highly absorbing, finely wrought essay in search of the soul of man. . . . The four chapters of the book deal with the client-counselor relationship . . . the soul and the unconscious . . . problems of morality and the conscience . . . and the inner feminine or anima of the psyche. . . . At almost every turn there are illuminating, probing insights—into everything from the aging process to Zen paradoxes. . . . This book should be widely and earnestly read by pastoral counselors." Roger Hazelton

Christian Century 85:234 F 21 '68 650w

"[The author] writes clearly and extremely well. . . . He challenges pastors to rediscover the Church's historic tradition of soul healing and soul care, and concerns himself primarily with how individuals in our time can recover a vital connection with their own inner life. . . . [He] does not tell clergy or thoughtful laymen how to but rather why. He seeks to build a bridge between psychology and religion by the use of vivid image and mood—and he succeeds." T. A. Greene

Library J 93:556 F 1 '68 130w

"[Dr. Hillman] manages to interest and inform with equal perception. . . . Often one sentence will evoke a whole train of thought. 'Human problems are not something which people have, but something people are.' He is particularly wise on the problem of the counselling relationship as such and is acceptably critical, to a theologian, of Dr. Robinson's God-in-here and of the new morality more widely considered."

TLS p514 Je 8 '67 160w

HILLS, EDWIN SHERBON, ed. Arid lands: a geographical appraisal. 461p 11 maps $13.50 Barnes & Noble

333.7 Deserts [67-72563]

Concerned with the use to which these areas can be put, contributors from various disciplines who have "had some connection with the [UNESCO] Arid Zone Program . . . [discuss] opportunities for development . . . [and] problems that confront man in arid lands: waterlogging and salinization of irrigated soils, the fragility of ecologic complexes in dry lands and the irreversibility of certain sequences of degradation, the extra burdens of isolation and water costs that must be borne by all economic activities in arid regions." (Science) Index.

"There is probably nothing in this volume that could not be found somewhere in a normal college library, but there seems to be no other book which unites all the factors of desert geography—human and physical—in a single source. . . . The book is written by experts, well indexed, and filled with valuable maps, graphs, and photographs. Each chapter is designed to stand alone or to be read as a part of the whole. The work is clear, although slightly dull. . . . Generally, a worthwhile addition to the college library."

Choice 4:1150 D '67 120w

"[Although there is] new and interesting information somewhere in this volume [the reader is] certain to encounter sections and perhaps chapters that are at best trivial or irrelevant. . . . This is no tract promising salvation to some of the world's poorest people if only the right button, labeled technology and a modern economic approach is pressed. . . . but as a geography of the arid lands the book must be rated as unsuccessful. The diversity of the region to be dealt with overwhelmed every contributor, even though the topics many wrote on were quite sharply circumscribed." Homer Aschmann

Science 158:106 O ■ '67 800w

HILLS, GEORGE. Franco: the man and his nation. 464p 11 maps $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

946.082 Franco Bahamonde, Francisco, Spain —History 67-113573

A biography in which the author attempts to appraise "the Spanish leader in his own historical setting. Hills has had access to the Franco family papers, and has talked to Franco himself, and to his close relations and his associates at different stages of Franco's career. Over the years he has interviewed and interrogated both his enemies and his supporters. . . . Hills was given free access to the archives of the Spanish Army . . . [containing] material from both sides of the Civil War, and discussed the conduct of the war with the chiefs of staff of both sides. . . . [He describes] the state of Spain when Franco was born, when he came to manhood, . . . [and now] in the seventy-fifth year of his life." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Book World p1 Ap 21 '68 400w

"Hills is a B.B.C. journalist, formerly director of programming relating to Spain. With these modest credentials he launched a study of one of the most controversial figures in the Western world, obviously intended for a general audience, especially for those whose knowledge of Spain is slight. . . . The book is choppy, disjointed, and the protagonist is a cardboard-like figure at best, while 'his nation' receives only modest attention. Finally, the study is hardly dispassionate. . . . [The] biography by [B.] Crozier [Franco, BRD 1968] is clearly superior."

Choice 5:854 S '68 170w

Reviewed by A. F. Peterson

Library J 93:748 F 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Allen Guttman

New Repub 158:32 My 4 '68 800w

"[Although Hills] has had considerable experience in Spain . . . [and] has had conversations with Franco, . . . the results are disappointing. The historical research . . . and the interpretation of this incomplete research is . . . often stretched to the point of absurdity. . . . [The author] is essentially trying to protect and explain the role of the Catholic church in the civil war and since. He defends Franco's every action, but behind this defence line he carefully separates the church from any relation with Franco's actions. . . . He presents a Franco furious with the Italians for bombing Barcelona. . . . Franco has no responsibility for these atrocities, the Church much less. Hills does not appear to see that this position flaws his portrait. . . . [Moreover, he does not] understand the Spanish Falange sufficiently to picture Franco's role in the development of fascism in Spain. . . . [He is] conspicuously wrong in [his] account of the April 1937 events in Salamanca, the 'Hedilla incident', which brought Franco political control in Spain." H. R. Southworth

New Statesman 74:907 D 29 '67 850w

Reviewed by Raymond Carr

N Y Rev of Books 11:29 D 19 '68 350w

Reviewed by Benjamin Welles

N Y Times Bk R p10 Ap 21 '68 1200w

"[This] book has value as a counterweight to the many reflexively virulent anti-Franco volumes already in circulation. Hills provides an ample appreciation of Franco's rare military gifts, his courage, his peculiarly Spanish sense of justice-without-mercy and his considerable talents as a politician. . . . But his portrait of Franco is not a full-blooded biography, skimpy as it is in anecdote, intimate detail and personal statement. And while the book is plastered with footnotes and freighted with documents, it is not so much thorough as highly selective, its material weighted to redress the historical balance. . . . Hills, like a skilled debater, grants the opposition some of its points but allots it a minimum of attention. . . . [He] paints contemporary Spain as a prosperous nation ruled by a universally popular and benevolent dictator. As of 1966, Hills writes, 'it had become possible to say that freedom from want was being enjoyed by nearly all Spaniards for the first time in their history.' It is no wonder Franco opened his doors to Hills." P. D. Zimmerman

HILLS, GEORGE—Continued

Newsweek 71:96 Mr 11 '68 800w

Reviewed by Paul Hofmann
Sat R 51:31 My 25 '68 480w

"[This] book is sub-titled 'The Man and his Nation', and the two themes bulk equally large. [Hills] justifies the prominence given to past Spanish history on the ground that meditation upon it . . . played a large part in moulding Franco's political views. . . . [He] is right to emphasize the historical background and the intensely Spanish character of both sides in the Civil War. Misinterpretations of Franco's personality and motives have chiefly flowed from a failure to see the war in Spanish terms. . . . [The author] makes the most of his gleanings among the archives . . . [and] has fully succeeded in presenting the portrait of this passionately proud, ferociously disciplined patriot and European."

TLS p1251 D 28 '67 1100w

HILLS, L. RUST, jt. ed. How we live. See Hills, P. C.

HILLS, PENNEY CHAPIN, ed. How we live; contemporary life in contemporary fiction; an anthology; ed. by Penney Chapin Hills and L. Rust Hills. 1008p $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)

Short stories—Collections 68-11266

The editors assert: "'We believe that contemporary fiction is flourishing—even though nobody much reads it,' and that 'it presents a kind of complex truth about ourselves and our society' which psychologists and sociologists and 'non-fiction novelists' cannot provide. . . . [The book contains] 56 short stories (or self-sufficient portions of novels) by 48 American writers of the last 15 years . . . [which] delineate strata and horizons of mid-century U. S. A." (Library J) The stories are grouped in three sections: The way we live now; Alone, In families, In communities, At work; Differentiations and confusions; In religion, In race, In class; and The eye of fiction: In some overviews, In some stratagems. Authors include John Barth, John Updike, John Cheever, Arthur Miller, Bernard Malamud, James Baldwin, Elizabeth Hardwick, Jerry Southern, Richard Wilbur and others.

Reviewed by Lee Israel
Book World p6 Ag 4 '68 1050w

Reviewed by John Thompson
Commentary 46:70 O '68 1500w

"After each story the Hills have added an informative and perceptive comment on its author together with justification for its inclusion in their canon. An appendix supplies a vigorous, yet almost plaintive 'In Defense of Contemporary Fiction'; and the names of 300 modern American fictionists are listed (with strange omissions of Ray Bradbury, Joseph Heller, John Hersey, Shirley Jackson, Jessamyn West, and others). This anthology is not only formidable in scope but an exciting experience to read straight through. Yet the Hills have dedicated no section to sex per se . . . and almost no four-letter words occur. . . . Slums and ghettos are mostly ignored as 'almost entirely outside the fabric of American life as the rest of us know it.' . . . Yet the book will become necessary for many college departmental reading lists, and it deserves a place in public and academic libraries."

B. W. Fuson
Library J 93:553 F 1 '68 430w

"[This] is the biggest and . . . the best existing collection of strictly contemporary American fiction. . . . [It] samples the work of what is now the middle generation of American writers. . . . It omits the far-out or angry fiction that is now appearing in little magazines. Even in the middle generation there are authors one is disappointed not to find. . . . As a panel of social psychologists, the authors bring in a generally disheartening report on the way we live now. . . . In this world of the absurd there is not much love, except of parents, especially mothers, for their very young children. Love between the sexes is sometimes an unmitigated disaster. . . . The picture of American middle-class life that emerges from these [stories] . . . is disheartening on the whole; yet it also leaves us with a faint but persistent impression of vigor and self-confidence. That other impression is created much less by the subject matter of the stories than by their manner, which is workmanlike and assured." Malcolm Cowley

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ag 4 '68 2800w

HILTON, R. H. A medieval society; the West Midlands at the end of the thirteenth century. 305p 11 maps $8 Wiley

309.1424 Great Britain—Social conditions 68-2608

This is primarily a "social history of the area comprised by the English diocese of Worcester during the reign of Edward I (1272-1307)." (Choice) Index.

"Hilton wishes his book to serve as an introduction to a later more extensive work on the different world of the 14th and 15th centuries. The greatest influence was exercised by a few great lay and ecclesiastical magnates, especially Benedictine abbots, who derived their stature from their landed possessions. The forests were extensive, and there was actually a shortage of land available for cultivation. Many of these observations are detailed in a series of valuable tables, and the most interesting chapters discuss peasant life. This is an informative synthesis."

Choice 5:547 Je '68 300w

"Professor Hilton has written a brilliant piece of local history in depth: a picture of the political, social and economic life of a single region (roughly Warwickshire, Worcestershire and Gloucestershire) at a single point in time. His conclusions have more than local significance, but carry weight because of the wealth of local details that underpins them. . . . The thirteenth century had been a time of crisis for the lesser landowners, and Professor Hilton's account of this crisis, and its social effects, is perhaps the most important section of the book."

Economist 223:692 My 13 '67 700w

"Hilton has attempted a description of a regional society in a period which many historians regard as crucial. His book touches in a consistently interesting way on vital topics and, as a work of synthesis should, serves to show how much specialized investigation is still needed before historians can begin to think that they know how the lines fell at this time. The main criticism which may be made is that parts of the book are unnecessarily difficult to understand: many pages read more like an early draft than the final one, with the result that ideas which are not intrinsically difficult often appear so. It is an astute reader who masters the account of the Cirencester case at the first attempt." B. F. Harvey

Engl Hist R 83:567 Jl '68 1050w

Reviewed by J. W. Baldwin
Social Studies 59:276 N '68 280w

"This is an ambitious undertaking. . . . The area Professor Hilton examines, . . . although far from a unity, has enough continuity to make it a coherent subject for study; and not the least of Professor Hilton's achievements has been his ability to keep a sensitive balance, which seldom fails, between the differences and similarities. His method is to take each social group in turn—lords, peasants and townsmen—and to examine it in the context of its characteristic activities and social units, finally relating them all to the wider area of government and jurisdiction. He does so with a deceptive simplicity which comes from a profound knowledge of the sources."

TLS p562 Je 22 '67 500w

HILU, VIRGINIA, ed. Sex education and the schools. See NAIS institute on sex education, Princeton, New Jersey, 1966

HIMMELFARB, GERTRUDE. Victorian minds. 392p $8.95 Knopf

942.081 Great Britain—Intellectual life 67-18617

Chapters concerning the ideas and ideologies of nineteenth century England are preceded by papers analyzing the thought of some of the Victorians including that of John Buchan who died in 1940. The material in this book was "adapted from papers and introductions written over the past fifteen years. . . . Nearly a third were first published in Partisan Review, Encounter, and The New York Review of Books." (Sat R) Index.

Reviewed by Steven Marcus
Atlantic 222:132 O '68 1450w

HIMMELFARB, GERTRUDE—Continued

Reviewed by Asa Briggs

Book World p9 J17 '68 850w

"Himmelfarb (C.U.N.Y.) has become one of the leading writers on English Victorian intellectual history. . . . These essays are full of fresh and challenging interpretations of Victorianism along the lines of the recent revisionist school of Victorian thought. The essays are well documented for the use of the scholar and the book has a useful index and is most attractively printed. Should certainly be added to all college library collections."

Choice 5:854 S '68 140w

Reviewed by Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 21 '68 800w

Reviewed by R. A. Nisbet

Commentary 46:100 N '68 2000w

Reviewed by J. R. Mellow

Commonweal 89:123 O 25 '68 700w

Economist 229:xix N 9 '68 300w

"Himmelfarb's book is a significant contribution to the scholarly reassessment of Victorian England. . . . It is, moreover, intellectual history at its best. In a brilliant series of essays Miss Himmelfarb once again displays her mastery of 19th-Century thought. . . . She enlivens such a dreary topic as the childhood of John Stuart Mill and, in a splendid cameo piece on Leslie Stephen, delineates the dynamics of the intellectual life of Victorian England. Highly recommended." L. S. Fallis

Library J 93:750 F 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Jeffrey Hart

Nat R 20:405 Ap 23 '68 650w

Reviewed by A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 76:800 D 6 '68 600w

"There are two Miss Himmelfarbs. . . . The first is Miss Himmelfarb, a first-rate intellectual historian who delights in fair-minded combat, who is hard-headed but not hard-hearted, and who is piercingly specific. Unfortunately there is also Mrs. Irving Kristol. . . . Whereas Miss Himmelfarb is interested in ideas, Mrs. Kristol is interested only in her idée fixe: the self-deceptions of liberalism. Whereas Miss Himmelfarb has style, Mrs. Kristol has rhetoric. . . . What is wrong with the essay on Leslie Stephen is that it is unjust. The evidence against him consists of gossip. . . . At no point is there any detailed scrutiny of any of Stephen's writings. . . . But it is the Buchan essay which most shows Miss Himmelfarb under the thumb of Mrs. Kristol." Christopher Ricks

N Y Rev of Books 10:30 Mr 28 '68 2650w

Reviewed by John Clive

N Y Times Bk R p18 Ap 21 '68 1150w

New Yorker 44:187 My 4 '68 120w

"[The author] is always incisive and penetrating, and often original. . . . Though some of these essays are I think, hardly worth republishing, most are genuine contributions, not so much for scholarly information as for the use of such information to gain sound analytical insights. The author's chapter on Lord Acton is an excellent explanation of why that potentially great historian backed himself into a cul-de-sac. Her discussion of the Reform Act of 1867 offers a fascinating analysis of why Disraeli, an avowed conservative, was indifferent to his own opening of the floodgates of democracy. Best of all, her examination of the Halévy thesis of the importance of Wesleyanism in nineteenth-century cultural history shows her ability to grasp the emotional force of moral and ideological abstractions. And always there is a delightful touch of acidulousness." Morse Peckham

Sat R 51:29 Mr 30 '68 430w

Time 91:108 Ap 5 '68 950w

HIND, ARTHUR MAYGER. A catalogue of Rembrandt's etchings; chronologically arranged and completely illustrated by Arthur Mayger Hind. 2v in 1 $27.50 Da Capo press

769 Etchings

67-27456

This book, "first published in 1912 and now reissued in its revised version of 1923, is based on the collections of the British Museum." (Library J) Bibliography. For the first edition see BRD 1912.

"The new one-volume edition of Hind's classic study on Rembrandt's etchings is, with the exception of six additional plates, completely unchanged. For the serious scholar as well as the undergraduate student Hind's work is still one of the starting points for the study of Rembrandt's graphic production. . . . The book contains an exemplary introductory essay on Rembrandt's graphic production as well as a complete chronological catalogue, including a section on rejected works. It also contains a valuable finding list index of standard catalogues of Rembrandt etchings. On the whole the reproductions are only adequate. If one is interested in good reproductions alone, then Boon's The Complete Etchings of Rembrandt [BRD 1964] is superior."

Choice 5:616 J1 '68 200w

"The illustrations are satisfactory and serve the purpose of identification; often various states of the etchings are shown. . . . Progress in reproduction techniques since the appearance of the original volumes has made recent reproductions more attractive to the amateur, although they almost always fail to reflect the softness and shades of the original etchings. Judged by scholarliness and exactness of description, [this] reprint will hold its own and continue to serve both collectors and students. . . . Recommended for those research libraries which do not own or may have need to replace their original editions." J. L. Dew-ton

Library J 92:4403 D 1 '67 190w

HINE, ROBERT V. Bartlett's West; drawing the Mexican boundary. 155p ill $12.50 Yale Univ. press

760 Bartlett, John Russell. Southwest, New --Description and travel 68-13910

The author seeks to assess "the drawings made by John Russell Bartlett, who . . . [was one] of the five American commissioners appointed to determine the . . . location of the boundary [which followed the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo]." (J Am Hist) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Bowden Broadwater

Book World p5 S 1 '68 500w

"Bartlett was . . . a scientist and artist whose contributions transcended those which might have come from political appointees or surveyors. Problems of communication, transportation, political intrigue, Indians, finances, fevers, and desert heat will fascinate the reader as will artist Bartlett's 'romantic sense of wonderment at the strange and uncharted.' For university and public libraries."

Choice 5:1214 N '68 200w

"[In] this engaging book [Hine] argues that Bartlett ranks 'among the best of Western interpreters' and was 'the equal, if not the superior, of any of the professional artists he hired.' . . . [He] strengthens both the plausibility of his argument and the attractiveness of his book by including more than fifty drawings made by these men and Bartlett. . . . The illustrations dramatically reveal Bartlett's success—especially when he used sepia washes and Chinese white—in depicting the vastness and changing moods of the western landscape. . . . [Hine] has not ignored Bartlett the surveyor. Indeed, he has drawn upon manuscript materials in more than a half-dozen libraries and research centers to write one of the best descriptions yet of the problems encountered in the field between 1850 and 1853."

Norris Hundley

J Am Hist 55:399 S '68 370w

HINES, BURLEIGH, jt. auth. Nightmare in Detroit. See Sauter, V. G.

HINSHAW, RANDALL, ed. Monetary reform and the price of gold; alternative approaches. 180p $6.95 Johns Hopkins press

332.4 Gold

67-24630

A "conference of international monetary economists [was] held during January 1967 in Bologna, Italy . . . [whose purpose] was to bring together three . . . proponents of international monetary reform: Jacques Rueff, who advocates increasing international liquidity by raising the price of gold; Robert Triffin, who espouses the creation of an international credit creating authority; and Edward M. Bernstein, who recommends supplementing existing international reserves with issues of reserve credit units. The book is not a collection of formal papers . . . [but an] edited recording of the presentations of these three experts plus the comments of nearly a dozen other recognized authorities who participated in the conference." (Choice) Name and subject indexes.

Reviewed by S. I. Katz
Am Econ R 58:1020 S '68 1200w

"A unique documentary . . . [which] promises to be of lasting historical interest."
Choice 5:655 J1 '68 140w

HINTON, H. E. Mongooses; their natural history and behaviour [by] H. E. Hinton [and] A. M. S. Dunn. 144p il pl $6.50 Univ. of Calif. press

599 Mongooses 67-28032

An account of the natural history and behavior of mongooses. Bibliography. Index.

"[The authors] maintain a high level of scientific accuracy, and the books and references cited are quite extensive. . . . A delightful book equally valuable to the trained biologist as well as the interested layman."
Choice 5:644 J1 '68 80w

Reviewed by J. H. Zar
Library J 93:2015 My 15 '68 100w

"Everything, but everything, about the mongoose. The authors cover the more obvious areas of reproduction, parental care, life-span, etc. . . . their diseases and parasites. The inclusion of every detail is often distracting. . . . Anyone with less than a passionate interest in the subject will find this book rough going." C. B.

Natur Hist 77:73 Mr '68 100w

"Who has not heard of the exploits of Kipling's Rikki-tikki-tavi, or of the problems, a few years ago, of Mr. Magoo at the Duluth Zoo? Here is much useful background information. . . . [This] book is largely the result of extensive library research. . . . It delves deeply into the legendary and folklore of mongooses in ancient Egypt and India, and it discusses the introduction of the small Indian mongoose to the West Indies and the Hawaiian Islands. . . . Good photographs illustrate most species, and line drawings depict many details." R. H. Manville

Science 159:725 F 16 '68 250w

HIRAOKA, KIMITAKE. See Mishima, Y

HIRAOKA, KIMITAKE. See Mishima, Y.
Spain. See Palol, P. de

HIRSCHFELD, BURT. The glorious struggle; how the United States became a nation. 220p il $4.95 Hawthorn bks.

973.3 U.S.—History—Revolution—Juvenile literature 67-24000

After a summary of colonial history, the book traces "the events of the Revolutionary era from James Otis's speech on the Writs of Assistance to the ratification of the Constitution. Along the way the reader encounters the major men and events of [the] time." (Book World) Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

"[This book] offers a species of pap that may leave a mildly pleasant taste, but one not likely to whet the appetite for mature historical understanding. [It] rehashes the contents of . . . earlier volumes so that the reader encounters almost as much error as fact." Alden Vaughan

Book World p26 F 25 '68 100w

Horn Bk 44:79 F '68 30w

"Slow to start, the book increases in interest when the author discusses the Declaration of Independence, Articles of Confederation, and the Constitution. The scholarly language and liberal use of quotations from speeches, debates, articles, and documents will limit this account to interested readers with a good background in American history." Patricia Dahl

Library J 92:4622 D 15 '67 90w

HIRSCHFELD, BURT. The vital link; the story of the Suez Canal. 187p pl maps $3.95 Messner

386 Suez Canal—Juvenile literature 68-14938

This history "of the building of the Suez Canal and the political and economic consequences it effected opens . . . with an account of the French-British-Israeli invasion of Egypt in 1956. Then the narrative flashes back to Pharaoh Sesostius (the earliest canal builder, 1500 B.C.) before returning to modern times to concentrate on de Lesseps and his work, discuss the Canal during both world wars, and conclude with a brief epilogue on the 1967 Six Days War. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:65 My 1 '68 70w

"Horizon Magazine's Building the Suez Canal [BRD 1966] covers much the same historical material in a more attractive, well illustrated format; though Hirschfeld's book is an interesting introduction that contains some more up-to-date material, it does have over-balancing weaknesses: a tendency to oversimplification and the heavy use of fictional dialogue." M. S. Bart

Library J 93:3982 O 15 '68 130w

HIRSCH, TRAVIS. Delinquency research; an appraisal of analytic methods [by] Travis Hirsch [and] Hanan C. Selvin. 280p $7.95 Free press

364.36 Juvenile delinquency. Sociology—Research 67-15058

The authors present this as a "textbook, albeit an unusual one, on methods of analysis; a critique of empirical research on delinquency; and a set of essays on important topics in methodology." (Am Soc R) Index.

"As a textbook on methods of analysis, the volume is a major achievement. The general objectives of analysis are set forth succinctly. Such procedures as explanation, interpretation, specification and internal replication are described and illustrated. The discussion is lucid, precise and impressive. Evaluating the work as a critique of delinquency research requires a set of substantive competencies which this reviewer cannot claim. And yet the selection of materials does seem a bit unbalanced. . . . As a set of essays on important topics in methodology, the work is likely to provoke mixed reactions. There will be agreement about the fundamental importance of the topics addressed. There will be disagreement over the positions expressed and the conclusions reached. . . . [But] social scientists, regardless of their metaphysical convictions of substantive specializations, will find time spent with this book a profitable investment." R. J. Hill

Am Soc R 33:458 Je '68 430w

"[This book] is unusual: less boring and more stimulating and provocative than most textbooks on criminological methods. It is difficult to summarize. . . . One can only hope to stimulate the appetite of the reader. . . . The authors concentrate on the analysis of quantitative data and illustrate their views by analyzing tables from major American studies of delinquency from the 1950's. In spite of an inevitable critical attitude, the authors are more positive in their appraisal of delinquency research than most of its critics. They consider conclusions about how bad delinquency research has been less important than recommendations for improvements. . . . Most criminologists will profit greatly from reading [the] book." K. O. Christiansen

Ann Am Acad 378:193 J1 '68 440w

HIRSCHMAN, ALBERT O. Development projects observed. 197p $6 Brookings

309.2 Economic development. Economic assistance 67-27683

"The raw material for this study is 11 World Bank projects, 'privileged particles of the development process,' drawn from African, Asian, and Latin American countries. Hirschman's interest in project evaluation begins where quantitative cost-benefit calculation ceases. [He explores] the residual area of decision-making which is ordinarily left to instinctual . . . judgment. Specifically, he analyzes the technological, organizational, and administrative structure of a given project for their impact on its chances of success—in terms of possible external troubles ('uncertainties'), and in terms of the range of internal flexibility of operation ('latitudes and disciplines')." (Choice) Index.

"It is Hirschman's thesis that the creative response to all unexpected complications that inevitably arise is the essence of the development process. Written in a clear stimulating style, the book's greatest virtue is its wealth of transferable insights into the interaction of political, sociological and economic phenomena. Ranking above Hirschman's Journeys toward Progress: Studies in Economic Policy Making in Latin America [BRD 1964], but considerably below his seminal Strategy of Economic Development [BRD 1959], this study in serendipity by one of America's leading development economists is recommended for all libraries with sizable collections of economic development literature."

HIRSCHMAN, A. O.—Continued

Choice 5:382 My '68 240w

"All development projects are problem prone but some succeed while others fail. Mr. Hirschman, professor of political economy at Harvard, observes and asks why. Part of his analysis indicates that 'what a country does and what it becomes as a result of what it does' is probably more important than what it has in terms of natural resources. . . . This seed book for new analyses of the problems of the underdeveloped economies is recommended for graduate economics collections." H. S. Camenson

Library J 93:748 F 15 '68 220w

HIRSHBERG, AL. Yaz. See Yastrzemski, C.

HISTORY of mankind; cultural and scientific development; v6. The twentieth century, by Caroline F. Ware, K. M. Panikkar and J. M. Romein; pub. for the Int. comm. for a history of the scientific and cultural development of mankind. 1387p pl maps $18.50 Harper

909 World history. Civilization. Modern 66-20748

This "volume describes the transformation wrought by the . . . political and social changes of the first half of the twentieth century, and by the impact of scientific knowledge on industry, communications, transport, food, health, human behavior, and warfare." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. For volume two see BRD 1965.

"This is a very impressive achievement in cultural history. . . . The authors have encompassed in this work a remarkable breadth of coverage while at the same time remaining scholarly. A panoramic work like this can, of course, only delineate and summarize an immense amount of existing knowledge, as well as point to continuing gaps, problems, and divergent views on specific topics. . . . All this the authors do superbly. In addition, footnotes at the end of chapters provide a forum for various international scholars . . . to comment or take issue with the authors' interpretation in the main text. This dialogue makes not only for stimulating reading; more important, it is conducive to the recognition that historical judgments are frequently only tentative. . . . Highly recommended for all libraries."

Choice 5:106 Mr '68 220w

"This climactic volume in the Unesco-sponsored global history is an extraordinary accomplishment which deserves admiration, even if one disagrees with some of the methods applied in compiling it. It represents an attempt to tell the history of the first three-fifths of our century (no events after April 15, 1960 are included) in a fashion many professional historians would consider unorthodox. The writers do not stress political history. . . . Their emphasis is placed on development and application of scientific knowledge, transformation of societies, and the self-images and aspirations of the peoples of the world. They include a richly illustrated chapter on arts and literature, but this is more a catalog of notable persons and their works than a searching analysis." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 93:76 Ja 1 '68 250w

HITCHFIELD, ELIZABETH, jt. auth. A guide to reading Piaget. See Brearley, M.

HITCHMAN, JANET. Meeting for burial. 160p $4.50 Atheneum pubs.

68-27441

In this "novel, the protagonist, now dead, is seen through the eyes of her friends, relatives and acquaintances. They are gathered at a Quaker 'Meeting for Burial' for Mildred Moore . . . who devoted her life to service to mankind and demanded the same of others. The reader follows her life from childhood to her last years as each of the mourners reflects how his or her life was affected for better or worse by contact with her." (Library J)

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 10 '68
40w

"One gets a good picture of the life of Quakers in England from the turn of the century, and of their humanitarian work at home and abroad both in peace and in war. Though at times the heroine fades in the background and the interest centers more on the living, this is still an absorbing well-written character study that should be in fiction collections generally. YA librarians might also consider." S. L. Steen

Library J 93:3578 O 1 '68 150w [YA]

"Miss Hitchman has found a good subject and, on the whole, an interesting format. We get some idea of the changes that have taken place in the long time span Mildred lived through and some indication of the nature of religious experience and faith. The book is always intelligent, decent and closely observed. It is deftly done. It is consistently readable. . . . But [it] somehow falls short of what one feels it is trying for. . . . [The author] repeatedly has a way of taking us to the brink of the big subject and then, at the last moment, almost apologetically, drawing back. We always feel that we are about to get some fresh insight into what makes a saint, but never quite do." Richard Boston

N Y Times Bk R p18 S 1 '68 800w

TLS p659 Jl 27 '67 130w

HOBAN, RUSSELL. A birthday for Frances; pictures by Lillian Hoban. 31p $2.95; to libs & schools $2.92 Harper

68-24321

The author of Bedtime for Frances (BRD 1961) Baby Sister for Frances (BRD 1965) and Bread and Jam for Frances (BRD 1964) tells another story about the female badger. In this story "little sister Gloria is the birthday girl, and Frances is the girl who wishes it were [her] birthday instead. . . . Sulking on the porch, she sees Mother Badger wrapping Gloria's presents. Finally, Frances rises to the occasion, and in a burst of generosity decides that she will give her sister a present too. Buying the present is easy but actually handing it to Gloria is something else again." (Publisher's note) "Ages four to eight." (Book World)

"No small child—or her parents—should be permitted to miss [Frances'] latest demonstration of childlike behavior." Polly Goodwin

Book World p18 S 29 '68 130w

"The Frances stories are remarkable for dealing with real family problems that children easily identify with. . . . [This] story, enhanced by Frances' characteristic songs about her plight, is adequate, but at times the innuendo seems aimed more at adults than at children." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:285 N 22 '68 60w

Horn Bk 44:552 O '68 80w

"Another volume in the Hobans' encyclopedia of childhood traumas, this time about sibling birthdays and learning unselfishness. . . . One wonders whether child or parent will identify most with the lengthy conversations which seem like unedited recordings of childlike prattle exploited for its own sake. Lillian Hoban's comfortable soft pencil drawings complement a text which is less spontaneously amusing than the Hobans' earlier books." N. Y. Orr

Library J 93:3290 S 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:46 N 9 '68 110w

HOBBS, LISA. India, India. 216p $4.95 McGraw 915.4 India—Social conditions. India—Description and travel 67-26171

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:207 Ap '68 220w [YA]

Reviewed by Joan Dillon

Library J 93:315 Ja 15 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:39 Mr 16 '68 170w

HOBBS, WILLIAM. Stage fight; swords, firearms, fisticuffs and slapstick; introd. by Laurence Olivier [Eng title; Techniques of the stage fight]. 96p il $6.95 Theatre arts

792 Fencing 67-24133

A brief approach "to staging sword fights and duels for the actor and director who know little of theatrical fencing. Contains advice on blocking duels, battle scenes and mass fighting, and nonrealistic fighting; a description of weapons; and system of notation for dueling movements . . . [as well as] sections on unarmed combat and slapstick comedy." (Choice) Index.

"Brief, but extremely helpful."

Choice 5:213 Ap '68 80w

"Mr. Hobbs has not been as complete in his coverage as one would wish, for example, he discusses 'construction,' 'planning' or 'arranging' a duel, but he does not make clear to the actor how to put the various parries and thrusts together to actually choreograph the scene. While he discusses safety, he does not stress in detail, but he is especially good on timing. . . . Excellent photographs and drawings." A. G. Owen

Library J 92:4172 N 15 '67 140w

HOBLITZELLE THEATRE ARTS LIBRARY.

A guide to the theatre and drama collections at the University of Texas. See Hunter, F. J., comp.

HOBBSBAUM, PHILIP. In retreat, and other poems. 51p $3.75 Dufour

821 67-28707

The keynote of this collection of poems "is regret: expressed in a series of personal poems about the author's loss of his eyesight, and in dramatic monologues about the wastage of effort in the lives of great men." (Publisher's note) Some of the poems have appeared in journals such as The Times Literary Supplement, The New York Times and Poetry Review.

"The trouble with Hobsbaum's poetry is not that he relies on the abstractions of the educated mind but that he exercises them always on the same dismal subject-matter—himself and the latest signs of his decrepitude. . . . His latest book has some satisfyingly angry moments. The best are his satirings of academia . . . focusing on that institution's contempt for human spontaneity and on the warped energy which can spring from it with a kind of Lawrentian hatred. . . . Hobsbaum's worst fault, apart from his obviousness, . . . is a self-indulgent need to remind us that his own sensitivity really puts him beyond all this spiritual squalor when that is precisely what it doesn't seem to have done. He writes like a man who knows he has lost, but after so much concentrated self-pity the reader is unlikely to believe that he ever tried very hard in the first place." Colin Falck

Encounter 28:71 Mr '67 400w

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 40w

"Going blind has not tempted Mr Hobsbaum to any They-also-serve heroics. Instead, the sharp pain, the nausea, the greying world which weight his bitterly querulous lines recall the despairing list of symptoms Milton sent to Leonard Philaras, more human and immediate than either of the blindness sonnets. Self-pity so sharply justified quickly punctures the reader's reserve. But when the professional academic starts picking at his sores, . . . any audience may be excused for fidgeting. Best, perhaps, to edge away? But then we would miss Mr Hobsbaum's voice relating in accomplished, Browningsque monologues the tribulations of neglected genius." John Carey

New Statesman 72:483 S 30 '66 130w

HOBBSBAWM, E. J. Industry and empire: the making of modern English society, 1750 to the present day. 336p maps $6.95 Pantheon bks.

330.942 Great Britain—Economic conditions. Great Britain—Industries—History. Great Britain—History—19th century 68-10699

The author "attempts to describe and account for Britain's rise as the first industrial power, its decline from the temporary domination of the pioneer, its rather special relationship with the rest of the world, and some of the effects of all these on the life of [its] people." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index. This is a companion volume to Christopher Hill's Reformation to Industrial Revolution, BRD 1968.

"Mr. Hobsbawm is a historian of remarkable intelligence and erudition. This, his latest work, . . . is most welcome. It is a synthesis based on a mastery of sources and secondary works, and will doubtless become a standard introduction to a complex and important subject. . . . Mr. Hobsbawm, with his usual intellectual vigor, has scattered some of the fog of scholarly controversy and presented a convincing and coherent interpretation. He is equally at home with statistical data, the evidence of imaginative literature, and the evidence left by the poor, the 'voiceless' of history. This excellent book will be of interest to all those concerned about the Industrial Revolution and the genesis of the modern world." David Jordan

Library J 93:2650 J1 '68 140w

"One of the many great merits of . . . Hobsbawm's book is that it provides a sound framework of historical understanding in which to consider not only the recent failures but also the equally long-rooted changes and adaptations which are taking place [in Britain today]. . . . The origins of the industrial revolution, his 18th-century starting point, are given an immediacy and relevance which is seldom to be found in economic history books. And it must be added, for Marxist history is not often of the 'can't put it down' variety, that this book is no recital of turgid facts and mechanical interpretations but, on the contrary, is often original in judgment, is elegantly written throughout and, within the terms of its conception, is balanced and fair. . . . One of the great strengths of the book is that it sets the story of Britain's economic rise and fall in an international setting. . . . But it is a pity that the analysis of external factors is not taken further." Peter Jenkins

New Statesman 75:688 My 24 '68 1300w

"The best passages in [this] book are those that deal with the texture of society and with the influence of economic forces upon it. It is rare in a book called an 'economic history' to find such social and cultural changes, along with the vast changes of the early industrial revolution and the still controversial changes of the 1950's and 1960's, dealt with so sensitively and so lucidly. Rural England is examined with equal imagination and candor, though it probably had greater variety than Mr. Hobsbawm has space to describe." Asa Briggs

N Y Times Bk R p38 N 3 '68 480w

HOCHHUTH, ROLF. Soldiers; an obituary for Geneva; tr. by Robert David MacDonald. 255p $5.95 Grove

832 Churchill, Sir Winston Leonard Spencer —Drama 68-20638

This drama about Winston Churchill makes a "plea for an international convention to outlaw the bombing of defenseless civilians. . . . [The Question raised is that] if Churchill was in fact responsible for the death of his friend and ally, Polish General Wladislaw Sikorski, in 1943, could he have been justified in assenting to a plot against his life?" (Publisher's note) This is a translation of the complete German text published in 1967.

"This documentary play reveals in its written version the same excess that was so evident in Hochhuth's The Deputy [BRD 1964]: an overabundance of material and a chronic longwindedness. Both . . . have been overwhelming successes on the stage. . . . The author's perceptive insight enables him to topple some of the world's idols and reveal them as mortal, however magnificent. In spite of its exaggerated length, [this] is a gripping play, and the author has pursued his historical research so well that the reader has little cause to question the portrayal of Sir Winston Churchill. . . . It is a sign of Hochhuth's genuine literary gift that this great man is so unforgettably drawn. MacDonald's translation brings the force of the work very effectively to the English reader." Choice 5:980 O '68 190w

"The incompatibility of the roles [of saviour of Britain and defender of liberty] is developed through Churchill's sacrifice of one man, Polish General Sikorski, and his readiness to sacrifice the entire German civil population to firestorms, for the . . . advantage of the Grand Alliance and the ultimate survival of Britain's glory and his own fame. Hochhuth writes with both subtlety and power; his cold fury pierces every page. He grants full justice but never mercy to his protagonists. His cry for the silent millions of the dead—and those to come—raises Soldiers to the highest dramatic level. A work of great art, vividly historic and terribly timely. Soldiers will be in demand at every library and hotly debated by all who read it." R. R. Rea

HOCHHUTH, ROLF—Continued

Library J 93:1159 Mr 15 '68 180w

HOCHMAN, SANDRA. Love letters from Asia; poems. 54p $3.95 Viking

811

68-16635

A fourth book of poems by the author of Voyage Home, Manhattan Pastures (BRD 1963) and Vaudeville Marriage (BRD 1966). Some of these poems have appeared in such periodicals as The New Yorker, Atlantic Monthly and The Nation.

"Hochman gives one the sense of trying hard to be a good poet but not succeeding. Her 'love letters' are admirably sensuous and occasionally show exciting originality, but on the whole they fall into clichés. . . . Her range of emotional intensity, even allowing that these are 'letters,' is much too narrow. Her writing persistently has the character of flat prose statement. The character—speaker, writer—of her love letters is one dimensional, sentimental, and given to belaboring her themes."

Choice 5:623 J1 '68 90w

"[Hochman] is awake to the sound of words, the feel of words on the tongue, as are the great romantics, Shelley and Keats. . . . [This book] finds her winning the battle of realism versus surrealism, bringing her poems nearer and nearer to the observed world of 'dragonflies, broccoli . . . pythons, crushed medicines/Spices' found in Hong Kong's central market. Travel, as always, is her first love, and in [this volume] she takes us with her on an oriental honeymoon, set between sea and stars, hotels, tennis courts, and swimming pools. Her book is at once exotic and domestic." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 29 '68 330w

"In nearly 30 breathless and subjective free-verse lyrics whose phrasings are shredded often into irregular two- or even one-stress chips of lines, a sympathetic reader is drawn deeply into the sensibility of a woman for whom internal turmoils vying with external stimuli eerily interact. . . . [In 'The Central Market'] Chinese smells and sights press upon the speaker as she seeks to win through to new self-identity. Old China hands will come alert to titles like 'Lantao Island' and 'At Repulse Bay,' yet these poems are not superficial catalogs or tourist responses; it is the inward voyage, the nerve tingle, the insight that surfaces in often startling diction." B. W. Fuson

Library J 93:1148 Mr 15 '68 200w

"[The setting] is Asia, especially Hong Kong; vacation-time, with poems as letters, love letters, postcards home. Recalcitrant experience is not admitted; these are poems for holiday. . . . I am sure Miss Hochman does indeed 'love/Earth, violently, and vegetables,/Stars . . . but in these poems she never looks at anything for its own sake nor allows its strangeness to persist. . . . She never forgets her own feelings in the presence of charming things. She says to everything: be thou me, impetuous one, pretty one, joyful one. . . . I am afraid many readers will find these poems offensive, whatever latitude we allow to love letters." Denis Donoghue

N Y Rev of Books 10:24 Je 6 '68 500w

HOCKLEY, ANTHONY FARRAR-. See Farrar-Hockley, A.*HODDER, B. W., ed. Africa in transition; geographical essays; ed. by B. W. Hodder and D. R. Harris. 378p il maps $8 Barnes & Noble

916 Africa

[67-111140]

"A collection of essays on the geography of Africa. . . . Its aim is to analyze the background of some of the current problems which have been ignored by geographers. For analysis the continent is divided into six regions: the North (excluding Egypt), Northeast, East, West, Equatorial, and Southern Africa. . . . Each essay treats agriculture, population, development problems, politics, and other related topics. . . . For Southern Africa, separate development and Europeanization are emphasized whereas traditional economies and modern development policies are stressed for the Northeast. Aspects of colonial policies and political unity are developed in the chapters concerning West, Equatorial, and East Africa." (Choice)

"More comprehensive than W. Hance's African Economic Development [BRD 1968]. . . . A uniform treatment for each region has been deliberately avoided. Rather, a unique and dominant problem is exposed in each region. . . . Each chapter has a select list of useful references and is illustrated with clear maps. A most useful book for anyone interested in current Africa."

Choice 5:666 J1 '68 180w

"[Dr. Hodder] and his fellow editor introduce the book with a concise account of the main features of the history and current political geography of Africa. Mr. Harris then presents a very sound and balanced study of the Maghreb and Libya. . . . [C. Board] provides a remarkably useful account of southern Africa, which pays special attention to the origins of the present demographic and land-holding patterns. . . . In all these essays a good deal of attention is paid to early empires and movements of people. . . . One might look for an emphasis here on the developments of the past twenty years. . . . or at any rate on the period since 1885."

TLS p803 J1 25 '68 750w

HODGES, C. WALTER. The Spanish armada; written and ill. by C. Walter Hodges. 32p lib bdg $3.69 Coward-McCann

942.05 Armada, 1588—Juvenile literature

67-22700

An "account of events leading up to the Armada, and of the engagement itself. [The author gives an] outline of the principles behind the Reformation and of the tactics of the battle." (TLS) "Ages ten to twelve." (Library J)

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2 '68 80w

Horn Bk 44:442 Ag '68 30w

Reviewed by Terry Myers

Library J 93:1811 Ap 15 '68 80w

"[There are] sophisticated coloured illustrations on every page which strike just the right balance between care for detail and bold, scribbled effects. The text reaches a comparably high standard, achieving an admirable pithiness without vulgarity, and totally avoiding the unctuous, making-the-point-heavily style that bedevils so much factual writing for the young." Gillian Tindall

New Statesman 74:604 N 3 '67 420w

"The sweep and color of the illustrations add a magnificent vigor to this account of the defeat of the Spanish Armada, especially in the tumultuous scenes of naval encounters. The distinguishing feature of the writing is its objectivity; of the many books written about this historic episode few relate with such clarity the background events and the strategy of the Spanish commanders." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:39 Mr 16 '68 70w

"The excitement of the narrative is maintained by good short quotations from contemporary writers. It is sad to have to criticize what usually merits most praise in [Hodges'] series, the illustrations, which show lack of variety, almost of care. It is all ships and outdoor scenes, and he views them too often from the same distance. The Spanish fire boats in reds and purples are bright, but many of the paintings are drab and fussy in their detail."

TLS p1159 N 30 '67 110w

HODGES, MARGARET, ed. Constellation; a Shakespeare anthology. 255p $4.50 Farrar, Straus

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Quotations—Juvenile literature

68-13677

"Arranged by individual play, this [is a] collection of passages from 26 Shakespearean comedies and dramas. . . . Selection favors the most well-known quotations. . . . A brief statement concerning setting and plot introduces each quote. [Guide to famous lines and phrases.] Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

"No evaluative guidelines are given so the book cannot serve as a teaching device for the uninitiated. From the student's viewpoint, the book has no holding power, no continuity, and, especially, no explanation for the commendation traditionally accorded these lines." R. M. Hilton

Library J 93:2738 J1 '68 130w

"I can conceive of an anthology of Shakespearean magic, songs, runes, curses and jokes to delight the ears of a child of 7 or 8 who cannot yet read to himself. But I cannot quite see the function of this hacking out of bird, beast, or rare sweet flower from the whole tapestry. Children who would enjoy this anthology would, I am sure, enjoy even more discovering the 'great' passages for themselves in the course of reading a whole play." May Sarton
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 My 5 '68

100w

HODGKINSON, RUTH G. The origins of the National health service; the medical services of the new Poor Law, 1834-1871. 714p $17.50 Univ. of Calif. press

362.1 Public health—Great Britain. Poor law—Great Britain. Medicine, State

67-20966

This book is a "study of the medical services provided under the new poor [in Great Britain] law between 1834 and 1871. . . . The author shows the variety of provisions, the low standard of care, and the struggles of the doctors . . . for better conditions for themselves and their patients. . . . [She describes] the voluntary hospital, the dispensary, and the sick club movement." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"The origins of the National Health Service . . . are far more diverse than the title implies. . . . [The book suffers] from a sad lack of pruning and from the inability of the author to decide what it is she wants to do. It seems most valuable for the reader who already has a good knowledge of nineteenth-century social conditions and of the poor law administration—which is never clearly explained—and who is prepared to deepen his knowledge by sifting through the mass of material here presented in exclamatory style." Doreen Collins
Ann Am Acad 378:164 J1 '68 420w

"[This] may prove to be a definitive work of the Poor Law and the Medical services for the period. . . . [It uses] the best primary and secondary sources. . . . If there is a thesis in this study, it is that the limitations and inadequacies of the medical services of the 1840's, 1850's, 1860's . . . furnish the basis for the welfare state of the mid-20th century, and that the origins of the National Health Service can be traced to the medical services of the New Poor Law. To the student of 19th-century British social or medical history, this comprehensive and very readable book should prove extremely useful."

Choice 4:1278 Ja '68 160w

HOEGLER, RUDOLF G. Greece in color. See Kerényi, C.

HOETINK, H. The two variants in Caribbean race relations: a contribution to the sociology of segmented societies; tr. from the Dutch by Eva M. Hooykaas; pub. for the Inst. of race relations. 207p $7 Oxford

301.451 Caribbean area—Race relations. Race problems 67-91816

The author, currently director of the Centre for Latin American Research and Documentation at the University of Amsterdam "employs a cross disciplinary approach in presenting his thesis that segmented societies in the Caribbean are part of a larger segmented society comprising the entire world. He discusses differences in race relations which have developed as a result of the influence of Iberian and North-West European cultures in their respective Caribbean colonies. Further, he defines two factors as determining the 'social atmosphere' between different racial groups. One, operative at the every day level of interaction is governed by cultural factors; the other, concerned with intimate social relations including 'interracial sexual-cum-social acceptance,' is based upon somatic distance." (Choice) This translation is a shortened version of De Gespleten Samenleving in het Caribisch Gebied. Bibliography. Index.

"Professor H. Hoetink has a remarkable ability to get to the basic problems of one of the most complex issues in current social science, that of race relations. . . . The aim of [his] work is to begin to ask the fundamental questions of causation and to attempt to focus on an agreed set of variables which can be tested. . . . Though many of his assumptions and materials can be debated, the most serious weakness in his well-developed argument is his conclusion. . . . Though Hoetink fails to give us a solution to the origins of the patterns of race relations, neither has anyone else, and his book is of inestimable value in finally providing us with the framework of an agreed set of criteria upon which we can arrive at such a definition. There is little question that all future comparative research must begin with this germinal work." H. S. Klein

Am J Soc 74:91 J1 '68 1000w

"[The author] is an acknowledged authority on Caribbean race relations. The English translation of this classic . . . will be welcomed by Caribbean specialists. Indeed, anyone who anticipates doing comparative research in a society other than his own would profit from [it]. . . . There are major points with which most sociologists would take issue. . . . Hoetink is obviously an insightful observer, and he has made effective use of much of the literature on the Caribbean. But perhaps the greatest weakness of the book is that so many important assertions are made without empirical support. If Caribbean societies are truly plural, one must take great care in making general statements which apply to all segments. Many of Hoetink's valuable propositions should thus be treated as hypotheses rather than as empirical generalizations. Still, his book will probably serve as an invaluable guide for the next generation of researchers in this fascinating and still largely unresearched area in the West." J. T. Duke

Am Soc R 33:311 Ap '68 550w

"Most monographs on segmented societies deal primarily with African societies. Although Hoetink's observations draw upon these studies, they focus on the Caribbean area where segmentation is perhaps more visible since it involves racial as well as ethnic differences. . . . [The] book will serve as a useful introduction for advanced undergraduates as well as graduates."

Choice 5:272 Ap '68 200w

HOER, PHILIP. Edward Lear as a landscape draughtsman. 109p il $10 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

741.9 Lear, Edward

67-22865

This volume contains an analysis of Lear's draughtsmanship, a "biography, a discussion of the tradition of landscape drawing that Lear inherited, a survey of the growth in appreciation of Lear's landscape drawings and of the present status of collections of them." (Yale R) Bibliography.

"[Mr. Hofer's] choice of over a hundred plates supports his admiration of Lear's draughtsmanship at its best. It is perhaps unimportant that the author's own writing style sometimes lapses into gush and an embarrassing fondness for exclamation marks. But, in a work of scholarship, it is odd that although the blurb tells us that the drawings reproduced are chosen from the author's own collection and from the vast store in the possession of Harvard University, we are not told which comes from where."

Economist 227:iii Ap 27 '68 440w

"Best known as the author of the juvenile classic, 'The Owl and the Pussycat,' Edward Lear . . . spent most of his life abroad, recording in typical 19th-Century manner his impressions of picturesque and exotic locales he visited. Mr. Hofer . . . has written an objective and critical appraisal of [Lear's work]. . . . Certain stylistic mannerisms of Mr. Hofer are appropriate to his rather paradoxical subject. This handsome book, with superior printing, paper, and binding, is recommended for art collections." R. N. Van Note

Library J 93:744 F 15 '68 130w

"By following a chronological system both in his discussion and in the illustrations, the author discusses in detail the evolution of the technique of the artist. Thus, if a Lear drawing is compared either with Hofer's illustrations or his year by year analysis, it is possible to place it. Lacking an index as this volume does, what is really required is a dated list of countries or places, and the whole oeuvre would become immediately apparent. . . . Naturally it is almost impossible to identify some subjects if they lack dates, but now that this percipient analysis of Lear's various styles is available, a lot of the donkey-work has been done."

TLS p575 Je 6 '68 1050w

Va Q R 44:lxv spring '68 210w

HOFFER, PHILIP—Continued

"It is surprising that Mr. Hoffer's is the first book to discuss [Lear's landscape sketches] in detail. It is a handsome volume with a generous number of plates, although only one of them, the frontispiece (reproduced even more faithfully on the jacket) is in color. . . . Mr. Hoffer has made a detailed chronological study of some 3500 Lear drawings in his own and the Harvard collections and draws his conclusions basically from them and from the thirty volumes of Lear's diaries also at Harvard. . . . [He gives a] thorough analysis of Lear as a landscape draftsman."

Yale R 57:XXIV Mr '68 700w

HOFF, RHODA, comp. America's immigrants; adventures in eyewitness history. 156p $4 Walck, H.Z.

325.73 U.S.—Immigration and emigration 67-19923

This is a "collection of the writings of immigrants and their contemporaries from the end of the 18th century to the recent past. Each selection is introduced briefly by the author. These excerpts from letters, diaries, documents, and biographical works are balanced between the censorious and the laudatory and distributed among many nationalities." (Library J) Bibliography.

Best Sell 27:430 F 1 '68 100w [YA]

Horn Bk 44:193 Ap '68 150w

"This book should be an important supplement to such standard works on immigrants as K. B. Shippen's Passage to America [BRD 1950] and F. Cavanah's We Came to America [BRD 1955]. . . . The immediacy of and interest in history in the making insure the book's being read, and today's emphasis on primary resources will heighten its usefulness in all libraries serving young people." Bernice Levine Library J 93:305 Ja 15 '68 140w [YA]

"[In this anthology] more than 40 immigrants of the 19th and 20th centuries give eloquent testimony of their experiences. . . . Of particular relevance to labor history is a Lithuanian slaughterhouse worker's description of the conditions that caused him to join the union; a Viennese coat presser's account of a strike in the garment industry in 1913, and reproductions of circulars published in Hong Kong in the 1860's to recruit Chinese for the American railroad labor force." A. H. Raskin

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 28 '68 90w [YA]

HOFFER, CHARLES R. The understanding of music. 483p il col il $10.60; text ed $7.95 Wadsworth pub.

780.1 Music—Analysis, appreciation 67-14245

"The first four of the seventeen chapters form an introductory unit in which Hoffer treats aesthetics, listening techniques, basic musical materials, and the nature of musical performance. . . . The next ten chapters are a chronologically arranged survey of music from Gregorian chant to the twentieth century, with special chapters on chamber music, Beethoven, and the opera in addition to the more general historical surveys of the basic style periods. . . . The last three chapters deal with modern music, the central chapter treating American music specifically, including music of the past, folk music, jazz, commercial music, and musical comedy in addition to a section on the principal composers of serious music." (Music Lib Assn Notes) Index.

"From the outset Hoffer has aimed his materials at the musically unsophisticated student. . . . The language is generally accessible, the selection of topics . . . is intelligently accomplished and the emphasis on listening, even in the face of much factual material, is successfully realized. The careful teacher and student, however, will have difficulty with glaring errors, particularly when reference to the excerpted score is made from Hoffer's comments about the music. There are, in addition, numerous misstatements of facts. . . . Also, how much better it would be to have the beautiful color plates placed in historical context with the written material."

Choice 5:352 My '68 180w

"This is an excellent book. . . . Professor Hoffer employs a writing style that is conversational, without being common, and he shows a keen sense of discrimination in selecting, balancing, and interrelating his materials. . . . His discussion of the financial problems of the composer, performer, and performing organization, the role of the critic, and the role of the public school music education help make the world of the musician more immediate to the reader. . . . The analyses themselves are neither merely descriptive nor structurally formal, but are presented in terms of the psychology of the listening process . . . well. . . . Flaws are few and of minimal importance." Leo Kreter

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:721 Je '68 600w

HOFFMAN, DANIEL. Striking the stones; poems. 86p $4.50 Oxford

811

68-18564

This is the author's fourth collection of poems. Some of them have appeared in Antioch Review, Encounter, Hudson Review and other literary journals. For his earlier collection The City Satisfactions see BRD 1964.

"Mr. Hoffman is self-consciously American, especially in the first poems in which his tone and diction demolish the American concept of progress by mechanization and dehumanization. This group of poems is countered by a large group about nature and the little things of nature. The collection concludes with some poems on poetry and on love. The book is highly recommended for interested readers and for modern poetry collections." T. E. Luddy Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 190w

"Some of [these] pieces seem at first tangential and ever so slight, yet they have a purity of movement quite their own. 'A Marriage,' for instance, discovers a finely serious speaking tone to get at the sense of what good married love means. . . . 'Testament' [is] perhaps the most effective [poem] in the book."

In a poem like this Hoffman does the unlikely so simply and gracefully that one can only wonder when he permits himself to publish work that is less sensitive to its own materials and direction." M. L. Rosenthal

Sat R 51:72 Je 22 '68 300w

Va Q R 44:cl autumn '68 250w

HOFFMAN, FREDERICK J. The art of Southern fiction; a study of some modern novelists; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 198p $4.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

813 American fiction—History and criticism 67-21039

"The main purpose of this book," Hoffman says, "is to put William Faulkner aside for a while and to give readers a chance to look at a few of the distinguished contemporaries or near-contemporaries." (Choice) Index.

"[The author] makes it quite clear that he intends to deal mainly with younger, strictly contemporary writers of fiction in the modern South. Although some of these, like Katherine Anne Porter and Robert Penn Warren, are veteran writers of established position, he is less interested in them than he is in James Agee, Eudora Welty, Flannery O'Connor, Carson McCullers, and especially William Styron. Within its rather strait limits, this is a useful book. Often the comments on such younger writers as William Humphrey, Shirley Ann Grau, Reynolds Price, and William Goyen break new ground and reveal unsuspected riches, although the comments on established writers like Porter, Warren, Gordon, and Lytle tend to follow the well-marked patterns." E. W. Parks Am Lit 40:257 My '68 450w

"Unfortunately, because of his failure to define Southern fiction very satisfactorily in Chapter I and to maintain any unifying thread in his later chapters, Hoffman's evaluations and interpretations, incisive as they may be, remain only disconnected (and often derivative) insights into individual writers rather than a cohesive overview of a regional art form. . . . Index is incomplete and inconsistent."

Choice 5:342 My '68 200w

"[The author] has entered the field of Southern studies with a balanced and intelligent look at several of the modern writers of the South." Va Q R 44:xxiv winter '68 110w

HOFFMAN, FREDERICK J. The imagination's new beginning; theology and modern literature. 105p $3.25 Univ. of Notre Dame press

809.9 Religion in literature. Literature—History and criticism 67-12121

The author of The Mortal No (BRD 1964) "investigates the relation between theology and modern literature [in] four lectures given at the University of Notre Dame. [The book] is a continuation and elaboration of some of [his] earlier works and like them is concerned with literary and moral phenomena common to 20th-Century culture. He has chosen for analysis authors who have themselves studied the relation between religion and culture, between religious emotion and religious systems, and between enlightenment and disillusionment." (Library J) Index.

"A refreshingly new look at the relationship of theology and modern literature. Hoffman is not a theologian but a literary critic whose study of modern literature has compelled him to speak explicitly about the contemporary religious crisis. . . . Although he refers briefly and in a very general way to the 'older' generation of theologians—Tillich and Bultmann—his method of thinking about religion in a post-Christian world would find a more congenial context in the more recent death-of-God theology. . . . On a fairly popular level, less concerned with formal theological doctrines than many such works are, the book should be of interest to any serious student of modern literature."

Choice 4:1231 Ja '68 180w

"[The author] glances briefly at images of the Incarnation in modern poetry from Baudelaire through Stevens. . . . [then] concentrates on Joyce's Stephen Dedalus and his search for a rhetoric. . . . [and discusses] Dostoevsky and Kazantzakis, and their wrestling with the Christian myth. The Idiot and The Last Temptation of Christ are the touchstones used to illustrate the types of Christ figures in modern literature. The fourth section makes certain judgments about the American scene and examines two rather unlikely bedfellows, Henry Adams' Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres and Faulkner's A Fable. . . . The 'texts' Hoffman chooses to illustrate the types of religious imbalance are remarkably varied. . . . He [also] uses works of painting and architecture to illumine novels. . . . [The book, which] abounds in sober judgments and tasteful responses to the artistic experience [should] be read only after The Mortal No." M. J. Friedman

Commonweal 87:217 N 17 '67 900w

"The four lectures in the book deal with the general nature of religion and culture; with a study of Joyce's struggle with theology and with his provincial culture; with the dramatization in literature of Christ's death and its emotional impact; and with a study of the relationships between man's interest in religious monuments of the past and his sense of a lack of taste and culture in the present. Recommended for religious and literary collections in both academic and public libraries." J. M. Christ

Library J 92:2159 Je 1 '67 150w

HOFFMAN, LYNN, jt. auth. Techniques of family therapy. See Haley, J.

HOFFMAN, MARTIN. The gay world; male homosexuality and the social creation of evil. 212p $5.95 Basic bks.

$01.41 Homosexuality 68-54131

The author, "a social psychiatrist, aided by a National Institute of Mental Health grant, studied the male homosexual community in the San Francisco Bay area for three years. His subtitle reveals his conclusion: homosexuality does not necessarily indicate mental illness, and much of American society's difficulty with homosexuals arises from society's treatment of them. . . . His suggested solution is that society recognize homosexuals as a minority group, entitled to the same legal rights and social privileges. . . . [as] other minority groups." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Sally Poundstone

Library J 93:3114 S 15 '68 160w

"The significant new element which Hoffman adds . . . is not so much his clear discussion of classic homosexual behavior—the gay bars, the pickup places in the cities, the mechanics of homosexual sex—but his careful elucidation of patterns of homosexual preference and behavior that are hidden below the surface of society. . . . [and] then delivers what, to the uninitiated reader, will seem like the most 'unthinkable' thought of all. This is that sexuality . . . is not inherited but is acquired from environmental experience." T. G. Plate

Newsweek 72:108 O 14 '68 600w

HOFFMAN, RICHARD L. Ovid and the Canterbury tales. 217p il $6 Univ. of Pa. press

821 Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso). Chaucer, Geoffrey—The Canterbury tales 67-17174

The author's thesis is that "Ovid not only shaped Chaucer's verse, but that the Fasti provided the concept of 'twin loves' which is the controlling theme of the Canterbury Tales. . . . He concludes that Chaucer knew all of Ovid's work in detail and was deeply influenced by [it] and that the Metamorphoses especially served him as a handbook of mythology. Above all, Hoffman believes that Chaucer regarded Ovid as an ethical philosopher, prizing him for his moral meaning." (Class World) Bibliography.

"Exhaustive and detailed, this study . . . [proves that] Chaucer knew his Ovid and carried him into his most engaging work. Hoffman's book should be the final word on the subject and is therefore recommended to the advanced student. The footnotes are weighty and complete, and the bibliography is useful. The listing of allusions; the speculation, well founded, that Chaucer learned narrative technique and a good deal of his mythology from the Metamorphosis; the evidence of the dependence on the Ovidian ethos—these are presented intelligently and with a conviction that convinces. If there is a dissertation cast to the study, this should not prevent the deserved absorption in the valuable insights."

Choice 4:1242 Ja '68 130w

"Hoffman examines the Tales thoroughly, showing how Ovidian echoes and parallels are to be found throughout. . . . He has examined every pertinent allusion in order to determine whether it is immediately related to Ovid or derived through the interpretations by standard medieval commentators. . . . This study is an interesting blend of the examination of sources and the tracing of the genealogy of Chaucer's imagery." Louis Zocca

Class World 61:117 N '67 240w

HOFFMAN, WILLIAM S. The loser [by] William S. Hoffman, Jr. 213p $4.95 Funk

B or 92 Gambling 67-30573

"The author of this book is on the lam and this is the story of how it all happened. A brilliant young man of twenty-nine, earning over 20 grand a year, 'husband to a wife he adores,' father of four healthy children, suddenly one day starts writing bum checks and gambling every cent he can get his hands on. To escape prosecution he runs away. He runs away to Las Vegas, Churchill Downs, the card gaming houses of California and keeps writing bad checks. Hating it all the way, he tells us. . . . He goes back to work at three different jobs at one time. . . . At the end of the book he is again on the lam, again writing bum checks." (Book World)

"Hoffman is the man's name and he has written this book as a mea culpa. But while he is beating his breast with his right hand he is most subtly and unconsciously picking your pocket with his left. And it is exactly this that makes his book fascinating reading instead of the usual confessional cop-out. . . . As it is, the work is powerful, without a trace of self-pity. . . . The prose is only a cut above journalistic and yet it has a curious power that stems, I think, from Hoffman's powerfully artistic mind. His selection of incident, certain technical moves, the merciless dispassion with which he writes about himself, all combine to give the impression of a first-rate talent. Anyway, this is a book to read." Mario Puzo

Book World p4 My 26 '68 1000w

"This shocking autobiography could not be better named. It is the story of a compulsive gambler who, to support his habit, became what is known in low circles as a paperhanger—a passer of bum checks. . . . Women will damn William S. Hoffman, Jr. Personable, a graduate of St. Louis University, he quit a fine job with a Chicago insurance company . . . to go off on a check-writing and gambling tear. . . . Amid his colorful accounts of triumphs and disasters at gaming, Hoffman inserts recollections of his youth which throw light on what must be called his weaknesses. . . . It seems clear that Hoffman, like many rejected children, desperately sought attention, even in the form of angry pursuit. He might even have relished punishment—certainly he was not unduly disturbed when he was arrested, for no offense, in Mexico and found himself in a crowded jail cell ankle-deep in ordure. . . . Whatever his faults, he has written a fascinating story." Rex Lardner

HOFFMAN, W. S.—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p42 Ap 21 '68 850w

"[This] book, which is quite well written, gives a wonderful picture of the strange underworld of gambling, and some insight into the minds of those who have devised perhaps the most complicated and mentally painful way of committing suicide."

New Yorker 44:146 Je 8 '68 110w

HOFFMANN, STANLEY. Gulliver's troubles; or, The setting of American foreign policy; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 556p $11.95 McGraw

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations 68-13516

Based on lectures delivered at the Council on Foreign Relations in April-May 1965, this book is "a criticism of U.S. foreign policy. . . . While not unsympathetic with President Johnson's objectives in Viet-Nam, [Hoffmann] disapproves of the Americanization of the war which prevented the establishment of a viable, representative non-Communist regime. [He] favors less U.S. involvement in Europe, preceded by a U.S.-Soviet mutual disengagement pact." (Choice) Index.

"A brilliantly interesting book . . . [Hoffmann] would like to see an American foreign policy that is a little less ideological in content, a little more coherent in its choice of objectives and a little more skillfully handled at the bureaucratic level. . . . Much of what Hoffmann has to say applies to any foreign policy, and, inasmuch as his book gives the impression that America is peculiarly unsuited to formulate foreign policy, it is misleading. But he does make many shrewd points about Washington's characteristic mistakes. . . . If [his] book manages to correct some distortions and failures of comprehension, it will be a helpful, as well as subtle and interesting addition to a continuing debate. But it will be of little help if it simply contributes to a general loss of nerve." Anthony Hartley

Book World p10 My 12 '68 700w

"The merit of this book lies in its close analysis of various facets of U.S. policies, but only specialists will plow through over 500 pages of such detail. Other works, such as McCarthy, The Limits of Power and Fulbright, The Arrogance of Power [both in BRD 1967], have said much the same in fewer words."

Choice 5:681 Jl '68 140w

"An expert performance, complex, subtle, thorough. . . . The best part of it covers the recent past, a fine diplomatic history of the Cold War years. But the book is also prescriptive, making a careful plea for a change in U.S. policy vis-a-vis Europe. . . . [However] Mr. Hoffmann tends to speak of nations as if they were abstract entities with coherent and unified wills. . . . Yet the reality of modern history is that even apparently stable nations change internally, change drastically, and thereby change their foreign policies. . . . Matters of foreign policy should be discussed in a somewhat larger historical context than Mr. Hoffmann's specialized approach permits." Irving Howe

Harper 237:100 Jl '68 800w

"In a long section, almost an appendage, on 'the Atlantic puzzle,' this eloquent exponent of Gaullism puts current French policy into a lucid, unemotional perspective, and explains why Gaullism is likely to long outlive the General. . . . There is no one in America today who understands French policy so well as Stanley Hoffmann. . . . Gulliver's Troubles is sweeping in conception, if conservative in its conclusions, and is a major work of analysis. The section on America's 'national style' is particularly brilliant." Ronald Steel

N Y Rev of Books 11:3 S 12 '68 750w

HOFFMANN, WERNER. Expressionist watercolors, 1905-1920. 101p pl col pl $20 Abrams 759.06 Expressionism (Art). Water colors 67-25288

The author's theory of the development of Expressionism "leads to his division of Expressionism into two stages. He contrasts Impressionists of 'the innocent eye' with those who give a primitive, emotional revelation of 'the ferment, the fear, the fruitfulness of life.' He has selected 16 artists; one drawing and one watercolor are reproduced from the work of each. Chagall, Marin, Kokoschka, Rouault, Klee, and Picasso are included with others more obviously expressionistic." (Library J) Originally published in 1966 as Aquarelle des Expressionismus, 1905-1920.

"A special feature of the book is that four of the reproductions have been made detachable and two slip-in frames have been provided so that the pictures can be studied at leisure. . . . The essay that introduces the pictures searches with some success for basic features of Expressionist art. But the organization of the book seems almost fortuitous. There is no discernible reason why certain artists were included . . . while others were not. . . . Also the work which is most exhaustively analyzed in the introductory essay (and that analysis is crucial to the point of the essay) is presented in a small black-and-white reproduction, while other works that are barely mentioned in the essay are shown in large color reproductions. Not recommended for college libraries."

Choice 5:42 Mr '68 230w

"Recommended for large academic and public libraries with ample budgets." Delores McCollm
Library J 92:4494 D 15 '67 130w

"The quality [of this book] is exceptionally good. . . . [It] absorbs [and] feasts the eye, sharpening the appreciation and extending the experience of [those] who open [it]." J. H. Plumb

Sat R 50:35 N 25 '67 90w

HOFSINDE, ROBERT. Indian costumes; written and il. by Robert Hofsinde (Gray-Wolf). 94p $2.95; lib bdg $2.94 Morrow

970.6 Indians of North America—Costume and adornment—Juvenile literature 68-11895

This book describes everyday, ceremonial and battle dress worn by the Apache, Blackfeet, Crow, Iroquois, Navaho, Northwest Coast Indians, Ojibwa, Pueblo, Seminole and Sioux Indians. Index.

"The decorations extend to tribal paints on the face and body as well as clothes and Indian ponies. Many of these can be duplicated by youngsters, especially on a rainy day when a little makeup would be a welcome relief for mother—in place of the normal war dance." R. C. Bergenheim

Christian Science Monitor pB7 My 2 '68 100w

"The thoroughness with which Hofsinde explores things like beadwork, tattooing and body-painting customs, hair styles, etc., makes this a useful reference book for all ages." Paul Walker

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p38 My 5 '68 80w

HOFSTADTER, RICHARD. The progressive historians; Turner, Beard, Parrington. 498p pl $8.95 Knopf

920 Turner, Frederick Jackson. Beard, Charles Austin. Parrington, Vernon Louis 68-23944

This book "assesses the ideas and contributions of three major interpretive historians of the United States in the twentieth century, Frederick Jackson Turner, Charles A. Beard, and V. L. Parrington. These men . . . provided the Progressive movement with a usable past and the American liberal mind with a historical tradition. [The book is] a critique of historical thought during this . . . period of American development, and an account of how these three writers led American historians into the controversial political world of the twentieth century." (Publisher's note) Portions of the book were first given as lectures or published in periodicals. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"In a brief but highly suggestive opening chapter, Hofstadter delineates the character of the historical enterprise in America before the progressive historians came on the scene. . . . There follow three long, subtle and searching essays on the great progressive historians—essays which in their skillful interweaving of biography and analysis should serve as models for historiographical writing. Hofstadter sees his subjects in relation not only to their historical ideas but to their families, their education, their jobs, their colleagues, their politics, and their temperaments. . . . Hofstadter writes about them with a personal sympathy which makes his critical reservations all the more convincing. . . . One cannot end without mentioning the extraordinary grace and felicity of Hofstadter's own sensibility and style. . . . This is a distinguished book about distinguished historians by a distinguished historian." Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Book World p6 O 27 '68 1800w

Christian Century 85:1374 O 30 '68 60w

"The tone of the study is evaluative and critical, but mildly sympathetic. In addition to summarizing criticisms by other writers, Mr. Hofstadter makes a distinct contribution with his own incisive analyses of his subjects. With his background chapters . . . and with his crisp survey of the subject since 1950, he has united the three studies into a comprehensive whole. This study is at once both readable and scholarly—a rare combination in this particular field. It is recommended for major libraries." Elmer Johnson

Library J 93:3556 O 1 '68 140w

"[This] is at once the most engaging and most dissatisfying of Hofstadter's books. For all their insight and warmth, Hofstadter's detailed portraits of the Progressive historians seem bland and slightly pointless. . . . He saves his interpretative framework for a brief final chapter, 'Conflict and Consensus in American History,' in which the contemporary message of his book becomes unmistakably clear—he is preaching a gentle jeremiad against the simple-minded history of his Progressive predecessors and of his New Left heirs. . . . One doesn't know whether to be glad or sad that Hofstadter treats the past more gently, now that he is even more fearful for the present." Robert Sklar

Nation 207:533 N 18 '68 1100w

Reviewed by D. M. Potter

N Y Rev of Books 11:46 D 5 '68 2200w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin

N Y Times Bk R p28 N 17 '68 1200w

New Yorker 44:64 D 28 '68 80w

"Part biography, part intellectual history, part scholarly polemic, the volume is a sharp but generous inquiry into the underlying conceptions of American history and the reasons for writing it. . . . In trying to fix his trio in a modern perspective and yet do them justice, Hofstadter does not evade criticism. He is often at his best when throwing a few darts. . . . Historical scholarship today tends to be scrupulous, painstaking, neutral, but narrow in scope. Subscribing to this trend, Hofstadter yet betrays an admiration for the progressive historians' belief that history should not merely examine the past but help shape the future."

Time 92:103 O 25 '68 1700w

HOFSTADTER, RICHARD, ed. Turner and the sociology of the frontier; ed. by Richard Hofstadter and Seymour Martin Lipset. 232p $5.95 Basic bks.

978.072 Turner, Frederick Jackson—The significance of the frontier in American history. U.S.—History—Philosophy. National characteristics, American. Frontier and pioneer life—The West 68-22859

A collection of papers "critical of the 'frontier theory' espoused by Frederick Jackson Turner in 1893 [in his book The Significance of the Frontier in American History]." (Library J) Most of the material in this book appeared previously in such periodicals as the New England Quarterly, American Quarterly and Political Science Quarterly. Index.

"[The editors] have collected the best of a vast literature on the Turner thesis, particularly in regard to the Turnerian notion that certain repetitive economic and sociological processes shaped institutions and men in the American environment. The well written introductions by Hofstadter and Lipset should aid greatly all students of U.S. history. . . . Unlike some collections of scholarly articles, the original footnotes are published, giving valuable aid to the student. The book is a must item for any library."

Choice 5:1334 D '68 140w

"An English professor, a geographer, sociologist, and three economists join with historians in these pages to argue the merits and demerits of [Turner's "frontier theory."] But there is no editorial synthesis of the divergent views. One has to turn to R. A. Billington's America's Frontier Heritage [BRD 1967] for that assistance. . . . The Turner thesis has to be dealt with if one wishes to comprehend more fully the American national experience. This book provides fodder for such thought." D. B. Nunis

Library J 93:2016 My 15 '68 250w

"Unfortunately, this is not a careful production. The historiographical introduction by Hofstadter provides only a casual summary. The brief sociological appraisal by Lipset simply repeats some material just published in a longer article under another title in a different book. There is no bibliography, nor do the editors venture any estimate of the present state of the question. Indeed, the true role of the frontier, its real importance in American experience, is not what primarily interests them. They have brought together some recent interpretations of the frontier to illustrate a fruitful convergence between history and sociology." John Higham

N Y Rev of Books 10:10 Ap 25 '68 1250w

HOGAN, ROBERT. After the Irish renaissance; a critical history of the Irish drama since The Plough and the stars. 282p il $6.95 Univ. of Minn. press

822 Irish drama—History and criticism

67-20595

"This account of contemporary Irish drama provides critical introductions to some thirty or forty playwrights who have worked in Ireland since 1926. . . . The author also discusses the Abbey Theatre's recent history, the Gate Theatre, Longford Productions, the theatre in Ulster, and the Dublin International Theatre Festival." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Prof. Hogan, of the University of California at Davis, . . . has surveyed almost all the dramatists of any importance who worked in the Irish theatre during the past 40 years; and his researches provide us with a valuable insight into an area of literary achievement unknown to or ignored by most scholars. . . . A valuable book, this, for the historian of the theatre, for the scholar, and for those of us, who like Prof. Hogan, have found much to admire in Irish drama over the past several decades. A somewhat dogmatic ('I like this and dislike that') attitude, and a tendency to distribute superlatives rather freely do not take away anything of importance from what is a superb achievement." S. P. Ryan

America 118:120 Ja 17 '68 550w

"Much of the information in [this book] just isn't available elsewhere. . . . Many of Hogan's critical assessments pioneer new territory. No previous book has examined the entire career of Fitzmaurice or discussed the work of Paul Vincent Carroll and Denis Johnston at such length. Much has already been written about Brendan Behan and Sean O'Casey, but the personal warmth and original critical insights of Hogan's chapters place them among the best available short studies of these writers." Vivian Mercier

Book World p6 S 8 '68 700w

Economist 228:49 Jl 27 '68 450w

Reviewed by M. H. Zipprich

Library J 93:770 F 15 '68 150w

"Virtually anyone who has written a play in Ireland since 1926 is mentioned, offered, often praised. But there is no discrimination. Mr. Hogan . . . is evidently enamoured of modern Irish drama, so the differences between good, bad, and indifferent are rarely acknowledged. The plays themselves are often discussed as if the question of their merit were incidental. So far as information goes, the book is fairly accurate. There are errors, but they are not important."

TLS p746 Jl 18 '68 600w

HOGAN, ROBERT, ed. Seven Irish plays, 1946-1964; ed. with an introd. by Robert Hogan. 472p $10 Univ. of Minn. press

822 Irish drama—Collections

67-20594

"Only three of these plays have been previously published, and they were issued only in Ireland [in acting editions]. . . . The plays published here are The Visiting House by Michael Molloy, Design for a Headstone by Seamus Byrne, Song of the Anvil by Bryan MacMahon, Copperfaced Jack by John O'Donovan, Sharon's Grave and Many Young Men of Twenty, both by John B. Keane, and The Ice Goddess by James Douglas. In a general introduction the editor traces the history of Irish drama from the turn of the century to the present. . . . He also provides a separate introduction for each of the playwrights whose work is included and a glossary of Irish words and phrases which occur frequently in the plays." (Publisher's note)

HOGAN, ROBERT—Continued

Reviewed by Vivian Mercier
Book World p6 S 8 '68 240w

"Douglas' The Ice Goddess is the most recent of the plays, the most bleakly modern the least specifically Irish, and perhaps the least exciting. What one appreciates about the others is their robust, sprawling, talkative, compassionate, rebellious liveliness. Clumsily, even carelessly, the editor manages to give a useful survey of Irish dramatic activity since World War II, introducing us not only to the dramatists represented in the collection but also to many others important in Ireland but little known elsewhere. The best possible answer to the question, what's happened to Irish drama since O'Casey?"

Choice 5:1322 D '68 210w

"In an excellent introduction Mr. Hogan gives a . . . history of the Abbey Theater . . . [and] includes an account of famous playwrights connected with the theater—Padraic Colum, Brian Friel, St. John Ervine, Sean O'Casey, Vincent Carroll, and Brendan Behan to mention a few—along with such well-known performers as Barry Fitzgerald, Sara Allgood, Walter Macken, and Arthur Shields. . . . Many of the playwrights presented are little known outside of Ireland, but all of them show talent and originality. Since there is always a play-reading public, this volume is recommended." M. H. Zipprich

Library J 93:770 F 15 '68 150w

"In a comprehensive introduction . . . Hogan, who is associate professor of English at the University of California, writes with undeterred enthusiasm, although none of the dramas has been an outstanding success on the stage. He regards The King of Friday's Men by Michael Molloy as a masterpiece and regrets that the Broadway production lasted only four nights. . . . Many of the plays deal with comedy themes and the influence of Synge persists, for better or worse, in their style."

TLS p673 Je 27 '68 600w

HOGG, BETH (TOOTILL). See Grey, E.

HOGNER, DOROTHY CHILDS. Weeds; il. by Nils Hogner. 117p $3.95 Crowell

632 Weeds—Juvenile literature 68-11065

"After defining a weed and stating where and how it grows, Mrs. Hogner describes over 40 land and water weeds, their habitats, origins and relatives. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by Gillian Charters

Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68 130w

"[This book is written] in a clear and interesting manner. [The author] shows just why these plants are pests and how they can be controlled. Much more information about the individual plants is given here than in The First Book of Weeds by [B. L.] Beck [BRD 1963]. The format is attractive and the black-and-white drawings are accurate." A. D. Schweibish

Library J 93:2113 My 15 '68 80w

HOHENBERG, JOHN. The news media: a journalist looks at his profession. 320p $6.95 Holt 071 Journalism 68-17547

"This book examines the principal problems of the newspapers, wire services, news magazines, radio, and television news coverage in the United States. It considers the ethical responsibility of the journalist and the influence of his outlook on society, his duties to the nation in time of crisis, his very reasons for existence as an independent force in an open society." (Publisher's note)

"Hohenberg presents his observations as a working journalist and teacher of journalism over a period of more than 25 years. [His] scholarly and well-documented study . . . provides excellent reading for all those already engaged in the profession and is necessary reading for all students of journalism. Highly recommended for college and university libraries wherever journalism is part of the curriculum and for large public libraries." S. J. Riccardi

Library J 93:2871 Ag '68 110w

Reviewed by Ben Bagdikian

New Repub 159:29 Ag 31 '68 1050w

"Against today's priorities, with the broad overview of his professorship at the Columbia School of Journalism, Hohenberg re-examines the theory and practice of news-gathering. . . . Detached, professorial, and offering many insights, this book ranges over the whole terrain, rather generally, of present-day journalism and pinpoints some of the soft spots—credibility gaps, news management, opinion manipulation, 'herd' coverage (when all the microphone lines and camera cords get tangled up), 'giantism' in journalism (the mound of paper left on the doorstep on Sunday morning). The text of the sermon—and Hohenberg takes a pretty firm stance in the pulpit—is the individual journalist's responsibility." S. W. Little

Sat R 51:78 Je 8 '68 440w

HOLBROOK, DAVID. The exploring word; creative disciplines in the education of teachers of English. 283p $8.50; pa $2.75 Cambridge 420.7 English language—Study and teaching [66-24114]

An "examination of present-day methods of training teachers of English in English colleges of education, leading to suggestions for change. Mr Holbrook asks: what qualifications does a teacher of English need? He answers: ability to read well and sympathetically, whether it is the work of a great poet or the work of a child. . . . Present-day courses at colleges of education . . . are usually too centred on an examination; the examination too centred on covering an ambitious syllabus in 'Eng. Lit'. Too much examination work consists of regurgitating old essays, which were themselves compiled from lecture notes. Mr Holbrook [answers]: . . . scrap the present examinations altogether; turn to better ways of assessment; reconsider the student's actual needs and future methods of work; use the seminar instead of the lecture; overhaul the syllabus radically; always keep in mind the aim of the whole process." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Teaching teachers to teach English is a difficult but creative assignment. [Holbrook's] suggestions, meant for a system somewhat different from the U.S., have some value as a new approach to the problem."

Choice 4:1424 F '68 120w

Reviewed by J. S. Katz

Harvard Ed R 33:205 winter '68 1750w

"I disagree heartily with [Holbrook's] specific suggestions for changes in schools of education and in the classroom. For it becomes evident that, although he purports to object to a dependence on literary critics by teachers-in-training, what he is really objecting to is the reliance on particular critics. . . . [He] also eliminates many writers as unworthy of attention. He focuses his approval on Blake, Coleridge, and D. H. Lawrence. . . . He excoriates Beckett and speaks condescendingly of Fry, Ionesco, Bolt, Osborne, and Brecht. Mr. Holbrook's judgments on literary works are very definite. . . . I don't doubt Mr. Holbrook's sincerity or his skill.

The first half of the book, in which Mr. Holbrook defines the problem, is a cogent and sensitive presentation. More than that, it is an impassioned plea for encouraging and building creativity. But the second half, which is presented as the solution, does not serve." Shelly Halpern

Record 69:806 My '68 2150w

"In all David Holbrook's books on education the underlying cry is for creativity in teaching, the stimulation of human beings rather than the manufacture of telly watchers. He uses as evidence for his arguments . . . the words of teachers and the children themselves, quoted at length as they write or speak. . . . When public discussion of teachers centres mainly on their salaries, it is indeed refreshing to find someone intelligently looking at the way they are taught to do their jobs, and re-defining the nature of their work. As ever Mr. Holbrook is definite and sweeping in his approach. . . . It is easy to quarrel with the details of his syllabi . . . but his general strictures are worth having."

TLS p622 Jl 13 '67 320w

HOLCOMBE, ARTHUR N. A strategy of peace in a changing world. 332p $7.95 Harvard univ. press

341.1 International organization. Peace 67-27085

"A collection of articles, papers, and lectures, with introductory commentary, on the subject of world peace. . . . In Part One . . . the author discusses national as opposed to worldwide interests, and analyzes the changes wrought in presidential decision-making and discretionary authority by the increasing impact of foreign affairs. In Part Two . . . he treats the organization of interstate peace under a federal constitution. . . . Part Three . . . contains an outline of the beliefs and activities of the late publisher, Edwin Ginn, chief architect . . . [of] the World Peace Foundation. The author discusses Mr. Ginn's, as well as his own, ideas on how an organized peace might be realized and [maintained]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Many of the ideas in this book are reverberations from the thinking of Edward Ginn, a wealthy book publisher, who [endowed the World Peace Foundation]. . . . Holcombe, professor emeritus of the science of government at Harvard, has drawn together a number of his [own] past writings and added some fresh material to synthesize his ideas on world government. He returns time and again to the tests that Edward Ginn indicated in his will for determining whether or not a stable peace has been established. Obviously the conclusions are not optimistic, but, according to Professor Holcombe, a renewed United Nations could provide the mechanism for stability. His book is recommended for comprehensive political science collections." W. E. Osgood

Library J 92:3648 O 15 '67 140w

"[The discussions here] prove conclusively that intergovernmental organization will not be able to maintain peace unless governments give up to it enough of their own sovereignty. Yet Holcombe does not advocate world government in a form that would irritate anyone but a card-carrying Bircher. . . . The author is frank about his disillusionment and honest in his criticism." C. A. Hogan

Sat R 51:27 Mr 2 '68 340w

HOLLAND, CECILIA. The kings in winter. 208p $5.75 Atheneum pubs.

68-12541

An historical novel by the author of The Firedrake (BRD 1966) and Rakossy (BRD 1967). "This time, the hero is Muirtagh the harper, chief of the Cullinane clan, who abandons his Irish title when King Brian Boru refuses to help him in a blood feud with the MacMahons. Muirtagh becomes an outlaw, joins the King of Leinster and the invading Danes, and fights against the Irish at the Battle of Clontarf (Easter 1014) where he is taken prisoner by his son." (Library J)

"[This novel] has pace and movement; it is a stylish tour-de-force which recaptures admirably the last days of Gaelic greatness in Ireland; and it mirrors more than adequately the events of actual history. Only in her portrayal of Brian Boru does Miss Holland seemingly break with the verdict of professional historians; he emerges in her novel as a something less than completely admirable figure. . . . Highly recommended as a major entry into the field of historical fiction." S. P. Ryan

Best Sell 27:451 Mr 1 '68 450w

Reviewed by Robert Granat

Book World p14 Mr 3 '68 410w

"This is another of Cecilia Holland's lethargic novels about a sensitive hero who is a minor participant in a major historic event. . . . Not much can save this novel: the prose is laconic, the characters are wooden while their names are unpronounceable, and the plot is soporific. Altogether, an undernourished tale at an overinflated price." T. L. Vince

Library J 92:4523 D 15 '67 130w

"Although some geographical confusion and a spattering of Gaelic words and names are mildly distracting, the tale drives ahead with many a grim episode and many a fine evocation of contemporary thought, emotion and codes of conduct. . . . In Muirtagh The O'Cullinane, the author has created a more complex character than any of those in her first two books. Her knowledge of the ways of primitive, violent men is impressive. . . . [This book] is a considerable achievement [although] it lacks the grandeur of conception that distinguishes the finest historical fiction of the last few decades." Orville Prescott

N Y Times Bk R p36 Ja 28 '68 650w

Reviewed by Eric Moon

Sat R 51:29 Ja 27 '68 650w

TLS p913 Ag 29 '68 430w

Va Q R 44:cli summer '68 80w

HOLLAND, KEVIN CROSSLEY-. See Crossley-Holland, K.

HOLLANDER, EDWIN P. Principles and methods of social psychology. 520p il $8 Oxford.

301.1 Social psychology

67-15127

In this introduction to social psychology the author surveys "historical and methodological perspectives, personality development, attitude acquisition and change, language development, group dynamics, conformity, and leadership. . . . [He notes that] the book's approach is primarily person-centered but also integrative in attempting to bring together contemporary emphases on cognition, the perceptual features of interaction, and concepts of social reward and exchange to explain social behavior." (Am Soc R) Bibliography.

"Since the development of personality, including interpersonal, subcultural, and cultural influences, is the topic which receives the single most extensive treatment, the text will probably appeal most to instructors who share this bias. . . . Liberal use is made of graphic summaries of relevant research results. . . . The book shares with contemporary texts a lack of critical concern with the general magnitude of the empirical findings reported. . . . Unfortunately, the student presented with a number of empirical results often gains the impression that the phenomena in question have been largely predicted or controlled when, in fact, the total amount of explained variation is often small and occasionally negligible." D. R. Schmitt

Am Soc R 33:170 F '68 310w

"As a standard textbook, Hollander's book has much that recommends it. . . . It is very well organized, presenting as much as possible of the discipline within the framework of a single theme: the study of 'social influence.' . . . For the student who wishes to read further, suggestions are made at the end of each chapter; books available in paperback are asterisked. . . . The book's disadvantages revolve primarily around the fact that it is a brief survey of the entire field. All topics have been treated too cursorily. . . . Explanations are in general too brief and too facile. Frequently, the book announces that it is about to make sense of something, and then proceeds only to mention that thing in a slightly different context and without real clarification." Peter Gumpert

Record 69:726 Ap '68 1100w

HOLLERMAN, LEON. Japan's dependence on the world economy; the approach toward economic liberalization. 291p $7.50 Princeton univ. press

382 Japan—Commercial policy. Japan—Economic development 66-26586

An examination of "the relationship between foreign trade and economic development in general and . . . [an] analysis of Japan's industrial structure. Hollerman (Claremont) spent two years in Japan studying . . . the economy and the impact of the 1964 crisis. . . . [He] develops a hypothesis of 'supply-oriented exports' which tries to explain the growing role of trade with the Western world, especially with the U. S. He describes the high level of fixed costs in the so called 'new' industries, especially in chemical and machinery production, and points out a large part of the labor force is now engaged on a 'life-time basis.'" (Choice) Index.

"An excellent study. . . . Future research will benefit from the wealth of statistical material imaginatively presented here. Supplements the findings of a study by Huh, Japan's Trade in Asia [BRD 1968], which discussed the relative decline of Japan's imports from ECAFE countries."

Choice 5:234 Ap '68 190w

HOLLERMAN, LEON—Continued

"Dr. Hollerman analyzes Japan's bid for the status of a 'fully advanced nation' and in a series of well laid out graphs shows that Japan possesses numerous qualities of both a developed and an underdeveloped nation. Economic liberalization, Hollerman contends, is a solution to Japan's unique economic situation."

This policy is the antithesis of the paternalistic protection afforded the economy by past governments. . . . This book presents an excellent analysis of the interrelated economic and political policies of the Japanese government and business world in implementing a new economic plan. Significant criticism is presented of procedural errors in carrying out liberalization." J. F. Copper

Pacific Affairs 41:151 spring '68 280w

HOLLEY, EDWARD G. Raking the historic coals; the A.L.A. scrapbook of 1876. 142p $6 Beta Phi Mu. Univ. of Ill.

020.6 American Library Association

67-28354

This volume "presents by means of one hundred selected documents the story of the preparations for [the] conference which witnessed the founding of the American Library Association. . . . [The book] is based on a scrapbook of letters, postcards, and printed documents called 'Librarians' Conference, October, 1876' which the author-editor found at ALA headquarters." (Col & Res Lib) Index.

"Mr. Holley has chosen seventy-four items [from the scrapbook]; and from other contemporary sources . . . he has selected twenty-six items which complement and supplement the scrapbook documents. He has edited this material wisely and with discrimination, and has provided an informative and authoritative, interesting, and gracefully written introduction to the work. [The book] is beautifully printed, admirably illustrated, handsomely bound . . . a solid contribution to library history, to the literature of librarianship, and, what is more, it is a real charmer." J. D. Marshall

Col & Res Lib 29:320 Jl '68 500w

Reviewed by V. W. Clapp

Library J 93:3521 O 1 '68 1200w

"The limits of the compilation are the limits of the scrapbook itself, for it relates only to the preparations for the conference. It cannot, therefore, properly be compared to George Utey's Librarians' Conference of 1853 [BRD 1952], though it makes a most useful companion volume to that earlier work. . . . Holley corrects some misconceptions about the genesis of the conference and the roles played by various library leaders of that day. . . . [This is] a sound and carefully documented little book. . . . To be sure, here and there the Holley prose suffers from contrived cuteness. . . . Also, the title page places Holley as the author of the work when . . . he is really the compiler and editor. . . . The attractive format is heightened by a few well-chosen facsimiles that add reality to the documents." J. H. Shera

Library Q 38:207 Ap '68 1000w

HOLLINGSHEAD, AUGUST B., jr. auth. Sick-ness and society. See Duff, R. S.HOLLIS, CHRISTOPHER. The Jesuits; a history [Eng title: A history of the Jesuits]. 284p il $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

271 Jesuits

68-54474

This is a study of the Society of Jesus, its development, and achievement throughout the world, from its founding by Ignatius Loyola to the present day. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Anyone with the slightest interest in Jesuitica will surely find Christopher Hollis' book well worth reading, delightfully written and so arresting as to be hard to put down. . . . [Hollis'] account reads like a civilized, somewhat donnish monologue from which you learn almost as much about the author's many pet ideas as about the topic in hand. . . . But reading this, one surmises that Mr. Hollis must know few Jesuits under 35. His literary contacts with his subject are also on the elderly side. For he repeats weary, long discredited clichés. . . . The non-British reader will be annoyed or amused at a certain English insularity peering through now and again. . . . Despite these somewhat captious remarks, I recommend the Hollis book as the most readable over-all, one-volume history of the Jesuits recently written in English." C. J. McNaspy

America 119:630 D 14 '68 800w

"[This] is an unashamed potboiler. . . . [It] is, in fact, history for the television era—blind, superficial, and theoretically noncontroversial. . . . Hollis prefers personalities and anecdotes to hard facts or serious analysis. He is at his best when recounting the adventures of St. Francis Xavier or Matteo Ricci; at his weakest when attempting to expound the constitution of the order or to explain the contribution of the Jesuits to the Counter Reformation. At times his tendency to oversimplify is stupefying. Only toward the end does a more questioning note appear. . . . It might have been better if something of this critical spirit had appeared earlier." J. C. Thompson

Book World p16 N 24 '68 650w

Reviewed by W. C. Heiser

Library J 94:82 Ja 1 '69 120w

"Hollis obviously does not expect people to go to his book for the latest facts about Jesuit history, since it is a second- and third-hand compilation helped out with long quotations from Ranke, Macaulay . . . and, of all people, Balzac. . . . The book is full of errors, large and small. . . . The assumption, I suppose, is that these things do not matter so long as we get the broad view. . . . The book contains a variety of pseudo-historical dicta, and some of those about the Reformation are offensive. . . . Surely [Hollis] ought to have some feeling for theology, for spirituality, for the Church as an institution? [He] seems extraordinarily vague about all these subjects." John Bossy

New Statesman 76:288 S 6 '68 800w

"[Mr. Hollis] is qualified both by knowledge and sympathy to give a convincing account of the Society of Jesus. He is sensitive to the apostolic zeal of the first Jesuits (though Ignatius himself is somewhat masked by the summary recounting of the Society's origins). Francis Xavier, Peter Canisius and Bellarmine are admirably drawn, and the immense variety of early Jesuit effort—in missionary work, education and theological controversy—is clearly related to the single purpose that inspired Ignatius in the beginning. The prophetic mission of such men as Ricci and De Nobili in the Far East is excellently described, and the moral of its rejection by Roman bureaucracy is frankly stated."

TLS p1182 O 17 '68 750w

HOLLIS, CHRISTOPHER. Newman and the modern world. 230p $4.95 Doubleday

260 Newman, John Henry, Cardinal 67-11182

"This book is solely concerned with trying to discover what was the quality in Newman's teaching that makes it so especially pertinent to the modern world and is likely to make it increasingly pertinent to the world of the coming generation." (Introd) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Newman] is presented as the first ecumenist. . . . While Hollis grants that Newman took little interest in either social or liturgical reform, he sees him not merely as anticipating most of the issues confronting Vatican II but as offering solutions increasingly pertinent to us today. Though Hollis' thesis probably needs considerable qualification, it is both provocative and convincing." John Pick

America 118:518 Ap 13 '68 410w

"At times Mr. Hollis states rather than proves his point, and he indulges in some rather ill-informed polemics against St. Thomas Aquinas, but he achieves his main purpose well. Though his book is not essential except for complete collections on Newman, this analysis of the Cardinal's major works from the point of view of current Catholic developments is well written, and should interest Newman admirers and students of the background of Vatican Council II." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:1147 Mr 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by N. K. Burger

N Y Times Bk R p14 Ap 7 '68 240w

"As is well known, one of Mr. Hollis's virtues is that of being alive to the changing social scene in the present, and this makes him alive to the differences between it and the social scene in the past. He contrasts, for instance, the English Catholic of today with his shrinking predecessor of a hundred years ago, and when considering the failure of Newman's attempt to create an Irish university, sees how the education of the Irish man of 1850 differed from the more Newmanian education he receives today."

TLS p139 F 8 '68 290w

HOLLOWAY, JOHN. A London childhood; with an introd. by C. P. Snow. 127p $4.50 Scribner

B or 92

68-12497

The English poet and critic recollects his childhood "in a working class London suburb up to the age of nine." (Publisher's note) The years covered are 1920-1929.

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 21 '68 800w

"[Holloway's recollections] make delightful reading. The style he adopts is simple, thus admirably suited for a child's view of life, and he manages to avoid being banal. In his introduction to the American edition of this work C. P. Snow hypothesizes that the type of childhood and pattern of life described in the book probably existed in that form, almost without change, between the years 1890 and 1939. While this may well be true, sufficient traces still remain for the book to be evocative for anyone familiar with the sensations of childhood in England even today. And for those unfamiliar with these sensations, what pleasanter way to learn of them? An admirable book, suitable for public and school libraries." A. J. M. Pedley

Library J 93:984 Mr 1 '68 140w

"It is a mild story, as stories go, not especially rich in incident, full of the usual chances and minor catastrophes. . . . But to call it a story at all is misleading, for it stays in the mind as an atmosphere, a milieu, a tone, rather than a chain of events. If nothing happens, the nothing is part of the poet's weather. . . . The book is rich in tenacity of impression—as a tiny incident may be ambitious in the relations it establishes, imperative as a sultan. . . . [Holloway] has to an unusual degree the usual skills of the autobiographer—a vivid memory, a good eye for detail. He knows the gesture that tells. . . . He is extremely agile in registering the ambiguities of class. . . . When he looks back, not to see, but to reflect upon the scene and the meaning it discloses, Dr Holloway writes with justice and delicacy. But when he tries to register the Bradleyan unity of immediate experience, he is not always sure in tone. Often he deals with the problem by giving a passage of description, as if it were seen through the child's eye, and then adding a middle-aged gloss, straight from Cambridge. . . . It seems to me a failure of tone, breaking the key of feeling." Denis Donoghue

New Statesman 73:123 Ja 27 '67 900w

New Yorker 44:87 Je 29 '68 160w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:62 Jl 20 '68 130w [YA]

TLS p1186 D 22 '66 650w

HOLLOWAY, JOHN. Widening horizons in English verse. 115p $3.50 Northwestern Univ. press

820.9 English literature

67-12147

"Four lectures presented at the University of Chicago in 1965. . . . The discussion ranges from Geoffrey of Monmouth to Yeats and Eliot." (Choice)

"Now a lecturer in English at Cambridge, Holloway is admirably qualified to speak of what English poetry has gained in the last four centuries from Celtic, Saxon, and Norse writing as well as—and this is what makes his book especially interesting—the literature of Islam, India, Egypt, and the Far East. He shows a wealth of good scholarship here of the historical sort, ranging over an astonishingly wide field. He never loses sight of what makes any poetry great, and always distinguishes between the masterpiece and the literary product that is merely fashionable or curious in its assimilation of what is foreign. . . . [The discussion] is so plain and direct it can easily be read with profit by advanced undergraduates, but so broad and thought provoking that those further along could gain from it. Recommended for most liberal arts libraries."

Choice 4:1380 F '68 150w

"Holloway scans the nonclassical influences on English poetry since the Middle Ages. . . . [He] accurately traces the progress of each exotic idea from its inception to its culmination, showing variations at every stage of development. He demonstrates, as well, that the old-fashioned dichotomy between Romanticism and Neo-Classicism oversimplifies the actualities of literary history. Although Holloway's method itself tends to oversimplification and relies too much on secondary sources, his book convincingly portrays the manner in which the 'exotic' has found some path into a deep alignment with what belonged to a meaningful indigenous tradition; or with some modal point in the poet's own personal experience."

R. D. S.

Sat ■ 50:45 Je 10 '67 170w

HOLMAN, FELICE. The blackmail machine; il. by Victoria de Larrea. 182p lib bdg $4.50 Macmillan (N Y)

68-11002

Four children from the town of Goodbury, "accompanied by an elderly lady and the son of a foreign ambassador, accidentally levitate a treehouse and find that it is indeed mobile. Being up in the air doesn't bother them; from this position they blackmail adults into good behavior, making pleas for conservation, sense, and peace. This last comes from Arabella, the group's brain. . . . Grades four to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p20 (children's issue) My 5 '68 240w

"The federal and international aspects of the case make for spoofing entertainment; on the other hand, there is no nonsense about the pleas made by the children for people to care, since it is clear to them that words alone will not bring PEACE. An advance over the author's earlier stories, like Professor Diggins' Dragons [BRD 1966] this one combines a message with tongue-in-cheek amusement." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:173 Ap '68 170w

"[Arabella] is quaintly comic, a serious little person potentially more interesting than the scope of this story allows. The other characters are more appropriate to spoofish humor. In tone the book resembles Walter Brooks' Freddy stories, and their readers, as well as Miss Holman's already devoted followers, will undoubtedly enjoy it." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:370 F 15 '68 160w

"[This book] provides excellent fodder for rebellious daydreams, since its heroes find they can hold the adult world—at any rate in the town of Goodbury—to ransom. . . . Children will be intrigued by the mechanics of the tree house and there are some memorable full-page illustrations, executed in a light, zany line that perfectly matches the prose. . . . Holman writes with that cool throw-away humour native to American writers and spares us the awful cosiness of similar English family stories."

TLS p1112 O ■ '68 180w

HOLMAN, FELICE. The cricket winter; il. by Ralph Pinto. 107p $3.95; lib bdg $3.69 Norton

67-18683

This story tells how nine-year-old Simms Silvanus and the cricket who lived in the basement learned to communicate with each other by means of the Morse Code. "Grades three to five." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:393 Ja 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p22 F 4 '68 120w

"Simms, an engaging young man, is amazed to learn of the many lives being lived below the floor boards of his house and, especially, of the problems created by a selfish rat. Simms and Cricket combine their talents to trap the rat, and in the process, both mature a little. . . . An original and convincing animal fantasy." Dorothy Gunzenhauser

Library J 92:3849 O 15 '67 130w

"How these two meet, become friends, perform a brave deed and refuse recognition for it, is only the book's surface. Beneath, lies the rare quality of Miss Holman's imagination. In words as fragile as silk thread, she weaves her story with comments on the nature of boys, crickets and life in general, creating a pattern both whimsical and grave. Moved by one passage, amused by the next, the reader can explore 'The Cricket Winter'—and its superbly etched illustrations—as though it were a tapestry. The work is delicate, but strong." Barbara Wersba

HOLMAN, FELICE—Continued

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 N 4 '67 180w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 50:45 N 11 '67 150w

HOLMES, GEOFFREY. British politics in the age of Anne. 546p $17 St Martins

320.942 Great Britain—Politics and government [67-16865]

"The struggle for supremacy of two great national parties is the background for this . . . study of the political life of Augustan Britain. . . . [Holmes] assesses the strength of the other motivating forces of political action—self-interest, class interest, and the opposition of 'Country' to Court—and shows how society itself became riven through and through by the fundamental division between Whigs and Tories. Finally, he analyzes the composition of the two parties at Westminster, enquires how their members organized themselves for conflict, and investigates the unique relationship fashioned between the party politicians and the Court to permit the government of the country to be carried on." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

"The main text, long and detailed, is followed by three appendices, a list of manuscript sources, a guide to the political chronology of the period, notes (in addition to these voluminous notes, usually indicating sources and giving considerable bibliographical information, there are also further notes, usually dealing with controversial matters, at the bottom of many pages of the text). . . . This book, in its field, certainly supersedes all previous interpretive works . . . dealing with the same subject. Indispensable to all serious students of the period, it certainly should be in all college and university libraries."

Choice 5:114 Mr '68 200w

"Dr Holmes has provided, often for the first time, a wealth of information on such matters as party organisation, particularly that of the Whigs. As he himself says, the book is more a work of analysis and interpretation than a narrative, and it presupposes in the reader a fair working knowledge of the political and other events of the reign. But the writing is so vivid and the analysis so acute that the ordinary reader will find himself absorbed. A more serious objection, perhaps, is that the book is so exclusively political, so centered on the struggles in the House of Commons and in the constituencies, that there is inevitably a sense of distortion and disproportion in its general picture."

Economist 224:1101 S 23 '67 700w

"[It is the author's intention] to restore the concept of 'party' to its proper place in the vocabulary and thinking of historians and to rebut a heresy propounded some years ago by a Midwestern college professor, R. Walcott [in English Politics in the Early Eighteenth Century, BRD 1956] to the effect that family groups and connexions were the stuff of politics under Anne rather than issues and principles. . . . Mr Holmes has written a vigorous and convincing defence of the older view of political parties." K. G. Davies

New Statesman 74:369 S 22 '67 180w

TLS p56 Ja 18 '68 1200w

HOLMES, JACK E. Politics in New Mexico. 335p $7.95 Univ. of N.Mex. press

353.9789 New Mexico—Politics and government 67-22734

"With the 'two-party model' as his principal benchmark and the experience of other states as his points of reference, Dr. Holmes examines the sociological, electoral, and regional components of the political parties, and analyzes . . . the characteristics and results of New Mexico's inter- and intraparty voting from 1910 through 1964. He traces the evolution and interaction of the political parties, the legislature, and the governorship. . . . [considering] the ways in which these institutions have affected, and been affected by, social and economic developments." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. D. Morey

Am Pol Sci R 62:641 Je '68 750w

"[This] is in the tradition of great Ph.D. theses. . . . Over a period of almost twenty years, Holmes [has] continued to work persistently on his thesis. Fortunately, the University of Chicago did not impose on him a time limit.

. . . The result is, without doubt, the most significant book on New Mexico politics that has been written to date. The volume represents an incredible amount of work over a long period of time and contains thousands of hard-won observations gained in daily contact with politicians and other operators in the New Mexico political scene. It is written in an urbane style and is enriched with salty good humor. It is also an optimistic book. . . . For the serious student of politics in New Mexico, the book is a gold mine of information. For the casual reader it will prove to be a bit tedious." T. C. Donnelly

Ann Am Acad 376:182 Mr '68 480w

"[Holmes] has written an interesting, crisp, analytically clear book, which is not without color, but is more than a regional story telling exercise. . . . There has grown up a genuinely comparative state parties literature in American political science. . . . Holmes (unlike some recent state politics analysts), by virtue of placing his account in the context of that literature, has contributed in an important way to the accumulating account of the causes and consequences of different types of state political systems in the U.S. Thus a book which a decade or so ago would have been of regional value, today belongs in any reasonably comprehensive political science collection and has broad implications for the understanding of the determinants of political systems."

Choice 4:1444 F '68 220w

Reviewed by J. B. Pearson

J Am Hist 55:422 S '68 700w

HOLMES, KENNETH L. Ewing Young: master trapper; pub. for the Peter Binford foundation. 180p il $5.95 Binfords

B or 92 Young, Ewing 67-19751

A biography of Young, "a cabinetmaker's apprentice from Tennessee who accompanied the first wagon train from Missouri to Santa Fe in 1822 and, during the next decade, trapped beaver between the Pecos and the San Joaquin. Later he traded stock in the Southwest, hunted sea otter in California, drove the first large herd of cattle from San Jose north to the Willamette, and accumulated a baronial domain in the Chehalis Valley. To probate his valuable estate—he died in 1841—his neighbors created the first American squatter government in Oregon." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"Young's early life in Tennessee and Missouri is difficult to document. Holmes relied upon correspondents in the two states to dig out country probate and deed records for him. One wonders if his correspondents examined county court records and searched for tax manuscripts that might illuminate the Young family. . . . The book is profusely illustrated and adequately footnoted, yet . . . reviewers must examine each footnote minutely to compile a picture of the author's research. But in spite of minor problems of citation, methodology, and interpretation, Holmes's monograph is a praiseworthy scholarly biography." J. E. Sunder

Am Hist R 73:911 F '68 400w

"Ewing Young has always been a shady figure on the Oregon frontier. His life has remained veiled; and his legacy to civilization on the west coast, ambiguous. Holmes has researched the biography of Young diligently for a number of years in the hope of unearthing the details which would make his subject live as a flesh-and-blood trapper, trader, and colonizer. Unfortunately, Young remains an enigma after the book has been read. . . . The evidence has been used skillfully, but it simply will not yield up the man. . . . Almost nowhere does Young speak for himself. The character, motives, passions, and, indeed, the physical picture of Young simply cannot be revealed with the meager evidence uncovered. Furthermore, Holmes is unable to improve appreciably the reader's vague understanding of the extent and details of Young's ranch." G. A. Frykman

J Am Hist 55:139 Je '68 200w

HOLMES, OPAL LAUREL, Jr. auth. Gold rushes and mining camps of the early American West. See Fisher, V.*HOLMES, PAUL. The trials of Dr Coppolino. 305p $5.95 New Am. lib.

343 Coppolino, Carl Anthony. Murder

68-18260

The author attended the 1966 and 1967 "trials of Dr. Carl Coppolino and he regards the first, in which Dr. Coppolino was acquitted of the murder of the husband of his mistress, as a sort of bizarre throwback to prosecution for witchcraft, and the second trial in which Dr. Coppolino was convicted of murdering his wife, as unconvincing due to the flimsy nature of the state's evidence in support of its theory that Mrs. Carmela Coppolino was killed by the injection of a paralyzing drug." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Readers of Paul Holmes and Stephen Sheppard's book, My Brother's Keeper [BRD 1964], on the Sheppard murder case will be disappointed by the coverage of the two Coppolino trials in the present book. In the former book Mr. Holmes presented a strong case for the unfairness of Dr. Sam Sheppard's trial as well as a readable story; in the book on Dr. Coppolino, which appears to be hastily written, he has failed to weave the facts into a coherent whole. The reader seeking the exciting story of a trial will bog down in the mass of early biographical detail; the reader seeking the sensational elements broadcast by the press will be bored by the medical issues at the heart of the trial. . . . After the initial demand sparked by the sensational nature of the case has died down, only large libraries with extensive collections of trial books will find this diffuse book useful." D. W. Harrison

Library J 93:768 F 15 '68 180w

"[Holmes] both a member of the Wisconsin bar and a Chicago Tribune crime reporter, gets super-high marks again for his handling of the most sensational back-to-back court tests in a generation." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:33 My 25 '68 60w

HOLMES, WILLIAM A. Tomorrow's church; a cosmopolitan community; a radical experiment in church renewal. 176p $3.75 Abingdon

262 Church renewal

68-17437

"The author contends that the suburban church is still the dominant church in America [and that] awakening it to new awareness of the cosmopolitan community it serves should receive top priority. . . . It should seek new shapes and contours for itself before thinking about doing away with present institutional structures. Here he writes of such patterns he has helped to bring into being. The first three chapters develop the reasoning behind these experiments. Later chapters explore . . . the strategies and shapes the experiments have taken." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The immediate value of this book is that it illustrates concretely how a typical suburban congregation can be delivered from provincialism. Ultimately, however, it focuses on a more critical question: What is the future of the local church? During his pastorate at Northaven Methodist Church in Dallas, William Holmes worked creatively and radically at the answer. . . . Only one note of authenticity is missing: the author seems to gloss over the opposition he encountered. The radical departures he describes surely met with resistance—and this, too, should be part of the story. The book's greatest significance lies in the author's concept of 'mission.' Holmes uses the term 'cosmopolitan' to imply informed participation in the cultural, racial and political life of the world—but by 'the world' he means the one at Northaven's doorstep: the city of Dallas. . . . While the larger world is not excluded (Northaven was represented at Selma), neither is it permitted to be a substitute for dealing face-to-face with issues at home." R. R. Winkelmann

Christian Century 85:788 Je 12 '68 300w

"For those who wish to gain some idea of the emerging religious society. . . . [this] is a good blueprint. Committed to the hope for renewal in the church, the author has the advantage of speaking from experience born of experiment. Suburban congregations have a dismal record for remodeling the Christian church into a shopping plaza, complete with off-street parking and stereo in the ceiling. Not, however, Northaven Methodist in Dallas. This is one group with the imagination to try new avenues of study, service, and social action which may yet save the institutional church from turning into another Forest Lawn." David Poling

Sat R 51:36 My 18 '68 100w

HOLMSTROM, JOHN, jt. ed. Thomas Hardy and his readers. See Lerner, L.

HOLROYD, MICHAEL. Lytton Strachey: a critical biography. 2v 475:754p il $21.95 Holt 828 Strachey, Giles Lytton 68-10061

Volume one of this biography "pictures Strachey's large and idiosyncratic family, his striking mother, the disappointments of his school days, and the delight he found at Cambridge in a circle of friends which some have called the nucleus of the Bloomsbury Group. [In volume two, Holroyd] treats Strachey's failures and disappointments, his eventual fame that followed the appearance of Eminent Victorians [BRD 1918], . . . and his curious affair with Dora Carrington, who committed suicide shortly after his death. . . . Finally, he deals . . . with Strachey's historical, literary, and biographical works, and emphasizes his importance as an innovator." (Library J)

Reviewed by Joseph Browne
America 118:712 My 25 '68 750w

Reviewed by Louis Kronenberger
Atlantic 221:35 My '68 3400w

Reviewed by R. F. Grady
Best Sell 28:81 My 15 '68 350w

Reviewed by Mary Ellmann
Book World p3 Ap 28 '68 900w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p11 My 16 '68 650w

Reviewed by Cyril Connolly
Critic 26:70 Je '68 1450w

Economist 225:xi D 2 '67 440w (Review of v 1)

Economist 226:54 F 24 '68 460w (Review of v2)

Reviewed by Goronwy Rees
Encounter 30:71 Mr '68 7450w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:88 My '68 550w

"[This] book will do much to arrest the decline of Strachey's reputation and make possible a more just assessment of a man who had come to be considered a sardonic yet superficial debunker who carelessly reworked previously published sources. Mr. Holroyd, in almost 1200 pages, makes use of previously unavailable family correspondence and papers to create what will probably be the definitive biography. . . . [He] makes a valuable attempt to disentangle the reality of the Bloomsbury group from its legend and gives an engrossing picture of the tightly knit group of cultural arbiters in this period. . . . Recommended for all literature collections." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:1132 Mr 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by Calvin Bedient
Nation 206:670 My 20 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Sir Shane Leslie
Nat R 20:558 Je 4 '68 600w

Reviewed by Gertrude Himmelfarb
New Repub 158:33 My 18 '68 1900w

"First, there is Mr Holroyd's style. He is a heavy-handed and heavy-minded writer. . . . and one might deduce, . . . to put it kindly and mildly, [that] he is deficient in both an active and a passive sense of humour. . . . [This] is a terribly dangerous blind spot in the biographer of Lytton Strachey. . . . [Secondly], Mr Holroyd was ill-advised in his choice of a microscopic scale for Lytton's love affairs. Lytton was throughout his life always hopelessly in love or hopeless at not being in love, and his lamentations, his moans and groans and dying speeches as he prepared to commit suicide were as continuous as Jeremiah's. . . . Mr Holroyd gives them to us at inordinate length and often recapitulates them with a commentary of his own. The book has a third, and still more serious, defect. . . . I think that Mr Holroyd continually fails to understand people. Too often the portraits of the chief or minor characters who surround his hero, Lytton, are blurred. . . . His misreading of Lytton's character is really fundamental." Leonard Woolf

New Statesman 74:438 O 6 '67 850w
(Review of v 1)

"Holroyd's second volume which recounts Lytton's considerable achievements is itself a considerable achievement; it is in every way a much better book than his first volume. . . . The longer he goes on . . . the sounder become his judgments and the more controlled—and therefore effective—his style. . . . The way in which Mr Holroyd deals with Lytton's books is in every way admirable and impeccable. His fault as a biographer is to write too much and too long about too little. . . . [However] after reading Mr Holroyd's meticulous recording of the history of events in which

HOLROYD, MICHAEL—Continued

forty years or more ago I played a part, I am slightly surprised by the difference between events as they appeared at the time to actors in them and as they appear in history. . . . In his second volume [Holroyd] does succeed in bringing Lytton to life, his strange character, his wit and brilliance,—and—what was even more difficult—he brings to life the galaxy of strange men and women who for fifteen years circled round Lytton." Leonard Woolf

New Statesman 75:241 F 23 '68 1400w
(Review of v2)

Reviewed by Noel Annan
N Y Rev of Books 10:8 Je 6 '68 5650w

Reviewed by John Rothenstein
N Y Times Bk R p1 Ap 28 '68 2000w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff
Newsweek 71:91A Ap 29 '68 950w

Reviewed by Leon Edel
Sat R 51:32 Ap 27 '68 1250w

Time 91:124 My 10 '68 1100w

TLS p1049 N 9 '67 2900w (Review of v 1)

"A word should be said of Mr. Holroyd's distinguished part in the story. He has set Strachey before us as his subject would have wished, with no defect, no unpleasantness concealed. . . . But in addition to a portrait of Strachey, Mr. Holroyd gives us a far-ranging survey of the most influential minds of the first three decades of this century whose sway is still felt over the background of our lives today. His footnotes are models of accuracy and information. . . . But together Mr. Holroyd's two volumes form a portrait of an epoch in literature which will not be superseded. Clear-cut, comprehensive, highly coloured and convincing, it will be recognized by contemporary readers and by those who come after as a splendid piece of work."

TLS p204 F 29 '68 2350w (Review of v2)

Reviewed by Denis Donaghue
Va Q R 44:495 summer '68 1250w

HOLST, NIELS VON. Creators, collectors, and connoisseurs; the anatomy of artistic taste from antiquity to the present day; introd. by Herbert Read. 400p il col pl $25 Putnam

709.4 Art, Collectors and collecting. Esthetics
67-24533

The author presents "a history of the works of art and the vagaries of artistic taste which brought about the rise and fall in popularity and the shifts in ownership of paintings, sculpture, and objets d'art. He traces individual pieces from collection to collection, including lesser known collections north of the Alps. . . . He also includes accounts of thefts, forgeries and forgers, and copies which were intended to be only copies; he traces the history of museums as such, from the opening of private collections to the establishment of publicly supported buildings, and art-display fashions in galleries." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. Originally published 1960 entitled Künstler, Sammler, Publikum.

Economist 225:xix D 2 '67 170w

"Although this book will be promoted as a 'gift book,' and its size and format indicate its suitability for that purpose, Dr. Von Holst's thoroughly readable and well-illustrated work is recommended for general and art collections." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:3987 N 1 '67 180w

"[This is] a handsome production with nearly 450 illustrations, carefully selected so as to be directly related to the text. The 'innumerable misprints' of the German edition have been ironed out in translation, and there is now a lengthy bibliography. The English edition of the book has been considerably revised and expanded. . . . Herr von Holst has read very widely in the course of his studies, and his card-indexes have evidently been crammed with valuable, amusing and out-of-the-way information. . . . In spite of his 'numerous visits' to London, the author is weaker on collecting in England than in any other country. A special word of praise is due to the numerous illustrations both in painting and in photography of the interiors of museums and private collections of the past and present. . . . These rarities are among the most fascinating documents for the history of taste."

TLS p1124 N 30 '67 650w

HOLT, CLAIRE. Art in Indonesia; continuities and change. 355p il col pl maps $18.50 Cornell Univ. press

709.91 Art, Indonesian. Performing arts

66-19222

"Intended originally as a study of recent developments, the research expanded to include: Part I: The Heritage (prehistoric roots, Indian influences, emergence of new styles); Part II: The Living Traditions (dance, Wayang puppetry, dance drama, Bali's plastic arts). Part III discusses the setting and debate over content, style, and function in modern Indonesian art—the traditionalists of the Jogja school opposed by the politically influential Western-oriented Bandung school." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The Art of Indonesia by F. Wagner is neither superseded nor merely paralleled by Holt. Holt's prior book on the dance drama of Celebes, her years of contact with Indonesian performing arts, her training in dance, sculpture as well as anthropology are good credentials. It is profusely illustrated with clear black-and-white plates and several full plates in color. Four valuable appendices, two of which summarize the major epics and present eight puppet drama outlines. Adequate bibliography; excellent index and glossary. Should be of particular interest to all those whose concern is with a science of culture or of art."

Choice 5:185 Ap '68 170w

"Mrs. Holt gives equal treatment to the historic temple sculpture, the art forms derived from the traditional, and to contemporary art forms. She places emphasis on dance, the dance-drama, and individual contemporary painters. . . . Recommended for larger libraries." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:2915 S 1 '67 130w

"The prehistoric part is a brief sketch aiming not at archaeological thoroughness but a summary of the chief items which strike the eye of the visitor to Indonesia—and the modern Indonesian artist. . . . The chapters on the dance, the Wayang play, and dance drama belong to a sphere in which the author's awareness of style is at its greatest. While local cults of play and dance survive strongly, their total impact on the artistic conscience of modern Indonesians is difficult to define. The multiplicity of microtraditions has not crystallized into a compelling great tradition. Dr. Holt makes clear that what holds everything together is the literature, which dance and Wayang interpret. . . . The last third of the book deals with modern art. . . . The majority of the illustrations are of works produced since Indonesian independence." William Watson

Pacific Affairs 41:452 fall '68 1050w

HOLT, JAMES. Congressional insurgents and the party system, 1909-1916. 188p $5.50 Harvard Univ. press

329 U.S.—Politics and government—1898-1919. Republican party—History

67-22866

During the Wilson and Taft administrations "a group of insurgent Senators, which included Robert La Follette, Albert Cummins, George Norris, William Borah, Albert Beveridge, and Jonathan Dolliver, made repeated attempts to advance progressive ideals while maintaining a commitment to the Republican party. . . . The author delineates the problems of the insurgents and their attempts to overcome them in analyses of the battles over the Payne-Aldrich tariff, the powers of Speaker of the House Cannon, the election of 1912, Woodrow Wilson's New Freedom, and the election of 1916. In a short epilogue he discusses Republican insurgency in the 1920's and 1930's." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Professor Holt] has not attempted to write 'a definitive history of insurgency'; nor is he primarily concerned with the origins of the movement or with its ideology, but rather with 'a study of the insurgents' role in the party system.' . . . His sources largely relate to the senatorial insurgents. . . . Within the limits Holt set for himself he has performed admirably. This volume corrects some errors in earlier works, including some of my own. It challenges, not entirely convincingly, the assumption that the Bull Moose movement resulted in making the Republican party overwhelmingly conservative. The comparative study of Robert La Follette and George Norris as political leaders, to the advantage of the former, is both interesting and scholarly. But the author's major contribution is in detailing the strange and seemingly illogical position of the insurgents toward the major legislation of the Wilson period." G. E. Mowry

Am Hist R 73:1668 Je '68 300w

"There is justification to be dissatisfied both with the thesis that the insurgents failed and with the explanation of why they failed. The author gives no reason why he selected the relatively few cases he used to document the insurgents' failure. . . . [Also] the study's methodology generates discontinuities in analysis. It skips from event to event, using information derived from specific personalities involved in each event. . . . There is never an analysis of the collective whole of the insurgent group on a particular position that permits the reader to know their composition and their strength relative to other factions and parties. Finally, the author does not clearly define the 'insurgents.'" Delmer Dunn
Am Pol Sci R 62:988 S '68 800w

"The book has some shortcomings. The most important is that Holt fails to ascribe sufficient responsibility for insurgent weakness to the insurgents' own intellectual and ideological limitations. But his book is the best available account of one of the more important political movements of the 20th century. Required for all college libraries."

Choice 5:117 Mr '68 160w

Reviewed by R. C. Brown
J Am Hist 55:175 Je '68 360w

"This is a well documented, excellent source book for the serious student of political science. Recommended for academic, public, and substantial high school library collections." C. R. Dietz
Library J 92:4512 D 15 '67 130w [YA]

HOLT, JOHN. How children learn. 189p $4.95 Pitman

372 Education, Elementary 67-30105

A Boston schoolteacher, author of How Children Fail (BRD 1965) "describes the ways in which bright or normal children tackle learning by themselves, experimentally and as a game. He feels teachers should be patient, let children talk more in school, give them time to figure things out, not press or correct them. . . . This natural approach to learning can begin at 16 months, and, in due course, extend to sports, art, math—almost any subject." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Robert Coles
Book World p5 Ja 14 '68 900w
Choice 5:387 My '68 190w

"Mr. Holt wants teachers to stop doing all the talking, to stop making all the rules, to cease from punishing children for independent thinking. [He] has tried to teach [teachers] through the beautifully creative-child approach to problem-solving. But he's too much in awe of what he says, surprised in-fore sounds naïve, not knowing, surprised in-ford of sure. The fact that some children teach themselves to read by listening to others read to them, and then by 'trying' words on attentive elders is not disbelieved by the teaching fraternity. But they do not believe that such a method is what will teach a nation, or more specifically their classroom full of children. I wish I thought that John Holt had written the book which would make them eat their pedagogy. Instead, I'm afraid he has written the book which lets them say, 'Humph!'" Cynthia Parsons

Christian Science Monitor p23 D 7 '67 400w

Reviewed by P. L. Moulton
Horn Bk 44:199 Ap '68 200w

"[Holt] points out that his book is about children and not child psychology. From years of patiently watching children, he has discerned some of the ways they actually do learn. In his book he discusses children's games and experiments, talk, reading, sports, art, mathematics, and the mind at work. His account is clear and simple, with a few golden nuggets buried among the many anecdotes that show an understanding of childhood and learning principles. . . . Mr. Holt's detailed accounts of children learning by themselves show that he has always been willing to let them take the lead while he followed, that he's had faith in them, and respected them. . . . What a wonderful world it would be if all children could have teachers like John Holt." Marian Wozencraft
Library J 92:4408 D 1 '67 370w

"Children's services specialists, those dealing with the youngest children in school or public libraries, may very well decide that Educator John Holt is saying their piece best. . . . [Librarians] have always said, not as eloquently perhaps, many of the same things Holt is saying about freeing children to learn. One very practical application for librarians using Holt's book is as supporting evidence in the face of trustee or administrator questions or criticisms. He supplies some marvelously telling anecdotal support in the forms of case studies and can help underwrite the philosophical base for more and better libraries for children free of the pressures to make them conform or perform, respecting their dignity, and trusting their capacity for growth in taste and judgment. If applied vigorously, Holt's findings might even revolutionize juvenile book selection." L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:1748 Ap 15 '68 750w

"It is a chilling paradox that in a country where the most urgent cultural value is education . . . the 'educational' experience itself is surreal and degrading, especially on the primary level. . . . [Holt's] book, a poetic, humane, perceptive account of some of his own teaching experiences with the very young, should be made required reading for every teacher in America (but of course it won't). Holt's principle is two-part: children are people who can be hurt and discouraged; children have an incredible capacity for figuring things out by themselves. . . . How Children Learn, like all other first-rate books, is really about a great deal more than its stated subject. It is a calm, penetrating and extremely revealing examination of American mores, from top to bottom." Chandler Brossard

Nation 206:353 Mr 11 '68 2450w

Reviewed by Joseph Featherstone

New Repub 158:27 Mr 2 '68 1450w

Reviewed by Herbert Kohl

N Y Rev of Books 10:14 Ja 18 '68 3250w

Reviewed by R. J. Menges

Record 69:800 My '68 2150w

HOLT, LAURENCE JAMES. See Holt, James

HOLT, PETER MALCOLM. Political and social change in modern Egypt; historical studies from the Ottoman conquest to the United Arab Republic. 400p pl $11.20 Oxford

962 Egypt—History

"A group of 25 papers presented at a 1965 conference on the history of modern Egypt. Collectively, the papers aim (1) at delineating the source materials available to the historian of this period and (2) at providing specimens of recent scholarship based on these sources. The authors . . . [include] Gabriel Baer, Stanford Shaw, Elie Kedourie, [and] P. J. Vatikiotis." (Choice)

"[The book's] aims are achieved, making [it] of great historiographical as well as historical value. Moreover, the scope of the articles is not sufficiently indicated by the title, for they cover intellectual and economic history in addition to political and social, so that its interest is correspondingly greater. . . . It is important as a summation of recent research and possibilities of future research in this field."

Choice 5:1198 N '68 170w

Economist 227:50 Je 29 '68 130w

"The participants in [the] conference . . . came from many nations and academic disciplines. They included economists, sociologists and historians coming from America, France, Israel and Turkey, as well as Egypt and Britain. . . . One product of their combined output is a new mine of information about source material and where it lies—some of it in Cairo, but much in Europe. . . . Professor Holt's second valuable contribution to knowledge about Egypt springs from his determination to steer his contributors away from the hackneyed topic of endemic quarrels between bigwigs. . . . While all this went on in a murky stratosphere peopled by foreigners, the ordinary native-born Egyptian lived his life in a lower realm, and the book, by concentrating on him, helps to right the imbalance of many previous works."

TLS p454 My 2 '68 700w

HOLT, W. STULL. Historical scholarship in the United States, and other essays. 184p $6.95 Univ. of Wash. press

973 U.S.—History. Historiography 67-13114

"A collection of articles, book reviews, a book chapter, a lecture, and an address was published on the occasion of Holt's retirement as professor of history at the University of Washington. Divided into three parts—historical scholarship and the historical profession, U.S. foreign relations, and the urban movement in American history—the book contains selections which were originally published from 1933-63." (Choice)

"This volume of essays clearly identifies Stull Holt as one who carries his responsibilities as a historian with dignity and understanding. . . . The largest section is devoted to papers on 'Historical Scholarship and the Historical Profession,' reflecting Holt's interest in both the craft and craftsmanship. . . . By carrying his account into the present century, Holt has really given a review of modern American historiography. . . . These essays are eminently readable and as wide in their appeal as Holt is in his scholarship, his professional concern, and his human understanding." E. L. Kayser

Am Hist R 73:394 F '68 490w

"The volume's lasting value is . . . apt to lie—at least for sociologists—with the fourth essay ('Who Reads the Best Histories?') and with the five that appear to be added at the end as 'filler.' The former supplies unambiguous evidence that, though historical scholarship may have improved in both quantity and quality, the audience of even the best writing has narrowed strikingly—largely confined to other historians.

But the book's primary value to the sociologist lies in the manner in which the remaining four essays illustrate—rather than simply declaim over—the manner in which the historian may himself appropriate the essential logic of the social scientist. . . . Though he would disclaim the 'scientific' frame for his discipline in his historiographic essays, he compels the reader to note its very real fruitfulness in his own substantive work." R. W. Friedrichs

Am Soc R 33:162 F '68 600w

"The major part of the book is historiographic in nature and is primarily of value to those interested in the development of the historical profession from the late 19th century through the 1950's in the U.S. Holt who has been a perceptive commentator on the historical scene does detail both implicit and explicit shifts in emphases and assumptions."

Choice 4:1428 F '68 150w

HOLTMAN, ROBERT B. The Napoleonic revolution. 225p maps $4.50 Lippincott

940.2 Eighteenth century. Napoléon I, Emperor of the French 67-11308

The author "emphasizes the role of the Emperor of the French as a revolutionary innovator whose influence touched nearly every aspect of European political and social life. . . . [He considers] Napoleon's work as innovator in the fields of military strategy, government administration, law, economics, education, propaganda, and diplomacy." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A sober, well-written, critical inventory of Napoleon's work and lasting achievements. In 10 brief chapters Holtman surveys the structural changes and innovations, the characteristic forms of imperial rule, the dynamic forces Napoleon controlled (and used), and the legacy. Interesting and valuable for the original approach and the large amount of accurate information. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:547 Je '68 110w

"Holtman's book, which is chiefly exposition rather than narration, is useable, competent, unexciting, and compact. [His] style, though cumbersome, is brightened by some skillful sentences. . . . He examines the legal, military, religious, and financial affairs during the Empire. . . . shows how Napoleonic practices were compounded of elements from the Enlightenment, the Revolution, and the needs of Napoleon's own day. . . . describes the effects of Napoleonic institutions outside France and traces them to the present, and does much to show the benefits and the costs of Napoleon's regime and innovations. For the informed layman and for college and university students." Garland Downum

Library J 92:3638 O 15 '67 100w

HOMAN, PAUL T., jr. auth. Economic aspects of oil conservation regulation. See Lovejoy, W. F.

HOMANN-WEDEKING, E. The art of archaic Greece; tr. by J. R. Foster [Eng title: Archaic Greece]. 224p il col il $6.95 Crown

709.38 Art, Greek 68-16898

The "professor of classical archaeology at Ludwig-Maximilian University, Munich, covers the period from around 1050 to 490 B.C. He discusses vase-painting, sculpture, and architecture, including references to material obtained from recent excavations against the religious, sociological, and historical background." (Library J) First published in German under the title Das Archaische Griechenland. Chronology. Glossary. Index.

"This is an exceptionally good description and analysis, even by the high standards of the Art of the World Series. It is also well written, a refinement altogether beyond the normal call of duty with art historians, who usually assume that readers should be content with a text as dry as Mycenae in midsummer." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:134 S '68 50w

"This volume is highly readable and devoid almost entirely of circumlocutions which often characterize such translations. . . . Unfortunately such an extensive coverage of time and techniques in the limited space available does lead to omissions and oversimplifications. . . . Keeping this in mind the general reader will find this book of great value and the unusual selection of beautiful color reproductions most enlightening and enjoyable. Another more serious word of warning should be given to the uninitiated reader, however. The author on occasion is given to highly subjective interpretations and concepts. . . . Fortunately these passages are self-evident to the careful reader and often are introduced by words or phrases which indicate their nature." K. D. Matthews

Class World 62:65 O '68 250w

"This well-researched survey dealing with one of the most exciting periods of artistic activity in history, is all that could be required of a short text—packed with concise information, critical, and discriminating. . . . The carefully chosen illustrations are vividly reproduced. . . . Recommended for both general and scholarly readers." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 93:2848 Ag '68 110w

"[This] is distinguished by the extraordinary clarity and brilliance of the colour illustrations. . . . Without any derogation to the plates, [however,] the text is the thing. For insight into the principles and achievements of Archaic art there has been nothing comparable since the work of Humfry Payne, to whom the book is dedicated. . . . The style of writing is persuasive and, in a good sense, unacademic. Finally, this is the first case known to this reviewer of a book on art, translated from a foreign language, in which the reader is never reminded of that fact by a single nuance of expression."

TLS p1074 S 26 '68 650w

HOMANS, PETER, ed. The dialogue between theology and psychology. (Chicago, Univ. Divinity school. Essays in divinity) 295p $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

200 Psychology, Religious 68-16698

Each of the writers "applies the insights of psychology, both theoretical and clinical, to . . . elements of Christian thought and religious meaning. New light is shed on such central concepts as faith, guilt, and salvation. The relation between belief and myth is defined." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author discusses] the source of the meaning of religious life and thought in the concerns of existentialism and depth psychology. . . . An excellent collection of essays on numerous vital subjects in the field. Those carrying on the 'dialogue' are Ph.D. alumni of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago and therefore were students of, or significantly influenced by, Seward Hiltner, onetime chairman of religion and personality studies. They have taken their task seriously and have evolved a study in depth that exceeds any other publication of essays to date. Because of the nature and level of dialogue, this publication will most likely find readers only among the more dedicated students of the theology-psychology field."

Choice 5:1120 N '68 130w

Reviewed by J. N. Lapsley

Christian Century 86:19 Ja 1 '69 440w

Reviewed by Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:1636 Ap 15 '68 150w

HOMER. The Odyssey; a new verse tr. by Albert Cook. 340p $6 Norton

883

67-11079

A professor of English at the State University of New York at Buffalo offers a translation which attempts "to reflect faithfully what Homer's Greek says. To achieve this end, Mr. Cook has produced a translation that follows the original line for line—even to the preservation of important key phrases at the beginnings of the lines. . . . He has accepted fully the modern understanding that the Homeric poems are oral (not written) compositions, and has reproduced the qualities of that oral style in English." (Publisher's note) Glossary.

"Cook's solution to the problem of finding an equivalent in French of the hexameter is the syllabic line that mostly varies from twelve to seventeen syllables. This solution is, on the whole, satisfactory. . . . But it was mistaken of him not to control more closely the details of diction and rhythm, since the lapses are numerous enough to lower the effectiveness of many pages of poetry. . . . [However his] version is careless in small things, but reproduces well some of the speed and clarity of Homer." H. G. Edinger

Class World 61:299 Mr '68 250w

"It is always a real pleasure to read a translation which adheres to one basic, important principle, to reflect faithfully what the poet says. Professor Cook's translation does just that. . . . These lines scan easily and move rapidly, thus reproducing one of the special delights of Homeric style. . . . I have noticed an occasional redundancy such as 'feminine goddesses,' but this is hardly a drawback. . . . Recommended highly." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 92:4417 D 1 '67 150w

Reviewed by Garry Wills

Nat R 20:407 Ap 23 '68 850w

Reviewed by John Chadwick

Sat R 51:39 F 3 '68 600w

HOMER. The Odyssey of Homer; tr. with an introd. by Richmond Lattimore. 374p $8.95 Harper

883

66-20740

The translator, professor of Greek at Bryn Mawr, states: "I have followed the principles stated and followed in my translation of the Iliad [BRD 1963]. In particular, I have tried to follow, as far as the structure of English will allow, the formulaic practice of the original. Of course my memory has failed me at times and I have allowed myself some liberties. I have used the Oxford text of T. W. Allen, 2d edition, and followed it except in a very few places." (Introd) Glossary.

Choice 5:44 Mr '68 170w

Reviewed by H. G. Edinger

Class World 61:299 Mr '68 250w

Reviewed by F. W. Wassermann

Library J 92:2931 S 1 '67 220w

"It is incredible that a man who can write English poetry, who has written fine translations . . . could abandon English for the worst translationese. . . . [Lattimore] gets some things right now that were botched in the Iliad . . . but he still does not think the thing into English. . . . [The] cause for so dismal an effect [is his] conception of fidelity to the Homeric hexameter. . . . To achieve mathematical faithfulness, he sacrifices the primary esthetic effect, which is one of formality and control. . . . Lattimore distorts the order of English, and stumbles, often, into ambiguity. . . . The result of his narrowminded focus and literalism in the handling of separate units is the lifeless jointure of part to part . . . an effect the very opposite of . . . [that] made possible by oral poetry's large formulaic and rhythmic building blocks." Garry Wills

Nat R 20:407 Ap 23 '68 850w

"[In the introduction, Mr. Lattimore] does not ignore the existence of Homeric controversies and arguments and perplexities; he gives the reader . . . enough to draw him on, whether in biography or geography; but substantially what he gives the reader is the poem itself. Here it is, read it. He analyzes the story enough to help us with the narrative, but he does not dwell on his own enthusiasm (if any) for this great scene, this lovely idyll, this tremendous dramatic moment, this effective comic interlude." Rolfe Humphries

New Repub 157:30 D 9 '67 1500w

"Unavoidably, Lattimore's version poses itself as a challenge to [R.] Fitzgerald's Odyssey [BRD 1961]. The simple way out is to assert that Fitzgerald's is an imitation in the manner of Pound or Robert Lowell whereas Lattimore aims to translate all there is and no more in an almost interlinear form. But this is only partially the case. . . . [Lattimore's] Odyssey, no less than Fitzgerald's although in a different key, represents an act of critical, poetic animation. Its fidelity to Homer's formulaic structure and its ability to keep the 'tale' in vivid progress are admirable. But Fitzgerald goes deeper. . . . Both versions have their important place; the fine scruple and clarity of the one ought to lead the reader to the re-creative freedom of the other." George Steiner

New Statesman 75:43 Ja 12 '68 700w

Reviewed by H. A. Mason

N Y Rev of Books 10:28 My 9 '68

6700w

"The many admirers of Richmond Lattimore's 'Iliad' will not be disappointed in his 'Odyssey.' His complete Homer is indeed a splendid achievement, and I . . . [regard] it as much the best translation there is. . . . [Fitzgerald] chose a conventional English blank verse for his 'Odyssey.' Lattimore, on the other hand, and also, I think, very satisfactorily, has chosen a longer six-stressed line. . . . His approximation to an imitation of the original here does give him the great advantage of keeping the unity of the line. . . . Personally, I find that when I am reading Fitzgerald, I am often admiring Fitzgerald and rather forgetting Homer. I feel closer to Homer when I am with Lattimore. . . . [who] has achieved a most valuable and distinguished work." Rex Warner

N Y Times Bk R p36 O 22 '67 600w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan

New Yorker 43:135 Mr 30 '68 190w

Reviewed by John Chadwick

Sat R 51:39 F 3 '68 600w

TLS p241 Mr 14 '68 3500w

Va Q R 44:xxii winter '68 150w

HONG, HOWARD V., ed. & tr. Søren Kierkegaard's journals and papers, v 1. See Kierkegaard, S.

HONIG, EDWIN. Spring journal: poems. 63p $4; pa $2 Wesleyan univ. press

811

68-27540

A collection of poems by a professor of English at Brown University. This is his fourth book of poetry. Some of these poems previously appeared in The New York Times, Southwest Review, Chelsea and Yankee.

"[A] beautiful book of poems. [Mr. Honig] evokes feelings of love, life and death, freedom and imprisonment, and does so without the kind of contrivance that is foreign to his own experience. These are the poems of a man who has found his style and who succeeds in communicating his own vision and experiences of life. The collection will bring pleasure to anyone who enjoys modern poetry." Estelle Benedict

Library J 93:3145 S 15 '68 90w

"Reading Mr. Honig's poetry, one suspects the author rarely runs into any complex literary problem. The relaxed tone and forms make one think of middle-aged spread. . . . He finds death a compelling theme . . . [but] he has either not invented the language his experience calls for or has not sufficiently suffered the experience. When he means to convey a delight in fatherhood or in landscapes, he seems . . . willing to grab the nearest simile and assemble tidy phrases without joining them in a sequence evoking the intensity he claims to feel. Maybe Mr. Honig believes it is enough for a poet to report accurately what strikes him sharply."

TLS p1172 O 17 '68 150w

HOOFT, WILLEM A. VISSER'T. See Visser't Hooft, W. A.

HOOKE, JAMES R. Black revolutionary; George Padmore's path from communism to Pan-Africanism. 168p $5.50 Praeger

B or 92 Padmore, George. Pan-Africanism 67-22702

The author gives "details of Padmore's personal life and public career and an . . . analysis of his ideas." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"It is evident from Professor Hooker's account and from what is generally known about Padmore that he has a very real place in the recent history of the rise of self-assertion of dependent peoples. But it remains difficult to assess the precise extent or significance of his influence. Professor Hooker, who has otherwise managed with great industry to make a coherent whole of the confusing strands of Padmore's life, has unfortunately found it equally impossible to assess his subject's importance as a personality, an organizer, or a theoretician of anticolonialism." R. I. Rotberg

Ann Am Acad 376:183 Mr '68 550w

"In the pages of this very engrossing and amply detailed book not only are the twists and turns of Padmore's odyssey on behalf of African freedom illuminated, but much light is thrown upon the development of the ideology and organization of the Pan-African movement. Although Hooker . . . was not able to get access to certain persons or papers (notably those of Padmore himself), he has drawn upon a wide variety of both obvious and unlikely sources on four continents. . . . [The book] is a must for students of the history of Pan-Africanism, particularly in tandem with Padmore's own partially autobiographical Pan-Africanism or Communism? [BRD 1956]."

Choice 4:1156 D '67 180w

"Professor Hooker, who teaches history at Michigan State, has had access to original sources, and his extensive bibliography indicates the thoroughness of the research that went into this history of a man and a movement. Much of what is written and many of the events will be new even to scholars who have not had access to the international Negro press. Although of limited interest, this is an important contribution to Africana from a first-rate scholar and should be in all large collections." M. D. Herrick

Library J 92:2558 J1 '67 240w

"Most people think of [Padmore] as Nkrumah's friend and forget his many years of activity before he even met the future President. Professor Hooker has put the balance right, concentrating on Padmore's earlier years. . . . [One] characteristic which is brought out . . . [is] Padmore's lack of judgment. The author also brings out, however, his immense sincerity and his consistency in opposing totalitarianism. . . . Padmore emerges from these pages, in short, as a man of deep emotional commitment, a crusader writing constantly and vigorously (and with knowledge), but happier to crusade than to consolidate. He also emerges, though perhaps not so vividly, as a warm and unusual personality, a man performing numerous acts of kindness to those in need."

TLS p130 F 8 '68 340w

HOOPES, ROY. Getting with politics; a guide to political action for young people. 211p il $4.50 Delacorte press

329 Politics, Practical—Juvenile literature. U.S.—Politics and government—Juvenile literature 67-19761

The author is aware "that many young people would participate in political activities and campaigns if only they knew how to begin. He encourages this interest by showing ways to take part. . . . [giving an] explanation of how the American elections system works. . . . [He] delineates the major differences between the two parties, helps the reader make up his mind about which political party to join, and urges him to make contact with young people's political groups in his area. Teen Dem and TAR (Teen-Age Republican) groups and their programs are discussed. . . . and their organization manuals are reprinted." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grade nine and up." (Library J)

"The accent on youth during recent primary campaigns, especially among the followers of McCarthy and the late Robert Kennedy, only points to the practical nature of this volume and the popularity it should enjoy in the high school library. . . . Suggestions on the choice of Parties and the American political system are presented. . . . Arguments for lowering the voting age are forcefully presented, although some of the practical problems of this issue seem to be passed over. The book should be given to young people in their efforts to become more responsible citizens."

Best Sell 28:173 J1 15 '68 200w [YA]

"Any teen-agers inclined toward politicking armed with this manual will know whom to write to, what to expect, and how to go about the tasks assigned. The first chapter, 'To Revolt, Drop-out, or Join in,' sets the mildly hortatory tone, but succeeding chapters studded with anecdotes and advice from Senators and Congressmen make for enjoyable guidance on picking, joining, and working for an organized political party during the high school years. . . . Sound material for early inside starters."

L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:2548 Je 15 '68 170w [YA]

Reviewed by Marvin Kitman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p4 My 5 '68 240w [YA]

HOOPES, ROY, ed. The Peace Corps experience; with a pref. by Hubert H. Humphrey. 309p il maps $6.95 Potter, C.N.

309.2 U.S. Peace Corps 67-27354

Separate chapters are devoted to "training, basic living conditions, and the various kinds of projects undertaken—teaching, community development, public health and agricultural assistance. The text is composed of excerpts from articles, letters and other forms of written comment by individual volunteers [all connected by] . . . editorial and 'background' sections that [the editor] inserts to join together the various bits and pieces of text. . . . Hoopes has also brought together some 350 photographs (largely borrowed from official Peace Corps records)." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Richard Karp

Book World p1 F 11 '68 2250w

"A heartwarming and altogether absorbing account [which] will probably be called superficial; in a sense it is, for the concentration is on the outward experiences of the volunteers with little real probing of their minds and hearts. Also, the failures and the mistakes unavoidably made by some are glossed over. However, perhaps accentuating the positive is exactly what we need; this book is a marvelous antidote for the depressing reading in our newspapers—a reaffirmation of the courage, integrity and basic humanity of the American people. Recommended reading for practically everybody!" Lola Dudley

Library J 93:1912 My 1 '68 170w

Library J 93:4744 D 15 '68 30w [YA]

"[In] the early months of the organization . . . a certain idealized picture of Peace Corps service gained a powerful hold on the public imagination. . . . [It] has been left entirely to the volunteers themselves to find and express the truth of their experience. Thus, . . . one turns with a special sense of hope to [this] book. . . . Unfortunately [it] is finally disappointing in just these terms. . . . Hoopes does not, in the first place, really allow the volunteers to tell their own story. His personal point of view, fashioned chiefly from 'image' materials, is much too intrusive; it is everywhere apparent. . . . Moreover, there is reason to question the specific choices . . . made from the large corpus of volunteer writings now available. Taken as a group, the comments presented here seem strangely flat and perfunctory. . . . Even more than the text, [the photographs] are sheer reinforcement for 'the image.' There is in the end something quite offensive about so many pictures of bright, authoritative-looking, young Americans tutoring eager natives in the intricacies of this or that."

John Demos

N Y Times Bk R p38 Mr 3 '68 800w

HOOS, IDA R. Retraining the work force: an analysis of current experience. 281p $6 Univ. of Calif. press

331.86 Occupational retraining. Labor and laboring classes—Education 67-11663

The author "is a research sociologist in the Space Sciences Laboratory, University of California at Berkeley, and was previously a consultant for Federal Government agencies and the Ford Foundation. . . . Applying investigative techniques to the geographical area closest to her, Dr. Hoos presents the efforts of government, industry, and labor in the San Francisco-Oakland metropolitan area to retrain people to meet the rapid technological changes caused by automation. . . . Contrast is made with certain other programs, such as the Job Corps, programs for welfare recipients, and Neighborhood House, North Richmond, California, which has been retraining unemployed Negroes to fit into the labor market. Further contrast is made with the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 with its institutional programs for training the unemployed." (Library J) Index.

"Falls between works dealing with the overall problem of retraining in aggregate terms and those treating one approach in detail. This book is not a set of how-to-do-it instructions. . . . The book is readable and an excellent introduction to the problem with some suggested solutions. The wide coverage of types of efforts underway alone make the book of interest to all people concerned with the problem of unemployment and poverty. A reader wishes, at many points, that greater attention had been given to evaluation, and that a stronger attempt had been made to rank the various approaches and programs in order of their effectiveness."

Choice 5:530 Je '68 200w

"This book is important because of the sociological territory that it covers and for its succinct summaries of the material. . . . The importance of [the case studies it presents] . . . lies in their depiction of the transition from the older traditional apprenticeship programs . . . to what seems to be the first heartrending attempts at formulating a philosophy and program for training the hard-core unemployed to take their place in the labor market. Recommended." J. V. Brown

Library J 92:1490 Ap 1 '67 400w

HOPF, ALICE L. Earth's bug-eyed monsters. 140p il $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Norton

591 Animals—Habits and behavior—Juvenile literature 68-11386

The author discusses "the octopus, the Portuguese man-of-war, the land crab . . . moloch lizards, the komodo dragon, the gila monster, ostriches, the roadrunner, . . . tarsier monkeys [and others. Bibliography. Index.] Grade five and up." (Best Sell)

"Recommended for library purchase." Best Sell 28:173 J1 15 '68 100w

"Most of the [animals discussed] have been treated similarly, and in some cases more accurately, in other books for children. The passages concerning the yellow jacket, giraffe, and bat are well done. However, the book contains some questionable and misleading reporting on cephalopods, tarantulas, and flying reptiles, while the material concerning the reproductive cycle of the sea anemone conflicts with the findings of recognized authorities in the field." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:1811 Ap 15 '68 120w

"The promise of the eye-catching title isn't completely fulfilled, yet Mrs. Hopf has gathered together a great deal of intriguing information. The tarantula, trap-door spider and especially the star-nosed mole look their worst in clear, dramatic photographs."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p53 N 1 '68 90w

HOPKINS, GERARD MANLEY. The poems of Gerard Manley Hopkins; fourth edition based on the first edition of 1918 and enlarged to incorporate all known poems and fragments; ed. with add. notes, a foreword on the rev. text, and a new biographical and critical introd. by W. H. Gardner and N. H. MacKenzie. 362p $7.50 Oxford

821

67-26002

"Based on the first two Oxford editions, edited by Robert Bridges, and the third, edited by W. H. Gardner, this fourth edition includes a new . . . introduction by Gardner, [an] essay on textual matters by MacKenzie, editor's notes, and all of Hopkins' poetry (English and Latin: whole and fragmentary). . . . First line and title indices." (Choice) For the second Oxford edition see BRD 1931; for the third see BRD 1948.

"Libraries must have this standard edition. . . . Those libraries still owning the 1930 edition might consider retaining it for Bridges' notes."

Choice 4:116 D '67 80w

"The inclusion of all known poems and fragments, the thorough scrutiny of the text, and the modification of the order of the poems makes the fourth edition of Poems one which all serious students of Hopkins will have to possess, but it should be pointed out that the new edition is still 'based on the First Edition of 1918' somewhat to its disadvantage. It is Bridges's shadow, for example, that has delayed so long the placing of the 'Shepherd's brow' sonnet where it obviously belongs, and the commentary, which is much expanded in this edition, is more of a patchwork quilt than ever. As well as notes initialled '[R.B.]' and '[W.H.G.]' we now have others marked '[N.H.M.]'. Piety is an excellent thing, but its price is high when the commentary is so difficult to use. . . . In spite of the weaknesses shown this is an essential edition for the scholar."

TLS p937 O 5 '67 600w

HOPPE, ARTHUR. The perfect solution to absolutely everything; ed. by William German. 393p $4.95 Doubleday

817 Wit and humor

68-29644

These collected columns from the humorist's by-line in the San Francisco Chronicle cover such problems as "the topless craze, trusting people over 30, trusting people under 30, girdles, Charles de Gaulle, dogs, Democrats and Republicans." (Publisher's note)

"A very funny book. . . . It's a portfolio of columns worthy of a Pulitzer Prize for humorous writing, something the Pulitzer jurors have never intentionally given an award for." Marvin Kitman

Book World p4 O 20 '68 1000w

"Some of [Hoppe's] political mudballs have been reshaped and refung into some (still) prominent public faces. Marred by poor taste in references to the late Martin Luther King, Jr., and Robert F. Kennedy, the book also suffers from a severe case of hardened arteries and over-acidity. To paraphrase a new health slogan being foisted upon a very large national industry, 'Caution: Reading contemporary humor may be hazardous to your good taste.' [Not] recommended for purchase." C. D. Pipes

Library J 93:3560 O 1 '68 80w

HOPPER, DAVID. Tillich: a theological portrait. 189p $4.50 Lippincott

230 Tillich, Paul Johannes

68-10618

The author gives an "account of important theological incidents in Tillich's German years, and at the same time he relates early philosophical formulations to the later course of Tillich's thought, especially as they find expression in the climactic Systematic Theology. . . . [He] merges Tillich's life and thought to . . . assess his theological-philosophical contribution and expose the human qualities lying behind his more abstract formulations." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Hopper's book is a distinctive and valuable addition to previous studies in more adequately emphasizing the existential bases (personal and historical) of Tillich's thinking. By utilizing little-studied German materials and discussing at some length Tillich's controversy with Barth and Tillich's break with Emanuel Hirsch and the Nazis, Hopper provides new insight into the development and understanding of Tillich's complex theologizing."

Choice 5:512 Je '68 200w

"Hopper is able to portray Tillich as revolutionary, as romantic and as Christian in a rather brief but significantly original appraisal."

Christian Century 85:86 Ja 17 '68 60w

"Hopper, associate professor of religion at Macalester College, makes a significant contribution in his theological portrait of Paul Tillich. . . . All students of Tillich will find this work profitable and interesting." Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:556 F 1 '68 80w

HÖPPNER, BARBARA BARTOS-. See Bartos-Höppner, B.

HORGAN, PAUL. Everything to live for. 215p
$4.95 Farrar, Straus

68-23740

The setting of this novel "is the estate of the Chittenden family outside Philadelphia in 1921. The protagonist is Max, twenty-one, a Harvard undergraduate and heir apparent to millions. The narrator is his second cousin Richard, seventeen, from upstate New York, and there are Max's parents and his fiancée, Marietta Osborne. . . . Being a Chittenden means being host to the county, even at home being on perpetual display before the servants. Max is torn between playing his proper role to perfection and refusing to play it at all." (Book World)

Reviewed by J. F. Cotter
America 119:220 S 21 '68 450w

"Horgan's latest novel appears to be a sequel to 'Things as They Are' [BRD 1964] but where his earlier novel was a frequently moving account of Richard's growth from innocence to maturity, 'Everything to Live For' is merely a leisurely character sketch of Richard's debauched cousin. . . . The major characters are never quite believable—either in their sophistication or naiveté—and the predictable plot lacks dramatic intensity." W. K. Kraus
Best Sell 28:207 Ag 15 '68 350w

"In a format almost as tightly disciplined as a Greek tragedy, Horgan has developed a story both modern in its psychological penetration and its exemplification of the new social mores, and classical in its deliberate, chiseled phrasing and the simple directness of its plotting. . . . [Richard] makes a natural foil to Max. But the novelist's scheme requires him to be exquisitely perceptive and gifted with total recall. At best, Richard is implausible. An omniscient point of view would have permitted him to be less precocious, but then the story would have unfolded less gradually and convincingly than it does. . . . When the last thread is neatly tied, we can look back on an expert and elegant work of art." A. C. Ames
Book World p20 S 8 '68 310w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:576 O '68 150w

Reviewed by E. B. Hayward
Library J 93:3578 O 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:1120 N 5 '68 420w

Reviewed by Frank Littler
N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 25 '68 600w

"[This novel] clarifies my belief that [Horgan] is a gifted and perhaps unduly neglected writer—not one of the handful of the really great but much too good to be overlooked. [It] is the story not merely of Max's moments of misery and his self-destruction but also of Richie's loss of innocence. . . . At first the style seems to be too formal and elaborate for a seventeen-year-old boy, especially one so innocent as Richie appears to be, but soon the reader is so caught up in the narrative that he accepts the voice as that of Richie. . . . Max's death, so obviously foreordained, is not the real climax of the novel, and it is in bringing the story to its true conclusion—or perhaps conclusions—that Horgan shows his skill." Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:19 Ag 31 '68 1000w

HORI, ICHIRO. Folk religion in Japan; continuity and change; ed. by Joseph M. Kitagawa and Alan L. Miller. 278p pl $7 Univ. of Chicago press

299 Japan—Religion 67-30128

The professor of the history of religions at the University of Tokyo "portrays the manner in which Shinto, Buddhist, Confucian, and Taoist elements, as well as all kinds of primitive magical beliefs and practices, have been fused on the 'folk' level. It is this 'folk religion' which the majority of the Japanese populace follows. . . . Hori studies the organic relationship between the Japanese social structure—the family and kinship system, village and community organizations—and 'folk religion.' He discusses the popular Pure Land Buddhist practice called Nembutsu and the magical custom of reciting the holy name of Buddha Amida (Amitabha). The significance of sacred mountains as the focus of belief in the other world, the unique features of Japanese shamanism, and the survival of shamanistic tendencies in the contemporary 'new religions' are also studied." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The present book is based on the Haskell Lectures given . . . in 1965 at the University of Chicago. . . . [It] is a splendid contribution to Nipponology and to the field of comparative religious studies." Joseph Bram
Library J 93:2877 Ag '68 220w

"Hori's book is the most comprehensive work to get into English in a very long time, and it is certainly the most comprehending. Much of the writing on this subject in English has been tendentious and misleading, notably Ruth Benedict's [Chrysanthemum and the Sword, BRD 1946] written during the Second World War, but still used by American students. . . . The great virtue of Hori's book is that it traces the shaping and transforming influences of the living folk religion from prehistoric antiquity . . . down to the proletarian religions which have proliferated since the Japanese defeat and occupation. . . . The only fault I have to find . . . is that its descriptions are too verbal and abstract. [It] could have done with a bit of [travelogue] . . . and with plenty of illustrations. . . . However, an introduction to the loftiest speculations of Japanese Buddhist metaphysics or as a guide to a walking tour of Japanese rural temples and festivals the book is invaluable." Kenneth Rexroth
Nation 206:610 My 6 '68 500w

The HORIZON cookbook and illustrated history of eating and drinking through the ages, by William Harian Hale and the eds. of Horizon magazine; ed. in charge: Wendy Buehr; recipes ed. Tatiana McKenna; historical foods consultant: Mimi Sheraton. 768p $16.50 Am. Heritage

641.5 Cookery. Menus 68-15655

This volume is "divided into two almost equal parts, the first part given over to [an historical survey] . . . tracing the history of food preparation from pre-historic suppositions through the Egypt of the Pharaohs, the Roman era . . . the meals of the Middle Ages, Renaissance tables, the search for spices, French cuisine, that of 'the Other Europe', English cooking, and a chapter titled 'Toward an International Style'. . . . [Part Two presents] classic recipes chosen from all nations . . . from appetizers to desserts and drinks . . . prefaced with selected international menus." (Best Sell) Index to Part I. Index to Part II.

"Far more than a garnering of recipes, simple and exotic, [this book] deserves a place as much on library shelves as it does in the kitchen collections of those who can (and will, most likely) afford it. . . . The illustrations, some 570 of them, are largely contained in Part I, with 110 in color, including reproduction of many paintings." Best Sell 28:298 O 15 '68 240w

"[The first part of this book] is elegantly illustrated. . . . [The second half] includes more than 675 recipes arranged according to appetizers, soup, fish, poultry, meat, salads, desserts, etc. Historical notes and illustrations accompany them but the recipes themselves have been brought up to date so that present-day cooks will find the ingredients available and the methods applicable." M. L. R.
Christian Science Monitor p13 O 24 '68 150w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb
Sat R 51:33 S 23 '68 1300w

HORIZON MAGAZINE. Charlemagne; by the eds. of Horizon magazine; auth: Richard Winston; consultant: Harry Bober. 153p il col $4.95; to libs & schools $4.79 Am. heritage
B or 92 Charlemagne—Juvenile literature. Civilization, Medieval—Juvenile literature 68-13721

Charlemagne's "conquests by the sword are presented here . . . and emphasis is on the cultural and intellectual activities of the period. [Bibliography. Index]. Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:67 My 1 '68 160w

"The book is as much concerned with Charlemagne's educational innovations and administrative genius as with his military exploits, portraying him as 'a man of iron, with the gift of tears.' In a skillful narration bolstered by much visual appeal, the editors show that there was far more to the Middle Ages than tournaments and trumpets. The young student is guided to an understanding of the elements in medieval life which eventually lead to the Renaissance and to the world of today."

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 2 '68 160w

"A profusely illustrated, lively portrayal of the many roles of the civilizer of Europe, defender of the Faith, preserver of learning, and patron of the arts. The text, though brief, is adequate and well-written, but the strength of this book lies in the illustrations many of which are full-color reproductions of works of Carolingian and later medieval art." R. J. Folcarelli

Library J 93:2121 My 15 '68 90w

"As we see Charlemagne unify his own Frankish kingdom, expand his rule over Europe from southern Italy to the Baltic and found a Holy Roman Empire that would last a thousand years, problems and achievements are encountered that are surprisingly familiar. Here are debates over wars fought far from home, over escalation, the draft and war taxes. Here are strivings toward what can only be called a Great Society... even aggiornamento and church reform—for Charlemagne was a devout Christian and something of a theologian. The narrative reads well, and only rarely do the striking, many-colored picture displays interrupt the text." N. K. Burger

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p18 My 5 '68 180w

HORIZON MAGAZINE. Charles Darwin and The origin of species; by the eds. of Horizon magazine; auth: Walter Karp; consultant: J. W. Burrow. 153p il col il $4.95; to libs & schools $4.79 Am. heritage

B or 92 Darwin, Charles Robert—Juvenile literature. Evolution—Juvenile literature 68-12439

A "portrayal of Darwin extending from his carefree childhood to his maturity and death. The family relationships that were an important part of his life are... presented [as well as] accounts of the Beagle voyage, of Darwin's formulation of his theories and of the ensuing controversy. [Bibliography. Index.] Grade seven and up." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:65 My 1 '68 50w [YA]

Reviewed by John Greenway
Book World p10 (children's issue) My 5 '68 190w

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 44:446 Ag '68 190w

"A vivid, well-researched narrative.... The subject and the concepts are not simple, but the author has presented them carefully and supplies much of the background necessary to their understanding. The many illustrations from contemporary sources plus color photographs of plants, animals, and other natural history subjects pertinent to Darwin's findings are important supplements to the text." E. F. Grave

Library J 93:1811 Ap 15 '68 130w

Sci Am 219:139 D '68 120w [YA]

HORIZON MAGAZINE. Russia in revolution; by the eds. of Horizon mag; auth: E. M. Halliday; consultant: Cyril E. Black. (A Horizon Caravel bk) 153p il col il $4.95; to libs & schools $4.79 Am. heritage

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921—Juvenile literature 67-26349

This book "outlines the root causes of discontent in Russia from early in the 19th century to the first revolution of 1917 which established the Provisional Government headed by Kerensky.... Causes and events leading up to the Bolshevik Revolution are [explained]. The book concludes with the death of Lenin in 1924. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:430 F 1 '68 80w

"Highlighting the book are many contemporary photographs, cartoons, and prints of the revolutionary leaders and activities which together with the excellent text will help provide the necessary understanding of these developments. This will supplement the growing but not yet sufficient number of books on Russia." R. W. Barber

Library J 93:306 Ja 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds
Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 50w

Reviewed by Zulfikar Ghose
New Statesman 76:598 N 1 '68 20w

"[While this volume] depicts with some flair the tumultuous events of 1917... the nature of the peasant problem in Russia, the mainsprings of Marxism-Leninism, and the occasion for the involvement of Russia in the First World War—all knotty questions—are treated in such a sketchy, gingerly, or compressed fashion as to be of little benefit. The reader simply cannot proceed with his own thinking about these issues on the basis of what has been presented to him.... Undue emphasis is given to the dramatic or the melodramatic. Thus, Rasputin, inexorably, comes to occupy too much space, even as a symbol.... [In fact] he seems to be more central to the revolution than Lenin, who remains rather shadowy." H. L. Roberts

N Y Times Bk R p22 Mr 10 '68 600w

"Halliday's book is written in... [a] style of rigorous fairness... [with] excellently researched pictures. Posters, Tsarist and Soviet, contemporary photographs and cartoons, and those retrospective Soviet paintings where Lenin stands arm outstretched on a lorry or before a table looking at a map, but always in an aura of red flags and sunlight—they are all there, well reproduced on large pages, and all for 25s. Presumably the price is made possible because there is also an American edition—and one pays for this in the occasional odd-sounding Americanism in the text—but this is a small matter in so handsomely produced a book."

TLS p1124 O 3 '68 250w

HORN, D. B. A short history of the University of Edinburgh, 1556-1889. 228p il $10 Aldine pub. 378.414 Edinburgh, University [67-17615]

The author describes "the university's constitutional and administrative history, her politics in relation to the Edinburgh town council and the London government, her curricular developments, the life of her students and professors [and] her buildings." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The account, useful as it is, lacks distinction. Mr. Horn has, it is true, been immune to piety and exaggeration. That Edinburgh reached superb heights in the eighteenth century no one can deny.... Surely the author could also have made more of the university's relation to Scottish cultural history in other periods. Instead, we learn a little about this and a little about that; sometimes the pages are diverting, sometimes dull." C. F. Mullett

Am Hist R 73:808 F '68 480w

"'Tis a pity that this is A Short History only, giving far too sketchy an analysis of Edinburgh's relations to other universities, church, state, and of the place in the intellectual and social history of the years covered. 'Tis a pity, because what it does describe... it describes engagingly well. Besides informing him of Edinburgh, the volume provides the American reader with an enlightening introduction to the little known subject of higher education in Scotland. There is no similar volume in print. The author's scholarship, his style, and the many well chosen illustrations make the book a valuable addition to any college library."

Choice 4:1294 Ja '68 120w

"This is, in all senses, an elegant production. The edifying story of 'the Tounis College' is told with learning and critical piety; the illustrations delight as well as inform.... The whole story is told with masterly brevity."

TLS p822 S 14 '67 1100w

HORN, DANIEL, ed. & tr. War, mutiny and revolution in the Germany navy. See Stumpf, R.

HORN, DAVID BAYNE. Great Britain and Europe in the eighteenth century. 411p $7.20 Oxford

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations [67-88613]

An "examination of Britain's diplomatic relations with each of Europe's powers, presented as a survey for each country through the course of the 18th century." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies.

"Encyclopedic in nature, and somewhat repetitive as a consequence of its arrangement, [this work] makes heavy demands on its readers for previous knowledge. For undergraduates, it would be likely to prove too detailed, but for more advanced students it does provide an accurate and comprehensive account of the motives underlying British policy and relates these to the actual course of Britain's diplomacy. Especially valuable are the bibliographies at the end of each chapter."

HORN, D. B.—Continued

Choice 4:1433 F '68 100w

"Professor Horn is the doyen of eighteenth century diplomatic historians, and his new work is the distillation of forty years of interest in the subject. It is massive, and masterly in its lucid handling of detail. . . . Unfortunately [Dr Horn] does not go far enough beyond diplomatic history (despite his insistence on the inadequacy of a 'purely or narrowly diplomatic approach') to make this the definitive history of foreign policy that is still lacking for the eighteenth century. He is more interested in the conduct and course of policy than in the cause or result. . . . His method, treating Britain's relations with the powers country by country in separate chapters, only adds to the fragmentation, and hinders considered assessments of the major episodes involving all the powers. . . . It is lamentable that a book which will deservedly become the student's guide through the labyrinth has but two inadequate maps, no chronological table and no cross-referencing to chapters so that a general picture might be obtained."

Economist 224:504 Ag 5 '67 750w

Reviewed by F. Spencer

Engl Hist R 83:848 O '68 450w

Reviewed by John Vincent

New Statesman 74:231 Ag 25 '67 500w

"This is not to depreciate the very useful chapters, occupying most of the book, that cover the different regions of Europe. But the synthesizing part of the work—short though it is, and confined to the opening and closing chapters—is of far greater general interest. Here Professor Horn makes a number of points which deserve more emphasis than, even now, they normally receive, since they put British events in a European context. . . . Professor Horn's style is rather heavy, even though he tries to lighten it by occasional bursts of informality. These are not always happy. . . . [The book's] usefulness would have been still further improved by brief lists of the foreign ministers and principal British representatives abroad—a field Professor Horn has made his own."

TLS p979 O 19 '67 850w

HORNER, DAVE. The blockade-runners; true tales of running the Yankee blockade of the Confederate coast; drawing by Jack Woodson. 241p il $5.95 Dodd

973.7 U.S.—History—Civil War—Naval operations 68-15409

"The accounts that follow are, to the best of my knowledge, a true saga of the exploits of Confederate blockade-runners." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"A popular, well written and interesting account of some of the dramatic incidents of blockade running. The author, a scuba diving buff, has an enthusiastic interest in the subject which he is eager to share with the public and the result should appeal to the general reader. . . . The author limits his account to the Carolina coast, chiefly Wilmington and Charleston. There are a number of interesting photographs but a few maps of the southern coast, Bermuda, and the Bahamas would have been helpful." F. J. Gallagher

Best Sell 28:116 Je 1 '68 220w

"Mr. Horner also provides clues for those who wish to search for sunken ships. Written as an adventurous tale, the book will appeal to many besides students of history." Ruben Kugler

Library J 93:991 Mr 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman

Library J 93:2741 Jl '68 110w [YA]

HOROWITZ, DAVID, ed. Containment and revolution. (Bertrand Russell centre for social res. London. Studies in imperialism and the cold war, v 1) 252p $5.95 Beacon press

327 World politics—1945-. U.S.—Foreign relations 67-24889

The various authors of this collection of essays maintain that "American intervention in the affairs of other nations has been that of impeding social revolutions [and that] . . . the United States policy of containment . . . of these revolutionary forces dates back [to 1917] . . . when American troops marched into Russia. . . . Beginning with that 1917 intervention, . . . Isaac Deutscher, William Appleman Williams, John Bagdikian, Henry W. Berger, Todd Gitlin, John Gittings, and Richard Morrock [attempt to show a] . . . similarity between patterns of American power politics in the twentieth century and the colonial expansion of European political and economic and military power in the nineteenth century. . . . [The editor] is a director of the Bertrand Russell Centre for Social Research. [This book] is the first volume of a projected series of 'Studies in Imperialism and the Cold War' sponsored by the Russell Centre." (Publisher's note)

Choice 5:1018 O '68 130w

"For anyone interested in how some articulate critics of recent American foreign policy see their country's record since the war, this book should be required reading. Some of the conclusions are very questionable, others quite unfair, but the New Left has no monopoly on biased writing. This book, despite evident weaknesses of judgment, is a timely contribution to the passionate debate now raging inside the United States on the direction of American foreign policy." R. H. Johnston

Library J 92:4424 D 1 '67 150w

"[This] is a collection of seven excellent research essays on the cold war. . . . William A. Williams on 'American Intervention in Russia: 1917-1920' establishes Woodrow Wilson's aversion to revolution and describes the long struggle between his desire to aid the anti-Bolsheviks and his conviction that the Russian peoples had a right to self-determination even by revolution. . . . [Other chapters] discuss the origins and myths of the cold war, Senator Taft's critique of containment, and the myth and reality of counterinsurgency in Greece in the 1940's and again in Vietnam. This is a valuable and interesting addition to cold war history." D. F. Fleming

Nation 206:53 Ja ■ '68 3750w

HORSBURGH, H. J. N. Non-violence and aggression; a study of Gandhi's moral equivalent of war. 207p $5.60 Oxford

172 Passive resistance to government. Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand 68-88404

The author describes "Gandhi's method of non-violent resistance—satyagraha . . . [which] is based on the principles of absolute adherence to truth, non-violence or reverence for life, and voluntary suffering by the non-violent resister when conflict is inevitable [and argues that it can act both as a psychological and a political substitute for military defence]." (TLS)

"The critical approach to Gandhi's teaching and practice of non-violence is an important enterprise. But to make the leap from the problems of the national to those of the international field one must be fully aware that it is a leap and that Gandhi, almost as often as he looked at it, declined to make it. And the problem of the systematic interpretation of his teaching and action is to distinguish between the basic and the mutable. . . . Mr. Horsburgh convincingly asserts his own right to a rational Utopia in acceptance of 'the Kantian dictum that "ought" implies "can"'. But his deductions, which are seriously studied within their prearranged departments, lose some of their cogency when presented as an examination of 'Gandhi's moral equivalent of war.'" Francis Watson

Encounter 31:79 O '68 270w

"The imprint of the Oxford University Press adequately prepares us for the soberness and the logic of Horsburgh's [book]. The argument is lucid. Chapters on the bases of satyagraha and the practice of satyagraha, as well as on the ineffectiveness of armed force in human affairs, and on the purposes of defense, set the stage for a systematic consideration of the advantages and the difficulties of satyagraha in present world politics. Given the self-destructive logic of nuclear deterrence, present prospects, the author admits in his final 14 pages, are bleak. But before he arrives at this geopolitical level, Horsburgh makes some telling points." Michael Novak

New Repub 158:23 Je 22 '68 600w

Reviewed by Edmund Leach

N Y Rev of Books 11:24 O 10 '68 5400w

"Mr. Horsburgh emphasizes the religious element in Gandhi's thought. . . . It is when he comes to link his analysis of satyagraha with the contemporary problems of defence that Mr. Horsburgh runs into serious difficulties. He has committed himself to showing not only that non-violent methods of defence would be more consistent with liberal values, but also that they would have some prospect of being effective. But as he is limiting his analysis to Gandhian satyagraha, he has logically to argue that only a society approximating to Gandhi's picture of a non-violent society could practise non-violent defence. . . . As non-violent defence does not appear practicable now, Mr. Horsburgh pins his hopes on a permanent nuclear stalemate, within which non-violent methods of resolving conflict may gradually replace military force. This conclusion is incompatible with his earlier analysis of the dangers and limitations of current defence policies. It is also incompatible with his statement of the requirements for effective non-violence. . . . Although [this book] is a perceptive analysis of Gandhian ideas, it fails to make the connexion between moral idealism and political effectiveness central to Gandhi's own approach."

TLS p210 F 29 '68 500w

HORSMAN, REGINALD. Expansion and American Indian policy, 1783-1812. 209p $5.75 Mich. state univ. press

973 U.S.—Territorial expansion. Indians of North America—Government relations 66-26958

An "analysis of the policy and practice of America's relations with the Indians in the period from the end of the Revolution to the War of 1812." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"What material was not included in Horsman's four earlier articles upon these matters is generally covered in such other works as Walter Mohr's Federal Indian Relations, 1774-1788 [BRD 1933], Francis Prucha's American Indian Policy in the Formative Years [BRD 1963], and Randolph Downes's Council Fires on the Upper Ohio [BRD 1941]. . . . Nor has Horsman gone beyond his predecessors in using manuscripts. . . . Though his thesis is not so original, he might have proven it more conclusively than previous writers, but this would have taken many more pages and a much more complicated model of analysis than Horsman employs. Lastly, I, for one, was bothered by his failure to distinguish carefully among tribes or between factions within tribes. . . . We have reached the stage in writing about Indian-white relations of differentiating aboriginal groups more precisely than is done in this book." R. F. Berkhofer

Am Hist R 73:1629 Je '68 460w

"Horsman joins those historians who are trying to support the assertion that America attempted a basically fair and humanitarian policy toward the Indian. . . . While the policy emphasized expansion with honorable treatment for the Indian, it was not honorable treatment for the Indian at the expense of expansion. And therein lies the catch. Settlers did not cooperate with the government's policy which ultimately failed. The book would have been stronger if Horsman had explained more fully the policy's failure instead of concentrating on its formation. Nonetheless, it is significant and should be on the shelf of any library which desires adequate coverage in American history."

Choice 4:1438 F '68 200w

"[The author] has made a significant contribution to American history with a brief well-documented, and readable book. . . . In brisk narrative based upon thorough investigation of printed and manuscript records, Horsman tells an interesting story of early relations with the Indians, but one that has not been previously told with frankness. . . . [This] is a thoughtful, original study which has special importance for modern Americans and scholars of social history. The author has surveyed a large mass of original material and has demonstrated that Indian history cannot be ignored because it does not represent what one would like to read." W. R. Jacobs

J Am Hist 54:880 Mr '68 490w

HORWITZ, RALPH. The political economy of South Africa. 522p $10 Praeger

330.968 Africa, South—Economic conditions. Africa, South—Native races 67-22247

An economic history by "a former member of Parliament, professor at the University of Cape Town, and editor and publisher of business journals." (Library J)

"The book reads well and the substantial amount of factual detail [which the author] incorporates into his study is accomplished with professional competence. He has combined an obvious scholarly competence with his extended involvement in the South African academic and economic environment. . . . Horwitz holds that in the relationship between the political system and the economic, the political is the causal agent. . . . There just doesn't seem to be adequate empirical evidence available in the development literature to support this kind of interpretive model. . . . In summary the real and overriding contribution of the book is its well-documented description and it stands on that and should be welcomed by concerned scholars. The theoretical approach is not, however, without some problems and deserves question." David Gugin

Am Pol Sci R 62:652 Je '68 650w

"Not an easy book to read. Apart from the rather small print, the publishers have placed the footnotes . . . in the rear of the volume. The result is a disservice to author and reader. . . . Furthermore, there are statements . . . that will cause a rereading, perhaps in disbelief. . . . Nevertheless, the volume contains a mass of factual material, and with its many personal impressions and opinions, its sometimes sweeping generalizations, its determinist viewpoint, and its frequently flowery prose, it is at times quite entertaining. . . . The author touches on a wide range of subjects, and among a mass of background material are some sections dealing with the economic implications of separate development." H. J. De Blij

Ann Am Acad 375:228 Ja '68 400w

Choice 5:338 S '68 100w

"The political factors shaping this country's development relate to an ideology that may vary in its phases and assume many guises, but always tends toward monolithic control by whites. Economic development has perforce to follow in the wake of this powerful ideology. When Mr. Horwitz notes that 'the South African ethos and not economic rationality dictates development,' he has stated his essential theme. He presents facts with the objectivity of good scholarship and points out distinctions between the State Information Office's interpretation of government acts themselves. It is scarcely necessary to record that the publication of this well-documented book comes after Mr. Horwitz's departure from South Africa. Recommended primarily for large and specialized collections." M. D. Herrick

Library J 92:3634 O 15 '67 190w

TLS p366 Ap 11 '68 650w

HOSIE, STANLEY W. Anonymous apostle; the life of Jean Claude Colin, Marist. 302p maps $6.50 Morrow

271 Colin, Jean Claude Marie. Society of Mary 67-29842

A biography of the nineteenth century founder of the Society of Mary.

"The biography of a religious founder presents some delicate problems for a reviewer. Clearly, such a book entails years of meticulous research, painstaking sifting of data and, when the subject is one's own spiritual father, an undeviating objectivity. Yet with all of this, the final product is limited in appeal; it is essentially a family affair. Here the family is the fourfold Society of Mary, known to us as Marists. [This] is the first English biography of [Colin]. . . . Fr. Hosie has made the book readable and the man real." Fortunata Caliri

America 118:48 Ja 13 '68 360w

"This biography is obviously a labor of devotion. Unfortunately, Father Hosie's blending of scholarly and popular writing leads to undistinguished results. Only for comprehensive collections of religious biography and church history in Catholic libraries." C. E. Zakrzewski

Library J 92:3632 O 15 '67 130w

HOUGH, JOSEPH C. Black power and white Protestants; a Christian response to the new Negro pluralism [by] Joseph C. Hough, Jr. 228p $5.75; pa $1.75 Oxford

261.8 Negroes. U.S.—Race relations. Church and race problems 68-19767

A study of race relations in the United States. "The author explores possible Christian responses to the American Negroes' call for Black Power, . . . [examines] changes in traditional attitudes among Negroes toward their role in society; and [describes how] these changes have often produced widespread fear, misunderstanding, and recalcitrance among white Americans. . . . [He] suggests that white Protestants realize their obligations as Christians through political action in support of the objectives of Negro pluralism. He concludes with a number of suggestions that may help." (Publisher's note)

"An objective, scholarly survey of black-white relations in this country, particularly since 1900. Buttressed with extensive footnotes and several sociological and political models, it reveals the historical-cultural matrix from which Black Power—or, as Hough prefers to term it, the new Negro pluralism—has developed. He analyzes the current attitudes of black leaders and presents a revealing delineation of today's typical white Protestant church. . . . [The book, which is] available in paperback editions . . . should prove helpful to most church people; [it] provides a good basic education on the racial problem." Alan Seaburg
Christian Century 85:1081 Ag 28 '68 140w

"Hough, chairman of the faculty of religion at Claremont Graduate School and assistant professor of Christian ethics at the School of Theology, Claremont, counsels those whites who feel 'the hurt of a rejected friend' to continue their love for the Negro even though cursed, reviled, and spitefully used. . . . His book, more a summation of all the relevant studies he has read than an original work, is helpful, perhaps, as a synthesis of material from a variety of disciplines." J. M. Elrod
Library J 93:1964 My 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Simon Lazarus
New Repub 158:37 Je 8 '68 430w

HOUGHTON, BERNARD, ed. Information work today. See Symposium for information workers, Liverpool school for librarianship, 1966

HOUGHTON, TIMOTHY. The first season. 210p $4.50 Morrow 67-15159

"A young Austrian mountain boy [Leon] is just breaking into the big-time of the ski world and starting to win major races when he smashes his leg showing off for an American girl. The book tries to show several themes: the conflict between the 'natives' who want the money but feel they are being bought by the tourists; the alienation of the boy from his simple family as his fame grows; and the contrast between the sophisticated American girl and her rival, a pleasant village lass." (Library J)

"I must admire Mr Houghton's interesting and absorbing exposition and narration of skiing but at the same time accept with reservation the theme that skiing is not a sport but a way of life. Perhaps it is. However, even while acknowledging that it may be and realizing that material things often contribute to a spiritual conversion, I find it difficult to accept the idea that a completely natural activity like skiing can achieve the supernatural end which Mr. Houghton presents. . . . Leon's abrupt change from a dedicated pleasure seeker to a bewildered but resolute God seeker is not convincing. Stylistically, the author often irritates. . . . Particularly irritating was the extravagant use of the action of grinning, so extravagant that I conclude that old skiers never die, they just grin away." F. L. Ryan
Best Sell 27:215 S 1 '67 600w

"What could have been a fascinating ski novel is a failure because of pedestrian writing. . . . The one bright spot is the description of the racers' feelings before and during the big downhill contest. Anyone who has stood in the starting gate, listening for the countdown and seeing the course drop below him, no matter how minor the race, can identify with these competitors. Here Mr. Houghton is on sure ground, and he would have made a better book if he had stuck to racing descriptions or, at least, had done a better job on his other themes." S. L. Mott

Library J 92:2605 J1 '67 210w

"Mr. Houghton expands on the difficulty of being a winner and on the corrupting influence of Yankee tourists with too much money and metal skis. He is most at home, though, in his descriptions of the art of racing, which he handles with crisp assurance." Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p61 S 10 '67 100w

Va R 44:xv winter '68 100w

HOUGHTON LIBRARY. The Houghton library, 1942-1967; a selection of books and manuscripts in Harvard collections (introd. by William Henry Bond). 255p il col pl maps $50 Harvard college lib.

016 Rare books 67-14051

"For its twenty-fifth anniversary, the Library has planned and mounted an exhibit of 370 items to display 'something of the range, scope, and richness of its holdings of books and manuscripts.' . . . Instead of being installed in glass cases . . . the exhibit has been put on paper in a huge . . . volume to create a permanent display and monument to the Houghton Library. . . . After a brief introduction, the exhibit is contained in 250 pages of . . . reproductions, beginning and ending with inscriptions carved on slate by John Howard Benson. As frequently as possible, the reproductions are exact size." (Library Q) Index.

"What a show! . . . You are almost overwhelmed by the diversity and excellence of the selection. . . . [Later, however] you begin to doubt if it is as profound and exciting as you first thought in the glamor of such a revolutionary concept of a bound display. The most persistent question is, 'Why was this example chosen? . . . No note at all is given to register the significance of [selection]. . . . At the beginning of each subject, there is the briefest of notes vaguely identifying the quality and/or quantity of Harvard's holdings along with an equally vague statement of Harvard's policy for collecting in that area. . . . For each illustration, there is only a brief statement of what that item is, the author, title, and date, with dimension if not exact size, and the source of the gift. Any further identification is the exception rather than the rule, and then only in almost cryptic brevity. The exhibit begs to be annotated adequately. . . . Each item deserves a statement to justify its inclusion or relate its significance to the whole. This brings us to the most important question concerning this book: What actually is its purpose?" R. D. Olson

Library Q 37:402 O '67 1700w

"[This] is a stately folio of 272 pages, with reproductions (ten in colour) of selected pieces—manuscripts, letters, printed books, bindings, illustrations, drawings—arranged under thirty-one categories. To select from a selection . . . is invidious but irresistible. Here then, for examples, are a tenth/eleventh-century manuscript of Horace, the De Buz Hours (from the de Rohan Atelier), and the Hours of Juana la Loca, the two halves now reunited; . . . the original printing of The Communist Manifesto (London, 1848, rarissimum) and a page from Trotsky's diary; . . . and the manuscript of the second of the Duineser Elegien of Rilke. . . . Visually, of course, the show is stolen by the seventy-odd pages devoted to the graphic arts, from Sanvito to Braque and Baskin. . . . This majestic sampler makes a fitting monument to the Harvard College Library's numerous benefactors."

TLS p428 My 18 '67 1300w

HOUN, FRANKLIN W. A short history of Chinese communism. 245p $5.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

951.04 China—History—Republic, 1912-1949.
China—History—1949—. Communism—China 67-28391

In this survey the author "places Chinese Communism in historical perspective and provides a topical account of the post-1949 Mainland." (Book World) Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 118:616 My 4 '68 70w

"Houn is a two-fold revisionist. American authors have tended to find elements of nobility, idealism and patriotism in the CCP before 1949 but repressive totalitarianism thereafter. Houn emphasizes the party's single-minded ruthlessness in its bid for power but admires its positive accomplishments since unifying the country. A former Nationalist official, he accepts Peking's statist goals. . . . His book is the most useful and up-to-date survey of Chinese Communism in print." John Israel

Book World p3 Mr 17 '68 140w

"Well organized, balanced, authoritative introduction to Communist China by an established Chinese political scientist. . . . Highly selective in its coverage and compact in presentation. But the selection has been judicious and the style is [highly] readable, with the result that one could hardly ask for a better single volume presentation of the Chinese Communist enterprise. Houn states openly in conclusion that China has gained more than it has lost under Communism. While this bias is discernible, it does not mar a basically dispassionate presentation. . . . Very useful, with collateral reading, for high school and college courses. Will also appeal to the general reader."

Choice 5:542 Je '68 200w [YA]

"[Professor Houn] devotes more than a third of the book to the rise of the Communist Party from its inception in 1921 to its takeover of the mainland in 1949; and records in great detail the shifting policies of the early party. . . . [He] very successfully describes the ideology, organization and control apparatus operative in Communist China since 1949. He finds the Chinese leaders cautious in their foreign policy and concerned with their own territorial integrity, not 'fanatically bellicose and irrational' as many Americans believe. His chapters on agriculture, industry, health, and education are less successful because of his uncritical acceptance of Chinese statistics. This book is of value primarily as a textbook. Scholars will appreciate the footnotes utilizing Chinese sources and the latest monographic studies." L. H. Madaras

Library J 92:4008 N 1 '67 240w

Library J 93:1828 Ap 15 '68 20w [YA]

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo
Nation 206:613 My 6 '68 70w

"The strength of American studies is that, with their vast expenditure on keyhole-peeping and radio monitoring from Hong Kong and Japan, they can tell you quicker than anybody else who fell off from, and who climbed up on to, the reviewing stand at the latest Peking parade. How much that matters is another question. The American talent for monumentally comic remarks on recent Chinese history remains unimpaired, however. From [the volume under review] this remains hard to beat. . . . What was wrong with Chiang Kai-shek's regime? Well, among other things 'a growing propensity to eschew basic socio-economic reforms.'" Owen Lattimore

New Statesman 75:875 Je 28 '68 200w

HOUSE AND GARDEN (periodical). House & garden's new cook book, by the eds. of House & garden. 404p il $12.50 Conde Nast; for sale by Simon & Schuster

641.5 Cookery, International 67-31969

This volume contains 1000 recipes selected from the magazine's files over the past ten years. It "starts with the cook's tools and techniques . . . [and presents] recipes with step-by-step directions for everything from hors d'oeuvres to desserts, with special chapters devoted to Egg & Cheese; Rice, Grain & Pasta; Sauce & Stuffing; Aspic; and Bread and Sandwiches." (Best Sell) Index.

Best Sell 27:329 N 15 '67 90w

"A handsome and elegant publication that represents all that is most sparkling in American cooking: intelligent eclecticism, ebullient curiosity and a tendency towards informality in serving. Each of the thousand recipes seems superb. . . . Indexed, and with precise directions for key operations, this is an original and imaginative collection." Gloria Levitas

Book World p6 D 17 '67 80w

"Despite the editors' protestations of simplicity, the recipes they chose tend to be fancy. Imported, unusual. . . . Contributors include cooks whose own cookbooks compete with this one, cooks such as Jim Beard and Julia Child, but no initials show whose recipes are which." S. C. Gross

Library J 93:79 Ja 1 '68 140w

HOUSEHOLD, GEOFFREY. Prisoner of the Indies; decorations by Warren Chappell. 203p $4.95 Little

B or 92 Philips, Miles—Juvenile literature 68-11111

"At 13, Miles Philips of Plymouth signed on one of John Hawkins' ships as cabin boy and sailed for the Indies. Fifteen years later, in 1582, he returned for the first time to his native England. In the interim he had fought Spaniards, Indians and Moors, been captured, suffered under the Inquisition, worked as weaver, silvermine superintendent, sailor, gunner, pikeman, construction superintendent for a Mexico City church and learned to speak and read Nahautl and Spanish." (Book World) "Grades six to nine." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:113 Je 1 '68 100w

"[This] is the story of [Miles'] adventures, his growth, and his eventual escape: a colorful, utterly fascinating pageant of 16th-century life in New Spain, peopled with priests and prisoners, grandees and sea captains, pirates, and privateers. There is treasure and cruelty and greed, but there is also a surprising sense of what life was for ordinary people. Miles Philips' story is perfectly true; it is told in Hakluyt's Voyages. Geoffrey Household, with consummate skill, makes a capital yarn of it, and an eminently worthwhile book to boot."

T. B.
Book World p28 (children's issue) My 5 '68 220w

"Young Miles journeyed to the West Indies as a cabin boy on an unlucky vessel, plagued by famine and fever. There he asked to be put ashore rather than risk the return voyage. And there he was enslaved by the Spanish and tried by the Inquisition. This is a realistic and brutal first-person account, full of stimulation for thoughtful young readers. Such matters as slavery and religious persecution are taken for granted in a way that will challenge and provoke. Without preparation, it might prove indigestible." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:302 My 24 '68 120w

Reviewed by Paul Heins
Horn Bk 44:429 Ag '68 220w

Reviewed by J. C. Ullom
Library J 93:1799 Ap 15 '68 140w

"Here is one of the best juvenile historical novels of the year. It's tough stuff. Its author makes no compromises for young readers. His material is complex and sometimes demanding. His language, though simple, is mature and sometimes challenging. But for devotees of historical adventure, his book is a pure delight. . . . Mr. Household has expanded Miles Philips's true relation into a rich, full-bodied novel. He has simplified Miles's writing style and invented some adventures he is sure Miles must have had and added some characters. . . . He also has produced from Miles's bare account a rousing, realistic and, I trust, enduring novel of one boy's will to survive and of his growth to manhood." G. F. Scheer

N Y Times Bk R p24 Jl 28 '68 320w

TLS p1138 N 30 '67 290w

HOUSTON, JAMES. Eskimo prints. 110p il $12.50 Barre

760.9 Eskimos—Art 66-23208

In 1957 Houston, "a Canadian artist and writer, introduced print making to the Eskimos of Cape Dorset in the Canadian Arctic. In [an] introduction to this book, he tells of his experiences and then [presents a collection of Eskimo prints]. . . . The text is in both English and French." (Library J)

"Houston's knowledge of the modern art market (he is himself an artist) directed Eskimo sensibilities to create an art which in its 'naive' sophistication is something other than Primitive and probably not completely untutored (although we are not informed by the text just how much Houston influenced the style as well as the techniques). However, the content is Eskimo, and the aesthetic is bold, sure, rhythmic, and joyful. . . . Furthermore, of great interest are his comments on the individuals who are creating these prints, some of which are truly great. The book, appealing to our sympathetic enjoyment of the art, deserves wide distribution."

Choice 5:42 Mr '68 200w

HOUSTON, JAMES—Continued

"The prints are impressive and the book merits a place in most libraries. The majority of the prints were made from stone block or stencil; a few are copper engraved. Some are color reproductions, others are black-and-white." Ruth Bertrand

Library J 92:3407 O 1 '67 80w

"[A] striking collection of 48 prints showing the range of skill and the delightful imagination of the Eskimo artist." C. B.

Natur Hist 77:72 Ja '68 60w

HOUSTON, JEAN, jt. auth. Psychedelic art. See Masters, R. E. L.

HOUTART, FRANÇOIS. The eleventh hour; explosion of a church; ed. by Mary Anne Chouteau; with an introd. by Harvey Cox. 192p $4.50 Sheed

282 Church renewal. Catholic Church 68-13856

The author, a Roman Catholic "priest and sociologist at the University of Louvain, . . . examines the Church as an institution in the process of transformation begun by the Council. . . . [He describes] changes in the roles of the layman, priest, and bishop . . . [and attempts to show how] these changes demand improvements in communication, a reexamination of the purpose and role of Catholic education, and establishment of a more positive relation to the world." (Library J)

"The treatment of sociological concepts is generally brief, stated very simply for the benefit of non-sociological readers. . . . The book cannot be compared with the sophisticated sociological presentation of T. O'Dea in [The Catholic Crisis, BRD 1968]. This is not necessarily a weakness. Readers . . . will follow Houtart with understanding and, I think, with gratitude. The book gives the ordinary reader a good insight into the new perception of the Church that emerged from Vatican II, and an idea of what the current changes are all about. . . . [The author] is unusually good in his emphasis on the need for institutions to maintain the unity and solidarity of the Church. . . . His insistence on honesty and information in the Church is excellent and well illustrated, and his explanation of the need for changes in canon law and in the Roman Curia is the outstanding feature of the book." J. P. Fitzpatrick

America 119:193 S 14 '68 600w

Choice 5:1148 N '68 220w

Reviewed by W. J. McCutcheon

Christian Century 85:1176 S 18 '68 80w

"Father Houtart's book is a valiant attempt at reconciling the 'underground Church' with the Establishment. . . . The result of his analysis points to the need for radical change, decisive action, revolutionary force."

Critic 26:78 Je '68 60w

"Though [the author] never loses the theological perspective essential to any discussion of the mission of the Church, his primary viewpoint here is that of the sociologist. . . . His viewpoint is an example of the change in attitudes which is making the renewal of the Church possible. . . . Well written and free of sociological and theological jargon, this book deserves consideration by all libraries with interested readers." J. K. Amrhein

Library J 93:1147 Mr 15 '68 180w

"[The author] thinks that many have yet to discover how great a revolution was started by John XXIII and Vatican II. Houtart gives the best rationale we have seen lately for the visible church." David Poling

Sat R 51:36 My 18 '68 80w

HOVANNISIAN, RICHARD G. Armenia on the road to independence, 1918 [pub. under the auspices of the Near Eastern center, Univ. of California]. 364p 11 maps $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

956.6 Armenia

67-13649

In this discussion of the establishment of Armenian independence, "several distinct yet interrelated themes are developed: the historical experiences of the Armenians; their sociopolitical status in the Ottoman and Romanov empires; the effects of World War I and the Russian revolutions upon them; the attempts of the peoples of Transcaucasia to forge a common policy and to stand against both Turkey and Soviet Russia; the rivalry of Germany, Turkey, and Russia for the control of Transcaucasia; and the ethnogeographic, political, and military considerations that led first to the disintegration of Russia, then to the fragmentation of Transcaucasia, and finally to the formation of the republics of Georgia, Azerbaijan, and Armenia. . . . The final chapters of the book, covering the period from May through October, 1918, serve . . . as an introduction to the history of the Armenian Republic." (Publisher's note)

"Professor Hovannisian has undertaken a difficult task in this account of the desperate struggle of the Armenian nation to create a political existence for itself under the buffetings of the First World War and in the face of abandonment by the Russian government. . . . The challenge has been well met. The narrative, based on sources in six languages, makes demands on the reader's attention, but it is always comprehensible, and while there is no doubt where the author stands, he presents with understanding the positions of all involved. Perhaps what is most impressive, he does not obtrusively take sides within the Armenian community between the Dashnaktzutiun (revolutionary federation) and its opponents. . . . The account of the short-lived Federative Republic of Transcaucasia in which the three Transcaucasian peoples briefly united is the best I have seen. This is so not only because of Hovannisian's extensive use of archives, including the Armenian, but also because of his admirable objectivity. . . . A second volume that will carry the story further, presumably to the Soviet conquest of 1920, is promised." J. B. Gidney

Am Hist R 73:1211 Ap '68 430w

Reviewed by A. O. Sarkissian

Ann Am Acad 337:189 My '68 430w

"The scholarly and overwhelming quality of the research in this earnest attempt to reconstruct an unstructured and confused period of history has resulted in a definitive work utilizing numerous new sources previously untapped or unavailable. This work is superior to anything written in English over the last 30 years on the subject. It is doubtful that any new sources would modify its major statements. In addition, it adds a wealth of information to the student of the history of the Caucasus. One of three books a library should have on this topic."

Choice 5:408 My '68 160w

Reviewed by R. H. Johnston

Library J 92:2922 S 1 '67 210w

HOWARD, CHRISTOPHER. Splendid isolation; a study of ideas concerning Britain's international position and foreign policy during the later years of the third Marquis of Salisbury. 120p $6 St Martins

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations 67-19736

The author traces the origin of a phrase and the extent to which it was used to define the course of British foreign policy from 1878 to 1902 when Salisbury was in power. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Max Beloff

Am Hist R 73:1534 Je '68 300w

Choice 5:397 My '68 160w

"[Howard shows] that Lord Salisbury spoke of 'splendid isolation' in ironical or bantering tones, not in tones of approval; as indeed Salisbury's daughter and biographer pointed out as long ago as 1932. But the legend of Salisbury as the proponent of isolationist doctrine, or even as the coiner of the phrase, had become widespread during the later 1920s; and the truth is still busy trying to catch up with the myth. . . . [The author's treatment] though spare, is sound and fully informed. . . . He has mastered dull pieces by dim dons in learned journals, as well as the coruscations of better known historians, and he applies their conclusions to the touchstone of such truth as he can establish from the archives."

Economist 226:52 Mr 30 '68 400w

"A strange mixture of a history of British policy, and a history of the rationalisations and expressions of doctrine occurring in speeches and FO files. The phrases do have a quite independent history of their own, and, thin though that history is, this book says all there is to say. On straight diplomacy, as on the Mediterranean basis of Anglo-German relations in 1894-6, or the reasons for the failure of the negotiations of 1898-1902 with Germany, this book does not by itself contain all the answers, or even all the right questions. But it does offer much to think about, and it wipes a smear off the political aristocracy. . . . We must make room for Lord Salisbury in the liberal pantheon." John Vincent

New Statesman 74:23 Ag 25 '67 500w

"Howard, in this short but excellent study . . . points to the historical dangers for any country of believing the phrases and catchwords of its own propaganda. . . . [His] researches suggest that Salisbury may have used the words geographically or constitutionally in order to distinguish England from the European mainland but never in the sense now attached to them. . . . What he set his face against was an entanglement with a part of Europe, with one of the alliances by which in his day the continent was divided. Salisbury also argued—and the development of this point gives a larger sweep to Mr. Howard's narrative—that the uncertainties of party government made it impossible for England to tie herself down by alliances to support the alliance by arms in uncertain circumstances at an uncertain date."

TLS p783 Ag 31 '67 700w

HOWARD, CORALIE, ed. Lyric poems; 11. by Mel Fowler. 111p $2.65 Watts, F.

808.81 Poetry—Collections 68-10684

A "collection of lyric poems dealing with love and nature. The selection . . . includes ancient, Elizabethan, and contemporary lyric poems. Some of the modern poets included are Cummings, Aiken, Moore, Graves, Stevens, and Brecht." (Library J) Indexes of authors, of titles, and of first lines.

Horn Bk 44:442 Ag '68 20w

"The sturdy but inviting format with interesting woodcuts complements this collection. . . . While many of the poems are difficult to understand, others can be enjoyed for their surface impressions. A good addition to the poetry section, this slim volume should attract browsers." Elizabeth Guiney

Library J 93:1812 Ap 15 '68 80w

"[A] collection of high literary quality. . . . Many of these poems are modern, and most of them require some patient, loving care on the part of their readers." Walker Gibson

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 My 5 '68 50w

HOWARD, MICHAEL. The Mediterranean strategy in the second World War. 82p $4 Praeger

940.54 World War, 1939-1945. Strategy 68-19851

"Historians have argued over the Allied failure to adopt the so-called Mediterranean strategy . . . which was to attempt to defeat Germany by invading Europe through its 'soft underbelly,' the Balkans. Some have maintained that failure to use this strategy resulted in the Soviet occupation of Eastern Europe and the problems of the Cold War; others have declared that a Balkan invasion would not have achieved its purpose. . . . [Howard] looks at the Mediterranean strategy . . . analyzes its origins, and outlines the goals that the Allied leaders hoped it would achieve." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 5:1354 D '68 160w

"There is more precise thinking and good sense packed into these pages than can be found in many a book four times as big. With all of his customary dispassionate lucidity, Professor Howard . . . demolishes once and for all the thesis that Britain in the Second World War tried to pursue a coherent Mediterranean strategy which, as an alternative to a direct thrust in north east Europe, would have won the war with less bloodshed and which would in peacetime have placed the western allies in an advantageous position vis-à-vis the Russians in eastern Europe. In doing so, he dethrones the brilliant, biased analysis associated with the name of Chester Wilmot [author of The Struggle for Europe, BRD 1952]."

Economist 226:61 Mr 23 '68 500w

"[Howard's] outline of British Mediterranean strategy and its unenthusiastic acceptance by the United States Army chiefs is objective, while at the same time he is critical of the writings of such men as American General Mark Clark and British Field Marshal Alexander. . . . Without examining the details of particular campaigns, he shows how the British shifted their strategic aims while the Americans persevered in the single concept that Allies and Germans must face each other on the fields of northwestern Europe. Important for collections of military history." John Buechler

Library J 93:1138 Mr 15 '68 200w

TLS p1204 O 24 '68 650w

HOWARD, RICHARD. The damages; poems. 79p $4; pa $2 Wesleyan univ. press

811

67-24112

A new collection of poems "that reflect contemporary preoccupations with living, loving, dying, and experiencing the loss of innocence." (Library J)

"Mr. Howard's world is populated with witches, lamias, and familiars who blend themselves into man's dreams of existence, ultimately to shock him into newer spheres of awareness. . . . Mr. Howard's images are sharp, clear, incisive. He moves ideas, pushes them, stretches them out in all directions. The result is poetry that conveys hope and despair, understanding and sangfroid." M. I. Prochilo

Library J 92:2931 S 1 '67 200w

"The most abiding quality of Howard's new poetry is surface brilliance. Though most of the poems are without what is called psychological depth, they contain extraordinary quantities of topographical depth. . . . The best poems . . . are fortresses of poetic structure. The massive architecture of 'The Encounter,' 'The Author of "Christine",' and 'Bonnard: A Novel'—to my mind the three most distinguished poems Howard has written—seems to be capable of sustaining limitless amplification without losing the essential rhythm of experience that is set in motion at the start of each poem. Above all, this is a poetry of architectonics. Every line is consciously structured, and is felt to be an integral unit in the superstructure of the poem's surface." Lawrence Liberman

Yale R 57:604 summer '68 1100w

HOWARD, THOMAS. Christ the tiger; a post-script to dogma. 160p $4.50; pa $2.25 Lippincott

248.2 Christianity

67-24008

In this autobiography, the author concentrates on his spiritual life and offers his interpretation of Christianity. He concludes that "in the figure of Jesus the Christ there is something that escapes us . . . [and that] efforts at systematization . . . [reveal] a towering and furious figure who will not be managed." (Pref)

"The student who was 'born into a tradition of dogmatic orthodoxy,' but, like Job, asks questions in actual and grim conflict, will read this book with interest. . . . [The author] arrives at a conclusion which he does not ask the reader to accept, and perhaps his conclusion is more stimulating than influential. The book's title is a quotation from T. S. Eliot's work. However, this is not another life of Christ, but rather an examination of the risk in human existence. For the orthodox it is conscience-pricking, but not altogether uncomfortable. For collections on theodicy." E. F. Waterman

Library J 92:3426 O 1 '67 120w

"In this 'apologia pro vita sua,' . . . [the reader] meets a young man vibrantly alive, dynamic and searching. If he is somewhat overbearing in his pose, too zealous of his position, he is also full of ironic self-awareness; he now knows how little he knows, how much less he knew. With wit and humor he gibes at what he once held to be concomitant with faith—the externalizations of orthodoxy. . . . [The author] maintains a faith liberated from convention's adherence to dogma. . . . At times ornate and cumbersome, at times muscular and quickening, the style of this autobiography appears to measure the nature of the man—a man still striving to release himself from the shackles of dogmatic assertions and pre-conceived judgments." D. B. Lockerbie

N Y Times Bk R p53 F 18 '68 230w

HOWE, IRVING, ed. A dissenter's guide to foreign policy; foreword by Lewis Coser. 349p $6.95 Praeger

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations

68-23353

"This collection of essays . . . is designed to show the 'groping efforts' of a number of 'New Left' thinkers toward a viable new position on American foreign policy." (Library J)

HOWE, IRVING—Continued

 "Most of the pieces . . . were written expressly for this book, though many have since been printed in the pages of Dissent." (Foreword)

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
 America 119:559 N 30 '68 90w

"This collection of essays lacks the point or focus implied by the title; many are random and sketchy. But the exchange between Robert Heilbroner and Dennis Wrong is worth the price of the book. Heilbroner says that modernization will no doubt come to developing nations only under auspices of left-wing authoritarian powers. Not right says Wrong. These two obviously respect each other, and they shed much light on a fateful guessing game. Other authors are Michael Harrington, Ronald Steel and George Lichtheim: these are men whose credentials attract our respect, even where they do not agree with each other."

Christian Century 85:1286 O 9 '68 100w

"Many of the essays are interesting . . . but taken as a whole they do not add up to a cohesive alternative program for American foreign policy. What the book does supply, aside from a number of disconnected aperçus of varying quality, is a window into the current state of 'liberal' thought on the subject of America's role in the world community. The confusion and centrifugal forces at work among liberals on such issues as civil rights, the Vietnam war, and Senator Eugene McCarthy's candidacy are . . . evident here. Recommended for academic libraries." E. O. Hofstetter

Library J 93:3770 O 15 '68 140w

"This book is scrappy in both senses of the word; many contributors are argumentative, not to say pugnacious, and few of the pieces have any relation to one another. Some are valueless because of the broadness of their assertions—that, for one instance, Communism is the only way to develop poor nations, or, for another, that the United States should always support every revolution. A few essays, however, are genuinely original (Henry M. Pachter's on collective security), or draw attention to unfamiliar developments (Keith Botsford's on Venezuela)."

New Yorker 44:247 N 16 '68 100w

HOWE, IRVING, jt. ed. Poverty: views from the left. See Lerner, J.

HOWE, IRVING. Thomas Hardy. 206p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

828 Hardy, Thomas 67-16710

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1380 F '68 160w

Economist 226:39 Ja 27 '68 260w

Reviewed by Lawrence Graver

New Repub 158:39 Je 8 '68 1050w

Reviewed by John Goode

New Statesman 75:274 Mr 1 '68 500w

TLS p972 S 12 '68 550w

HOWE, ROBIN. The Wine and food society's guide to soups; with color phot. by Kenneth Swain and Derrick Witty, and il. by Stewart Black. 198p $7.95 World pub.

641.7 Soups, Cookery, International 68-85433

The author "begins with the history of soup, gives basic instructions on materials, methods, and service; the body of the book contains chapters on various soup families: thick, clear, fish, poultry and game, blends, iced and fruit soups, wine and beer." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 28:54 My 1 '68 70w

"Robin Howe combines culinary knowledge with good writing to provide a delightful and beautifully illustrated book. Mrs. Howe has traveled widely and many of her recipes are both unusual and original. All are tested. . . . [The book] contains helpful charts of terms, measures, vintage wines, and fruit in season. This is an informative book and will be a welcome addition to any library." Neva White

Library J 93:2656 Jl '68 100w

HOWELL, ROGER. Newcastle upon Tyne and the Puritan Revolution; a study of the Civil War in North England [by] Roger Howell, Jr. 397p $10.10 Oxford

942.06 Great Britain—History—Civil War and Commonwealth, 1642-1660. Newcastle-upon-Tyne—History 67-85946

"Professor Howell takes Newcastle and . . . examines the interaction of local and national events in a period of revolution. He sees a long-standing pre-war struggle between a tight little oligarchy of rich merchants using local political power to advance their economic interests, and a rather larger group of prosperous townsmen anxious not to destroy the monopoly, but to share it. He shows how this conflict, and the semi-parallel conflict between Puritans and Anglicans, worked itself out during the Civil War, with the victory of Parliament resulting in the temporary rule of a new clique drawn from the lesser merchants, and the permanent entrenchment of puritan ideology." (New Statesman)

"Newcastle is fortunate in the wealth of its local records. Howell combines mastery of these sources with judicious maturity of generalization, and he is particularly good on Newcastle Puritanism. He is perhaps too cautious in refusing to see in his evidence pressure for a swing to the left similar to that occurring in other towns after the war. . . . The significance of this movement to the left may be debatable. There can be no two opinions, however, about the merit of Howell's achievement." David Underdown

Am Hist R 73:475 D '67 480w

"The most impressive fact about [this book] is the weight and meticulousness of its scholarship, both in the discovery of manuscripts and in the use of the printed sources. This scholarship extends over such varied fields as economics, religion, local politics and factions, navigation, education and public health. The book should be read by specialists in all these fields, but it is more valuable for the author's skill in relating them to each other through a detailed knowledge of the careers of several hundred people. . . . It is occasionally difficult to follow him in his grasp of technicalities: not all readers will immediately understand the nature and purpose of a ballast shore. There are occasional blemishes, such as the attempt to assess the economic effects of the Scottish occupation by statistics from the victualling trades. The book is one no serious student of the period can afford to neglect." Conrad Russell

Engl Hist R 83:840 O '68 420w

"The importance of this model area study is to prove once again the close but complex links between a local struggle for a share in the power structure by the social and economic group just below the ruling élite, and the Revolution on a national scale. It also adds to the mounting evidence that in terms of social change the English Revolution was perhaps the most unsuccessful of all the 'Great Revolutions' in history." Lawrence Stone

New Statesman 73:912 Je 30 '67 200w

Reviewed by Perez Zagorin

Pol Sci Q 83:92 Mr '68 320w

TLS p1256 D 28 '67 500w

"Howell is more than a local historian, and by showing the interaction of national and local issues gives depth to our understanding of both. . . . [He] shows how the complexities of a great event like the Puritan Revolution can be illuminated in the history of a single town. Only when his example has been followed for other important ones (Bristol, for instance), shall we be able to see these urban problems in full perspective."

Va Q R 44:xxxiv winter '68 150w

HOWELL, ROGER. Sir Philip Sidney; the shepherd knight. 308p $6.50 Little

B or 92 Sidney, Sir Philip 68-24236

This biography "treats Sidney in the various phases of his career. . . . The work is divided into three parts: Part I: The Courier-Diplomat; Part II: The Man of Letters; Part III: The Man of Action." (Best Sell) Index.

"The sonnet sequence 'Astrophel and Stella', the 'Apology for Poetry', and 'Arcadia' all receive less attention than a die-hard literary man might wish, while a strict biographer might wish less. This is a natural tension emerging from Professor Howell's attempt to adjust an obviously spontaneous enthusiasm for Sidney's literature to the specific . . . details of Sidney's life. His 'school tools' to accomplish this are extensive, including state papers, correspondence, chronicles, and ample secondary sources. . . . Though Howell's work is slanted away from a literary concern and though it occasionally bogs down on what may be excessive concerns with what Sidney may have thought, it will lead to a more balanced view of the man." F. L. Ryan

Best Sell 28:243 S 15 '68 470w

Economist 227:xiv Ap 27 '68 750w

Reviewed by W. W. Waring
Library J 93:3777 O 15 '68 120w

New Yorker 44:182 O 5 '68 80w

"[The author] marshals evidence succinctly, clearly and decisively. Even his frequently acknowledged doubts are definite. This is a workmanlike presentation of Sidney in Elizabethan politics, both the facts and the all-important fancies, for Mr. Howell never forgets how much of Sidney's significance lies in the image his admirers made of him. . . . Mr. Howell's sober assessment does justice to the two faces of the public Sidney, revealing the inexperience, the comparative powerlessness . . . behind the admirable facade. He is less successful with the private Sidney."

TLS p416 Ap 25 '68 750w

HOWELL, RUTH REA. Everything changes; phot. by Arline Strong. unp $3.50 Atheneum pubs.

525 Seasons—Juvenile literature 68-12238

"A photographic essay about the seasons of the year . . . [showing] what nature has to offer during each part of the year as children gather autumn leaves, look at snowflakes, and see what a crocus looks like before it gets above the ground. . . . Preschool to kindergarten." (Library J)

"A very unusual book . . . beautiful and touchingly simple . . . which could be used either in school or the home to help children understand how nature adapts to change." Gillian Charters

Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68 140w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:302 My 24 '68 70w

"Should be useful to anyone working with the youngest children. . . . The photographs and text in clear and simple explanations, written without condescension, go well together." A. D. Schweibush

Library J 93:1303 Mr 15 '68 80w

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p50 My 5 '68 70w

HOWES, ROBERT CRAIG, ed. & tr. The testaments of the Grand Princes of Moscow; tr. and ed. with commentary by Robert Craig Howes. 445p il $10 Cornell Univ. press 947 Russia—History. Russia—Kings and rulers. Russia—Politics and government 67-12485

"Howes (Oakland University) has provided complete facsimiles of the printed Russian texts of the [13] documents along with his . . . annotated translations. In addition, he has written an . . . analytic survey of the testaments." (Choice) Glossary of Russian terms. Bibliography. Index of personal names. Index of place names. Topical index.

"Both Slavists and medievalists will welcome this first English translation of the testaments of the nine Grand Princes of Moscow from Ivan I to Ivan IV. . . . The documents themselves provide a vast amount of data on princely administration, the territorial acquisitions of the Moscow branch of the Rurikide dynasty, and cultural and political changes within the growing Muscovite state. [There are] footnotes, . . . appendix, and several photographs. Useful for advanced undergraduates, graduate students, and scholars, and a valuable addition to libraries with strong collections in Russian and medieval history."

Choice 5:670 J1 '68 120w

"The first [testament] is thought to have been compiled by Ivan Kalita in 1339; the last, that of Ivan the Terrible, probably dates from 1572. They contain extensive lists of the various properties acquired and assigned, as well as much information about fiscal and administrative institutions. Their value has long been recognized. . . . [In 1950] two leading Soviet scholars, L. V. Cherepnin and S. V. Bakhrushin, established definitive texts of all the extant wills and treaties made by late medieval Russian rulers. From this volume Dr. Howes has taken the thirteen grand-princely testaments [and] reproduced them skillfully by modern photographic techniques. . . . An introductory survey and elaborate indexes enhance the value of this work, which is a notable addition to the growing western literature on early Muscovite history."

TLS p1252 N 7 '68 750w

HOYT, EDWIN P. Alexander Woolcott: the man who came to dinner; a biography. 357p il $6.50 Abelard-Schuman

B or 92 Woolcott, Alexander 67-13458

"Drama critic, columnist, author, and playwright, Alexander Woolcott is perhaps best remembered for his . . . broadcasts as the Town Crier, who dissected anything and anyone. He possessed a magnetic power over people who heard his voice, and his sharp wit and often prophetic insights on the current scene and trends won him respect and notoriety. He also played a public role: that of Alexander Woolcott, bad boy of stage and radio. This biography is a . . . picture of a complex personality." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Mr. Hoyt has in mind the presentation of the two sides of Mr. Woolcott's ample figure. . . . I'm not sure that either side wins out. If you dislike the subject before you read the book, you will probably continue to dislike him. If you did not, you may like him a little more. In either case you will understand a little more." F. L. Ryan

Best Sell 28:167 J1 15 '68 600w

"Samuel Adams's biography [A. Woolcott: His Life and His World, BRD 1945] was published too soon after the 'Town Crier's' death to be adequate. For many reasons it is gratifying to welcome Edwin Hoyt's informal but colorful and considerate book. The Algonquin Wits may be having a new life as they are discussed in the 1960's and the thorough study of the man who was an inspiration as well as an irritation to this memorable group deserves more than has been written. Edwin Hoyt has covered much more than the journalistic days of Mr. Woolcott and has quoted from letters of his friends and his enemies. . . . A study to be generally purchased." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:2856 Ag '68 110w

"[Hoyt's] retelling of the Woolcott history is aggressively defensive. The approach is cumbersome. Before he can defend his hero, Mr. Hoyt has to resurrect him, foible by foible. . . . There is a generation that does not remember Woolcott's Town Crier broadcasts . . . or has never encountered the rich, rococo Woolcott prose . . . and they may enjoy this book's amusing anecdotes from the nineteen-twenties and thirties. But the stories are imbedded in a chatty, personalized presentation, burdened with confidential asides. Unfortunately the central question—what made Alexander Woolcott's success so bitter—is never answered." Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R p18 S 22 '68 210w

New Yorker 44:252 N 23 '68 100w

HOYT, EDWIN P. Deadly craft; fireships to PT boats; il. by Charles Geer. 159p $4.50 Little 359.32 Warships—History—Juvenile literature U.S.—History, Naval—Juvenile literature 68-12348

"A chronicle of the development of small attack boats, particularly the type which employed torpedoes as their main weapon, from ancient Egyptian craft to the PT boats of World War II. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"This volume covers a vast range. . . . About half the book is devoted to the exploits of PT boats used in World War II, including the sinking of PT 109, commanded by Lt. John F. Kennedy. The younger reader will find action and excitement in this brief history." F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 28:65 My 1 '68 90w

"The style of writing is drily factual and does not give any feeling of the courage and daring of men who, in flimsy plywood craft with weapons that failed more often than not, would attack steel ships. Mr. Hoyt's book will be a good reference source." C. G. Wood

Library J 93:2122 My 15 '68 110w

HOYT, EDWIN P. The Guggenheims and the American dream [by] Edwin P. Hoyt, Jr. 382p $6.95 Funk

920 Guggenheim family 67-25415

The story begins with "a Jewish family's struggle in Europe and their ultimate coming to America and a new life. The climb to fame and fortune starts in 1851 with Meyer Guggenheim in Philadelphia. By 1900, Meyer Guggenheim's family was one of the most powerful, successful, and wealthy in the United States." (Library J)

"[The author] is on his strongest ground in dealing with the business and financial history of the family. . . . Here he defends the family against some of the criticism embodied in O'Connor's The Guggenheims [BRD 1937] and is able to balance the great philanthropic services of the Guggenheims during the past 30 years against the aggressive money making of an earlier period. Except in the area of financial analysis, however, Hoyt's book does not measure up to . . . [M.] Lomask's Seed Money: The Guggenheim Story [BRD 1964]." Choice 5:660 J1 '68 200w

"[This] is an informative, readable book, but it lacks warmth and spirit. The Guggenheims never come to life, even though Mr. Hoyt gives an inordinate amount of attention to the sensational activities of Peggy Guggenheim. . . . Libraries needing biographies might consider this book." R. M. Brooks
Library J 92:3411 O 1 '67 110w

HOYT, EDWIN P. Leland Stanford. 160p il $4.50 Abelard-Schuman

B or 92 Stanford, Leland—Juvenile literature 67-18119

"A factual account of the accomplishments and adult life of Leland Stanford of California. A young lawyer from New York State, Stanford began his career in California in the 1850's selling supplies to miners. During the Civil War years he was governor of California, later a United States Senator. With Huntington, Hopkins, and Crocker, he directed the building of the controversial Central Pacific Railroad, and later founded Stanford University. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to eight" (Library J)

"The author captures both the man and the period in which he lived. Young readers will appreciate insights into history through the biography of one of the builders of California." Best Sell 28:18 Ap 1 '68 100w

"Well researched, and competently written. . . . Though lacking in sparkle, this book is welcome as a chronicle of a remarkable man about whom little has been written for children." Jessica McDaniel
Library J 93:1812 Ap 15 '68 90w

HOYT, EDWIN P. The tragic commodore; the story of Oliver Hazard Perry. 158p il $4 Abelard-Schuman

973.5 Perry, Oliver Hazard—Juvenile literature. U.S.—History—War of 1812—Juvenile literature 66-10775

"The whole life of the American hero from his childhood in Newport to his death at the mouth of the Orinoco River ■ he returned from a foreign mission in Venezuela [is covered in this] . . . biography. Perry's part in the Battle of Lake Erie where he supervised the building of the tiny fleet which he led to victory gets the most space. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Hoyt's efforts are most informative, but the style is rather dull for the young audience for whom the book was written." Best Sell 27:314 N 1 '67 100w

"The book covers adequately much more of Perry's life than does Van Wyck Mason's The Battle of Lake Erie [BRD 1961] for the same age group; the latter book is limited to the battle and preparations for it. Mr. Hoyt gets in a good deal about other important events, such as the Barbary pirates episode. This is a good, straightforward account of a man and a neglected period in United States history." E. P. Hawley
Library J 92:4623 D 15 '67 130w

HOYT, EDWIN P. The typhoon that stopped a war. 244p $5.50 McKay

996 Samoa. Typhoons 68-18724

"The storm under consideration . . . was the typhoon of March, 1889, in the small harbor of Apia, Samoa. At the time relations between the United States, Germany and Britain were strained and there was danger of war as the nations supported rivals who were struggling for supremacy among the Samoan tribes. . . . The author narrates the chaos caused by the storm, during which only the British warship 'Calliope' was able to escape." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"Young readers will appreciate this story of the elements of nature against men and ships, as another page of history is opened to them. . . . Grades seven to ten."

Best Sell 28:113 Je 1 '68 110w

"Mr. Hoyt goes into great detail concerning all the ships involved, the harbor at Apia, the storm, the warhawk rumblings in America fueled by sensational journalism, and abetted by the lack of direct communication between Washington and Samoa. He has presented well an interesting bit of American history in which the Navy was a major participant. [This] will also attract meteorology and storm buffs." F. J. Anderson
Library J 93:2493 Je 15 '68 230w

Reviewed by Carol Kalamaras
Library J 93:2741 J1 '68 100w [YA]

HOYT, ROBERT G., ed. Issues that divide the church. 168p $4.95; pa $1.45 Macmillan (N Y)

282 Catholic Church 67-28576

This book reports the proceedings of a two-day panel discussion held in Kansas City in January, 1967, and reprinted later in The National Catholic Reporter. The participants were "divided equally among progressives (Daniel Callahan and Jacqueline Grennan), traditionalists (Archbishop Robert J. Dwyer of Portland, Oregon, and L. Brent Bozell, editor of Triumph) and in-betweeners (George N. Shuster, assistant to the president of Notre Dame, and Fr. Andrew Greeley)." (America)

"[The book] indicates areas of serious dissent within the Church and directions for possible future answers: birth control emerges as an issue still very much alive, centering on the development of Church doctrine rather than the pill; authority is pitted against love, with all the panelists asking which should have primary emphasis; revolutionists come out as those who keep asking the hard questions, such as: 'How can you say ahead of time what can or cannot be asked?' or 'What and who is the Church?' . . . It is the confrontation of these highly divergent personalities discussing divisive issues that makes the book live. More significantly, it indicates a method of approach that must be utilized soon and often if the Church—as many of the participants expressly feared—is not to undergo a deep split within the next few years. It is rare that people of such widely differing views about the Church discuss key issues at length, with both candor and fruitfulness." J. M. Ewens
America 118:45 Ja 13 '68 500w

Reviewed by R. M. Pope
Christian Century 85:298 Mr 6 '68 250w
Commonweal 87:390 D 22 '67 30w

"Although these conversations were recorded less than a year ago, such is the tempo of change in the Church that much of what was said in them is already out of date. . . . [The book does] have some things of value but the mystery of who will buy [it] is someone else's secret." R. E. Burns
Critic 26:78 F '68 350w

"It was an excellent idea to have such a discussion, . . . yet the book does not satisfy. . . . The participants' discussion centers less on concrete issues than on abstract questions of ecclesiastical polity. Still, in the varied verbal guises, the consensus is that the root issue dividing the Catholic Church is institutional authority versus personal freedom. It is not surprising that the liberal Daniel Callahan cannot agree with the conservative Brent Bozell, and not even the middle-of-the-roads can help much to mediate differences. So, like most open-ended talks, these lead nowhere. These strictures notwithstanding, both the subject matter and the names of the contributors will probably create a demand for this book in many public and academic libraries." C. E. Zakrzewski
Library J 92:4005 N 1 '67 190w

"Agreed that insofar as a dialogue on the Catholic Church is an exercise in intellectual gamesmanship, nobody is going to change anybody else's ideas and opinions. But what the symposium does subtly bring home to the reader is precisely the fact that, despite their understandable self-esteem, intellectuals have very little effect on what goes on in the Church, and, with respect to certain intellectuals like Daniel Callahan, cannot have." E. H. Wall

Nat R 20:663 J1 2 '68 1100w

HOYT, ROBERT S., ed. Life and thought in the early middle ages. 165p il $5.50 Univ. of Minn. press

940.1 Middle Ages 67-15065

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Peter Riesenbergl
Am Hist R 73:450 D '67 550w
Choice 4:1305 Ja '68 110w

Reviewed by M. B. Becker
Social Studies 59:179 Ap '68 250w

HSI, CH'ENG. An anthology of Chinese verse. See Frodsham, J. D.

HSIA, C. T. The classic Chinese novel: a critical introduction [prepared as one of the Companions to Asian studies]. 413p $9.50 Columbia univ. press

895.1 Chinese fiction—History and criticism 68-18997

The author "begins with [an] introductory chapter on the historical development of Chinese fiction from the 14th Century to the 18th Century, and follows with an evaluative study of The Romance of the Three Kingdoms, a historical novel; The Water Margin, or All Men Are Brothers, a story of adventure; Journey to the West, or Monkey, a supernatural tale; The Golden Lotus, an exposé narrative; The Scholars, an anecdote of social satire; and Dream of the Red Chamber, a . . . romance. . . . [In an appended article] Mr. Hsia analyzes Confucian heroism and Taoist detachment in Chinese short stories through frequent comparisons with Western novels." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"From the historical point of view, [the novels discussed] are 'the most important landmarks of the genre.' Each of them has not only extended a new frontier and stimulated new areas of interest, but also has indicated literary trends and continuities in the events of social change and cultural outlook. . . . A bibliography, glossary of terms, and a listing of the names of characters in the six novels are useful for identification and reference. Since this is a book of literary criticism rather than textual research, the general reader interested in fiction will find it enjoyable." W. S. Wong

Library J 93:1900 My 1 '68 280w

"Professor Hsia has supplied English readers with a much-needed perspective on the whole subject, even so, he rather overplays his hand. The Chinese novel is simply not one of the great literary traditions. It is not in a class with the European novel, including the Russian, not to mention the Japanese—as Professor Hsia rather strikingly fails to do." Va Q R 44:clvii autumn '68 160w

HSU, KAI-YU. Chou En-lai: China's gray eminence [maps by Jerry Kuhl]. 294p pl $5.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Chou, En-lai. China (People's Republic of China)—Politics and government 68-10566

"A biography of the premier of Communist China." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This biography] reveals how difficult it is to unearth the 'real' Chou. . . . After interviewing Chou's many relatives, friends and associates outside the Mainland, Hsu finds that those who know him best may know him least. The biographer wisely makes no attempt to resolve contradictory evaluations." John Israel
Book World p3 Mr 17 '68 140w

"This presentation of Chou is sympathetic and friendly. It successfully conveys his enormous complexity as a personality and public figure without exploring it. His role as innovator, expeditor, and diplomat in the Chinese Communist movement since 1924 is depicted as overshadowing Mao's. This first book length portrait of Chou is welcome even though not on a level with [S.] Schram's work on Mao [BRD 1967]. All college and public libraries will want it."

Choice 5:668 J1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:207 Ap '68 250w

"[Hsu] has written an informative (which is not easy) and friendly (which is understandable) book on a great man, however one may disagree with his politics. The book is recommended for college and special collections; it may be too controversial for public libraries. Even so, it may be of interest to the informed layman." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:68 Ja 1 '68 220w

HTIN AUNG, MAUNG. A history of Burma. 363p $12 Columbia univ. press

959.1 Burma—History 67-25964

The Burmese author "has provided an account of his country, from the early kingdoms of the Mons and the Pyus, through the regaining of independence in 1948. [He] chronicles the rise and fall of the three Burmese Empires, the intrusion and conquest of Burma by the British, and concludes with a chapter on Burma since independence." (Publisher's note) Genealogies. Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Traditionally, the Buddhist cultural tradition was contemptuous of 'idle talk' about historical happenings, except as it might illustrate the basic principle of impermanence or derive moral guidance for the art of government. Court-sponsored Burmese chronicles undertook to enhance dynastic prestige and ethnic pride, with little concern for factual accuracy per se. . . . The book under review rejects the meticulous scholarship of [Gordon] Luce along with other research studies dealing with modern times and attempts to bring the traditionalist story down to date. The author makes no attempt to appraise older Burmese accounts, repeats a mass of sterile minutia found in the chronicles, and completely ignores European sources available since the eighteenth century. . . . Numerous factual inaccuracies mar the apparently memory-based account of the interwar period." J. F. Cady

Ann Am Acad 378:187 J1 '68 370w

Choice 5:1203 N '68 190w

"The first history of Burma in English by a Burmese. [Dr. Htin Aung's] interpretation is nationalist. . . . He has drawn on such Burmese historical sources as The Glass Palace Chronicle, for whose accurate representation he has become a vigorous defender. Following this publication, he may also have to defend his repeated high opinions of Burmese literature and art. To many Westerners his objective chapters on the British period from 1824 to 1948 may seem the book's high point. The years since 1948 are wisely in a postscript dialogue between editor and author; others have handled this period more adequately. The book contains a useful chronological table beginning at 500 B.C. . . . It will appeal to both specialist and informed layman and is recommended for public and academic libraries." Paul Bixler

Library J 93:72 Ja 1 '68 200w

HUBBELL, PATRICIA. Catch me a wind; drawings by Susan Trommler. 52p $2.95 Atheneum pubs

811 68-12239

A collection of poems by the author of M. a.m. Shadows (BRD 1965) and Apple Vendors (BRD 1964). "Grades two to five." (Library J)

"Hubbell distinguishes herself by setting unusual subjects to verse, from blackboard equations to bulldozers, from gravel paths to space travel. She is sometimes more, sometimes less successful, but the range of her topics helps transcend some of her poetical limits."

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 40w

"Very satisfying poems of the cheerful and the unexpected. Among the best are a 'Breakfast Conversation' with the sugar bowl and honey pot, a 'Message from a Mouse, Ascending in a Rocket' about a mouse who desperately wants a parachute, the 'Chant of the Awakening Bulldozers'—the machines who cry 'let us be free'—and 'The Word Woman'—she keeps special words in a large glass jar. . . . Miss Hubbell's verse is fresh and spontaneous, with imagery and tone geared to the rapidly developing minds and imaginations of this age group. Delicate line drawings accentuate the verses." C. A. Hough

HUBBELL, PATRICIA—Continued

Library J 93:1788 Ap 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by Walker Gibson

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 My 5 '68 60w

HUBERMAN, LEO. 50 years of Soviet power. See 50 years of Soviet power

HUCKSHORN, ROBERT J., jt. ed. Republican politics. See Cosman, B.

HUDDLESTON, LEE ELDRIDGE. Origins of the American Indians; European concepts, 1492-1729. (Tex. Univ. Inst. of Latin Am. studies. Latin Am. monograph) 179p $5 Univ. of Tex. press

970.1 Indians—Origin

67-65582

"This essay concerns the debate over the origins of the American Indians in the two centuries before it became distinguished from the question of the origins of their cultures, and before it began to take on the characteristics of a scientific dispute. . . . Two clearly distinguished traditions have emerged from my investigations: the Acostan and the Garcian." (Intro) Bibliography. Index.

"This slim book has the sort of sharp focus one hopes for in treating issues in intellectual history, and it corrects numerous misunderstandings found in earlier works. Unfortunately, it is more of a bibliographical than analytical essay; the discussion is organized around books and authors rather than around ideas. Huddleston is strongest on Spanish sources and thinnest on English writers. Consequently his analysis for the 17th century is shallow compared with even the brief remarks of Winthrop D. Jordan in White over Black. Valuable bibliography."

Choice 5:846 S '68 130w

"The quiet title of this book gives no hint of the painstaking care with which the author has found, studied, and compared the works of the bickering European writers who, misquoting and plagiarizing each other for over two centuries, sought to explain the presence of man in the New World. While some might call the book history and others might call it anthropology, it emerges as an important essay in the history of ideas." J. D. Jennings

Science 161:560 Ag 9 '68 1000w

HUDSON, JEFFERY. A case of need; a novel. 309p $5.95 World pub.

68-23845

In this, the author's first, novel "Dr. Arthur Lee, obstetrician and (because of conscience) active abortionist, is arrested for murder when named by a teen-ager dying from the effects of a botched operation he did not perform. . . . Pathologist John Berry's search for the real abortionist [leads him to the killer]." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[The author] has managed to tell a fine story and at the same time comment deftly on some severe contemporary social problems. Rather than being bored with insubstantial characters I found myself taken up with the remarkably vivid world the author creates. Boston comes alive; so does the medical profession. . . . [Hudson] concludes his work with an appendix in which he discusses in an extremely lucid manner such topics as medical terminology, the attitude of doctors toward policemen, and the case for and against abortion. The novel will—or should—make the best seller lists. And no doubt it will become a movie." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:207 Ag 15 '68 410w

Reviewed by Harold Bloomquist

Library J 93:4306 N 15 '68 170w

"Hudson provides searching glimpses into the dilemma [of abortion. He] . . . presents his case (that the situation today is intolerable) within the agreeable framework of a detective story. . . . This breezy, fast-paced, up-to-date first novel, flavored with after hours medical shoptalk, demonstrates again the ability of detective fiction to treat contemporary social problems in a meaningful fashion." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 18 '68 180w
New Yorker 44:184 O 5 '68 110w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:116 S 14 '68 40w

HUDSON, NEVILLE DYSON. See Dyson-Hudson, N.

HUFF, ROBERT. The course; one, two, three, now! 94p $4.95 Wayne state univ. press

811

66-18335

A collection of "poems written since the publication of [Huff's] first volume, Colonel Johnson's Ride and Other Poems [BRD 1961]." (Publisher's note) Some of these poems have been previously published in literary periodicals such as the Kenyon Review, Poetry and Prairie Schooner.

"Huff is a vigorous but careful poet who moves with confidence, wit, and several humors; a poet whose effects are never sentimental or melodramatic. I am occasionally disturbed by his trimeter—one poem is entitled, appropriately I think, My Tomboy's Doggerel—that seems to creak and have trouble with rhyme; by allusions too personal to communicate and by an occasional tongue-twister of a line. . . . But there are too many good things happening in this book to pick fleas here. The animal is too alive and healthy." William Heyen

Poetry 111:329 F '68 430w

"Contains several good poems in a plain but strong style, poems such as Father Going to Sleep and Getting Drunk with Daughter, in which [the poet's] subjects are often earthy and immediate but are treated with an awareness that is both psychological and literary. Indeed, his literary orientation seems at times a little at odds with his rough-hewn, self-made air. But his antic mood, as in Previews, saves him from pretentiousness. Mr. Huff's power may not be a great, ambitious, soaring one, but—as seen clearly in the title poem—it is a power that is used exactly and with tact on its materials, or is generated from them efficiently in terse, masculine terms." Charles Philbrick

Sat R 50:33 Je 3 '67 120w

HUFTON, OLWEN H. Bayeux in the late eighteenth century; a social study. 317p $10.10 Oxford

309.144 Bayeux—Social conditions. Bayeux—Economic conditions [67-109452]

This history of a French town during the Revolution examines the effects of the political changes on the populace.

"An excellent study of the Revolution in microcosm. Although Bayeux was not a 'typical' town, it resembled, on a small scale, the Angers that John McManners has studied in his French Ecclesiastical Society under the Ancien Régime, and it is profitable to read Hufton's and McManners' books at the same time. . . . Hufton's work, grounded firmly in local and national archival sources and the multitudinous literature of French local history, is a first-rate contribution that deserves to be read carefully by anyone interested in what the Revolution, aside from its principles and pretensions, meant to people who had to live through it." G. V. Taylor

Am Hist R 73:1541 Je '68 430w

"[The author] gives one a cross section of French life, as rich in detail as the Bayeux tapestry itself. In this book we are told precisely who the bourgeois were, their economic, cultural, and charitable interests, their relationships with an actual church. . . . Miss Hufton collects facts and orders them with the assiduity of a fully trained antiquarian, but generalization . . . is not for her. [Its absence] owes much to her historical discipline. She is dealing with a precise place, at a precise time, inhabited by precise people. Other regions, other towns would probably present a different emphasis, a different complex of relationships; and so historical discretion requires silence." J. H. Plumb

N Y Rev of Books 11:29 O 24 '68 1100w

HUGHES, GERVAISE. Dvořák: his life & music. 247p $5 Dodd

B or 92 Dvořák, Antonín 67-26843

This book is "addressed not so much to professional musicians . . . as to laymen. . . . I have therefore eschewed music-type examples, and those who understandably wish to delve into the aesthetics of Dvořák's music, or his technical methods, should ferret out and examine for themselves any passages to which specific attention is drawn in the text." (Introd) Bibliography. Index of Dvořák's compositions. General index.

"A British musicologist has written this book. . . . [It is] a somewhat superficial recitation of historical facts and dates. The author states his opinions about everything; all too often these opinions seem to be unfounded, appearing as they do without substantiation in the text."

Choice 5:352 My '68 110w

"The present book . . . is in [a] casual, personalized, nonscholarly tradition. It has little bibliography, no footnotes, no musical examples, but simple musical analyses." G. A. Marco

Library J 92:3990 N 1 '67 170w

HUGHES, GRAHAM. Modern silver, throughout the world, 1880-1967. 256p il col il $12.50 Crown 739.2 Silversmithing—Catalogs. Design, Industrial 67-26050

The art director of the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths here presents a visual review of modern silver. Bibliography.

"[Although Mr. Hughes] does give passing attention to art nouveau designs, he accents the products of the last 30 years, including material on plated ware and stainless steel. European and American work is generously illustrated with examples of tableware, decorative items, and presentation pieces. Of particular value to libraries is the section of brief biographies of craftsmen and histories of silver firms. . . . However, a more purposeful grouping of the photographs and a more careful editing of the text would have added to the book's usefulness." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:4495 D 15 '67 130w

"In ■ work of this sort the quality of the illustrations is all important and nearly all of the 480 (including twelve in colour) are first class. The area covered is less global than might be expected from the title since outside Europe only the United States is discussed. . . . The biographies of important firms and artists contain much useful information which is often difficult to come by when wanted. They include, however, some firms which do not really qualify while leaving out others which do. Turning to the illustrations, the Scandinavian contribution has been well selected and is representative. The treatment of the English artists, both dead and alive, is less satisfactory."

TLS p1124 N 30 '67 370w

HUGHES, H. STUART. The obstructed path; French social thought in the years of desperation, 1930-1960. 304p $6.95 Harper

914.4 France—Intellectual life 67-28807

The author "turns to French thought of the period 1930-1960 and details . . . the central concerns and frustrations of Christians such ■ Marcel and Maritain and non-Christian thinkers such as Sartre, Camus and Merleau-Ponty." (Christian Century) His thesis is that French social theorists have thus been off the main track of modern intellectual history, have been confined to an 'obstructed path,' partly because of the forced isolation of wartime occupation and postwar poverty, partly because they have missed out on this massive cross-fertilization of Anglo-American and Central European thought." (Christian Science Monitor)

"The great merit of Hughes' book is that it does not confine itself to literature. It begins with two historians . . . and ends with an anthropologist. . . . Hughes also deals with Catholic theologians, existentialist philosophers and major French novelists. This breadth of approach has enabled him to produce a genuine history of thought, full of insights and suggestive cross-references. It is not an exhaustive history; interesting Marxists like Paul Nizan and Henri Lefebvre are left out, and there is only a cursory mention of the current of social thought represented by Action française. But this hardly matters. The main lines are there." Anthony Hartley

Book World p7 Ja 21 '68 1600w

Christian Century 85:24 Ja 3 '68 70w

"[Hughes'] central thesis, it seems to me, is almost shockingly important. At the same time, it is exacerbating in its sublime, and partly valid, ethnocentrism; irritating in its serene, and partly valid, putdown of 30 years of French intellectual effort. It is even possible to say only half-cynically that solely a Harvard faculty-member possessing a large and lively dose of personal Verstehen could hope to get away with it. Hughes does get away with it; [this] is an excellent book, but one which nonetheless contains some lapses in comprehension and some omissions that seem to call forth a counter-thesis." Florence Casey

Christian Science Monitor p15 F 15 '68 800w

Economist 228:37 Ag 24 '68 390w

Reviewed by Garland Downum

Library J 93:556 F 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Joseph Featherstone

New Repub 158:27 Je 1 '68 2400w

Reviewed by Richard Mayne

New Statesman 76:230 Ag 23 '68 700w

"It is the great merit of Professor Hughes's new book that he has caught something of the spirit which informs French public life, as distinct from the scholasticism that infuses the endless theorizing about it. . . . [A Malraux's] Antimémoires [BRD 1968] have come too late for Mr. Hughes, which is a pity, since they clarify some of the topics he has selected for discussion. In other respects he has been well served by his sense of timing: notably in regard to the Vatican Council and the modernization of Catholic doctrine. His chapter on this subject will doubtless be read with approval by liberal Catholics. . . . [He] has provided the student with an admirably lucid and well-balanced introduction to the French intellectual scene, and there we must leave it. If a general conclusion emerges, it is that the France of the 1960s, unlike the confused and distraught country of the 1930s, has at last caught up with history and with itself." George Lichtheim

N Y Rev of Books 9:23 Ja 4 '68 2200w

"As a popular introduction, particularly to thinkers like Claude Lévi-Strauss or historians Lucien Febvre and Marc Bloch . . . [this] is assured of success. As a serious work, it deserves a second look. The book's unity is provided by the theme of common failure, an element sufficient to link King Farouk and Dean Rusk, if not all of us; which is to say, there is not much unity at all. . . . Hughes seems to circle his subjects, well armed with biographical details of varying relevance. . . . But, frequently, when the elaborate preparation is complete . . . when the moment finally arrives to encounter the ideas themselves, the account goes slack. . . . It is soon apparent that when Hughes writes 'the world outside,' he really means America. Thus he overrates thinkers like Maritain and Marcel who had links with the United States. . . . The geographical gap, however, is not as important as the ideological one. [Hughes] finishes by patronizing without intending to do so, by psychologizing despite his references to the dangers of amateur psychoanalysis." Peter Steinfels

N Y Times Bk R p8 F 25 '68 1350w

New Yorker 43:135 F 17 '68 90w

HUGHES, HELEN MACGILL. Controlling delinquents. See Wheeler, S., ed.

HUGHES, JOHN. Indonesian upheaval. 304p $5.95 McKay

991 Indonesia—History. Indonesia—Politics and government 67-26500

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1302 Ja '68 200w

Reviewed by Joan Dillon

Library J 93:315 Ja 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by R. K. Paget

Pacific Affairs 41:111 spring '68 600w

HUGHES, LANGSTON. Black magic; ■ pictorial history of the Negro in American entertainment [by] Langston Hughes [and] Milton Meltzer. 375p il $12.95 Prentice-Hall 790.2 Negro actors. Entertainers 67-22993

This book "traces the saga of the Negro singer, dancer, actor, writer, composer from the

HUGHES, LANGSTON—Continued

slave days . . . to the present. [It celebrates] talented Negro artists from Ira Aldridge, the first Negro Othello who played with Kean, to Bill Cosby and Sidney Poitier, without forgetting the great Negro women artists, including Lena Horne, Leontyne Price, Dorothy Maynor, Marian Anderson, Pearl Bailey and others." (Best Sell)

"[This] fine piece of Americana . . . deserves a special place in all libraries."

Best Sell 27:321 N 15 '67 130w

"This easy-going account of the Negro in entertainment should appeal to many young people—those interested in Negro history, those who want to make a career in the field, and those who simply like to look at pictures of their favorite celebrities. The approach is casual rather than scholarly, and the scope is broad and shallow, as is expected in any pictorial history. The photographs, drawings, prints, and playbills are beautifully reproduced and laid out in an attractive format." G. J. Alfred

Library J 93:315 Ja 15 '68 70w [YA]

Reviewed by Edward Mapp

Library J 93:770 F 15 '68 150w

"To borrow the title of one of its chapters, the volume covers 'Just About Everything.' Thus it will not please the proponents of an 'Afro-American culture,' since the American Negro's success in the world of entertainment has been largely purchased at the price of doing 'just like the white folks'—and if possible doing it even better. . . . The aim of the book is obviously to show that the American Negro has achieved success in terms of the white man's values. Taken on these terms, it is an impressive and comprehensive chronicle." Gilbert Chase

Music Lib Assn Notes 25:244 D '68 250w

HUGHES, LANGSTON. The panther & the lash; poems of our times. 101p $4.50; pa $1.95 Knopf

811

67-16156

A collection of poems drawn from the late poet's earliest to his latest writings.

"Writing of Harlem and what it means to be colored in a white man's world, Langston Hughes's style swings. . . . The present selection presents him at his best. He has been writing another version of [Allen] Ginsberg's Kaddish [in the paperback, Kaddish and Other Poems] for some 30 years, and deserves more attention than he receives. But, Lord, he's not about to conform to either liberal or reactionary views of Negroes, Amen. Libraries should buy [this volume] right now." Bill Katz

Library J 92:2163 Je 1 '67 280w

"To a degree I would never have expected from [Hughes's] earlier work, his sensibility has kept pace with the times, and the intensity of his new concerns—helping him to shake loose old crippling mannerisms, the trade marks of his art—comes to fruition in many of the best poems of his career: Northern Liberal, Dinner Guest; Me, Crowns and Garlands, to name a few. Regrettably, in different poems he is fatally prone to sympathize with starkly antithetical politics of race. . . . Justice, an early poem . . . exhibits Hughes's knack for investing metaphor with a fierce potency that is as satisfying poetically as it is politically tumultuous. . . . But this skill is all but asphyxiated in many of the new poems by an ungovernable weakness for essayistic polemicizing." Laurence Liberman

Poetry 112:339 Ag '68 490w

HUGHES, PATRICK CAIRNS. See Hughes, S.

HUGHES, RICHARD. Hong Kong; borrowed place—borrowed time. 171p $4.95 Praeger

915.12 Hong Kong

68-12379

The author of The Chinese Communes (BRD 1962) who has been foreign correspondent in the Far East since 1946, representing The Sunday Times and The Economist of London, writes "about Hong Kong today—the place and the people, the Communist stake, sweat labor, . . . opium traffic, the China watchers, and so on. He traces the history of Hong Kong to the Opium War and its aftermath; he projects many possibilities for the Hong Kong of tomorrow." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 118:604 My 4 '68 90w

Reviewed by John Hughes

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 9 '68 800w

Economist 228:60 S 7 '68 70w

"This book is very interesting reading and is recommended for public and college libraries." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:994 Mr 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by David Weyill

New Statesman 75:519 Ap 19 '68 210w

Reviewed by Robert Berkvist

N Y Times Bk R p30 Je 23 '68 250w

"[Hughes] is a man of compassion and insight, of history and humanity, with an awesome impatience for sentimentality and ideological index-filing. . . . His fragmentary notes are a delightful insight into the last of the great colonies. [He] discusses the full range of Hong Kong, from its successes to its problems, from cheongsams to China-watchers. The economic miracle, the refugees, the local Red Guard eruption of last spring and summer, the laissez-faire capitalism, the riches and the poverty—all are given the Hughes once-over. He does it with marvelous humor, and the humor is no camouflage for superficiality. His book is actually the best kind of cram course on a piece of the world that has been increasingly turning up on everyone's itinerary." Bernard Kalb

Sat R 51:26 Ap 6 '68 650w

"The author's irreverent wit, racy anecdote and eye for the eccentricities of both British and Chinese life bring out the complex oddities of the place, yet he never strays far from the political questions at the core of the problem. . . . Mr. Hughes's book is as interesting in the qualifications it makes as in the questions it raises about the colony; [he] exposes the idea that all that Hongkong needs is a degree of self-government and an injection of Western democracy as the nonsense it is; and he reminds us that the answer to its future lies, however much we might wish it otherwise, in Peking."

TLS p551 My 30 '68 600w

HUGHES, SERGE. The fall and rise of modern Italy. 322p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

945.09 Italy—History. Italy—Politics and government 67-26058

The theme of this book is "Italy's failure to work out a minimum of collaboration between its warring political groups from 1890 onward and its apparent success since 1963 with a Christian Democrat-Socialist coalition Government." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author's] style is frequently so contrived as to make it impossible for the uninstructed reader to know what actually occurred. His Crocean counterpoint is more irritating than informative, interrupting the flow of the narrative with philosophical digressions whose relevance is only marginal. His telescoped treatment of Fascism leads him into a number of misinterpretations . . . [and] the text is strewn with minor errors of fact." H. S. Hughes

Am Hist R 73:1568 Je '68 650w

"Mr. Hughes, professor of Italian at Hunter College, . . . gives only the barest sketch of Italian history interrupted by an account of the arguments, twists, and turns in Italian Socialist thought which he considers indispensable to an understanding of Italian history. . . . For Mr. Hughes, Italian history from 1890 to 1963 is one unit, and Fascism is not so important for the understanding of modern Italy as the developments which preceded and followed it. . . . This book will disappoint the general reader looking for a good survey of recent Italian history; he will be lost without basic insights into the history of the country. But anyone interested in the story of Italian Socialism and its relation to Croce will find this book well worth reading. It is recommended particularly for larger libraries." Keith Eubank

Library J 92:3996 N 1 '67 260w

Reviewed by D. M. Smith

N Y Rev of Books 11:34 O 24 '68 1850w

"Hughes tries to cover every political and intellectual trend from 1890 to the present. Discussions of the philosophy of Benedetto Croce and of various Marxists crop up throughout the narrative. The author bears his Croce well, but his Marx indifferently, and the book suffers from a lack of coherence much like that of its subject. . . . There are even some tooth-crunching errors of fact. . . . [However] while [Hughes] details, first, the growing power of the Fascist state and then its erosion from within and without, we never learn what precisely changed during those 20 years to allow a new Italy to emerge after World War II. . . . How does Byzantine political Italy keep together, in the face of its cumulative historical and present-day problems? It is perhaps the weakest part of the book that this question, implicit throughout the narrative, is never really approached." Sidney Tarrow

N Y Times Bk R p32 F 18 '68 900w

HUGHES, SPIKE. Famous Verdi operas; an analytical guide for the opera-goer and armchair listener. 544p $9.50 Chilton co.

782.1 Verdi, Giuseppe. Operas—Stories, plots, etc. 68-28041

The author of Great Opera Houses (BRD 1960) discusses Nabucco, Macbeth, Rigoletto, Il Trovatore, La Traviata, Simon Boccanegra, Un Ballo in Maschera, La Forza del Destino, Don Carlos, Aida, Otello, and Falstaff. Index.

"[The author] writes a lucid and absorbing account of each [work], pointing out many felicities of characterization, orchestration, and sheer musical beauty. He also does his best to untangle the more involved plots. He loves the operas, but he is not hidebound. His writing is brightened by humorous touches. One may possibly not thank him for reminders of melodic resemblances to popular tunes, but one will be amused. A novel feature is his index to Verdi's orchestration." Philip Miller
Library J 94:80 Ja 1 '69 200w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:67 N 16 '68 50w

"Each opera is studied in depth; . . . the factual history of the opera is first written to account for its subject, librettist, first performance and . . . encounters with the censorship; then the drama is described with comment on its textual, vocal or orchestral features, and themes . . . are quoted. This allows Mr. Hughes scope for criticism at once penetrating and discriminating. . . . This book, through its twelve selected operas beginning with Nabucco, shows the process of development. Beside this central solid achievement, Mr. Hughes, who is an engaging writer, gives the reader for supplementary value two appendixes for locating famous excerpts and points of orchestration respectively [and] . . . two hitherto unpublished letters of Verdi." . . . two hitherto unpublished letters of Verdi."
TLS p483 My 9 '68 650w

HUGHES, TED. Wodwo. 184p $4.95 Harper 828 67-28808

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by John Thompson
N Y Rev of Books 11:35 Ag 1 '68 450w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 43:137 My 30 '68 50w

Reviewed by Hayden Carruth
Poetry 112:422 S '68 230w

Reviewed by S. F. Morse
Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

HUGO BLACK and the Supreme court; a symposium; ed. by Stephen Parks Strickland. 365p $10 Bobbs

342.73 U.S. Supreme Court 67-18209

"To commemorate Justice Hugo Black's 30 years on the Supreme Court, the editor of this symposium brings together the views of nine authors, each of whom discusses a particular aspect of Justice Black's judicial career. Carl Swisher places Mr. Black within the framework of history; John P. Frank discusses his relationship to the New Deal. Others examine his views as revealed in his opinions on racial issues, the Bill of Rights, federal taxation, and antitrust matters. In all of the essays, the authors [seek to] make clear the contribution Justice Black has made to the development and preservation of the American Constitution." (Library J) Index.

"[This book is] informative and authoritative though not critical or exciting. . . . It is not altogether clear, but apparently at least four of the articles were published earlier in somewhat different form in law reviews. Mostly the articles distill the opinions of Justice Black as law reviews do, so the book will be suitable chiefly for advanced students in constitutional law. This book is well edited, the articles are completely footnoted. . . . Yet [it] is not definitive, does not contain a bibliography, and, in a sense simply adds a few more articles to many. Only libraries that can buy about everything on the Supreme Court need this; others can rely on their periodical sources."

Choice 5:264 Ap '68 200w

"What results from this combined study is a keen analysis of Hugo Black's judicial philosophy, which emerges as 'a single belief about the nature of the Constitution and the way judges should treat it.' Mr. Strickland's study will appeal to the informed reader as well as specialists in the field." H. M. Burns

Library J 92:3049 S 15 '67 140w

HUH, KYUNG-MO. Japan's trade in Asia; developments since 1926, prospects for 1970 [pub. in coop. with the Univ. of Mich. graduate res. seminar in int. economics]. 283p il $15 Praeger

382 Japan—Commerce. Asia, Southeastern—Commerce. International economic relations 66-15449

This book "analyzes Japan's foreign trade in general and concentrates on its development with 10 countries in South and Southeast Asia who are members of ECAFE (Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East). Huh, a native of Korea, is at present an economist in the International Monetary Fund." (Choice)

"Comparing Japan's foreign trade before World War II to the period 1959-62, [Huh] shows that in the latter period Japan's imports from ECAFE countries represent a smaller share than before the war. At the same time, exports to ECAFE countries increased in absolute and relative terms, a development caused primarily by the growth of exports of iron and steel products and of machinery and transport equipment. Huh concludes that, in view of Japan's existing and expected trade surplus vis-à-vis ECAFE countries, large scale official and private long term capital outflows from Japan to ECAFE countries are of paramount importance. He thus gives one strong reason for Japan's leading role in the Asia Development Bank. Offers a wealth of material in every chapter and has a comprehensive statistical appendix. . . . Should be considered as an indispensable supplement to earlier works on Japan's economy."
Choice 4:724 S '67 160w

"[This] is a sound and dispassionate survey, with extremely wide statistical coverage, of Japan's growth and trading relationships in general, and of her position in the network of Asian trade in particular. Dr. Huh makes few prescriptions; there is no evaluation of policies, no criticism, no praise." S. A. Broadbridge
Pacific Affairs 40:380 fall-winter '67-'68 330w

HUIE, WILLIAM BRADFORD. The klansman. 303p $5.95 Delacorte press

66-20121

"The action of the novel takes place shortly after the Selma March of 1965 and the . . . murder of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo. Sheriff 'Big Track' Bascomb . . . has been elected on a platform that guarantees he will keep agitators and trouble-makers out of the county . . . [but he] has also sworn an oath that puts him completely in the power of the Ku Klux Klan. . . . There is another war hero in Atoka County. . . . He is Breck Stancill, [who] . . . believes 'that the life of one Negro has equal value to the life of one white man.' . . . The multiple tragedies of the novel begin when Stancill's beliefs are tested in an actual situation." (Best Sell)

"A horrifying, yet brilliantly told account of the power of the Klan in the South. It shows how a handful of decadent men control the lives of the majority of ordinarily decent human beings. The setting is Atoka County, Alabama. . . . This novel conveys remarkable credibility because Huie sees the many facets of his characters. . . . There is a great deal of vividly graphic sexual description in the novel and a large number of incidents in which characters use vulgarly sexual terms. . . . The language, however, is vital to the integrity of the book because a part of Huie's main theme is that the Klansman is a mentally perverted individual whose mind is obsessed with fantasies of the Negro's sexual prowess. This, then, is a book only for the mature reader." J. W. Hattman

HUIE, W. B.—Continued

Best Sell 27:277 O 15 '67 650w

"[This novel is] an ugly record of victimization. White moderates, as well as Negroes and demonstrators, become the target. . . . Beyond the rural Southern setting is the wide range of violence itself. Again and again the mental calculations of each character point out the degree to which both the victimized and the aggressors treat violence with familiarity. The results—the wide net of entanglement of many characters—may seem too contrived to be realistic. Nevertheless, it is an intriguing development, and the personalities are unforgettable. Characters are given credibility by sensitive and economical handling of many levels of dialogue."

Christian Science Monitor p9 F 7 '68

650w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p56 O 15 '67 190w

"Huie's title is in ironic imitation of that of the Kluxer's bible, The Clansman, the novel on which D. W. Griffiths based The Birth of a Nation. . . . The writing—hard, passionate exposé journalese with sufficient creative ingenuity to make even stock demoniac figures sympathetically plausible—has an authority which defies the reader's impulse . . . (for much of the book is inevitably repellent), to call the whole thing's sensational bluff. In fact, [this book] is really a contemporary Southern Middletown, and offers as much a whole sociology of this sick community as a diagnosis of its special cancer. The character list, for example, is a good deal more inclusive than need be, and the book would have benefited from less sprawl of both persons and information. But the richness of detail is what gives it its stature."

TLS p521 My 23 '68 420w

HULST, ROGER A. D'. The Royal museum, Brussels [tr. from the Italian by James Brockway]. 158p il col il $3.95 Meredith

759.9493 Brussels, Musées royaux d'art et d'histoire. Paintings, Flemish 67-66208

"Reproductions of the major masterpieces from the Royal collections housed in the museum in Brussels, covering European painting from the 15th through the 17th centuries. Although some works other than Netherlandish are represented, the main bulk of the collection consists of . . . examples of the art of the Low Countries. . . . It is arranged . . . in chronological order [and contains] . . . notes on the works." (Choice) Index of plates.

"This attractive volume provides an interesting method of studying the masterpieces of Flemish art. . . . [The notes] are authoritative and up-to-date collations of scholarship, including discussions of dating, provenance, and attribution. The book could not possibly stand alone as a survey of the field, but taken in conjunction with standard volumes on Netherlandish painting by Friedlaender and Panofsky, the book can be used with great profit. The quality of the reproductions is excellent, although few works are reproduced in color."

Choice 5:336 My '68 170w

"[The Brussels collection] is famous for its Flemish masters, especially Bruegel, and Rubens and his school. . . . [In this] volume the history of the collection and of the museum building is given. . . . The commentary accompanying each illustration is very brief and of little help in characterizing the artist or in analyzing the work. The book may appeal by the illustrations to the general reader who wants to be introduced to, or who wants to remember, the collection, and who might find the official catalogs not satisfactory because they lack illustrations, or are in a foreign language. The scholar will have to accept these limitations." J. L. Dewton

Library J 93:537 F 1 '68 120w

HUMPHREY, NORMAN D., Jr. auth. Race riot, Detroit 1943. See Lee, A. M.

HUMPHREY, WILLIAM. A time and a place; stories. 208p $4.95 Knopf

68-31608

The author of The Ordways (BRD 1965) has collected "ten stories about life in Texas and Oklahoma [which] recall 'the realities, the dreams, the feelings of the now almost legendary 1930's in the American heartland.'" (Publisher's note) Contents: The ballad of Jesse Neighbours; A good Indian; A job of the plains; Mouth of brass; A home away from home; The rainmaker; The pump; A voice from the woods; the human fly; The last of the Caddoes. Most of these stories were previously published in Esquire, The Saturday Evening Post, and other periodicals.

Reviewed by Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 28:314 N 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by Richard Rhodes

Book World p4 N 3 '68 600w

"[The] stories of this book have as their locale the parched, red-soil cotton land around the borders of Oklahoma and Texas. . . . Background events comprise enfranchisement of the Indian, the discovery of oil, the advent of the automobile, the growth of banditry, the beginning of the Depression—and the ever-present drought. No tale is 'typical,' but read one and you're hooked. . . . Mr. Humphrey is a superb writer, but thank heaven, no stylist. His descriptions are, at times, as heavy as the red clay of the region; his people and their talk seem as parched as the soil from which they sprang. Highly recommended." Karl Brown

Library J 93:3798 O 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by L. L. King

N Y Times Bk R p5 N 3 '68 900w

"Because of the reputation [Humphrey] has acquired by way of the novels, his new collection will probably get the attention it deserves, and that is a good deal, for Humphrey is a storyteller in the tradition of Mark Twain and William Faulkner. . . . Several [of the stories], in spite of the time and the place, are funny, at least in part. Even when they have grim aspects, they are likely to make the reader laugh. This after all, is part of the tall-story country, and sudden death, if its form is grotesque enough, can be made to seem ludicrous. . . . The place at that time was a place of desperation and violence. Even before the Depression life was hard, and it grew harder. The people endured and were even hopeful, hoping for oil, hoping for rain. . . . They were rough people in a rough age, but there was drama in their lives, and Humphrey knows how to reveal it to us." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:31 N 9 '68 1150w

HUNT, DOUGLAS. The art of magic, by Douglas and Kari Hunt. 216p il $4.95 Atheneum pubs.

793.8 Magic—Juvenile literature 67-18992

"Beginning with a chapter on the psychological factors in illusion, the authors progress to the history of ancient and medieval magic, early professional conjuring, and the world's great magicians and their unique contributions to the art of magic. [Bibliography.] Grades six to ten." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:197 Ap '68 150w

"A well-organized and well-written book. . . . Particularly interesting are the later chapters on 'Magic Today,' explaining the place of the conjurer in today's society, and several which detail some of the fundamentals of conjuring for eager amateurs. The photographs illustrating detailed accounts of specific tricks are very helpful, and there is an extensive bibliography. . . . One of the best on the subject published to date." Sr. Clotilde Weirich

Library J 93:882 F 15 '68 150w

HUNT, IGNATIUS. The world of the patriarchs. 178p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

222 Bible. O.T. Genesis

67-17371

Professor Hunt, of Conception Seminary, "has organized his work into nine principal chapters treating various aspects of life in patriarchal times (e.g. Laws and Customs, Ways of Life, Religious Beliefs, etc.), each of which is in turn subdivided into topical paragraphs." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The purpose of this series] is only obliquely realized in the present volume. . . . While providing a broad and fairly complete coverage of the salient facts and issues relevant to the patriarchal backgrounds, the work has the unfortunate feel of a Bible dictionary, though this effect is relieved somewhat by the easy style and overall clarity of the author's presentation. In both content and purpose this work begs comparison with E. Speiser's Genesis in the Anchor Bible series [BRD 1964, which is] preferred as a more deliberate and cohesive treatment of much the same material."

Choice 4:1127 D '67 150w

"This reconstruction of the patriarchal era should serve equally well as a convenient introduction to or as a refresher for the study of the environment of the early people of the Bible."

Christian Century 84:724 My 31 '67 40w

"[This volume] admirably carries on the purpose [of the series, as stated by the editor], to assist the educated but nonspecialized reader to understand what biblical study in the age of archaeology is all about' and to give 'a clearer idea of the problems of biblical history as well as the direction taken by the scholarly consensus regarding these issues.' [Professor Hunt] has organized an amazing amount of up-to-date factual data from a vast array of authoritative sources. He has done this in a manner that is logical, readable, and the ultimate in brevity. The text is completely documented. . . . Professor Hunt gives a full account of the most important controverted points and treats them dispassionately and fairly."

R. V. Ritter

Library J 92:2783 Ag '67 160w

HUNT, IRENE. Trail of apple blossoms; il. by Don Bolognese. 64p $3.95; Titan ed $3.99 Follett

Chapman, John—Juvenile literature 68-2911

John Chapman, the legendary Johnny Appleseed, is the subject of this "fictional narrative which emphasizes his gifts of healing, feeling of kinship with wild creatures, courage, and love of peace. Beginning when Chapman is a well-known adult in Pennsylvania, the story centers on the Bryant family whose lives he touches. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:309 My 24 '68 40w

"The author has endowed her subject with a spiritual quality which shines through the story. Handsome line-and-wash illustrations complement the text." Helen Armstrong

Library J 93:2113 My 15 '68 110w

"The brevity of the story, written for a younger audience than her previous books, Across Five Aprils [BRD 1964] and the Newbery Award-winning Up a Road Slowly [BRD 1967], has led Miss Hunt to sharpen her prose; the poetic quality of the writing glimmers on every page. Don Bolognese, one of the best illustrators, has created perfect pictures. His people have character, his landscapes have mood. Between Miss Hunt and Mr. Bolognese, Johnny and the apple trees he loved have both come alive." D. M. Broderick

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ap 14 '68 170w

"For the first time Irene Hunt . . . moves from pure fiction to a fictional vignette about a historical figure. . . . The writing style has grace, and the author succeeds admirably in showing Chapman's rare quality, but this book lacks the warmth and the cohesion of the author's previous titles." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:40 My 11 '68 150w

HUNT, JOHN. The Grey Horse legacy. 427p $6.95 Knopf

68-14884

"The novel is set in Grey Horse, Oklahoma, during the 1920's and 1950's, and in Paris France, during the 1960's. The story begins in Oklahoma where, for some time, someone has been systematically killing off an oil-rich Chetopa Indian family [the Red Hawks]. Andrews Thayer comes from the Indian Bureau to gather evidence and is killed in a compromising position with the wife of his chief suspect. The effect of these events, which are related in flashbacks, on Emily, Andrews's wife, and Amory, his son, are chronicled." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. A. Flannery

Best Sell 28:100 Je 1 '68 1300w

"The book is all about the myths of America. It is totally humorless, spans generations, continents, and ends in freedom from, which everyone knows is one step behind freedom to. So one is primed to be impressed. And if one isn't very careful and scrupulously honest with oneself, one is impressed. . . . Of course, it could have meant something had John Hunt been less presumptuous and less private, had he cannibalized American myths less and put some meaty individuality on his people's bones. As it is, they're shadowy prototypes, enfeebled by regional demons." Lee Israel

Book World p22 S 15 '68 600w

"This is a rare and sensitive novel, something seen and experienced far too rarely, a novel of loneliness and despair, one with a feeling of emptiness born of the vast deserted plains of the Oklahoma flatlands. . . . Mr. Hunt's ability has turned what could have been a melodrama into a book that cannot fail to be a popular choice in any public library." P. L. Marr

Library J 93:1653 Ap 15 '68 150w

"The story is told from five different points of view; each narrator repeats much of what we already know. But each version of the story is highly impressionistic, half-informed and generally an attempt on the part of the speaker to justify his own sins, so that the reader is presented with a collage of contrary opinions that eventually add up, in a Jamesian way, to a prismatic truth about the 'real' events that have taken place in Grey Horse. . . . [This] is, in both style and conception, a fine work. Mr. Hunt has given us not only an absorbing and unpredictable thriller but a sensitive and thoughtful portrait of the past as it shapes the future." Page Stegner

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 23 '68 470w

HUNT, KARI, jt. auth. The art of magic. See Hunt, D.

HUNTER, EVAN. Last summer. 256p $4.95 Doubleday

68-14191

"During a summer holiday on an Atlantic island, . . . Peter, the narrator, his friend David, and Sandy ('her hair the color of the dunes') sail, explore the island [and] tell the 'truth' to each other. . . . Peter discovers the shape of evil and finds cruelty and violence in himself. There are two symbols which pervade the action: the capturing and taming of an injured seagull Sandy finds; and the trio's domination of Rhoda, a shy girl. Both incidents erupt in violence." (Library J)

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 28:128 Je 15 '68 550w

"An unforgettable—and highly sophisticated—story, for all its apparent simplicity, of young love and explosive violence. . . . It's not a pretty story but once started on it I don't think anyone will leave it unfinished. The telling is itself a kind of tour de force, a good half of it in extremely sharp, funny, young-colloquial dialogue. It's a kind of staccato that leaves one breathless, laughing, and admiring though apprehensive as I dare say the author intended—all the way. By the author of The Blackboard Jungle [BRD 1954]."

Harper 236:94 Je '68 200w

"[Hunter] has told this story perceptively and poetically with the vision and style of youth." Earl Tannenbaum

Library J 93:2020 My 15 '68 200w

"Given the situation here presented of four adolescent youngsters, two boys and two girls all in their teens, vacationing for the summer on an island some distance from Manhattan, seduction or rape would appear to be the ultimate resolution of their boredom and insecurity as individuals. In a somewhat surprising turn the author chooses the latter with one girl singled out as the victim; but in the process he effectively portrays the moral degeneracy of our times, the irresponsibility of parents, and the callousness thus induced among those engaged in the serious business of growing up in a world without recognizable ethics or ideals."

Va Q R 44:xcvi summer '68 100w

HUNTER, FREDERICK J., comp. A guide to the theatre and drama collections at the University of Texas. 84p il $5; pa $2 Univ. of Tex. Humanities res. center

016.7902 Drama—Catalogs. Moving pictures
—Catalogs 67-65517

Following an "introduction about rare books and manuscripts at Texas, contents of 14 theater and drama collections are outlined. Each is preceded by a four- or five-paragraph history, and the whole divided by major parts—i.e. artifacts, motion picture stills, books, printed plays, etc." (Choice)

HUNTER, F. J.—Continued

"Illustrations are aptly placed. The descriptions are brief, yet adequate enough for identification. But the major, indeed the fatal, drawback for researchers and the librarian is the total lack of an index. . . . Apparently public relations was more in the forefront than honest research of reference needs. The result is a fairly handsome book, a mass of data, and little or no way to get at it except by patience. Only for the largest libraries."

Choice 5:608 J1 '68 140w

"The present catalogue . . . gives an excellent impression of the progress which has been made both in the field of accessions and in housing and categorizing the varied and voluminous material [at the University of Texas]."

TLS p1077 S 26 '68 70w

HUNTER, KRISTIN. The Soul Brothers and Sister Lou. 248p lib bdg $3.63 Scribner

68-29365

A novel about fourteen-year-old Louretta (Sister Lou) and Fess who "are members of a newly-formed neighborhood club. . . . When a white policeman kills an innocent fellow member, Lou temporarily reacts with hatred of whites but soon returns to the non-violent ideals of her religious heritage; Fess, the brilliant and bitter militant, presses for revenge. Lou, . . . dissuading Fess and his supporters from violence, . . . experiences personal triumphs . . . not only learning what 'soul' is but finding it in her own singing." (Library J) "Ages twelve to fifteen." (Commonweal)

Best Sell 28:277 O 1 '68 130w

"Kristin Hunter packs a wallop in her first book for young people, which has won the 1968 award of the Council on Interracial Books for Children for the best book by a Negro for older children. . . . Her story is taut, fast moving, absorbing and believable as it probes with honest realism the problems of a wide range of unforgettable characters. . . . This powerful book deserves wide reading." P. G.

Book World p20 (children's issue) N 3 '68 250w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:290 N 22 '68 150w

"With mixed success, this novel jumps head-on into the main concerns of ghetto youth today: Black identity and militancy. . . . Unfortunately, militancy is unpersuasively made to seem the result of personal failure, merely a stage to be passed through, and militants are portrayed in superficial terms which reinforce fears aroused by the mass media. . . . Though militancy plays a large part in the story, it is a fictional fragmentation far from a complete presentation of the philosophy or the motivations of its adherents. Such a flaw is especially regrettable since this is one of the few juvenile books attempting to present the culture of the ghetto rather than merely its economic impoverishment. The language, music, family relationships, joys and problems will be familiar to many readers from the ghetto and will give others insight through the sympathetic and believable characterization of Lou." Susan O'Neal

Library J 93:4419 N 15 '68 280w

"Lou and the boys are tabbed for a successful career when they sing at the funeral of the slain gang member, a too-pat ending for a book that is honest, convincing, and incisive. Actually, the plot is of less importance than the depiction . . . of the maturing of a young girl who learns to appreciate her racial heritage during those difficult years when self-acceptance and self-identity are problems for all adolescents. This is indeed a book for our times." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 O 19 '68 130w

HUNTER, MOLLIE. A pistol in Greenyards. 191p $3.95 Funk

68-11905

"Greenyards is a Scottish Highland valley where in 1854 the tenants vainly resisted eviction to make way for sheep grazing. An author's note states: 'The clearance of Greenyards was an actual historical event. A true account of the brutal way in which it was carried out is given in the early chapters of this book, which has been written as a salute to the memory of the people of Greenyards, and especially to that of the boys and girls who kept the lookout on Ardgay Hill.' Fifteen-year-old Connal Ross recounts the struggle and its aftermath: arrests, trials, emigration. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America M9:656 D 21 '68 70w

Best Sell 28:18 Ap 1 '68 100w

"The point of view is noble and humanitarian. Unfortunately, the style is so pedestrian, the dialogue so stilted and the characters so black-and-white that the story, which would be magnificent were it written with . . . subtle understanding . . . ends up as melodrama." Edward Fenton

Book World p20 Je 2 '68 130w

"Miss Hunter is writing unsparingly about the terrible events of the 1850's when Highlanders were forced from their land. It is a bitter, angry account superbly told by the hero himself." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 2 '68 180w

Horn Bk 44:329 Je '68 170w

"Miss Hunter has provided an excellent recreation of a little-known aspect of history. Characterization is mediocre, but the excitement of the plot makes this an appealing book for both boys and girls." D. Y. Shaffer

Library J 93:882 F 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:42 My 11 '68 100w

HUNTER, MOLLIE. Thomas and the warlock; il. by Joseph Cellini. 128p $3.25 Funk

67-22922

"Thomas, blacksmith in a village in the Lowlands of Scotland, fearlessly went poaching in the warlock's wood, scoffing at talk that the long-dead warlock still walked the countryside. However, the warlock stole Thomas's wife Janet on Halloween, and to rescue her Thomas had to pass through a wall of fire and give the Word of Power known to smiths since God gave it first to Tubal-Cain. Son Alexander helped with a spell taught him by a grateful fairywoman. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p15 F 11 '68 280w

Horn Bk 43:749 D '67 200w

"This engrossing fanciful story builds tensely to its climax. Characters, setting, and dialect are completely credible and delightful." Jessica McDaniel

Library J 92:3850 O 15 '67 100w

"The characters are colorful, the dialogue is full of robust humor, and the magical element is handled with tongue-in-cheek bravura." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:43 O 21 '67 100w

"A story in the true Gaelic manner, this book is more impressive in some startling individual vignettes—there is a wonderful description of Thomas, with the aid of all the village boys and their watering-cans, fixing a hot iron rim to the smouldering wooden wheel of the warlock's carriage—than in its sum. For will children really believe—and does the author want them to—that through Thomas's power over iron and his true love for his wife not only was the sinister warlock Henry Gifford overwhelmed, but also all the witches and wizards in the whole of Scotland?"

TLS p451 My 25 '67 140w

HUNTER, NEALE, jt. auth. China observed. See Mackerras, C.*HUNTLEY, CHET. The generous years; remembrances of a frontier boyhood. 215p $4.95 Random house

B or 92

68-28557

The author reminisces about "the Montana frontier of his boyhood and youth in the century's teens and '20s." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by Robert Cromie

Book World p10 N 3 '68 350w

"Chet Huntley writes with the same colorful and expressive words that he uses on radio and TV. . . . There is enough quiet nostalgia here to bring pleasant recollections to a generation that spent its childhood on the land early in this century. However, although the book is enjoyable reading there is some substance missing that would otherwise separate this story from similar 'I grew up on a farm' reminiscences. . . . Public libraries will have a demand for this book about the popular radio personality." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:3127 S 15 '68 210w

"[Huntley's] writing about this period in his life is limpid, unpretentious and honest. His memory on the smallest details of what happened to him is phenomenal. If he seems to gush a little with spatters of exclamation points, it is probably because he feels that way about what he calls the generous years. . . . The author explains how he began to be a broadcaster as a result of his father's trade as a telegrapher. . . . The book is mostly but not entirely a tale about a disarming boy. Now and again, Mr. Huntley writes of our tensions today and our fears for tomorrow and compares this untroubled environment with that of 50 years ago." Marshall Sprague
N Y Times Bk R p44 N 17 '68 750w

"The human profiles—especially that of his grandfather—are full of unfeigned tenderness. . . . The imagery of [the Montana] landscape embedded itself in the boy's imagination, and it is here . . . that Huntley is most attractive. One is nearly persuaded that the scene contained idyllic elements—despite a tendency toward Tom Sawyeresque archness. . . . He is far less attractive, and certainly less persuasive, when he is standing foursquare behind ye olde stalwart values and eternal verities." S. M.
Newsweek 72:112 O 7 '68 420w

HURLIMANN, BETTINA. Barry: the story of a brave St Bernard; il. by Paul Nussbaumer [tr. by Elizabeth D. Crawford]. unp $4.25
Harcourt

636.7 St Bernard dogs—Juvenile literature
68-3304

"This is the true story of Barry, a dog born at the Great St. Bernard hospice in the Swiss Alps during the Napoleonic Wars. . . . Following the tradition for these strong, intelligent animals, this famous St. Bernard was trained by the monks to rescue stranded travelers. Going out in blizzards to lead lost strangers to the hospice, finding men buried by avalanches, Barry became a classic example of the breed—and, in his years of service, saved the lives of 40 people. So great was his renown that one puppy in every litter at the hospice was named in his honor." (N Y Times Bk R) "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin
Book World p24 S 8 '68 180w
Horn Bk 44:412 Ag '68 210w

"A winning bet for story hours is this oblong-but-comfortable picture-history of the canine 'extraordinaire. . . . Episodes of the St. Bernard's story are matched with thundering tableaux—full-page snow-brushed color paintings, predominantly in schemes of black, blue, and gray are touched with red and gold for warmth. And to contrast the chilling color, Mr. Nussbaumer borders the text with a generous number of pen-and-ink sketches of dogs. Definitely a handsome package destined to snow those buyers reluctant to snatch up another dog story." Susan Roth
Library J 93:2106 My 15 '68 130w

"Miss Hurlimann's text pays plodding tribute to the original Barry and his successors, Paul Nussbaumer's warm, affectionate illustrations provide the color and drama." Margaret Berk-vist
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p46 My 5 '68 160w

"Despite a stilted quality in the writing, this story of a real dog is affectionately told and, because of the dramatic anecdotes about avalanche rescue in the Alps, exciting. The illustrations on the oversize pages are in black and white and in color; the latter are stunning paintings of mountain scenes in icy blues and lowering grays, snow-flecked. Only the dogs or the clothing of the muffled travelers are touched with bright color." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:37 My 11 '68 50w
TLS p586 Je 6 '68 100w

HURLIMANN, BETTINA. Three centuries of children's books in Europe; tr. and ed. by Brian W. Alderson. 297p il col il $8.95 World pub.

028.5 Children's literature 68-14703

"The aspects of children's literature Mrs. Hurlimann describes include nursery rhymes, fairy tales, nonsense, fantasy and reality, cow-boys and Indians, photography, politics, and picture books as she traces the history of children's books in Europe from Aesop's Fables, Pinocchio, and Grimm's Fairy Tales up through more recent classics like Struwwelpeter and Babar the Elephant." (Publisher's note) This is a translation of the second edition, published in Zurich in 1963, of Europäische Kinderbücher in drei Jahrhunderten. Chapter bibliographies. Bibliography. Index.

"Together with . . . the evaluation of individual authors and illustrators of note . . . appears a miscellany of topical essays, such as 'Politics in Children's Books' and 'Men of Letters Write for Children.' Gratitude for the work . . . must be expressed not only to the author . . . but also to the London critic who has given it a skillful translation. . . . He has rearranged chapters for the sake of historical and comparative evaluations, and added footnotes and tailpiece comments noting English and American editions of the books discussed. . . . The final thirteen-page bibliography, substantially increased beyond that of the German edition, comprises books about children's literature, now arranged country by country, and biographies." V. H.
Horn Bk 44:570 O '68 300w

Reviewed by Maurice Richardson
New Statesman 73:728 My 26 '67 420w

"A title such as [this] suggests a more encyclopedic approach than its author . . . in fact attempts. . . . [The book is] basically subjective in its approach, recalling past and present favourites, a collection of separate articles rather than an historical survey. . . . [Mrs. Hurlimann's] historical chapters include one on fairy tales; . . . a chapter on English nonsense literature; and one on picture books. . . . Hoffman, Hans Andersen, Saint-Exupéry, and Jean de Brunhoff a chapter each. It is clear, therefore, with only eighteen chapters to the book a great deal has had to be omitted. . . . [However, there are] lavish illustrations—the book would be worth buying for these alone."
TLS p439 My 25 '67 950w

HURLIMANN, MARTIN. India [tr. by D. J. S. Thomson]. (Studio bk) 331p 325il 27col il maps $25 Viking

915.4 India—Description and travel 68-11517

This book is "a photographic tour of India. The work is divided into six geographical sections, each of which is preceded by a synopsis of the prominent dynasties or cultural traditions of the region, and a seventh section which deals with modern India." (Library J) Chronology of Indian dynasties and the buildings erected in their reigns

"Perhaps no other single country is so fascinating and baffling to an outside observer as is India. . . . Hurlimann has managed to capture such a difficult subject well. The historical parts and the descriptions of the monuments are succinct and lucid while the photographs, some 325 of them (27 in color), are brilliant. Each picture brings to life a segment of the Indian past with all its inarticulate hopes, fears, and aspirations. As a conducted tour of India the book is unsurpassed in its clarity and beauty, and the maps are well conceived and helpful. The text explains without obtruding on the harmony of the photographs. Indispensable for collections, public and private."
Choice 5:542 Je '68 120w

"Although the work is excellent, three observations should be made: several of the photographs have appeared in earlier works, the number of color photographs is small . . . and several scenes have a distorted perspective since Dr. Hurlimann used wide-angle or telephoto lenses." D. C. Johnson
Library J 93:1482 Ap 1 '68 100w

HURRAH. we're outward bound! il. by Peter Spier. unp $3.95; lib bdg $4.70 Doubleday

398.8 Nursery rhymes 68-12836

The Illustrator of The Fox Went Out One Chilly Night (BRD 1962) presents an "illustrated collection of familiar sea songs and

HURRAH—Continued
 en voyage in 1830 of a three-masted sailing ship, La Jeune Française, from Honfleur to New York and back. . . . Ages four to eight." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin
 Book World p16 Ag 25 '68 170w
 Horn Bk 44:555 O '68 100w

"In the latest addition to the 'Mother Goose Library' Peter Spier again brings to traditional rhymes a rare combination of visual appeal and historical research. . . . Sea, chanteys, weather superstitions and nursery rhymes are skillfully combined to show a consecutive voyage for a typical 19th Century ship. There is childlike appeal in the inexhaustible drama of the delicately-colored minutiae found in the accompanying pictures; the detailed background material found in a two-page commentary at the end is equally fascinating for older readers or students of folklore." Della Thomas
 Library J 93:2733 J1 '68 90w

"A special chant of praise for Spier's colorfully illustrated panoramas of sea and port which carry the romance of the age of sail in every authentic detail from bowsprit to stern, from ship to shore." G. A. Woods
 N Y Times Bk p28 Je 9 '68 140w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
 Sat R 51:42 Ag 24 '68 50w

HUSH Little baby; a folk lullaby; il. by Aliki. unp $4.25 Prentice-Hall
 398.8 Lullabies 68-12194

The title of the book comes from the words of the "old English lullaby that came to us by way of the Appalachians. . . . Ages three to six." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. B. King
 Book World p12 Ag 11 '68 70w

"[The artist paints on woodblocks using] gentle many-toned golds, yellows, warm blue or pink. The paintings echo the lilting rhymes [in which] the pictures follow the maid-bronzes suddenly lit with a flash of bright words about the presents 'papa's gonna buy' for his little baby, and combine an old world flavor with a gentle wit." Pamela Marsh
 Christian Science Monitor pB2 N 7 '68 40w

"The illustrations, by Aliki, are what's new. Here they have the appearance of having been crayoned and painted on pine boards to simulate an 18th-century American heirloom. Through eight stanzas the effect is sweetly euphoric and soothing—except for the price which is a lot to pay for an imitation antique." G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p40 S 29 '68 60w

HUSSEY, J. M., ed. Proceedings, 5-10 September, 1966. See International congress of Byzantine studies, 13th, Oxford, 1966

HUSSEY, MAURICE, comp. Chaucer's world; a pictorial companion; phot. and maps comp. and introduced by Maurice Hussey. 172p $6.50; pa $2.75 Cambridge

821.09 Chaucer, Geoffrey—Contemporary England. Civilization, Medieval—Pictures, illustrations, etc. 67-11523

This book is intended for the reader who "is approaching the poet's work for the first time and attempting to assess it against the background of life and ideas current in the fourteenth century. . . . The text has been largely reduced to a series of background comments and . . . criticisms of illustrations which have been chosen to cover both the concrete and the abstract features of Chaucer's period and work." (Pref)

"The title invites comparison with [R. S.] Loomis' A Mirror of Chaucer's World [BRD 1966]. Surprisingly, there is not much duplication in Hussey's book. . . . The 150-odd illustrations (black-and-white) are not all conveniently dated, a drawback since some are as late as the 16th century; three works by Brueghel and a four-page comment on his art are superfluous. Though focused on the illustrations, the text provides a good introduction to medieval life. Recommended for college libraries as a supplement to Loomis' book."

Choice 4:1242 Ja '68 110w

"Hussey has compiled an admirable picture of [Chaucer's] society. Maps, plans, aerial photographs, paintings, and pictures of castles, churches, cottages and local details—all well selected and well reproduced—are linked by a skilled and sympathetic text. The Ellesmere manuscript illustrations of the pilgrims are the points of departure: Mr. Hussey proceeds from the Prioress to a picture of medieval convent life, from the Clerk to a picture of university life, and so on. Slowly the jigsaw is assembled and the reader is led to a fuller appreciation of medieval life and thought. . . . There will be many already familiar with Chaucer's poetry who should derive both new knowledge and continuing pleasure from [the book]."

TLs p1159 N 30 '67 230w

HUSTON, LUTHER A. The Department of Justice. 270p il $5.95 Praeger

353.5 U.S. Department of Justice 67-20482

"After a brief historical sketch of the Department . . . from the establishment of the office of the Attorney General as a one-man operation in 1789, the author explains its present-day organization and functions, defines its position within the structure of the U.S. Government, and describes the duties of its top officials." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"An unnecessary book. It is so elementary that it could only be useful in junior high schools, or in high schools with very low standards. It also contains some errors, which detract from its integrity."

Choice 5:408 My '68 120w

"This is a readable and informative description of the Department of Justice that will appeal to the general reader. The scholar will find that its citations to cases and statutes are incomplete and inconsistent, and that the bibliography is inadequate. . . . However, it does provide the high school and college student with the origins of the Department, its many functions, and the men and incidents associated with it. For large public and college libraries." E. J. Bander

Library J 92:3052 S 15 '67 110w

HUTCHINGS, ARTHUR. Church music in the nineteenth century. 166p $5 Oxford

783 Church music—History and criticism. Music—History and criticism 67-16679

"The subjects dealt with are the 'great composers', choral and liturgical music on the Continent and in Britain, the nineteenth-century historical revivals in music, and congregational and popular church music. . . . [The author] is Professor of Music at the University of Durham." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Hutchings has written a series of personal essays rather than a comprehensive history of 19th-century church music. His comments are opinionated, often querulous, and sometimes wise. He confidently assumes a thorough familiarity with the workaday world of the English church musician that would be rare among American undergraduates, but the book has more value for it. The sections on Continental church music are useful, as little else is readily available. The only mention of American church music is one sentence about Sankey. This little book is valuable because Hutchings is not afraid of an opinion."

Choice 5:352 My '68 100w

"There is a dearth of books in the English language on nineteenth-century church music so passionately expressed yet so balanced as this. . . . The book covers all denominations, but clearly from the layout of chapters Hutchings has devoted most space to the Roman Catholic church where the achievement was greatest. . . . This is an inexpensive book for its copious music examples, many of which are from lesser-known works. Hutchings' lucid rationale of the thought that lies behind nineteenth-century music, which it has so long been so fashionable to despise, will prove a turning point in critical taste. Let us hope more detailed studies will follow this admirable survey." Michael Dawney

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:486 Mr '68 480w

"The subject needed a person of independent mind and cheerful unorthodoxy—the orthodoxy of the present century demands a rejection of the ideals of the nineteenth, but Professor Hutchings can find a good page or two for John Bacchus Dykes. . . . If, at a first reading, the book seems cranky or even cockeyed, further examination reveals that its opinions are founded on extensive sociological knowledge of the communities that use the music and a tolerant understanding of denominational history."

TLS p1042 N 2 '67 450w

HUTCHINS, FRANCIS G. The illusion of permanence; British imperialism in India. 217p $6.50 Princeton univ. press

327.42 British in India. India—Relations (general) with Great Britain. Great Britain—Relations (general) with India. 67-15828

The author "is concerned with the origin, development, and influence of the notion that England in the interest of justice should continue to rule India permanently. In pursuing this question he follows the course of evangelical and utilitarian doctrine, the Victorian code of conduct, concepts of Indian character, the structure of sahib society, the dissolution of company rule, and 'orientalism,' the new imperialism, and nationalism. . . . [He attempts to show that] all of these elements . . . reinforced the idea of a permanent British raj." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"Hutchins writes in an elegant and unobtrusive style. . . . And he makes particularly good use of literary evidence. But his method is not without flaws. In some instances, excessive reliance on secondary material has led him astray. . . . Further investigation would have enabled him to flesh out his argument to advantage. As it is, he has produced a work that is far from negligible, yet one less substantial than [G. D.] Bearn's British Attitudes towards India, to which it bears a family resemblance. Still, to tackle a broad theme of this sort requires much courage, and Hutchins has carried it off successfully. He has sorted out many threads and arranged them in delightful patterns." Mark Naidis

Am Hist R 73:881 F '68 410w

"Professor Hutchins' thesis is that during the nineteenth century . . . those who opposed the growth of democracy in Britain came to see India as a refuge where one still could enjoy the status and power of a stratified, closed society. As this view increasingly predominated, the British . . . believed [their rule] would be permanent. . . . Too frequently Hutchins fails to explain why the people he quotes should be considered either authoritative or representative. . . . Thus for all one can tell, Hutchins has presented whatever supported his argument and ignored everything else. Even should Hutchins' account of British imperial values be representative, a further problem remains: he presents no evidence to link these values with actual British policy. . . . This book, then, is primarily a history of ideas and chiefly a descriptive history at that. Hutchins reports the change in ideas which he believes occurred, but does not really show why particular ideas developed as they did." Jorgen Rasmussen

Am Pol Sci R 62:307 Mr '68 1100w

"Hutchins' general outline cannot be effectively tested at any point without closer analysis. More specific questions must be asked and the attitudes of Empire, displayed by specific groups—for example, missionaries—over a coherent period, or the attitudes of various groups to specific issues involving Imperial purposes . . . must be investigated. . . . Nevertheless, this is an enjoyable and stimulating book." Kenneth Ballhatchet

Ann Am Acad 376:165 Mr '68 430w

Choice 5:390 My '68 170w

HUTCHINS, PAT. Rosie's walk. unpag. col. il $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

Poultry—Stories. Foxes—Stories. 68-12090

"Rosie the hen goes for a walk, not knowing that a fox with the worst of motives is following her. Along the way, Rosie innocently leads her pursuer into a series of disasters which end with Mr. Fox being put to rout by a swarm of bees. As for Rosie, she enjoys her walk and is home in time for dinner. . . . Pre-school to grade one." (Library J)

Reviewed by P. M. Daltrey

Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 2 '68 40w

Horn Bk 44:408 Ag '68 60w

"Brightly colored, amusingly stylized double-page pictures and the simple, tongue-in-bill story with a minimum of text make this picture book a delightful choice for use with one child, or 20, or more." Jessica McDaniel

Library J 93:4395 N 15 '68 70w

"A sunny, slapstick silent comedy. True, there are 33 words in its 30 pages, but these are more a sop for a superfluous parent than a necessity for small page-turners—who will read the illustrations loud and clear. Mod in spirit, they tell [the story] . . . hilariously, for Mrs. Hutchins is a born picture-book animator." S. G. Lanes

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p54 My 5 '68 170w

TLS p1375 D 5 '68 80w

HUTCHINS, ROBERT M. The learning society. 142p $4.50 Praeger

370 Education

67-22291

The author "sets out new priorities for the education of the future. He is concerned . . . with the issues that may be expected to emerge before the end of the twentieth century: Who should have what kind of education? What techniques are involved in building an educational system for the twenty-first century? What are the weaknesses demonstrated by totalitarian educational systems? What type of education is required for membership in a world community? . . . Defining education as 'the deliberate, organized attempt to help people to become intelligent,' Dr. Hutchins contends that its new aim must be a fuller realization of manhood, not manpower; a world in which everyone has 'the chance to be human.'" (Publisher's note) Index.

"The thesis of this essay by the renowned educator and former chancellor of the University of Chicago is 'that in the twenty-first century education may at last come into its own.' . . . He cites various causes for new interests in education and notes some of the consequences therefrom. . . . Opponents of the liberal arts philosophy may not agree with what is said in this provocative treatise; however, all educators should read it." T. J. Cole

Library J 93:749 F 15 '68 290w

Reviewed by Jean Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 19 '68 350w

HUTCHINSON, G. EVELYN. A treatise on limnology; 2v, v2. Introduction to lake biology and the limnoplankton. 1115p il $39 Wiley

574.9 Fresh water biology (57-8888)

This is an "account which relates the freshwater biota to the rest of the living world. . . . There are [chapters on] the hydromechanics of the plankton . . . the phytoplankton, its occurrence and seasonal succession, and the zooplankton, with an . . . account of vertical distribution and migration . . . and a final chapter on cyclomorphosis." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Indexes of authors, lakes, organisms. General index. For volume one, Treatise on Limnology, Geography, Physics and Chemistry, see BRD 1958.

"This second volume of an anticipated three-volume work by the dean of American limnologists represents an authoritative, exhaustive, and up-to-date consideration of lake biology. . . . [It] brings order into the nomenclature used in describing fresh-water lentic communities. The incorporation of serial literature and depth of discussion surpasses all other texts and reference books which have included sections on freshwater plankton. . . . Too much space seems to be devoted to cyclomorphosis in relation to other plankton phenomena. The chapter summaries will prove to be very valuable to the reader. The indices and bibliography are valuable reference tools. . . . Numerous illustrations and graphs of good quality make the written material much easier to comprehend. Highly recommended to colleges and universities [and] aquatic biologists."

Choice 4:1133 D '67 160w

"Undoubtedly Hutchinson's simple classification will spark a good deal of controversy among phytoplankton specialists. In view of his extensive and complicated classification of lake types in volume 1 of this monograph, I am disappointed and surprised with his oversimplified concept of phytoplankton communities. . . . American limnologists will be impressed with the great emphasis placed on European investigations. In some areas I feel that important American papers have not been given their due. That this fine volume contains little material on pond plankton or stream plankton is a trivial criticism. . . . [It] belongs in every limnologist's personal library." R. W. Pennak

HUTCHINSON, G. E.—Continued

Science 156:1078 My 26 '67 700w

HUTCHINSON, LESTER. The conspiracy of Catiline. 182p $5 Barnes & Noble

937 Rome—History—Republic, 510-30 B.C.
Catiline, Lucius Sergius 67-5533

"The events of 64 and 63 [B.C.] are . . . outlined, the chief actors analyzed, and the sources . . . compared." (Choice)

Reviewed by C. B. Welles

Am Hist R 73:1116 Ap '68 360w

"Essentially this work was written to help the student reading Cicero. It does the job admirably, and indeed deserves a wider public.

. . . Much is made clear which in briefer accounts must necessarily only be hinted at. . . . And the work's usefulness is enhanced by a lucid and elegant style. Catiline appears as a leader with a real political program, an original interpretation which is cogently argued. . . . Nothing in print covers the topic so well, and few books provide such a sensible introduction to the whole period of the Roman Revolution. Recommended for every ancient history collection."

Choice 4:887 O '67 130w

"Hutchinson lays out all the evidence he knows. (There is some he does not). . . . Hutchinson's Catiline is a dedicated instigator of social and economic revolution. This view, to carry conviction, requires more than the superficial treatment of social and economic problems which Hutchinson provides. . . . [He] writes in the flashy style of the yellow press. Although he rightly casts suspicion on the unsavory allegations made against Catiline, he nevertheless takes a peculiar pleasure in telling them in detail. There is many a lurid paragraph on debauchery and excess, tempered by some remarkable generalizations. On p. 87 we learn, 'A cursory study of nature and history tends to show that the female is more single-minded than the male. She is thorough even in atrocity.' Entries in the bibliography are no less remarkable, for instance 'Velleius G. Paterculus.' Not a good book." G. W. Bowersock

Class World 61:50 O '67 240w

"A careless, luridly written slice of historical sensationalism which nevertheless possesses certain undeniable merits. Mr. Hutchinson marshals his facts like a political journalist; he may sometimes appear superficial, but he is always clear, and in the tortuous confusions of Republican intrigue this is no mean achievement. His psychological judgments are those of the smoking-room, and not necessarily the worse for that. He may be guilty of muck-raking, yet even the most cautious critic would concede that over the Catiline affair there is muck galore to be raked. He may be prone to believe a discreditable anecdote per se; this does not prevent his tossing it out in double-quick time when it smells of propaganda. If he leans over backwards to be fair to anyone, it is to Catiline himself."

TLS p1250 D 28 '67 350w

HUTCHISON, HAROLD F. King Henry V: a biography [Eng title: Henry V]. 287p il maps $6.95 Day

B or 92 Henry V, King of England 67-29803

In this biography the author attempts to separate fact from legend as he describes how Henry "had suppressed a revolt of the . . . Lollards, defeated the French against overwhelming odds at Agincourt in 1415, conquered the whole of Normandy and more, and was instrumental in ending the Papal Schism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Legend and Shakespeare between them have given us a far from authentic portrait of Henry V. . . . [This] able and well-written book offers the layman a needed opportunity to get to know Henry as the historians know him. . . . In this well-documented, objective, and most readable narrative, Mr. Hutchison has quietly drawn a compelling picture of the man and his world. Here are all the known facts on which a judgment must be based. Mr. Hutchison is especially good on the military aspect. We are shown in fascinating detail the organization and equipment of 'the greatest fighting force so far assembled on English soil.' . . . An appendix gives the vivid account by an eye-witness, John Page, of the siege of Rouen." Eric Forbes-Boyd

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 2 '68 600w

Reviewed by R. R. Rea

Library J 93:986 Mr 1 '68 160w

"A lot of reading has gone into this biography as well as some pleasant illustrations, but there is not much new to be said. Shakespeare's hero has already been revalued, less as a consequence of fresh material and more by changes in ourselves. As a general Henry was a prodigy; the evidence is not Agincourt but the brilliant Normandy campaign of 1417-19. As a king and a man he was gratuitously cruel, unattractively devout, and wasteful of our resources in foreign wars. As an English hero he is even odder than Nelson." K. G. Davies

New Statesman 74:510 O 20 '67 220w

New Yorker 43:116 Ja 20 '68 300w

HUTCHISON, SIDNEY C. The history of the Royal academy, 1768-1968. 268p pl $12.95 Taplinger

708 London. Royal Academy of Arts

[68-102296]

The Academy librarian "conducts the reader on a . . . bicentennial tour of England's . . . national school of painting, sculpture, and engraving. . . . [Appendixes include] a complete list of the members of the Royal Academy since its foundation, a chronological list of the officers and professors of the institution and a subject index of the . . . Summer Exhibitions of the Royal Academy which have been held annually since 1769." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] detailed history of the British Royal Academy will be welcomed by all students of the history of British art. . . . Together with the plates which provide an index to the evolution of public taste and a useful bibliography, Mr. Hutchison's study should certainly find its way into art history collections." L. S. Fallis

Library J 93:2643 Jl '68 170w

"As an official historian, Mr. Hutchison has done his work well. It may be possible to imagine a more picturesque account of personalities . . . of famous episodes and lively controversies. But his narrative is solidly based on research and the knowledge gained in his long experience . . . with the occasional leaven of anecdote and the personal touch of verbal portrait sketches of Presidents he has known."

TLS p548 My 30 '68 800w

HUXLEY, ALDOUS. The crows of Pearblossom; ll. by Barbara Cooney. unsp lib bdg $3.50 Random house

Crows—Stories. Snakes—Stories 67-25115

"In the top of a cottonwood at Pearblossom lived Mr. and Mrs. Crow, whose life was blighted by the fact that the snake who lived in the bottom of the tree ate their eggs. 'What can have happened to my darling little eggs?' the frustrated mother would wail, and she urged her husband to do something about it. He went to Old Man Owl, who thought of painting some clay eggs and deceiving the snake. It worked. The snake swallowed two eggs, writhed so much in his agony that he tied himself in knots around a branch, and since then all the diapers of Mrs. Crow's nestlings have hung on a clothesline of snake." (Sat R) "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. B. King

Book World p12 Ja 21 '68 150w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:179 N 10 '67 40w

"Written in 1944, this is the only juvenile by the noted English novelist. That he did not write any others is our loss, for the inventive storytelling and the precision of style that distinguished his writing for adults is apparent here too. Although anthropomorphic, the animals have just enough humor to delight children. The illustrations in black and soft green appropriately reflect the tone of the text." H. B. Quimby

Library J 92:4603 D 15 '67 120w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 76:597 N 1 '68 50w

Reviewed by Jerome Beatty

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p63 N 5 '67 50w

Reviewed by Janet Malcolm

New Yorker 43:181 D 16 '67 30w

"Despite the engaging illustrations, this is a slight effort. . . . [The juvenile] is, alas, not [Huxley's] métier." Zena Sutherland
 Sat R 50:41 N 11 '67 130w
 TLS p1372 D 5 '68 200w

HUXLEY, ELSPETH. Love among the daughters; memories of the twenties in England and America. 311p $5.95 Morrow
 B or 92 68-9807

A continuation of the author's autobiography, the first and second volumes of which were The Flame Trees of Thika (BRD 1960) and On the Edge of the Rift (BRD 1963). This volume describes how in the 1920's Mrs. Huxley left Kenya to attend college in England and the United States. She recalls her experiences with college life and the college students in both countries as well as with the young girl cousins with whom she stayed in England.

Reviewed by Sr. M. Marguerite
 Best Sell 28:269 O 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by Peggy Shonbrun
 Book World p10 N 3 '68 400w

"Nostalgia has overflowed from Mrs. Huxley's content to her style. The people she writes about have become set into stereotype and it is hard to care much about the dating habits of English and American students half a century ago." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p12 S 26 '68 140w

"Gertrude and Kate, [Miss Huxley's] cousins, are emancipated symbols of the generation of the 1920's. . . . Miss Huxley writes with humor, and with love, of this period when young people were separating themselves from the decorum of their Victorian elders. She recounts here how . . . she traveled to America for a year at Cornell where she met the American counterparts of her college friends and cousins. Life at Cornell with its football games, raccoon coats, bootleg gin and the Charleston will seem sadly nostalgic to some readers and incredibly stupid to some others. . . . I wonder though how the Flower Generation will react if they read this book? . . . Try [it] yourself." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:2648 J1 '68 250w

"[At] Reading University [Elspeth] took a degree in agriculture. Her descriptions of life in a red-brick university are as brilliant in their evocative horror as are her accounts of the Boxing Day meet at Boscombe, when her uncle jumped clean over her. . . . She describes the Reading students' bitter poverty. . . . She is illuminating about the sociological differences between the sex lives of her cousins, of the students at Reading and of those at Cornell. . . . She is most serious about class distinctions. . . . With the clarity of thought of a brilliant and witty mind scientifically trained, Elspeth Huxley expresses herself in scalpel-precise language. Whether she is detailing the past and present of friends and relations, describing the death of a fox or Prohibition picnic orgies, she is funny, bawdy, serious, nostalgic and always entertaining." Anne Fremantle

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 22 '68 1150w

"The book is a series of sequences, often brilliant and often funny, but somehow lacking a central theme. . . . Mrs. Huxley has a quick and accurate eye. . . . Her people are well-drawn extras. They have faces and humours but they never hold the centre of the stage for long. Even her cousins, the daughters of the title, are shadowy. . . . And the 'I' of the story is so wary that you never catch her off her guard. It is all great fun, but the jacket design with its echoes of period Punch catches the mood precisely. There is no moment of truth and the common daylight of growing up seems less valid than the bright morning of childhood."

TLS p1275 N 14 '68 600w

HUXLEY, GERVAS. Victorian duke: the life of Hugh Lupus Grosvenor, first duke of Westminster. 214p pl $5.60 Oxford

B or 92 Westminster, Hugh Lupus Grosvenor, 1st Duke of [67-85915]

A biography of "the richest and most philanthropic man of his time." (Economist)

"Mr. Huxley, who in his Lady Elizabeth and the Grosvenors [BRD 1966] provided convenient background information on the family and its fortunes before the nineteenth century, has written a careful, factual, unpadding biography solidly based on the unpublished Grosvenor archives. The book is biography, not history, and some scholars will regret that the development and management of the London estate are so lightly sketched and the Duke's racing interests so fully; thirty-seven of his horses are named in the index. . . . Huxley has given us a credible picture of unrelieved Victorian virtue, which, if a little dull, is no fault of his. Though possibly he has muted some less happy aspects of the Duke's life, there is no odor of undisclosed skeletons, Freudian or otherwise. Family portraits and buildings are illustrated, and there is a chart of the Duke's descendants." H. D. Jordan

Am Hist R 73:821 F '68 340w

"A book for those who 'love a lord,' and the love must be strong to sustain the reader through the inconsequential details of the personal life of this inconsequential lord. Not recommended for any scholarly libraries, although the book does, unwittingly, contain some 'social history' of the anecdotal kind."

Choice 4:1433 F '68 50w

"[Mr Huxley] gives a full account of Lord Grosvenor's life and interests, including the brilliantly successful stud which he built up. But the man himself appears like the effigy of a knight on a medieval tomb, and one longs for some chink in the armour of sober goodness. The book is almost an official memorial in its catalogue of public and private virtue, and shifts uneasily from political history to family biography without being entirely at home in either. However, Mr Huxley does throw fascinating sidelights on the world of the affluent Victorian aristocracy."

Economist 223:692 My 13 '67 390w

Reviewed by J. M. Prest
 Engl Hist R 83:629 J1 '68 200w
 TLS p488 Je 1 '67 490w

HUXLEY, LAURA ARCHERA. This timeless moment: a personal view of Aldous Huxley. 330p il $6.95 Farrar, Straus

B or 92 Huxley, Aldous Leonard 68-14919

This "portrait of Aldous Huxley, in the period of his life from 1948 until his death in 1963, written by his second wife . . . illuminates his character through recorded conversations, personal letters, between them, and excerpts from his writings." (Publishers' Weekly) The title is from the hypnotic refrain with which Aldous Huxley soothed his first wife during her dying hours.

Reviewed by Gertrude Himmelfarb
 Atlantic 222:90 Ag '68 700w

Reviewed by Leon Edel
 Book World p1 J1 14 '68 430w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
 Christian Science Monitor p13 J1 18 '68 250w

"In 1948, when this book begins, Aldous Huxley's first wife of thirty-five years, Maria, was still alive. . . . Some of the passages about Maria are among the most charming in this charming book. . . . All the chapters and portions dealing with LSD, including the account of Huxley's death, are vivid and become an emotional experience for the reader, too, and even when the account is most intense, humor, happily, is not absent. There are minor problems of repetition and construction in the book but it is so charged with intellectual and emotional feeling, so full of vital scenes and people that such flaws don't seem to matter. . . . Mrs. Huxley's book draws a portrait of a brilliant and lovable personality."

Harper 237:78 Ag '68 500w

Reviewed by A. J. M. Pedley
 Library J 93:2647 J1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Calvin Bedient
 Nation 207:376 O 14 '68 430w

Reviewed by Lawrence Graver
 New Repub 159:15 Ag 10 '68 1000w

"One can attempt to criticize [this book] by considering some of the attitudes of Aldous and Laura Huxley, however painful it may be to do this. . . . It is relevant to consider Mrs. Huxley's character as revealed in these pages. There is a slight touch of vulgarity, apart even from the woman's-magazine style of much of the writing. . . . But in the end one admires her openness. That she is so formidably in the foreground gives her picture scale and perspective. There is something of Hollywood and mediumship and faint vulgarity from which Aldous Huxley himself, marvelous as was his intelligence and beautiful his character, does not entirely escape. Perhaps this relates to an unresolved problem of the dichotomy (false to my mind) which he sets up between the truth of art and the truth of heightened consciousness attained by taking mescaline." Stephen Spender

HUXLEY, L. A.—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p32 N 10 '68 1350w

New Yorker 44:183 O 5 '68 120w

"The memoir of Huxley's second wife, Laura, is an embarrassing book in literary-widow prose that inadvertently exposes how Huxley's powers of discrimination declined as his passion for The Answer grew. He experimented with such California hobbies as psychedelic drugs and amateur hypnotism, including magnetic passes of the hands. He may have become a better man; but he clearly did not become a better artist."

Time 92:72 J1 19 '68 340w

HUXLEY, T. H. The essence of T. H. Huxley: selections from his writings: ed. with several brief interpretative essays by Cyril Bibby; and a foreword by Sir Julian Huxley. 246p $7.95 St Martins

192 Philosophy

67-25728

This book consists "of passages from [T. H. Huxley's] general works (those addressed to the lay public, sometimes on scientific themes, but omitting all technical scientific works), together with biographical extracts from his letters and from notes by his wife and himself." (Economist) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Gertrude Himmelfarb

Atlantic 222:89 Ag '68 1000w

"[The author was] one of the masters of English prose: brilliant, concise and witty, an admirable exponent of reason and common sense. . . . [This book] is all good reading and much of it astonishingly apposite to the problems of today. . . . Unfortunately Huxley lived and worked in the middle of contemporary discussion, and [the editor's] technique (though it is carried out with great skill) removes some of the shape and savour from his writings. A good extract from 'An Episcopal Trilogy' contains no reference to any bishop: the original, which tells you exactly what the Bishop of Manchester said is much more fun."

Economist 226:40 Ja 27 '68 300w

"Bibby has made an excellent selection from Huxley's speeches, lectures and books. He divides them into sections which enables us to quickly reach an adequate appreciation of his wit, eloquence and moral fervor. They are most immediately remarkable for their courage. . . . In an age in which morality was supposed to depend on faith in Christianity he invented the word Agnosticism as the only truly ethical position. He preached that the search for truth was all-important and that the pretence of knowledge where there could be none was sinful." Kingsley Martin

New Statesman 75:175 F '68 550w

HYAMS, EDWARD, jr. auth. House plants. See Elbert, G.

HYDE, DAYTON O. Sandy; the true story of a rare sandhill crane who joined our family. 214p il $4.95 Dial press

598.3 Cranes (Birds)

68-14991

An account by "an Oregon rancher who dedicated himself to saving an endangered species of [sandhill] cranes]. Sandy was hatched from a crane egg which Dayton Hyde rescued from a nest destroyed in a flood. [He describes how] she grew up in the heart of the Hyde household." (Publisher's note)

"This is an exasperating book. It is unashamedly and knowingly anthropomorphic and it is padded with too much peripheral material. . . . [However, Hyde's] contributions to crane research have been helpful to ornithologists and this book may well contribute to public recognition of the impending extinction of the Whooping and Greater Sandhill Cranes. . . . Because of its urgent conservation message this book is recommended to all public libraries, and particularly those in Sandhill country." A. S. Ricketts

Library J 93:1153 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:[3338] S 15 '68 60w [YA]

"Hyde has a huge ranch near Klamath Falls and beside the Williamson River in Oregon, and his lively account of raising a sandhill crane conveys the openness and heartiness of the Northwestern outdoors. . . . At the peak of a savage flood many years ago Mr. Hyde plunged into the icy waters of a swollen stream and rescued two eggs from under a sandhill crane that was helpless. One of the eggs hatched in an incubator, and Mr. Hyde had a new career." Brooks Atkinson

N Y Times Bk ■ p27 Je ■ '68 300w

HYDE, DOUGLAS. The troubled continent: a new look at Latin America. 220p il $5.95 Pflaum press

918 Latin America—Description and travel. Latin America—Social conditions 67-29765

The author's aim is "to alert the reading public that we face [in Latin America] a critical situation requiring immediate attention, analysis and action. . . . [Hyde] discusses land reform, the gap between rich and poor, the progress of Christian democracy, the change in Communist tactics, and the . . . problem of guerilla warfare." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[Mr. Hyde] gives us vivid vignettes and analyses of the poverty and underdevelopment in five or six Latin American nations. . . . For anyone who wants to learn what is agitating the troubled world to the south, Hyde's factual, name-place-event reporting is an excellent introduction." E. K. Culhane

America 117:747 D 16 '67 100w

Reviewed by V. S. Kearny

America 118:608 My 4 '68 70w

"[Mr. Hyde's approach] is sophisticated and largely successful but, inevitably, rather general. A number of the points he makes are open to qualification—in some cases they demand it. . . . [However] his book is a sound overall evaluation of the struggle at this moment." Robert Pelton

Critic 26:82 F '68 650w

HYDE, GEORGE E. Life of George Bent. See Bent, G.

HYDE, H. MONTGOMERY. Lord Reading: the life of Rufus Isaacs, first marquess of Reading. 454p il $10 Farrar, Straus

B or 92 Reading, Rufus Daniel Isaacs, 1st Marquis of [67-112902]

This is the biography of "The Jewish barrister who rose to become first Marquess of Reading. Isaacs, who was born in 1860 and died in 1935, was an important member of the British bar and an active participant in British public life. He served successfully as Solicitor General, Attorney General, Lord Chief Justice, Ambassador in Washington, Viceroy of India, Ambassador in Paris, and Foreign Secretary." (Library J)

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 118:618 My 4 '68 80w

Reviewed by Maisie Ward

Commonweal 88:509 J1 26 '68 1150w

"This study is more than an account of the life of an individual. It is a portrait of the transition from the Victorian era to modern times. [Mr. Hyde] provides an excellent view of the world of the British bar and of British diplomacy. At no time, however, does he lose sight of the human appeal of his subject. Isaacs is revealed as a delightful personality, ambitious, with an unquenchable spirit of determination coupled with the human qualities of consideration and understanding." H. M. Burns

Library J 93:748 F 15 '68 160w

"The life of Rufus Isaacs would have made an admirable subject for Balzac or Trollope, for it is at first sight a success story to end success stories. . . . Hyde, himself a lawyer and a former M.P., makes the career of Isaacs at the bar very lively reading indeed. . . . [although] the account of his viceregal reign is the most important part of this book. A remarkable man of the second order, Reading still awaits his novelist. But this is an admirable book, even if some punches have to be pulled." Denis Brogan

■ Y Times Bk ■ p16 Mr 24 '68 800w

HYMAN, HAROLD M., ed. Freedom and reform; essays in honor of Henry Steele Commager; with contributions by Richard B. Morris [and others] ed. by Harold M. Hyman and Leonard W. Levy. 400p $6.95 Harper

973 Commager, Henry Steele 67-22521

"This collection of essays is a testimonial and 65th birthday present to Henry Steele Commager from his friends and former doctoral students. Two personal essays about Commager are contributed by R. B. Morris and Allan Nevins. The remaining eleven essays are scholarly historical contributions concerned with subjects such as: John Locke, Ben Lindsey, Frederick Douglass, the writ of habeas corpus, the accusatorial and inquisitorial systems." (Library J) Bibliography of Henry Steele Commager.

Reviewed by Alan Jones

J Am Hist 55:107 Je '68 600w

"Recommended for the research library." Bernard Vavrek

Library J 92:2938 S 1 '67 100w

"The whole historical profession will applaud this salute to one of its notable leaders. . . . [The title] broadly suggests the coverage. . . . But the pieces themselves are all highly specialized; and, since a scholar of Mr. Commager's versatility has spun off students in a variety of fields, the results entirely lack coherence. Thus there are two carefully documented and closely reasoned essays (by Leonard W. Levy and Milton Cantor) in early legal history; [a couple of] interesting but somewhat exaggerated essays in religious history; . . . and four very able and cogent essays, well worth tearing out and filing away—John D. Wright, Jr., on Horace Holley and Transylvania University, August Meier on Frederick Douglass's vision for America, Saul Benison on the beginnings of the fight against poliomyelitis and William E. Leuchtenburg on the [1933] Humphrey case . . . about the prerogatives of the President and the doctrine of separation and powers." Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

N Y Times Bk R p26 N 26 '67 700w

HYMAN, STANLEY EDGAR, ed. Come along with me. See Jackson, S.

HYMAN, STANLEY EDGAR, ed. William Troy: selected essays. See Troy, W.

HYND, ALAN. Great crime busters; II. by Albert Orbaan. 188p $2.95 Putnam

364.12 Criminal investigation—Juvenile literature 67-24143

These ten stories are about "crimes that were prevented or solved, including the plot to murder Abraham Lincoln before he took office. Half of the crimes solved in these tales were broken by the work of amateur sleuths. . . . The other half were solved . . . by tireless policemen." (Publisher's note) All of these stories have been previously published, most of them in Boys' Life. Index. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"In one sense the accounts are somewhat fictionalized through the use of dialogue and interpretation, but these elements only serve to hold the interest of the reader. The author also manages to maintain the element of suspense through most of the stories."

Best Sell 27:393 Ja 1 '68 100w

"Although somewhat dated, the selections are still interesting. . . . Neither crime nor violence is glorified; the descriptions of multiple murders are restrained. No doubt this collection will seem tame to avid TV viewers, but it is interesting and well written enough to fill the constant demand for material on crimes and detection. It should prove useful with reluctant readers." E. M. Guiney

Library J 93:306 Ja 15 '68 80w

HYNEMAN, CHARLES S. Popular government in America; foundations & principles [by] Charles S. Hyneman; with the collaboration of Charles E. Gilbert. 320p $8.50 Atherton

320.0973 U.S.—Politics and government. Democracy 67-18280

An analysis of the concepts and practices on which government in the United States is based. The study ranges from a consideration "of the traditional ideals of limited government to an analysis of current organized protest and resistance. [The author] depicts the consistent way in which group pressures and popular elections alternate and combine in the operation of democracy, and traces the various channels through which the people participate in government. . . . [The] introduction outlines the structure of the book, emphasizing its themes, and evaluating its contributions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography of Charles S. Hyneman. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"As the collected thoughts on American government of a distinguished former president of the American Political Science Association, this volume might have made an important contribution to the discipline. The work, however, is neither an attempt to construct theory nor a textbook; but it is, as admitted, 'a collection of related but separate essays.' As such, it must be placed somewhere between theoretical developments such as Dahl's A Preface to Democratic Theory [BkD 1957] and several standard textbooks on American government. While some of the ideas, including the distinction between 'populist' and 'pluralist demand-response systems,' are genuinely original and insightful, most of the thoughts unfortunately are conventional and nearly clichés."

Choice 5:1221 N '68 90w

"Professor Charles E. Gilbert of Swarthmore College assembled earlier writings of Professor Hyneman, who then rewrote most of this material. . . . The emphasis throughout the book is on fundamental theory. Professor Hyneman frequently uses the first person singular, sometimes swims against the fashionable tide, and now and then throws in a tart remark. While this well-written book is intelligible to the informed layman, it is not easy reading and therefore will probably be read mainly by political scientists and college students. Recommended for college and large public libraries." David Cooley

Library J 93:2884 Ag '68 150w

HYNES, SAMUEL. The Edwardian turn of mind. 427p pl $9.75 Princeton univ. press

914.2 Great Britain—Civilization 68-12929

"This is a book about England in the years just before the First World War—the period we call Edwardian, though its roots are in the 1890's and its end is August 1914. . . . I have selected the areas of conflict that seem to me most crucial—politics, science, the arts, the relations between men and women—and within those areas I have selected the examples and the individuals that have interested me most . . . [to illustrate] the intellectual climate of Edwardian England." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[Hynes] describes, by drawing upon a wide variety of firsthand sources, the cultural temper of the age. To this end, he writes chapters on such subjects as . . . the vicissitudes of socialism; . . . the feminist movement including conflicts over divorce and birth control, as well as female suffragism; censorship in the theater and in literature, and . . . English provinciality in painting, music, and the dance. . . . It is a most impressive survey and succeeds in bringing coherent conceptual organization to a formidable mass of material that hitherto has largely been dealt with in separate and unrelated categories. . . . It is the history of the extinction of the Victorian cultural model and of its gradual replacement by a model which . . . is at least more familiar to us and recognizably modern." Steven Marcus

Atlantic 222:134 O '68 390w

Reviewed by R. R. Rea

Library J 93:3134 S 15 '68 120w

"[The author seems] to have trouble locating his 'Edwardian turn of mind.' At some points in his account it seems to have taken place in the 1890's or even 1880's; at others in 1910. In any event what is important to him is the character of the turn. 'Turn,' however, may be an awkward metaphor for a period that he sees as essentially one of conflict. . . . If there was a turn, it was, one gathers, a turn backwards, since the new suffered repeated failures and ultimately defeat. . . . There is no systematic attempt to explain this turn backward." Gertrude Himmelfarb

New Repub 159:28 Jl 20 '68 1900w

"[The] intrinsic hinge quality [of the period] is implied in the play on words of Hynes's title, but his book is less comprehensive than that title might suggest. He is not concerned with the Edwardian mental temper as a whole, but with, as he puts it, the examples and individuals that have interested him most. . . . This is a delightful book to read, often witty in its turn of phrase and often original in its own turn of mind. But it is an idiosyncratic work, and readers should beware from the outset of taking any of Professor Hynes's parts for the whole of a situation. . . . So long as we have done our background homework we can fairly give ourselves up to enjoyment of Professor Hynes's merry-melancholy interpretations." Marghanita Laski

HYNES, SAMUEL—Continued

Sat R 51:28 J1 6 '68 1000w

Reviewed by W. E. Buckler

Va Q R 44:674 autumn '68 1250w

I

IBN AL-MUTHANNĀ, AHMAD. Ibn al-Muthannā's commentary on the astronomical tables of al-Khwārizmī: two Hebrew versions; ed. and tr. with an astronomical commentary by Bernard R. Goldstein. 408p il $17.50 Yale univ. press

520 al-Khuwārimī, Muḥammad ibn Mūsā. Astronomy 67-13434

"English translations of two versions of a Hebrew translation of an Arabic commentary (10th century) on a ninth-century Arabic text by al-Khwārizmī give an explanation of early chronology, planetary theory, trigonometry, gnomons, latitude, conjunction, opposition, eclipses, and visibility of the lunar crescent. The treatise represents an attempt to fuse Hindu procedures with Greek-Ptolemaic theory." (Choice) Glossaries. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] is of great value regarding the transmission of Hindu astronomy to Islam. It is excellently done with a suitable index, bibliography, and glossaries together with the edited Hebrew texts . . . [and] should be in every scientific library."

Choice 4:1262 Ja '68 120w

"[To a task such as this] the scholar must bring not only the traditional linguistic and historical skills but a full understanding of the science involved. This Goldstein has done. . . . In its alloy of Greek and Hindu astronomical methods, the text illustrates clearly the transit of Hindu astronomy to the West. Operating from the two Hebrew versions of the text (both of which are translated into English in this volume) Goldstein directly elucidates its meaning and character. Though he succeeds thus in clarifying the contents of the work, his all-too-sparse introduction (nine pages in a volume of over 400) unfortunately does little to set the material on which he has labored so well into a full historical perspective."

Harry Woolf

Science 159:74 Ja 5 '68 370w

IDEAS and institutions of Victorian Britain: essays in honour of George Kitson Clark; ed. by Robert Robson. 343p $12.50 Barnes & Noble

914.2 Great Britain—Civilization. Kitson Clark, George Sidney Roberts 67-6186

In this festschrift "the preoccupations of the various authors range from Namierism and bureaucratic growth to religious and intellectual history." (New Statesman)

"An average example of that strange category of publication known as the festschrift. . . . [Kitson Clark's] major interests are mirrored in the concentration of most of the 11 essays on either political-administrative or religious subjects. None of the essays is of really first-rate importance, though some—e.g. J. P. Cornford's study of the Conservative party from 1885 to 1906 in 'The Parliamentary Foundations of the Hotel Cecil'—approach that status and most are quite interesting. But three major factors prohibit recommendation of the volume for most undergraduate libraries: potpourri nature of such a collection; specialization of the essays; cost of the book."

Choice 5:397 My '68 120w

"With one or two exceptions the . . . essays contained in this book are . . . of a high standard. . . . The most interesting essays are devoted to religious themes. Best's study of 'Popular Protestantism' and F. B. Smith's examination of the 'Atheist Mission' are memorable both for their intrinsic interest and for the vividness of their evocation. Beside such élan even the most penetrating institutional analyses seem rather limp." G. S. Jones

New Statesman 74:93 J1 21 '67 120w

"A collection of stimulating essays. . . . [The editor] gives a delightful concluding chapter on Trinity College and its emergence into pre-eminence in the age of Peel. . . . Perhaps the most difficult of the essays—though not the least rewarding, because it is full of good things—is by Mr. D. C. Moore of the University of California. His chapter is concerned largely with the poll-books."

TLS p1010 O 26 '67 550w

IGNOTUS, PAUL. The paradox of Maupassant. 288p $4.95; pa $2.50 Funk

844 Maupassant, Guy de 68-15606

The author maintains that Maupassant "achieved greatness, at least in one genre, second only to Tolstoy. He then [attempts to explain] . . . why the short story was brought to its peak of perfection by this man who in his earlier years had given no indication of literary excellence and why it happened in France during the latter half of the 19th century." (Choice) Chronology. Index of persons and index of works by Maupassant.

"This book has no real equivalent among the various biographical and critical studies of Maupassant. Ignotus . . . concerns himself much more with the ambience in which Maupassant lived and wrote, with his friends and literary associates, with his mistresses, and, above all, with his fatal disease than with his literary works. The result is anecdotal and 'petite histoire.' The book is well documented, well written, and entertaining. . . . Despite [the author's] efforts, the paradox of Maupassant remains largely unexplained. Since the book presupposes a considerable familiarity with the writings of Maupassant, it is not addressed to the casual reader. It deserves a place in university and research libraries."

Choice 5:1136 N '68 190w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 73:798 Je 9 '67 1000w

"There is already a very competent life of Maupassant in English by Francis Steegmuller [Maupassant: a Lion in the Path, BRD 1949] and though it was published seventeen years ago the author of the book under review has nothing of substance to add by way of fact or interpretation. He indicates in his introduction that English is not his mother tongue and in spite of the assistance of friends, the style is not attractive nor are the arguments always easy to follow. . . . The author recounts Maupassant's sexual exploits with considerable relish. . . . he also discusses the effect of illness on Maupassant's work, but though it has something to do with the 'paradox' of Maupassant nothing very enlightening emerges. Mr. Ignotus is no literary critic. . . . There is nothing in the way of a detailed examination of any of Maupassant's works. The 'plot' is described and judgment is pronounced. The judgments are often naive and amateurish." The

TLS p264 Mr 30 '67 400w

IJIRI, YUJI. The foundations of accounting measurement; a mathematical, economic, and behavioral inquiry. 235p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

657 Accounting 67-15629

An associate professor of business administration at Stanford University aims at "a better understanding of the foundations of accounting as it is. . . . He develops axioms and uses mathematics and statistics to explore accounting as a measurement system." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Ijiri attempts to assure that a background limited to high school algebra will enable one to read this book. The result is that far too much effort is wasted in talking down to the reader. . . . This is a book that gets better as it goes along. Happily, it reaches a peak at the end. As an economist, I would have welcomed discussions of such topics as the importance and influence of accounting for tax versus book purposes, and depreciation versus user cost as interesting issues that would certainly have been more germane to the topic than most of the illustrations actually used. As a teacher,

I would have welcomed a more readable book that could be recommended to a student without as many warnings, apologies, and qualifications." Ira Horowitz

Am Econ R 58:280 Mr '68 800w

"Most undergraduates would find the approach and the style quite difficult. The book is an important contribution, however, and should be in the library of any school at which there is any serious research in accounting."

Choice 5:1182 N '68 60w

ILIE, PAUL. Unamuno: an existential view of self and society. 299p $7.50 Univ. of Wis. press

196 Unamuno y Jugo, Miguel de 67-25944

Three "aspects of Unamuno's existentialism—his concept of psychology, his theory of value, and his methodology for cultural analysis—provide the basis for this study. An analysis of Unamuno's ideas on personality is followed by a discussion of how moral and social values are influenced by personality structure; these two areas are then combined in a consideration of how people and values operate in a cultural context." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"While Unamuno is generally regarded as an existentialist, this belief is usually related to his religious interests regarding faith and immortality. This study moves in a different direction by considering the areas of psychology, axiology, and sociology with the first serving as the pivot around which the book is organized. Ilie presents largely a description of Unamuno's thinking in a highly original way and is not concerned with evaluating the views of others. Within the limits of this approach he has produced a fascinating and provocative study, especially in regard to the existential, psychological motifs that he skillfully develops by letting Unamuno speak for himself. . . . This is a major interpretation of Unamuno and will be welcomed by a broad audience including those concerned with philosophy, psychology, sociology, and literature."

Choice 5:635 J1 '68 170w

"With this book Professor Ilie of the University of Michigan makes a remarkable contribution to the growing appreciative literature on Unamuno in English. . . . [He offers] an interpretation which emphasizes the unity of his thought around the themes he has chosen: Unamuno as psychologist, moralist, and cultural analyst. . . . In the second major section of the book Professor Ilie shows how Unamuno interpreted the fundamental problems of value in terms of Nietzsche's philosophy. . . . In the third section the professor gives an excellent discussion of Unamuno's appreciation of Judaism and the biblical myths which he used as keys for understanding his own beloved Spain. This is an excellent book for all university libraries and city libraries where there is interest in Spanish culture." R. L. Perkins

Library J 92:4506 D 15 '67 180w

"Increasingly [Unamuno] is regarded as one of the seminal existentialist thinkers of our century. [Ilie] defines this position more thoroughly than has been done up to now. . . . When, however, the twin dead weights of scholarship and abstract thought press too heavily on their subject, the result is neat and lifeless. Unamuno was many things, but never that. It is for this reason that [this book] is so difficult and so often a bore, however valuable it may be as an attempt to synthesize from all the works Unamuno's existential psychology, his theory of value, and his methodology for analyzing comparative cultures. Perhaps it is unreasonable to expect a critic to adopt the style and approach of his subject. . . . [Ilie's] range of knowledge about the Unamuno canon is encyclopedic, and his ability to reason his way towards system is in ironic contrast to Unamuno's own lack of order. About such topics as Unamuno's concept of self, or his relation to the work of Nietzsche, [he] would seem to have the last word." Robert Maurer

Sat R 51:32 F 10 '68 550w

ILLUSTRATED world encyclopedia [prepared and ed. by the Nat. lexicographic board]. 21v il col il col maps $39.95 Bobley pub. corp.

031 Encyclopedias and dictionaries—Juvenile literature 68-742

This "is an alphabetically arranged general encyclopedia . . . designed for the elementary school child and for others who have no knowledge of the subjects covered. In addition to general encyclopedic information the set includes in the last 62 pages of each volume the Bobley publication Literary Treasures which contains résumés of approximately 480 literary works of note. . . . The twenty-first volume is the Index Guide in which appear a Study Guide, an Index, and a Pronunciation Guide. [Indexes.] Grades four to six." (Booklist and S B B)

"The set will in general provide enough information to support both curriculum and interest needs of the elementary school child, but the simplified approach and the treatment given to many topics would impose limitations on the usefulness of the set to both junior high school and high school students. [It] might serve slower junior high school students. . . . The format of the set is attractive and appropriate to the use of children. Print is large and readable, page layout clear, and headings, printed in boldface, obvious. An occasional page is blurred. . . . While there is much accurate and useful information . . . the usefulness of the set is limited by brevity of information, over-simplifications, inconsistent revision, and carelessness in indexing and cross-referencing. . . . The Literary Treasures section seems to be designed for an older and more advanced audience than that which would find value in the encyclopedic sections of the set. This will also cause difficulties in use. For these reasons [this set] cannot be recommended."

Booklist and S B B 64:1196 J1 1 '68 3000w

"Though containing only half as many words as, for example, the World Book Encyclopedia [BRD 1963, this] handsomely presents a wide range of the sort of information needed by nine-to-fourteen-year-olds. The simply written articles run from a line to several pages, depending on the importance each would have for its expected age group. Besides sixteen pages of full-color Hammond maps in Volume 1, bi-color maps appear in geographical articles all through the set. Illustrations are numerous, though of uneven quality." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:43 My 18 '68 200w

IMMERWAHR, HENRY R. Form and thought in Herodotus; pub. for the Am. philological association. 374p $7.50 Press of Western reserve univ.

888 Herodotus

66-25319

"One of the purposes of this study is to present a full analysis of the whole of Herodotus' Histories, and to serve as a companion to the reader of the work—whether in Greek or in translation. An . . . outline, accompanied by an index of passages, is appended in order to facilitate this use of the book. At the same time, however, the book is an argument for unity of style, structure, and subject matter of Herodotus' Histories, and it also analyzes the historical conception that underlies the work's organization. . . . There is a conclusion on history and the order of Nature." (Publisher's note) Index of Logoi, sections and passages cited. General index.

"Immerwahr contends that the subject of the Histories is the history of Asiatic expansionism, reaching its climax in the defeat of Xerxes' invasion of Greece. The Greeks themselves are not the overt protagonists of the work. Indeed Xerxes is clearly the hero of the Persian Wars. Immerwahr has made careful use of his predecessors in this field. He has produced a valuable work, not for the casual reader, but for anyone already familiar with Herodotus or engaged in studying him in depth."

Choice 5:392 My '68 200w

"This is a work of distinction: the best book on Herodotus to appear in English in this century. Not least of its merits is that it reads well and handles difficult ideas with clarity. Not an easy achievement, but a welcome one." J. A. S. Evans

Class World 61:402 J1 22 '68 250w

The IMPACT of the Russian Revolution, 1917-1967; the influence of Bolshevism on the world outside Russia; issued under the auspices of the Royal inst. of int. affairs. 357p $7.50 Oxford

335.43 Communism. World politics. Russia—Relations (general). Russia—History—1917- 67-104862

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 118:616 My 1 '68 100w

IMPACT—Continued

Reviewed by A. T. Bouscaren
Ann Am Acad 337:173 My '68 370w
Choice 5:244 Ap '68 200w
Reviewed by Hyman Kublin
Library J 93:195 Ja 15 '68 200w
Nation 206:124 Ja 22 '68 50w

IMPROVING college teaching; ed. by Calvin B. T. Lee. 407p $6 Am. council on educ.

378.1 Education, Higher. Teaching 67-16555

"This volume, an outgrowth of the October, 1966, meeting of the American Council on Education, consists of . . . essays by forty-three contributing authors. It includes the keynote addresses, the background papers prepared for the meeting, together with commentaries and responses by faculty members, students, and administrators, and, in addition, the series of essays appearing in the Summer, 1966, issue of the Educational Record." (J Higher Ed)

"An excellent presentation of thought provoking essays . . . [giving] complete and comprehensive coverage of . . . innovations in college teaching; the evaluation of teaching performance including procedures for improving college teaching, in-service education for the college faculty, quantity and quality of college teachers, characteristics of effective college teachers; problems in college teaching such as principles of quality teaching and learning, effective instructional methods in college teaching, the training of college teachers, and the methods of securing qualified college teachers. The essays imply an optimistic, yet realistic, outlook on the future of college teaching. Special attention is given to the nature of the present-day college curriculum: curriculum reform and re-formation suggested in terms of a collegiate education for modern culture."

Choice 4:1147 D '67 130w

"Reflecting both the strengths and weaknesses of multiple authorship, the volume provides the broad sweep of opinion one might expect while at the same time showing a certain lack of unity in style and quality inevitable in a compilation. There is not a great deal that is new in the collection, but there is much that is helpful for the administrator or faculty member wanting an overview of the current status of American higher education with particular reference to teaching and research and the academic man." A. O. Penister
J Higher Ed 39:177 Mr '68 600w

IN the name of America; the conduct of the war in Vietnam by the armed forces of the United States as shown by published reports, compared with the laws of war binding on the United States Government and on its citizens; director of res; Seymour Melman; res. associates: Melvyn Baron [and] Dodge Ely. 421p $4.95; pa $2.95 Clergy & laymen concerned about Vietnam

341.3 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- . International law 68-21064

"The book is composed primarily of brief excerpts from . . . news reports on specific events and incidents of the war. These excerpts are preceded by the laws of war as they are to be found in relevant articles of the Hague and Geneva Conventions, the Nuremberg Principles, and the US Army Field Manual dealing with the Law of Land Warfare. These, in turn, are preceded by explanatory comments that are intended to put in perspective the yield produced by juxtaposing the laws of war with the conduct of the war in Vietnam." (New Repub)

"In spite of the fact that the book is the product of dedication and intelligence, its intentions remain curiously confused. Instead of being the J'accuse to which it aspires, it comes to rest on the level of nous impliquons. The reader is led along a fairly direct and narrow path to definite and strong conclusions which he is then cautioned not to gulp down. . . . It would appear that readers are being urged to draw legal conclusions which the 'authors' themselves disclaim. . . . To those already persuaded that the war is monstrous this may appear the most idle casuistry, the number of civilian deaths being sufficient proof of their case. But in the Name of America is presumably directed to this audience only secondarily. The primary audience needs argument that is not offered here." James Finn
New Repub 158:31 Je 1 '68 1800w

"The United States, this study asserts, 'must be judged guilty of having broken almost every established agreement for standards of human decency in time of war.' . . . That the legal aspects of the war in Vietnam should be called to the attention of the American government by our religious leaders is ironic. Yet perhaps this is not surprising since the international laws which govern the conduct of war are based on moral standards. . . . [The book] makes many things clear. We are committing atrocities in Vietnam; . . . we are violating international laws. The subject matter . . . is unpleasant, and it is not easy reading because one news dispatch is printed after another with no explanation of their significance. Yet [the book] brings up questions of great legal and moral consequence both at home and abroad." Don Luce

Sat R 51:24 Mr 2 '68 950w

INAN, JALE. Roman and early Byzantine portrait sculpture in Asia minor; pub. for the British academy, by Jale Inan and Elisabeth Rosenbaum. 245p 187pl $31.40 Oxford

731 Art, Roman. Art, Byzantine. Sculpture, Roman. Sculpture, Byzantine 66-72474

This is a "catalogue of portraits, heads, busts, and statues, known to have been found in the confines of what is now Turkey. These bronzes and marbles are arranged by province and city, save for the Late Antique examples, which are presented in a chronological unit. The emperors and their families are also described and illustrated in the order of their careers." (Class World)

"This large and handsome volume, well worth the considerable sum involved, is a thorough, lucid catalogue. . . . Famous portraits, like the bronze Hadrian from near Adana or the Marcus Aurelius from Pamphylia, are given new scrutiny, aided by excellent photographs. More important, numerous unknown Romans and Greeks of the richest imperial provinces have been brought out from tiny country museums or storerooms and given the same absorbing consideration." Cornelius Vermeule
Class World 61:116 N '67 290w

"[This] is one of those fundamental publications of sources without which historical research cannot make serious progress. 311 portraits are published and carefully analysed. Sixty-seven are imperial portraits from Augustus to Valentinian II. The rest are portraits of unidentified personages, dating from the first to the sixth centuries. With only a few exceptions, all the material presented in the book is in Turkish museums and museum-depots and was not easily accessible until now. It covers a crucial historical period and a central geographical area. . . . The portrait gradually becomes an icon and Christian ascetic views destroy from within the ancient and proud Roman humanism. Every historian of ideas will enjoy following this process through the pages of this beautifully illustrated book."

TLS p12 Ja 5 '67 370w

INGE, M. THOMAS, ed. High times and hard times. See Harris, G. W.

INGRES, JEAN AUGUSTE DOMINIQUE. Ingres centennial exhibition, 1867-1967; drawings water-colors, and oil sketches from American collections, Fogg art museum, Harvard university, February 12-April 9, 1967 [catalogue by Agnes Mongan and Hans Naef]. 257p $17.50 N.Y. graphic

741.59

67-18321

"In her 10-page introduction, Miss Mongan gives . . . biographical material with a brief history of previous Ingres exhibitions. For each entry the . . . catalog notes written in collaboration with Dr. Naef note size, condition, provenance, bibliography, reproductions, exhibitions, and . . . biographical data on Ingres's relationship to the sitter." (Library J)

Choice 4:975 N '67 90w

"Although opinions vary over the quality of Ingres's paintings, most critics agree that the artist was a master of linear design. The introduction and catalog notes reflect a more sympathetic view of his personality than is generally the case in other works. Both Dr. Naef and Miss Mongan are recognized authorities on Ingres. . . . The illustrations are superb. The technical appendix will be of special interest to scholars because it presents for the first time an analysis of the materials and techniques Ingres employed to resolve some representational problems. Indispensable for specialized libraries." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 92:2391 Je 15 '67 180w

"In her Introduction to the admirably produced catalogue of superlative drawings shown at Harvard, Miss Agnes Mongan writes that 'one has only to turn these pages to know which sitters appealed to the artist, and which bored him. He did not, perhaps he could not, mask his feelings.' . . . [This catalogue is] of excellent quality and will be [an] essential tool for the study and appreciation of this enigmatic artist." Francis Haskell
N Y Rev of Books 11:7 J1 11 '68 550w

INMAN, JACK. Floral art in the church; phot. by Richard T. Lee. 192p il col il $6.95 Abingdon 745.92 Flower arrangement 68-22199

This is a guide to "the creative use of flowers and their symbolism throughout the Christian year for Protestant churches. . . . [It contains] information on planning for the use of flowers in church and the care of equipment, [and a] table of the days on which Easter and other days dependent upon it will fall . . . from 1968 to 2000. . . . The major part of the book contains illustrations of flower arrangements and details for each Sunday's colors, symbolism, and so on." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The author makes a serious attempt to relate his flowers to the church's themes. Suffering for righteousness' sake naturally suggests thorns, etc. All in all, a restrained, chaste, well illustrated volume."

Christian Century 85:1144 S 11 '68 70w

Reviewed by Ruth Dorman
Library J 93:3010 S 1 '68 100w

INOUE, DANIEL K. Journey to Washington [by] Daniel K. Inouye with Lawrence Elliott. 297p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 67-18918

The life of the present Democratic senator from Hawaii.

"A rather bland autobiography of the first Japanese-American to be elected to Congress. . . . Of some interest as a simply told, human document, but not recommended as a contribution to the literature of political science."

Choice 5:1222 N '68 70w

"A dramatic spellbinding, enthusiasm-evoking story of [the author's] rise from a boyhood in the Hawaiian slums to become the first man of oriental descent to sit in the United States Senate. He tells of his instant involvement in rescue work after Pearl Harbor, . . . the heroic record of the 442nd Combat Team in the Italian Campaign, the advancement from private to captain, his long rehabilitation after severe wounds, his entry into Hawaiian politics, and the reorganization of the Democratic party. . . . Senator Inouye's fierce Americanism is based on a consummate faith in democracy regardless of race or religion. It is backed by unflinching integrity and supreme courage in war or in peace. This splendid biography calls for superlatives. Highly recommended for public libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 92:1826 My 1 '67 80w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita
Library J 92:4276 N 15 '67 50w [YA]

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION FOR A HISTORY OF THE SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL DEVELOPMENT OF MANKIND. History of mankind, v6. See History of mankind

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE USE OF LSD IN PSYCHOTHERAPY AND ALCOHOLISM. 2d, AMITYVILLE, NEW YORK, 1965. The use of LSD in psychotherapy and alcoholism. See Abramson, H. A., ed.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON WORLD POLITICS. 5th, NOORDWIJK, NETHERLANDS, 1965. Eastern Europe in transition [papers; pub. in coop. with the Inst. for Sino-Soviet studies, the George Washington Univ] ed. by Kurt London. 364p $8.95; pa $3.95 Johns Hopkins press

320.947 Europe, Eastern—Politics 66-24409

"The introduction discusses the salient majority and minority opinions that were expressed at the meeting. . . . Nationalism and polycentrism are the two main themes. . . . The authors discuss the effects and counter-effects of those two themes in the fields of trade, religion, minority problems, politics, the Warsaw Pact, the Sino-Soviet dispute, and East-West relations." (Library J)

"No representatives of Eastern Europe were included [in the conferences] or, at least, no papers by Eastern Europeans were published. Hence, this is the Western assessment of recent developments in Eastern Europe. The editor's introduction provides the crux of the discussion and summarizes the views held by the 'majority' and the 'minority' at the conference. There is nothing startling about their assessment of the East European 'transformation' for those who have followed recent events closely, except that they do it with the authority that the scholarly reputation of the contributors commands. . . . The majority stresses the ethnic and other clashes among the peoples of Eastern Europe, . . . and the minority insists that new values have emerged and that 'there has been some progress in ethnic relations.' . . . The contributions are adequately documented and ably presented. . . . A first-rate book." W. S. Vucinich

Am Hist R 73:539 D '67 420w

Reviewed by Carl Beck

Am Pol Sci R 62:289 Mr '68 450w

"Students of East European affairs will find this well-documented analytic work a very useful companion to Eastern Europe in the Sixties [BRD 1964], which was edited by Stephen Fischer-Galati, a contributor to the present work. . . . Textual discussion is well illustrated by a number of useful tables. Recommended for libraries generally." A. S. Birkos

Library J 91:6093 D 15 '66 170w

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF BYZANTINE STUDIES, 13th, OXFORD, 1966. Proceedings, 5-10 September, 1966; ed. by J. M. Hussey [and others]. 495p il pl maps $22.40 Oxford

949.501 Byzantine Empire [67-106222]

"Collected in this volume are the texts of the fourteen main papers and twenty-six supplementary papers read at the Congress. . . . [The dominant themes] were the Byzantine Empire in the eleventh century and the relations between Byzantium and its neighbours on the north and east. . . . Other papers are concerned with Byzantine music, miniature and icon painting (by K. Weitzmann, illustrated with 42 plates), architecture and the minor arts, Byzantine Greek language and literature, coinage and hagiography as source materials; and there are five short reports entitled Instrumenta Studiorum." (Engl Hist R)

"These forty papers are all well-documented, scholarly contributions, undoubtedly worth publishing. There were, however, many more papers, all presented in the various sections of the congress, but the British National Committee and the editors of the Proceedings did not find it possible to publish them. This is regrettable since many of these papers were quite as important as the 'main' ones. Had they been published, they would have given the readers a complete picture of the extensive and versatile achievements of the congress. . . . The addresses delivered at the opening and closing sessions of the congress and, at the end, brief notices on major research and publication projects now under way [are included here]." G. G. Arnakis

Am Hist R 73:1492 Je '68 550w

"Less than one-third of the papers were . . . presented in the English language. . . . The main paper delivered by N. Svoronos subjects the symptoms of the malaise which enfeebled the empire to a new and penetrating analysis. . . . The main paper by P. Charanis on 'The Demography of the Byzantine Empire' is well-annotated but cautiously inconclusive investigation of the meagre evidence for the population of the empire and its cities at various periods. . . . C. Toumanoff's main paper on 'The Background to Mantzikert' throws unexpectedly new light on the causes of the great Byzantine military defeat of 1071. . . . His remarks on the impact of Caucasian ideas of hereditary nobility on the supposedly non-hereditary structure of the Byzantine aristocracy . . . are particularly suggestive. . . . This volume is a handsome advertisement for the devoted labour of its editors and of the organizers of the Congress." D. M. Nicol

Engl Hist R 83:339 Ap '68 1350w

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION.

Capital movements and economic development; proceedings of a conf. held by the Int. economic association; ed. by John H. Adler with the assistance of Paul W. Kuznets. 497p $12.50 St Martins

332.67 Capital. Economic policy. Economic conditions 67-13679

"Part I, 'The Historical Record,' contains papers by Brinley Thomas, Matthew Simon, [A.] M. Kamarek, Saburo Okita, P. Rosenstein-Rodan and Felipe Pazos; Part II, . . . The Resources Aspects, [has] contributions from Alexandre Kafka, Ravi Gulhati, Hollis B. Chenery, I. G. Patel, Mahbub ul Haq and H. Onitiri; in Part III the monetary aspects are considered by A. J. Brown, Rudolf R. Rhomburg, R. A. Mundel and Javier Marquez." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The contents of the papers in Part II, on contemporary foreign aid experience, are heterogeneous for the reason that they are pre-occupied with the evaluation of the imperfections of current institutions of foreign aid from diverse viewpoints. . . . With respect to the whole book . . . the message conveyed by the Historical Record (Part I) is clear, straightforward, and meaningful. In other parts (II and III) the book is still useful since it aptly conveys the feelings of frustration on the part of economists who attempted to analyze the birth of the new patterns for [international capital movements] after the second World War, without the benefit of retrospective detachment." J. C. H. Fei

Am Econ R 58:613 Je '68 2100w

"With few exceptions, the essays are of high professional caliber and suggestive. The selections are balanced between the theoretical and analytically descriptive, and despite the sizeable proportion of international civil servants among the contributors, most of the essays are not policy oriented. Each essay is followed by a one-author comment and a brief discussion by the proceedings' participants. . . . The volume does not necessarily make a breakthrough in this subject, but it surveys the field very adequately."

Choice 5:98 Mr '68 160w

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION.

The economic problems of housing; proceedings of a conference held by the International economic association; ed. by Adela Adam Nevitt; with an introd. by Sherman J. Maisel. 328p $10 St Martins

301.5 Housing 67-13167

"Nineteen papers on the economics of housing comprise the core of this volume. The authors are economists and planners; . . . their essays represent the diverse concerns and approaches of both developed and developing countries. A number of the contributions are addressed to problems of theoretical economic analysis, but most consider policy problems and goals. Two Danish economists present a . . . quantitative historical study of the Copenhagen housing market, 1880-1940; Czech, Polish, and Soviet participants offer . . . data on housing policy and markets under their political systems; and both the Israeli and African experiences with housing plans are considered." (Choice) Index.

"Students of international housing policy will find much of interest in [these] proceedings. . . . The papers, supplemented . . . by a skillfully prepared 'Summary Record of the Debate' . . . present a valuable current overview of housing problems and policies in Eastern European countries in comparison with Western European countries and with those of Israel, the United States, and Africa. . . . The editor and other participants argue effectively that rent control and housing policies generally are inefficient methods of achieving goals of redistribution of income and that the most efficient allocation of resources will be achieved through price determination in a market system. No better evidence of the value of this and of similar international economic conferences could be cited than is afforded by the contrasting statements from economists in neighboring socialistic countries." P. F. Wendt

Am Econ R 58:636 Je '68 950w

"Discussions among participants expose one of the volume's weaknesses (probably inevitable)—diffuseness and inconsistency in treatment of the basic problems that properly are part of the 'political economy of housing.' The difficulty of systematic cross-national comparison quickly becomes evident, and certainly it is not solved here. Recommended for libraries in institutions maintaining strong collections in economics and welfare policy."

Choice 5:836 S '68 190w

INTERNATIONAL encyclopedia of the social sciences; David L. Sims, editor. 17v il $495 Macmillan (N Y)

300 Social sciences—Dictionaries. Encyclopedias and dictionaries 68-10023

This encyclopedia "was designed 'to complement, not to supplant its predecessor, the Encyclopaedia of the Social Sciences [BRD 1930-1935]. . . . Most of the topical articles are addressed to concepts, theories and methods in 10 fields of study: anthropology, economics, geography, history, law, political science, psychiatry, psychology, sociology and statistics. . . . Biographical articles include about 600 items on persons dead or born before 1890. . . . Each article . . . is supplemented by . . . bibliographies." (Choice)

Reviewed by George Rosen

Am J Pub Health 58:1782 S '68 750w

"The print, charts, statistical tables, the paper, . . . binding (volumes lie flat when opened) are very handsome and are durable enough to take several years of daily use and abuse in . . . library reference rooms. . . . The IESS not only factually supersedes the ESS, but introduces in every social science discipline new standards of conceptualization, better structured arguments and higher semantic precision than its predecessor. . . . Minor caveats notwithstanding, the IESS represents the most significant publishing event in the field of social sciences in the last 25 years. It fills a keenly felt need . . . for a truly modern synthesis of all important scholarly achievements in . . . contemporary social science. . . . [This] set will remain a valuable and indispensable research tool for some time to come."

Choice 5:603 Jl '68 1550w

"Instead of thousands of brief items [the editors] chose hundreds of longish articles in order to give depth to the main ideas in the social sciences. All articles are signed, which is helpful in fields where the presuppositions of authors play such a significant part. The result is a 9,000-page . . . series with large pages, large print, reasonable margins, and typographical materials designed for pleasant reading. . . . For the most part these books are devoted to the disciplines developed during the past two centuries to help account for life in the industrial age and to look back on the primitive societies that were being displaced. . . . Readers will find good reason to consult it frequently and with a sense of trust in its accuracy and fairness. It belongs in school, public and church libraries." M. E. Marty

Christian Century 85:1216 S 25 '68 1550w

"Some articles are overly long and repetitious; others are far too skimpy and have little to say that is worthwhile. . . . Again and again, one discovers that material which ought to have been collected under one major entry is dispersed among other articles. . . . Despite the presence of excellent articles . . . there is little doubt that the older encyclopedia had more breadth and depth than the present work. . . . At the same time . . . the new set contains many useful items which discuss developments that were unknown in earlier decades. . . . The technical articles are quite good but the more general entries are simply inferior. . . . [The present work] conspicuously fails to do justice to the humanist outlook. . . . [The typical entry] reveals a distressing mindlessness and lack of sensibility. The work as a whole, moreover, can only serve further to alienate the layman from the social scientist." B. B. Seligman

Commentary 46:76 O '68 4000w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:58 N 16 '68 320w

IONESCO, EUGÈNE. Fragments of a journal; tr. by Jean Stewart. 150p $5 Grove

848 68-22009

"A collection of thoughts, memories, and dreams given coherence and unity by the intensity of their underlying purpose, which Ionesco describes as 'an exploration through the tangled impenetrable forest in search of myself, in search too, of an answer to the most unanswerable questions about life and death.' The reality of Eugene Ionesco's life is ruled by dreams. In this recent journal he relates his dreams ■ though they were stories . . . illustrating the horror and beauty of life and the inevitable slide toward death." (Publisher's note) Originally published 1967 under the title Journal en Miettes.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:150 O '68 70w

Reviewed by John Simon
Book World p3 O 6 '68 800w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Christian Science Monitor p9 O 16 '68 850w

"This is a series of impressions, dream fragments, and philosophical reflections by an important contemporary writer. . . . Here, six pages of dialogue fragments not used in the final version of Exit the King illustrate Ionesco's use in drama of a mortality that cripples and twists the human spirit. His book is recommended to large and medium-sized collections as a compelling insight into a major dramatist's work." Patricia Stiles

Library J 93:3551 O 1 '68 120w

"Ionesco, like most diarists, is usually morose. Parts of his journal seem to have been written while undergoing 'cures' in Switzerland, on the sort of diet which would make anyone feel low. The hotel in which the 'patients' live is a crude commercial proposition, the doctors are charlatans, Ionesco's ■ fool to be there. But it gives him an image of life as a 'cure' for dying. . . . The journal is repetitive, obsessive, often rather boring, certainly slow-going, and absolutely fascinating for anyone who agrees that to achieve understanding or 'communion' one must immerse oneself in a writer's 'innermost depths'. . . . [However] those who get apoplectic 'when Karl Marx is called 'a slightly inferior Taine', or when they read that 'all committed writers seek to violate you', should keep away. Ionesco is absolutely committed against commitment." Julian Mitchell

New Statesman 75:418 Mr 29 '68 750w

"[This collection of writings by] the celebrated playwright of the absurd . . . is strongly reminiscent of his play Rhinoceros, which suggests that there is nothing as real as a dream. Ionesco hangs on to his own dreams with desperate tenacity. He confides the matter of them but resists having their concreteness undermined by explanations. . . . Using the banalities of daily conversation, Ionesco successfully captures an illusive-sense of life's strangeness. It is when he tries to examine his own estrangement that he becomes a confused prisoner of himself. . . . On the stage, with the forgetful dreamer shaped by Ionesco's sharp sense of the absurd, the predicament might be painfully funny. But on the page, with the writer as a troubled man snarled in the neurotic roots of his art, the situation is painfully embarrassing. It would be convenient if Ionesco were not such a compelling case of what Nietzsche, that specialist in soul diseases, diagnosed as an allergy to oneself."

Time 92:98 S 6 '68 420w

IONESCU, GHITA. The politics of the European communist states. 303p $6.75 Praeger

320.947 Europe, Eastern—Politics 67-24682

The author "analyzes and interprets political power structures in Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Poland, Rumania, and Yugoslavia. By examining numerous original and secondary sources he determines that the power in these countries is vested mainly in their Communist parties, or the Apparats. The Apparats, however, is influenced by various forces, such as political police, army, trade unions, and local administration. [The author attempts to show that] the party is also not immune to public opinion, which manifests itself through church, universities, publications, and even some individuals. [He concludes that] toleration of some dissent is possible." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of names. Index of subjects.

Reviewed by R. A. Rupen
Am Pol Sci R 62:663 Je '68 950w
Choice 5:556 Je '68 200w

"The author's approach is factual and analytical, not propagandist, either overtly or by implication. He rejects the over-simplified idea of the monolithic communist state, showing that in eastern Europe . . . power never was monolithic and in recent times has become increasingly pluralised. . . . Although [Ionescu] is apt to use the in-jargon of modern political science the book is clearly set out and written, and has value for the general reader ■ well as for the specialist. It puts into perspective a great deal of information about eastern Europe, and shows its meaning."

Economist 226:54 Mr 16 '68 550w

"Ionescu, formerly Rumanian economic counsellor, now a Nuffield Fellow at the London School of Economics . . . draws the conclusion that in the long run the East European states will become more European than Communist. The present informative study should appeal to students of international relations, to political scientists, and to interested readers." Victor Novak

Library J 93:195 Ja 15 '68 180w

"The author of this stimulating and basically optimistic book . . . [examines the extent to which] opposition exists in the seven east European communist states. . . . [He opposes] the view nurtured by official propaganda, that the internal structures of these countries remain largely monolithic. . . . The book distinguishes between political opposition which is 'institutionalized' in opposition parties, as in the west, and opposition which is 'reduced to inferior forms'. . . . Ionescu has little difficulty in providing chapter and verse for [his] contentions, particularly in what is perhaps the most interesting section of the book, that devoted to manifestations of dissent in communist countries. There is an interesting reference to the reemergence of public opinion in these countries. . . . He argues that all communist parties in Europe are now eager to use the way of consultation and collaboration in running their affairs and this is an 'irreversible trend'. . . . [He] gives cogent reasons for this contention."

TLS p831 S 21 '67 800w

IONS, EDMUND S. The politics of John F. Kennedy. 228p $5 Barnes & Noble

973.922 Kennedy, John Fitzgerald. U.S.—Politics and government—1961- 68-1339

"Aspects of the President's life which Mr. Ions covers include the years preceeding his election, his style in Washington, and the Presidential office." (Library J)

"The organization of [the] material is both topical and chronological, although neither is particularly well done. The introductions to the seven sections tell the reader very little; there are no illustrations, and the index is much too brief. In short, this is a rather weak book."

Choice 5:681 Jl '68 150w

"[The author,] a lecturer in politics at the University of York, has not neglected John Kennedy's failings and has included in his book three interesting appraisals of the Kennedy regime. . . . Congratulations to Mr Ions. This slim volume is far from being the collected speeches of John F. Kennedy. Such speeches as are printed here have been chosen with care. So have been the legislative messages to Congress and various articles written by political journalists. The whole is woven together by the author with skill and concision. It adds up to a most useful handbook to the late President's thought and incidentally but perhaps inevitably, a memorial to his personal style."

Economist 225:1061 D 9 '67 400w

"[This book] is somewhat misleading. It is a cursory history of some aspects of the life of the late President rather than a historical investigation of [his] political programs and aims. . . . [It] is composed largely of extracts of speeches by the President and other authors commenting on him. . . . [While Mr. Ions's] attempt to treat his subject objectively is apparent he does show considerable bias in favor of President Kennedy. . . . As a survey of President Kennedy as ■ man the book is interesting." J. M. Christ

Library J 93:1908 My 1 '68 220w

IPSIROGLU, M. S. Painting and culture of the Mongols [tr. with an introd. by E. D. Phillips]. 112p 18il 36col il $12.50 Abrams

759.517 Painting, Mongolian. Illumination of books and manuscripts 66-26608

This book is based on "four albums of 14th-Century Mongol painting located in the Topkapu Saray Library in Istanbul. . . . The works are divided and described according to types such as heroic epics, illustrations of literary works, and demons." (Library J) Originally published as Malerei der Mongolen.

"Ipsiroglu's descriptions and interpretation, occasionally awkward in translation, are sharp and insightful. . . . The book concentrates on the paintings of which 36 are in color, many whole page, and 18 in monochrome plates. The quality is high. Notes on the illustrations and on the text end the book, which lacks an index." Choice 4:1111 D '67 140w

IPSIROGLU, M. S.—Continued

"Professor Ipsiroglu of the University of Istanbul, an authority on Near Eastern art, . . . includes a concise social history of the Mongols that affords a much needed foundation for a better understanding of their dynamic paintings. . . . The plates are abundant and are all of excellent quality. Although this book is a survey, it is nevertheless highly recommended for special libraries." Jacqueline Slisson

Library J 92:2147 Je 1 '67 170w

IRION, MARY JEAN. From the ashes of Christianity; a post-Christian view. 191p $4.95; pa $2.25 Lippincott

230 Radical theology

68-12484

"Christianity has been dead for 100 years, of course, but it was a great religion. And, like the fabulous phoenix which regenerated itself, Christianity is rising from its burned-out ashes and resurrecting itself as a dynamic post-Christian faith which is naturalistic, humanistic, poetic, contemporary, useful, and inspirational to civilized man. With this thesis, [the author,] a contributor to such magazines as the Christian Century and McCall's, surveys the life and death of Christianity. She measures the contributions not only of Newton, Luther, and Galileo but also of Kierkegaard, Schweitzer, Tillich, Bonhoeffer, Bultmann, Altizer, Hamilton and others." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Mary Jean Irion is a marvelously gifted writer, at once poetic and clear, who moves in a thought-world somewhere to the left of Paul van Buren. She wants to sweep the post-Christian landscape of vestiges of theism, Jesusism, supernaturalism; at the same time she wants agape and a 'beloved community' of sorts. A bit too ready to dismiss great theologians who are not quite 'with it' from her point of view, she does spell out implications of radical theology in ways that its inventors did not."

Christian Century 85:405 Mr 27 '68 120w

"Irion writes with admirable lucidity and enviable style. Moreover, her impressive erudition permits her to sweep comfortably over 20 centuries of Western experience. But in spite of these assets, [this] is a seriously flawed work. . . . The author is not content with the radical theology of a William Hamilton, because Hamilton can give no 'logical reasons' for his faith in the normativeness of Jesus, who thus becomes another god. Yet surely it is inaccurate to say that Mrs. Irion goes 'beyond' Hamilton. Theologically she is to Hamilton's left, but historically her almost unlimited confidence in the omniscience of reason is more nearly kin to the 18th century than to the 20th. It is not clear to me, in the end, that she is saying very much more than midwestern Unitarians have been saying for a very long time. [Furthermore,] metaphysical issue [cannot] be settled by historical argument. . . . In addition to methodological defects, this book contains doubtful historical judgments and Procrustean adjustments." L. J. Averill

Christian Century 85:788 Je 12 '68 650w

"[The author's] concern here is that neo-Christianity [which she describes] will succeed, and she treats her subject with tender faith. Such a provocative view puts her in the Protestant avant garde; old-line Christians are sure to object despite indications that her predictions and hopes will have a new generation's support. Highly recommended as a refreshing and piquant addition to balance any religion section."

W. A. Smith

Library J 93:756 F 15 '68 190w

IRIYE, AKIRA. Across the Pacific; an inner history of American-East Asian relations; introd. by John K. Fairbank. 361p $8.50 Harcourt 327 U.S.—Relations (general) with China.

China—Relations (general) with the U.S.
U.S.—Relations (general) with Japan. Japan —Relations (general) with the U.S.

67-19202

A Japanese-born, American educated professor "analyzes the events of the last century involving the United States, China, and Japan in terms of the changing image each country has formed of the other [maintaining that] distortions, misconceptions, and logical inconsistencies have played important roles in the shifting relations of the three nations from their first contacts [in the 18th century] to the present. . . . [Based on] American, Japanese, and Chinese material." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by H. M. Vinacke

Am Hist R 73:1473 Je '68 410w

"Iriye's fresh approach to trans-Pacific international relations produces a flood of new perceptions or at least interesting new questions that deserve further thought and study. . . . Analysis of international relations through national images is a tricky matter but is vastly important. . . . Iriye has his blind spots, but his book is full of important insights that should help us all to achieve a little clearer understanding of America's relations with China and Japan." E. O. Reischauer

Book World p3 D 17 '67 800w

"One of the most important books ever published on U.S.—Asian relations. . . . It is broader than . . . [E.] Reischauer's United States and Japan [BRD 1965], infinitely deeper than [A.] Griswold's Far Eastern Policy of the United States [BRD 1939]. There are no comparable books for explanation of U.S.—Japanese-Chinese reactions to each other. . . . Good index, trilingual bibliography (mostly titles in English). This will be required reading for students of Asian and U.S. diplomacy, and it will interest the general public who seek an understanding of cold war. Most libraries should order multiple copies."

Choice 5:1041 O '68 170w

"[Iriye's] English is effortless and well defined. He is unusually objective in his study of national attitudes and presents new and unusual estimates of men and events. Although he assumes that his reader has considerable knowledge of the history of the period, his audience should not be limited to specialists because this subject is of wide interest and [his] approach is novel and stimulating." Muriel Weins

Library J 92:3648 O 15 '67 160w

Reviewed by F. C. Jones

Pacific Affairs 41:417 fall '68 190w

IRVING, DAVID. The German atomic bomb; the history of nuclear research in Nazi Germany. 329p il maps $6.95 Simon & Schuster

539.7 Atomic bomb—Research. Atomic energy—Research. Atomic bomb—History 68-11012

The author discusses "how the Germans, who started the atomic bomb race with Otto Hahn's discovery of uranium fission, fell hopelessly behind the English and Americans because of bickering among scientists and administrators and because of Allied bombing raids and espionage." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 28:38 Ap 15 '68 850w

"Irving's account cannot be praised too highly. Those readers who might be lost by the scientific aspects that he relates in great detail will still find [this] a fascinating and rewarding story. In fact, his harrowing tale of the Allied commando raids on the Germans' heavy-water plant in Norway stands out as one of the great stories of World War II, and by itself justifies a reading of this valuable book." D. S. Greenberg

Book World p3 My 5 '68 1050w

Reviewed by Eugene Rabinowitch

Bul Atomic Sci 24:32 Je '68 2350w

Reviewed by Werner Heisenberg

Bul Atomic Sci 24:34 Je '68 1350w

"For anyone, but especially for the readers who have some technical knowledge in the field of atomic sciences, Irving's [book] provides fascinating reading, and a wealth of valuable information as presented in the records. But for an understanding of the psychological situation under which Germany's atomic research was carried out during the last war, and probably also for the understanding of the motivations of Allied countermeasures, the book does not provide a satisfactory background." H. E. Suess

Bul Atomic Sci 24:36 Je '68 3700w

Choice 5:983 O '68 210w

Reviewed by R. C. Cowen

Christian Science Monitor p8 My 11 '68 360w

"A serious, thorough history of the entire German nuclear project. . . . Although Mr. Irving never sensationalizes, the inherent drama of his topic makes exciting reading. . . . Through diligent study of available sources and a judicious use of them. Mr. Irving has written an excellent history of an episode in modern science. Recommended very highly for public and academic libraries where it will appeal to the specialist and informed layman." J. W. Weigel

Library J 93:1910 My 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Collin Clark
Library J 93:2135 My 15 '68 90w [YA]

Reviewed by A. M. Weinberg
N Y Times Bk R p12 J1 21 '68 1000w
New Yorker 44:114 Je 15 '68 260w
Newsweek 71:108 Ap 15 '68 700w

"[The possible explanations the author enumerates for the German failure] are offered without evaluation of their relative importance and without the historical detail that would make independent judgments possible. The book is lightly documented with a general summary of sources, which gives no clue to the significance or reliability of a particular quotation. Yet [it] also falls short as a popular narrative since it offers no coherent message and, except in a few places, little excitement or tension. There is a wealth of new information here, and the difficult task of dealing with complex scientific problems is handled superbly. But broader political and social issues are lost sight of. . . . [This] is a workmanlike job. . . . But the definitive history of Nazi Germany's attempt to develop an atomic bomb has yet to be written."

E. B. Skolnikoff

Sat R 51:44 Ap 13 '68 1200w

Reviewed by W. F. Libby
Science 160:175 Ap 12 '68 600w
Time 91:98B Ap 12 '68 650w

IRVING, EDWARD B. A reading of Beowulf [by] Edward B. Irving, Jr. 256p $6 Yale univ. press

829 Beowulf

68-13911

The "associate professor of English, University of Pennsylvania, uses close reading as an approach to Beowulf. . . . He discusses the heroic and the non-heroic (indeed monstrous), the hero and his opponents, various important scenes, the hero's death, and develops an analysis of the poet's integration of theme and rhetoric, grounded on an examination of diction and syntax." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"An excellent book, though not really original, nor a classic in the area of Beowulf studies. Irving avoids lengthy citations from other critics, and he neglects, except in one instance, the 'oral-formulaic' criticism of the work, all of which might have modified his interpretation. . . . Useful to graduate students."

Choice 5:623 J1 '68 50w

"The best scholarly literary studies are those which capture the current thinking on a text while opening at the same time some new questions; this book is just such a work, typical but seminal. . . . [Irving] has a slight tendency to overread, but always in matters on the peripheries of his thesis so that his argument is not thereby undercut. Translations of Old English quotations are provided, so that the book should prove useful to less advanced students. Recommended for college and university libraries." D. K. Fry

Library J 93:2006 My 15 '68 150w

Va Q R 44:cxvi summer '68 100w

IRVING, WASHINGTON. A tour on the prairies; with a pref. by James Playsted Wood and his commentary on the official report of the state of Indian affairs, 1834; ill. with etchings by Charles Bodmer and other artists of the period. 240p lib bdg $4.95 Pantheon bks. 917.66 Oklahoma—Description and travel. Indians of North America—Oklahoma. 67-23707

This is a new edition of the author's "report of his travels in 1832 through the prairies of the United States some eight hundred miles west from St. Louis." (Best Sell) The text of this work is taken from the author's revised edition of the Crayon Miscellany as it appears in The Works of Washington Irving (Kinderhook Edition, 1865).

"Wood writes a perceptive Preface to this new edition. . . . The sharply observant eye of Irving makes clear and immediate the lands he traveled at that time, great empty spaces inhabited by Indians, the treatment of whom by the United States was at times shockingly brutal. An excellent book that will charm every young reader—and older readers too."

Best Sell 27:361 D 1 '67 100w

"The account of the experiences of the author of Rip Van Winkle and The Sketch Book in Indian Territory, which later became the state of Oklahoma. Lacking the immediacy of feeling found in The Oregon Trail of Parkman, [this book] remains a revelation of Irving's all-embracing interest in travel, and supplies a useful link in the realization of what the opening of the West meant in the lives of the settlers and the Indians."

Horn Bk 44:202 Ap '68 100w

Reviewed by Louise Spain

Library J 93:2738 J1 '68 120w

IRWIN, MICHAEL. Henry Fielding, the tentative realist. 147p $5 Oxford

823 Fielding, Henry

[67-99887]

Concerned with analyzing the novels Joseph Andrews, Tom Jones and Amelia, the author attempts to show "that Fielding was a didactic writer, a moralist, from the very beginning of his literary career. . . . No attempt is made here to evaluate the plays, the journalism or the minor narrative works. They are considered almost entirely for their illustration of tendencies in Fielding's writing which were to be important to his development as a novelist." (Pref) Index.

Choice 5:342 My '68 130w

"The first requirements of a work of scholarship or criticism is that it employs texts of the highest possible authority. . . . [The author] uses the Henley edition of Fielding throughout his study. . . . Textually it has no authority. . . . It is also a requirement of Mr. Irwin's work that it should take reasonable and comprehensive note of other works bearing on the subject. . . . [The book] betrays a vitiating ignorance in this respect. . . . Mr. Irwin gives little indication that he is engaged, let alone affectionately engaged, in the works under scrutiny."

TLS p985 O 19 '67 750w

"Mr. Irwin's way of writing may offend old-fashioned purists. Here will be found what Fowler termed vulgarisms. . . . It is not surprising that the author of a careful study, as this is, admires the writer whom he is studying. . . . [However] the careful analyses [Mr. Irwin] makes emphasize Fielding's limitations. . . . And some of the time I have the uneasy feeling that what are called Fielding's limitations are not limitations at all. . . . No one can quarrel with the [author's] statement that Fielding has often been misunderstood. . . . Even Mr. Irwin misunderstands Fielding at times. . . . [But] this is a very useful study. . . . [The many quotations] Mr. Irwin takes, understandably enough, from the Henley edition, since [it] is less bad than the other editions." F. W. Hilles

Yale R 57:278 D '67 1400w

ISAACS, NEIL D., ed. Tolkien and the critics; essays on J. R. R. Tolkien's The lord of the rings; ed. by Neil D. Isaacs and Rose A. Zimbardo. 296p $7.50 Univ. of Notre Dame press

823 Tolkien, John Ronald Reuel 68-20436

A collection of essays, some previously published, which explore many aspects of Tolkien's work. "Christian values, folklore, language, symbolism, fairy-tale approach, his created world, poetry, and his work as fiction." (Library J) Contributors include B. Raffel, M. Q. Kelly, C. S. Lewis, E. Fuller, W. H. Auden, R. Sale, P. M. Spacks and others. Indexes of names from Middle-Earth; Tolkien's critics, and Points of reference.

Choice 5:1132 N '68 140w

"Serious criticism of the writings of J. R. R. Tolkien is made more difficult because of the fanaticism of enthusiasts. . . . [However] the editors . . . make a good case for the permanent literary value of Tolkien's writings. They have gathered a significant group of essays. . . . In an interesting foreword the editors suggest further possibilities for critical exploration. The book is highly recommended for high school, public, college, and university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2659 J1 '68 80w

ISERLOH, ERWIN. The theses were not posted; Luther between reform and reformation [tr. by Jared Wicks] introd. by Martin E. Marty. 116p il $5.95 Beacon press

270.6 Luther, Martin 68-14706

"Iserloh, a Roman Catholic professor of church history at the University of Münster . . . argues that the cherished picture of Luther boldly challenging the established church by publicly posting his 95 theses on October 31, 1517, is a legend. . . . [He contends] that Luther was a responsible theologian and obedient churchman concerned about irresponsible pastoral practice. Thus it was the theological and pastoral failures of the bishops to whom Luther presented his theses that led to the divisive Reformation." (Choice) Originally published under the title Luther zwischen Reform und Reformation.

"This little book has sparked one of the most intense scholarly debates among church historians in the last decade. The intricate . . . arguments of this debate have not prevented it from spilling over to the popular press (e.g., Time and Der Spiegel). It is an essential work for those concerned with the history and theology of the Reformation."

Choice 5:792 S '68 200w

"Philip Melancthon in 1552 first popularized the generally accepted story of Martin Luther's defiant nailing of his 95 theses to the Wittenberg church doors. . . . Melancthon was not an eyewitness of the event. . . . [In this book, the author] points out imprecisions in Melancthon's early Luther memoirs. Luther himself seems to deny that he ever performed so rebellious an act. . . . Mr. Iserloh indicates that not earlier than January, 1518, the theses gained wide circulation through the publishing efforts of [friends]. . . . Bibliographic evidence is against their posting; in any case it was not university practice for a professor to post his own announcements of disputations on the church doors which served as academic bulletin boards. These are the main points of Mr. Iserloh's detailed arguments, which are still being debated. . . . Laymen may want to follow Martin Marty's advice [in the introduction] and skip the complicated indulgences background. But the volume makes a handy marshalling of evidence useful to students and general readers." Genevieve Kelly

Library J 93:1902 My 1 '68 330w

ISHII, MOMOKO. Issun Boshi, the Inchling; an old tale of Japan; retold; tr. by Yone Mizuta; il. by Fuku Akino. unpag. $3.50 Walker & co.

Fairy tales 67-23055

"Born to comfort a childless elderly couple, Inchling grew up and went to try his luck in the city, where he was hired to be a helper and companion to a beautiful princess. One day, using a needle for a sword, Inchling cleverly vanquished three horrible demons who were trying to kidnap the girl. Rewarded with a magic wish, the tiny creature became a handsome young man and married the lovely princess." (Horn Bk) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:182 N 10 '67 20w

Horn Bk 44:55 F '68 110w

"Ishii, noted Japanese writer of children's books, retells simply and effectively the adventures of . . . a character reminiscent of the Western Tom Thumb. . . . Climaxed by Issun Boshi's magical growth, the story provides vivid illustration of the idea that courage can increase one's stature. Delicately bright Japanese illustrations are an integral part of the story and add much to the book's merit." P. A. McKenzie

Library J 92:4604 D 15 '67 90w

"This may be a prize Japanese year in picture book publishing, because [this tale is] a delight. . . . [It is] translated into sensitive read-aloud English." Eve Merriam

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p71 N 5 '67 40w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:40 Ap 20 '68 60w

ISKRANT, ALBERT P. Accidents and homicide [by] Albert P. Iskrant [and] Paul V. Joliet. 202p $5 Harvard univ. press

312 Accidents. U.S.—Statistics 68-14259

"In this book, the authors identify the factors involved in the incidence of accidental injury and death and of homicide in the United States by an analysis of data from the National Center for Health Statistics obtained from mortality records and surveys. . . . [Details are] presented on motor-vehicle accidents and such other accidents as falls, misuse of firearms, and poisoning. Also discussed are injuries to the aged and to children and injuries suffered at work, home, school, and play. The monograph considers the epidemiology of accidents in terms of the interaction of host, agent, environment, and nature of injury. The chapter on homicide includes information on both victim and offender with regard to age, sex, race, socioeconomic background and status, and weapon." (Publisher's note) Index.

"An extremely useful source of information to those concerned with the many factors involved in the incidence of accidental injury and death and homicide in the United States. . . . Also brought together are selected accident mortality statistics not available from governmental agencies and information on a number of the increasingly popular avocations such as auto racing, hunting, mountain climbing, skin and scuba diving, and sport parachuting. . . . The section on socioeconomic factors is timely. . . . The nearly 60 pages in the Statistical Appendix will provide the researcher with much new working material. The index is adequate. In all it should be an excellent book to have for quick reference." J. V. Quint

Am J Pub Health 58:1296 J1 '68 250w

"Less than 10 percent of this brief book is devoted to homicide. The extent of accidents as a cause of death is highlighted. . . . Basically nonconceptual and nontheoretical in approach, the emphasis is placed on bringing together in one publication much diverse material on accidents. Iskrant and Joliet formerly served with the Division of Accident Prevention of the U.S. Public Health Service, and their volume will be primarily of interest to specialists in the field of accident prevention."

Choice 5:1331 D '68 130w

"This compact statistical study is the first of a projected series of a score of monographs using the 1960 census, the first detailed census of the U.S., to study the flashing blade of death cause by cause. . . . There is a brief comparison by countries, which is very curious."

Sci Am 219:138 J1 '68 480w

ISLE, WALTER. Experiments in form; Henry James's novels, 1896-1901. 251p $5.95 Harvard univ. press

823 James, Henry 67-27086

"Following an explanatory introduction and a chapter on 'The Early Nineties and the Drama,' . . . [the author] analyzes in separate chapters each of the five novels written between 1896 and 1901: The Other House, The Spoils of Poynton, What Maisie Knew, The Awkward Age, and The Sacred Fount." (Library J) Index.

"[Isle's] thesis is by no means startling, nor is its broader extension: that these novels are representative of many general developments from the 'Victorian' to the 'modern' novel. . . . His efforts to show the effects of James' experiences in the theater on his novels of the late 1890's are often rather commonplace, arbitrary, or vague. The book is strongest when he works himself reasonably free from his theories and engages himself closely with the details of James' novels. When compared with a recent study like [J.A.] Ward's The Search for Form [BRD 1968]. . . . Isle's book shows its relative thinness. . . . Though intelligent and to some extent original, Isle's study, finally, is rather disappointing."

Choice 5:1308 D '68 210w

"[The author] writes with an exhaustive knowledge of the progressive changes in James' entire method of writing . . . and his entire philosophy of the novel form. . . . This kind of intensive literary analysis requires closer scrutiny than any reader but the serious professional scholar may care to follow in detail, but for this limited audience the book provides an indispensable, though perhaps sometimes controversial study. Needed in all literature collections." F. N. Jones

Library J 92:4417 D 1 '67 160w

"By limiting his study to the period immediately after James's abandonment of his attempt to conquer the theatre, Mr. Isle has been able to show that in such novels as The Spoils of Poynton and The Awkward Age. . . . James was naturally influenced by his dramatic experiments. This kind of 'detailed, exegetical examination', as the blurb calls it, too often makes for what James himself . . . termed 'chaff in the mouth'. The critic is sound enough in his commentaries but less imaginative than many of his colleagues. . . . He never takes wing. . . . [We have] heard it all before, and sometimes in less pedestrian and less repetitive prose."

TLS p1070 S 26 '68 320w

ISRAEL, CHARLES E. Five ships West; the story of Magellan. 154p il maps $3.50; lib bdg $3.54 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92 Magellan, Ferdinand—Juvenile literature. Voyages around the world—Juvenile literature 66-11106

This biography of the Portuguese explorer begins "in 1519, when [he] set sail from Spain with five ships. Determined to prove . . . that the earth was round, Magellan was heading for the fabulous Spice Islands of the East by sailing west. Three years later, a single ship, manned by a skeleton crew, entered the harbor of Seville. Magellan was dead, but the expedition . . . had made the first voyage around the globe." (Publisher's note) Chronology of Magellan's life. "Grades five to six." (Library J)

Horn Bk 43:83 F '67 150w

"The background of Magellan's world is briefly but adequately described in this biography with a fair amount of dialogue and other fictional material. His early life is outlined, and as indicated in the title of the book, the expedition to find a paso to the Spice Islands by sailing west is the period most fully covered. Somewhat easier to read than [G.] Sanderlin's First Around the World [BRD 1965] . . . this will be suitable for poor readers as far up as junior high. A chronology is included but no index or bibliography." M. J. Klingerman

Library J 91:6192 D 15 '66 100w

"An adequate retelling of the story of Magellan's expedition, illustrated with steel engravings, wood engravings, photographs of paintings, anything which looks old. A young reader will excusably jump to the conclusion that these 'old-fashioned' illustrations are contemporary sixteenth-century; except in the case of one map, Collier-Macmillan do nothing to disabuse him of this idea."

TLS p1160 N 30 '67 70w

ISRAEL, F. L., ed. 1897 Sears Roebuck catalogue. See Sears, Roebuck and company

ISRAEL, FRED L., ed. Major peace treaties of modern history, 1648-1967; with an introd. essay by Arnold Toynbee; commentaries by Emanuel Chill. 4v maps col maps $110 Chelsea house pubs; McGraw

341.2 Treaties 67-27855

The arrangement of this collection "is chronological, in ten sections, beginning with the Treaty of Westphalia and ending with the Tashkent Peace Treaty between India and Pakistan in January 1966. Each section includes a commentary which forms a . . . perspective for the period covered." (Library J) Index to the complete work in volume four.

"[The] analytical introductions [to the ten sections of this compilation] present a synopsis of events surrounding the signing of the various treaty documents. They are succinct and well written, and they place in proper perspective the diplomatic history for the time periods represented by the treaties. . . . A selection of color maps [is] reprinted from Shepherd's Historical Atlas, 8th ed. [which] correspond to the time and events covered by the treaties. However, [their use is restricted because] there is no special map index; nor is there any reference to the maps in the general Index. . . . When no English-language document existed, a translation was made. . . . There are no citations to the sources from which the texts or translations of individual documents were taken; nor is there a bibliography which includes the titles of the series of state papers which the editors used. . . . [This] is an unfortunate oversight which does not serve the best interests of scholarship. . . . This set is produced in a physical format which will hold up under library reference use. . . . Despite the limitations of the index and the lack of bibliographic sources . . . [it] is recommended for purchase in college and university libraries and in large public libraries."

Booklist and S B B 65:553 F 1 '69 1600w

"Anyone who has had to search for the text of one of these treaties will be delighted by having the texts of so many readily available in good English translations. Seventeen treaties are here published in English for the first time. Emanuel Chill had written commentaries for each group of treaties . . . which are historical but should have been analytical. The introductory essay, 'Anarchy by Treaty, 1648-1967,' by Arnold Toynbee could have been omitted along with a series of uninteresting maps. Adequate index, but no bibliography. An essay on the works relating to these treaties would have been helpful. Despite these criticisms, every library should have this collection."

Choice 5:856 S '68 160w

"Without any reservation, this publication can be regarded as a landmark in its field. It is the first comprehensive collection of peace treaties in English and was carefully compiled after consulting scores of foreign and American state papers. . . . There are 28 colored maps to help clarify territorial changes. A conceptual and analytical index appears at the end of the fourth volume and the editor claims it to be 'the first such index in any language to the major peace documents in the last three centuries.' . . . Toynbee in his thoughtful introductory essay . . . surveys the power struggle behind the peace treaties. . . . This set should be in international law collections."

Kurt Schwerin

Library J 93:2229 Je 1 '68 260w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:46 My 18 '68 100w

J

JACKER, CORINNE. The black flag of anarchy; antistatism in the United States. 211p il $4.50 Scribner

335 Anarchism and anarchists—Juvenile literature 68-12518

After explaining anarchism and its general history, the author "discusses the great American anarchists, both violent and non-violent. . . . and, in particular, three events that affected American history: the Haymarket Affair, McKinley's assassination, and the case of Sacco and Vanzetti." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index. "Grade nine and up." (Best Sell)

"For many students this volume could clear up the cynical over-simplified explanation of anarchy. . . . Biographical vignettes give life to the work and accounts of people like Sacco and Vanzetti will hold the attention of the young reader. The volume seems to be well-researched and it will make a worth while addition to the school library."

Best Sell 28:113 Je 1 '68 100w [YA]

"This anecdotal survey underscores the [anarchist] philosophy's continuing, effective role in instigating church and state reforms through its critical rejection of authoritarian rules, while the internal contradictions of its extremes and its bloody active past are handily condensed. Relevant reading in history to hold restless attentions." L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:2122 My 15 '68 160w

JACKS, MAURICE, jt. auth. Aristotle: his thought and its relevance today. See Winn, C.

JACKSON, BRUCE, ed. The Negro and his folklore in nineteenth-century periodicals; ed. with an introd; pub. for the Am. folklore society. 374p $8.50 Univ. of Tex. press

398 Folklore, Negro 67-21894

A collection of "articles, letters, and reviews from . . . periodicals published between 1838 and 1900 and written by authors who range from ardent abolitionist to dedicated slaveholder. The articles reflect the authors' knowledge of, and attitudes toward, the Negro and his folklore. . . . In addition to his Introduction to the volume, [the editor] has prefaced each article with a commentary." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of authors, titles of articles, periodicals. Index of songs and verses.

"Over one-half of the articles deal with Negro music, while others describe his religion, superstitions, and dialect. In many cases, words and music are transcribed so that the book becomes a useful anthology of Negro folk songs. Among the chief interests in this volume is the changing viewpoint of the authors toward their black subjects. . . . Several notable contributors, e.g. Antonin Dvorak . . . and George Washington Cable, give the volume more than ordinary interest. The editors have done a good job in drawing together an unusual body of material from sources not readily available in smaller libraries. The format is in the excellent style one has come to expect from the University of Texas Press. Libraries interested in Negro folklore should also purchase The Myth of the Negro Past by M. Herskovits and the excellent study by B. A. Botkin, Lay My Burden Down (BRD 1945)."

JACKSON, BRUCE—Continued

Choice 5:834 S '68 240w

"What a splendid anthology this is! . . . The points of view of the writers of the essays are ignored; the values of the pieces are to be judged only on the basis of their contribution to folk knowledge. None is more interesting than Professor Crane's review of Joel Chandler Harris's Uncle Remus, His Songs & Sayings, which appeared in 1881, giving a summary of some of Harris's tales comparing these to variant, similar stories from Africa, and showing the diffusion of folk tales. This book will be valuable to all university collections and to popular libraries wherever an interest in Negro folklore prevails." Rice Estes

Library J 93:200 Ja 15 '68 170w

JACKSON, CARLTON. Presidential vetoes, 1792-1945. 254p $8 Univ. of Ga. press

353.03 Executive power—U.S. U.S.—Politics and government 67-17405

"This survey of the Presidential veto power from Washington through Franklin D. Roosevelt . . . illustrates . . . that most of the major bills which initially fell before a Presidential veto have ultimately become law. . . . The author examines the vetoes in various contexts—the growth of political parties, sectionalism, foreign policy, internal improvements, reform movements, and times of national peril." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Jackson has written a chronological history of presidential vetoes, presenting a paraphrase of each major veto message, a judgment of the underlying and the immediate reasons for it, a brief narrative of the congressional response, and a glance at public opinion on the controversy as reflected in the press. He has performed his task with evident craftsmanship, telling the story of the major vetoes in a clear, narrative style that gives the book continuity and readability and prevents it from being merely a compendium. . . . The author has maintained impartiality in handling material frequently charged with high emotion and has given the reader a fair though abbreviated statement of the position of the contesting parties in every important veto controversy. . . . [The book's] major flaw lies in too little use of the applicable literature of political science; its major service will be to provide a handy and readable reference book on an important aspect of the national government." P. S. Klein

Am Hist R 73:1238 Ap '68 600w

Reviewed by R. J. Kulisheck

Am Pol Sci R 62:628 Je '68 900w

"A basic reference work. . . . There is very little attempt to categorize or analyze. The book does not even contain a concluding chapter—and none is called for because Jackson sets himself the simple task of compiling factual accounts of important vetoes. It is regrettable, since the book has value only as a reference work, that the author does not go beyond 1945. He notes that 'Since Roosevelt, vetoes have rarely become the objects of great interest and controversy.' This unwarranted observation becomes a criterion for excluding the fascinating vetoes during the Truman Administration and all other vetoes during the Eisenhower, Kennedy, and Johnson Administrations. A very curious procedure, to say the least."

Choice 5:550 Je '68 130w

JACKSON, DON D., jr. auth. The mirages of marriage. See Lederer, W. J.*JACKSON, JACQUELINE. Chicken Ten Thousand; il. by Barbara Morrow. 31p $3.95 Little Poultry—Stories 68-15558

This is the "story of Chicken Ten Thousand hatched from an egg-hatcher along with 9999 others, who found life too monotonous in the hatchery. . . . One day when she was being sent to market, Little Ten Thousand escaped from her crate and explored the out-of-doors. She was soon the mother of 10 fluffy little chicks and 'in her chicken heart was content.' . . . Grades kindergarten to three." (Library J)

"Arousing victory for individualism over the machine age that ought to please the very young. The pictures, technically correct where necessary, are as fresh and funny as the story." Polly Goodwin

Book World p20 O 6 '68 130w

"Perhaps [this book's] appeal is rather more to adults than to children. . . . The language is poetic, which is why I found the book amusing. Children may take it more seriously. Both the story and Barbara Morrow's delicate illustrations leave no doubt as to the preferability of a natural (therefore more moral?) environment." S. B. Kupper

Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 7 '68 100w

"How [Little Ten Thousand] was accidentally saved from an ignominious end and found a life of natural fulfillment is told in a brief text that combines imaginative storytelling with many edifying details of modern chicken husbandry. Excellent drawings reflect the moods and action of the story." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 44:553 O '68 110w

Reviewed by Agnes Gregory

Library J 93:3290 S 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:42 Ag 24 '68 120w

JACKSON, JACQUELINE. Missing Melinda; by C. Gibbs and O. Gibbs; il. by Irene Burns. 142p $3.95 Little 67-19800

"The very day that the Gibbs family moves into the antique-filled house which they have just inherited, the twins [Cordelia and Ophelia] find a lovely, old-fashioned doll in the attic. The twins name her Melinda and take her for a walk in the park, but, while they are climbing a tree, Melinda, left below disappears. And thus begins a . . . mystery story, in which the girls find out that antique dolls can be very valuable, that old dolls can be repaired in doll hospitals, and that some collectors will even steal to get a coveted item for their collections. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Exciting, modern; with much data on old dolls, many Shakespearean tags, and a lot of casual mentioning of juvenile book characters." Ethna Sheehan

America 117:516 N 4 '67 100w

"It [is] obvious that Mrs. Jackson stays close to children and has a fine ear for their conversation. She reproduces it here in a lively dialogue between twin sisters . . . who write alternate chapters, thereby allowing Mrs. Jackson to fill us in on each girl's character. This is definitely a book for female 8-12's—it would be hard to get boys enthused about a lost doll. A pity as this is as good a mystery as many they might read." P. M. D.

Christian Science Monitor pB15 N 2 '67 100w

Horn Bk 44:177 Ap '68 300w

Reviewed by S. L. Kennerly

Library J 92:4269 N 15 '67 100w

JACKSON, JESSE. Tessie; pictures by Harold James. 243p $4.95; to libs & schools $4.43 Harper 67-20586

"A ninth-grader from Harlem wins an ivy-clad scholarship and runs the gantlet of her first year in a mythical private school named Hobbe. Tessie Downs is challenged and sometimes confounded by the warring demands of old and new loyalties, although she has scored some tentative victories by term's end. . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 28:154 J1 1 '68 80w

"Although it is unlikely that Tessie's first day at Hobbe could have happened as it did, the author writes compassionately of a girl's struggle to face a strange world and be true to herself." J. H. Clarke

Book World p34 (children's issue)
My 5 '68 200w

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry
Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 13 '68 120w

"A maddeningly cheery and superficial novel about the trials of a Harlem ninth-grader who goes to a 'good' school on a scholarship. It is worth having for its readability and a peg for discussion—not much more." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:306 My 24 '68 30w
Horn Bk 44:430 Ag '68 240w

"The story chiefly concerns [Tessie's] . . . cross pressures: to win acceptance by Hobbe students without having her Harlem friends feel she has changed. The author handles this basic conflict in such confused and unconvincing ways that the end product is almost a hymn to the rather prevalent notion, more challenged now than ever before, that most Negroes want one thing out of life: to be white and middle-class. . . . Readers will inevitably be left with the unfortunate impression that Tessie, her verbal protestations to the contrary, has chosen the world of Hobbe and that it is the best of all possible worlds." Doris Innis

Library J 93:3983 O 15 '68 300w

"[Tessie's] conflict is so dense with implications for all of us, so absorbing in itself, that pages turn willy-nilly. All the same, the book is a barely passable effort to bridge communication gaps between the races, the generations or the sexes. One embarrassment is the author's assumption that black ritual and idiom never leak from the inner city. . . . This is bloodless drawing-room tragicomedy. . . . Miscegenation is dismissed at the outset as a potentiality, although Hobbe is coeducational and almost lily-white. Tessie scoffs at the thought of any love other than her soul-buddy, Jimmy, and thinks that 'the question only showed how little her parents understood.' The author seems to agree with Tessie. To the pure all things are very pure indeed, and few problems so knotty that they cannot be straightened out with patience and a heated comb." M. L. Birmingham

N Y Times Bk R p30 My 26 '68 200w
Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:33 Je 15 '68 200w

JACKSON, KENNETH T. The Ku Klux Klan in the city, 1915-1930. 326p $7.50 Oxford

329 Ku Klux Klan (1915- ) 67-28129

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by David Chalmers
Am Hist R 73:1670 Je '68 340w

Reviewed by A. S. Miller
Ann Am Acad 378:197 Jl '68 600w
Choice 5:1032 O '68 170w

Reviewed by A. S. Rice
J Am Hist 55:174 Je '68 500w

Reviewed by E. D. Genovese
Nation 207:87 Ag 5 '68 430w
TLS p819 Ag 1 '68 800w

JACKSON, SHIRLEY. Come along with me; part of a novel, sixteen stories, and three lectures; ed. by Stanley Edgar Hyman. 243p $5.95 Viking

68-22864

This "posthumous book contains a section of the novel on which [the author] was working at the time of her death in 1965, plus 14 short stories, three lectures on authorship, and two stories . . . illustrating points in the lectures. Many of the pieces have not previously been issued in book form. . . . [or] were never before published." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:150 O '68 60w

Reviewed by W. J. Lynch
Best Sell 28:368 D 1 '68 390w

"[This] volume will be both a treat and a sad incompleteness to Shirley Jackson fans. Her stories . . . are as haunting and amusing and unpredictable as we remembered them. And the novel, with its sure touch, its exquisite but unstudied imposition of literary form on the chaotic vagaries of human emotion, even in six chapters sets so many ideas and real people in motion that one can hardly bear not knowing how it all turns out." K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:110 O '68 110w

Reviewed by L. W. Griffin
Library J 93:2898 Ag '68 180w

"Mr. Hyman wisely demonstrates the range of Shirley Jackson's imagination in his choice of stories. There are domestic comedies on the one hand and pure fantasies on the other. There are clinical penetrations into madness and senility, and allegories of fairly portentous philosophical weight. Yet everything this author wrote, no matter how innocent the surface, had in it the dignity and plausibility of myth." Guy Davenport

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 15 '68 500w

"[This volume] leaves no doubt ■ to Miss Jackson's craftsmanship and power. . . . In the fragment of the new novel there is abnormality aplenty and ■ promise of supernatural antics to come, but what hits the reader hard is the savagely comic tone. . . . The short stories are a varied lot. Some were written early in Miss Jackson's career. . . . The situations are commonplace . . . but when we look at them through Miss Jackson's eyes, we see things that are strange and terrible. . . . The volume contains Miss Jackson's most famous story, 'The Lottery,' and also a lecture, 'Biography of ■ Story,' in which she talks about the letters she received after this extraordinary tale appeared. . . . All these letters testify to the conviction the story carries." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:33 S 14 '68 1000w

JACKSON, STANLEY. The Sassoons. 304p il $7.95 Dutton

920 Sassoon family 68-11386

A history of the Jewish dynasty which spanned both the nineteenth and twentieth centuries and the Oriental and Western worlds. Genealogies. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 28:147 Jl 1 '68 550w

Reviewed by R. C. Wald
Book World p3 Jl 7 '68 950w
Economist 227:vii Ap 27 '68 600w

Reviewed by K. T. Willis
Library J 93:2479 Je 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Shane Leslie
Nat R 20:1019 O 8 '68 450w

"Reading the Sassoon saga, manfully if bafflingly essayed by Mr Jackson, I kept feeling the chap for the job should have been not Jackson, not Proust, nor yet Thomas Mann, but John Galsworthy. Only Galsworthy could have done justice to that magnificent family business, started by the pious, shrewd, patriarchal, wealthy, philanthropic, austere mercantile Jewish refugee from Baghdad. . . . The Sassoons are so numerous that . . . the complexity defeats [Mr. Jackson]. Often, indeed, it is hard to follow to whom he is referring; or to care much. . . . The narrative begins to come alive, for me, on p. 125 with Philip Sassoon, son of Sir Edward (2nd Bt) and Aline Rothschild, going to Eton with much too much pocket money, Brian-Howardish good looks, a desire to stand out competing with the desire to conform." Arthur Calder-Marshall

New Statesman 75:449 Ap 5 '68 1000w

New Yorker 44:110 Je 15 '68 200w

Newsweek 71:94 Je 10 '68 1000w

'Rabbi Sassoon's library in Letchworth, begun by his father, is considered the world's greatest private collection of Hebrew manuscripts. The author skims over this treasure house in a few paragraphs, after devoting pages to Siegfried's melancholy, Victor's horse trades, and Philip's exquisite parties. An old-fashioned scholar may be no match, in the eyes of a curious public, for merchant princes—and a poet—but a chronicler of the Sassoon family ought to know better. This history will fascinate all who liked The Rothschilds [by F. Morton, BRD 1962] and Our Crowd [by S. Birmingham, BRD 1967]; it is a better book than either, faint praise though that is." A. Z. Silver

Sat R 51:28 Je 29 '68 850w

"Mr. Jackson has handled the voluminous material at his disposal competently and unpretentiously, and he makes helpful use of the extensive genealogical tree, a relevant extract from which is reprinted at the top of each chapter. The flyleaf mentions that he is the author of the official history of the Savoy Hotel and there is indeed something of the briskness of a hotel register about the way in which arrivals are identified, chronicled and ticketed. On the other hand the strictly chronological approach he has adopted has the effect of fragmenting rather than rendering coherent the increasingly disparate lives of individual members of the clan."

JACKSON, STANLEY—Continued

TLS p330 Ap 4 '68 1100w

JACKSON, W. TURRENTINE. The enterprising Scot; investors in the American west after 1873. (Publications; hist. philosophy and economics) 415p il pl $12.50 Aldine pub.

332.67 Investments. Scotch. The West—History 67-27400

The author seeks to show "that 'The Scottish contribution to the total capital investment in the United States was certainly impressive,' especially in the trans-Mississippi West. Questioning the prevalent assumption that United Kingdom overseas investments 'were exceptionally profitable in the nineteenth century and that the earnings from developing backward areas bolstered the British economy' and challenging the . . . belief that 'the average Scot was inherently canny in financial affairs,' the author . . . demonstrates that the first is an oversimplification and the second is open to question." (J Am Hist) Bibliography.

"[The text is] supported by extensive notes and an excellent bibliography. . . . Focusing attention on Scottish investments in the American West, 1873-1956 (although there is less emphasis on the years after 1921), Jackson provides massive evidence to illuminate his thesis and to modify existing impressions. . . . He continually relates the local and regional events to the national and international scenes so as to delineate the broader ramifications of economic investment, 1873-1921. By detailing the effects of recurring economic dislocation, compounded by numerous injudicious profit-seeking excursions, he paints a balanced portrait of the reputedly 'canny' Scot. By examining Scottish investment in the United States after 1900, he presents evidence which suggests that greater profits were achieved in this century than in the last. By projecting interrelationships and insights, he has provided a book of enduring worth. The economic historian will profit much; the historian of the American West most." D. B. Nunis

J Am Hist 55:410 S '68 600w

"[This book] has the merits of novelty, of digging up much new material for American (and Scottish) economic history. And Professor Jackson is . . . critically minded and has a wide historical viewpoint. . . . [He] begins and ends by asking a fundamental question. Are or were Scots such good businessmen as national conceit and not totally disinterested English flattery suggests? Thrifty, yes; sagacious—not always. The Scots may have been too canny for their own good. But the national temperament has a streak of rashness in it, especially when excited by the hope of high and easy profits. . . . Both sides of the national temperament are illustrated by Professor Jackson."

TLS p200 F 29 '68 500w

JACKSON HAIGHT, MABEL V. See Haight, M. V. J.

JACOBS, DAVID. Master painters of the Renaissance. 143p il col il $6.50 Viking

759.5 Painters, Italian—Juvenile literature. Painting, Italian—Juvenile literature. Art, Renaissance—Juvenile literature 67-20957

The author discusses the meaning of the term Renaissance and considers ten artists who "are included 'not necessarily because they were the ten greatest of the age, but because their achievements were widely varied.' Beginning with . . . Giotto . . . the author sketches the lives and work of Masaccio, Piero della Francesca, Botticelli, Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, Michelangelo, Giorgione, Titian [and] Tintoretto. [Bibliography.] Age twelve and up." (Book World)

"Fortified by 32 pages of illustrations in excellent color, this introduction to the Renaissance painters of Italy is highly recommended herewith to all high school libraries. The text is admirably informative without being didactic, is simple without being silly. . . . There is a final chapter on 'The Other Renaissance,' the movement of the center of painting to Spain, Flanders, Holland and France, with mention only of Holbein the Younger, Clouet, the Brueghels, Dürer and El Greco, each exemplified by a painting."

Best Sell 28:113 Je 1 '68 120w

"This lucid and lively introduction to Italian Renaissance painting should prove a find for young art students and those interested in art history. . . . Along with enlightening glimpses of the artists' personalities and gifts, one gains a real sense of the time and setting in which they lived. Thirty-two pages of paintings, reproduced in color, add to readers' enjoyment and understanding." Polly Goodwin

Book World p18 S 28 '68 150w

"Written in exaggerated, florid style. . . . Comparisons with other books show Jacobs' color reproductions to be very poor in quality. The illustrations are gathered into four sections; many are scarcely referred to in the text—some, not at all. A further serious limitation on this book's reference value is the lack of an index." M. J. Shapiro

Library J 93:3306 S 15 '68 130w

JACOBS, JOSEPH. Hudden and Dudden and Donald O'Neary; adapted by Joseph Jacobs; il. by Doris Burn. unsp lib bdg $2.86 Coward-McCann

398.2 Folklore, Celtic—Juvenile literature 68-18825

In this folktale, "Hudden and Dudden were rich and covetous [farmers], wanting for themselves the barren strip of soil that was all poor Donald O'Neary has in this world. Well, one thing more Donald had, and that was a good mind on him, and that was how he not only foiled the rascals but ended with a herd of plump cattle while Hudden and Dudden wound up in the lake." (Sat R) "Grades one to four." (Library J)

"The text of this picture story book is that of Joseph Jacob's collection, Celtic Folk and Fairy Tales. [The] illustrations make the difference and constitute a substantial addition to the text. The full-page black-and-white line drawings are reminiscent of Lawson or McCloskey, yet have a humor all their own. The characters are portrayed as dumb-faced and dim-witted but foxy, increasing the suspense as to just who will outfox whom. An attractive separate edition for the story hour or independent reading." Steve Rybicki

Library J 93:2532 Je 15 '68 90w

"The robust Irish humor of this old favorite is echoed in the bold black-and-white drawings, as handsome as they are dramatic." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:36 ■ 21 '68 90w

JACOBS, LOU. SST plane of tomorrow; the story of America's supersonic transport, by Lou Jacobs, Jr.; foreword by J. C. Maxwell. 95p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.79 Golden Gate

629.133 Supersonic transport planes—Juvenile literature 67-21228

The year 1975 is the projected date for "the launching of the SST, the first U.S. commercial air transport that will fly at 30 miles a minute—faster than the speed of sound and at an altitude of more than 60,000 feet. [Here] is the story of how the SST program was conceived and financed and how [it] . . . is presently being built." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"The merit of [this book] lies in its timeliness. It brings up to date the move in this country and abroad to develop and fly a supersonic transport. The book becomes, however, a one-sided discussion (pro) of the SST which gives little credit to arguments against the craft." J. C. Waugh

Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 2 '67 50w

"In collecting material for this profusely illustrated and well-written book . . . the author has drawn from the experience of many engineers, not only those at Boeing but at a dozen other aeronautical centers as well. In several short chapters Mr. Jacobs ranges from early jet flights to wind tunnel pictures taken at 4,900 miles per hour, from interior design and sonic booms to swept-back wings and new powerful turbojet engines. Some possible solutions are suggested to future problems in passenger comfort, navigation, air traffic control and airport facilities." B. B. Lane

Library J 92:4623 D 15 '67 100w

JACOBS, PAUL. Prelude to riot; a view of urban America from the bottom; sponsored by the Center for the study of democratic institutions. 298p $5.95 Random house

309.1794 Los Angeles—Poor. U.S.—Social conditions. Negroes—Civil rights 66-21487

The author of The New Radicals (BRD 1966), ■ staff member of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions went to the Watts district of Los Angeles to find out how poor minorities are "treated by the institutions our society has organized to serve them. To do this, he investigated the police department, the welfare system, the public employment services, the housing administrations, hospitals, health and medical care, and the schools. Through interviews, documentation, and first-hand observation, he learned how these institutions worked and how people felt about them. He discovered how community anger and official indifference interrelate and how they can build into potentially violent situations." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Arthur Niedarhoffer
Am J Soc 74:108 J1 '68 470w

"All too often the man on the scene can make out only a fragment of the picture. This limited view is the reason for the failure of [this book]. . . . The emphasis is upon the deficiencies in what has been done to offset the inequalities induced by poverty. In these matters Jacobs is an accurate, if indignant, observer. His conclusions are that 'we are a racist country,' that 'the minority poor live inside ■ pen without an exit gate,' and that 'nearly every official in government is convinced that the urban crisis is beyond any solution.' Those judgments reveal the absolute lack of any sense of development. Ten years ago was the year of Little Rock. In the intervening decade the United States has passed through a radical social revolution the extent of which has only begun to be apparent. But the reporter who sees merely the scene before him is in no position to measure change." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:139 F '68 200w

"Popular treatment of some serious sociological matters which are extremely complex. . . . An insider's view of the 'real' activities and decisions of the McCone commission are described in detail. Not a scholarly treatment of the subject, but it is an elaborate one providing strong arguments for fundamental social change. The lack of documentation is a very conspicuous weakness but the plausibility of the support for Jacobs' views is best enhanced by knowledge of other studies." Suggested for community and college libraries."

Choice 5:878 S '68 110w

"Is there anything pertinent or fresh yet to be said about our nation's racial troubles? . . . To anyone who has attended to the struggle with even half an ear, Paul Jacobs' book will be familiar material. Nonetheless it is shrewd, sensible and well written, and would be an excellent textbook for high school and college students and for parents who have never known a Negro as ■ human being. . . . The book sets down the hellish conditions the author thinks led to the Watts rebellion. 'I have discovered that Los Angeles is America and it's terrible,' Jacobs scrutinizes the police, public welfare, housing, jobs, and the McCone commission hearings on the Watts outbreak. . . . [He] contends that many of the commission members had no idea why there had been a rebellion in Watts." Murray Polner

Christian Century 85:266 F 28 '68 500w

Reviewed by G. H. Favre
Christian Science Monitor p9 F 13 '68 700w

Reviewed by Leonard Chazen
Commentary 46:96 D '68 1850w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg
Commonweal 88:536 Ag 9 '68 3000w

Reviewed by R. F. Kugler
Library J 92:4516 D 15 '67 160w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri
Library J 93:896 F 15 '68 110w [YA]

Reviewed by L. L. King
New Repub 158:21 Ja 20 '68 1500w

"As Jacobs's investigations make abundantly clear, [the governmental institutions] provide minimum service and maximum manipulation, bias and humiliation. . . . [Jacobs manages] to make the suffering concrete, the indignities fresh. He does so because of his skill as an investigator and reporter. By exposing himself to some of the actual experiences that the minority poor undergo, and by reading widely in documentary sources, he has combined the immediacy of a personal account with the verisimilitude of an objective survey. Moreover, though concentrating on a single city, he has been shrewd enough not to bury us in detail. He shifts briskly from topic to topic—and this rapid change of subject, along with the lucidity of his prose, fixes the attention. Only in his brief conclusion does he falter . . . yet we should not expect Jacobs to provide 'answers' when our society as a whole has failed to grapple with the ills of the ghetto." Martin Duberman

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 21 '68 1700w

Reviewed by Elliot Liebow
Science 162:1467 D 27 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Blake McKelvey
Social Studies 59:290 N '68 270w
Va Q R 44:1xxii spring '68 210w

JACOBSEN, JOSEPHINE. Ionesco and Genêt; playwrights of silence, by Josephine Jacobsen and William R. Mueller. 242p $5.95; pa $1.95 Hill & Wang

842 Ionesco, Eugène. Genêt, Jean 68-14782

"This book [is] a sequel to the authors' Testament of Samuel Beckett. . . . [It] answers many of the how and why questions that [the Theater of the Absurd] suggests. The authors study the individual plays in some detail. . . . they discuss the themes and ideas. . . . the lack of communication in the modern world, and 'man's sense of mortality, alienation and robotization.'" (Library J) Bibliography.

"There are many references to [The Testament of Samuel Beckett] (which is excellent). This one is less impressive, but this is perhaps only because it treats lesser writers, and because there is little in common between Ionesco and Genêt. This study is intelligent, concise and very readable. . . . It is the ideal introduction to the two playwrights for English speaking readers (all the quotes are in English). However, the discussion of language and style is necessarily inadequate; plays which are not available in English translation . . . are not even mentioned."

Choice 5:782 S '68 110w

"The bibliography is invaluable for information about both the playwrights under discussion and the Theater of the Absurd in general." E. R. Nelson

Library J 93:1649 Ap 15 '68 130w

JACOBSON, LENORE, jt. auth. Pygmalion in the classroom. See Rosenthal, R.

JACOBY, ARNOLD. Señor Kon-Tiki; the biography of Thor Heyerdahl. 424p il $6.95 Rand McNally

B or 92 Heyerdahl, Thor. Kon-Tiki Expedition, 1947 67-24915

The author discusses Heyerdahl's boyhood and youth; his wartime experience in the Free Norwegian Army; his growing conviction that scientific opinion about the origin of the South Sea islanders was incorrect; the "Kon-Tiki," Easter Island and Galapagos expeditions, and their aftermath. Index.

"As Arnold Jacoby points out in his prologue, the instigator of [the Kon-Tiki expedition], 'the man himself, Thor Heyerdahl as a person, perhaps remained half obscured by the shadow of his world-famous enterprise.' This biography would move him out into the light. Unfortunately Mr. Jacoby is not the writer Mr. Heyerdahl is. But he does give the facts. . . . [He] recounts the events and adventures competently, but still does not bring Heyerdahl completely to life. Isolated passages suggest a man we would like to know better." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p13 D 9 '67 350w

Economist 227:52 Je 22 '68 450w

"This fascinating biography of Thor Heyerdahl by a lifelong friend matches that archeologist's books, Kon-Tiki [BRD 1950] and Aku-Aku [BRD 1958], in interest and suspense. . . . Jacoby tells of his friend's long fight for recognition, and the bitter antagonism, and personal insults he endured. . . . Through painstaking research in almost inaccessible places, undertaken at great personal risk, [Heyerdahl] accumulated overwhelming evidence and eventual recognition in his chosen field. Mr. Jacoby's book is enthusiastically recommended for the Young Adult collection and for the general public." R. W. Henderson

JACOBY, ARNOLD—Continued

Library J 92:3411 O 1 '67 140w [YA]

Reviewed by Christopher Wordsworth
New Statesman 76:85 J1 19 '68 400w

TLS p720 J1 11 '68 800w

JAFFÉ, HANS L. C., ed. 20,000 years of world painting; tr. from the French, German and Italian by Robert Erich Wolf. 418p 1032col il $25 Abrams

759 Painting—History. Paintings 67-22136

"The history has been divided into sections, each by a different scholar: P. P. Kahane for ancient and classical art; P. Francastel for the Middle Ages; G. C. Argan for the Renaissance; Michael Levey for the 17th and 18th Centuries; Hans Jaffé for 19th and 20th Centuries; and H. Heti-Kunze for Far Eastern art. . . . Each section has a brief introduction, then moves on to the . . . illustrations and their captions." (Library J) Index of artists and of subjects.

"Used with a superior one-volume survey like [H.W.] Janson's History of Art [BRD 1963] this annotated, four-color 'museum without walls' could provide a working introductory set for the small library. . . . In terms of number and graphic quality [it] surpasses [W.] Gaunt's Everyman's Dictionary of Pictorial Art [BRD 1962] which has 729 plates in color and black and white. . . . High school and public libraries would appreciate the economic and pragmatic possibilities of this survey; larger, more affluent libraries will not need it."

Choice 5:628 J1 '68 130w

"The small plates, all in color, vary considerably in fidelity to the original, but there are not many books that contain as many color plates for the price. An extremely good feature of the book is the information on provenance given in each caption. . . . The number of double-folded page spreads will pose problems for use in libraries, but should not deter librarians from buying a book which can satisfy a number of basic queries, and may even open up a new world of pleasure to some library patrons." Julia Sabine

Library J 93:742 F 15 '68 190w

JAGENDORF, M. A. Kwi-na the eagle, and other Indian tales; il. by Jack Endewelt; consultant; Carolyn W. Field. 96p to libs & schools $3.60 Silver

398.2 Indians of North America—Legends—Juvenile literature 67-16759

"A folklorist retells 15 tales—some gathered directly from Indian storytellers, others selected from the records of anthropologists and ethnologists—which combine to present a sampling of the variety of North American Indian folklore (excepting the tribes of the Pacific Northwest and California) with one example of a Labrador Eskimo tale. . . . Grades one to four." (Library J)

"Recounts, with appropriately misty illustrations, various American Indian legends of how seasons and mountains and lakes came to be." Elizabeth Pond

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 2 '68 70w

"This collection lacks dramatic appeal and vigor because of the reteller's inability to incorporate these qualities in simplified versions for younger readers. Although these tales present important myth figures (Ma'nabus and Gluska'be, Rabbit and Coyote, and the witch Tso-a-ywits) as well as some humorous stories from American Indian folklore, the style of writing fails to match the quality of the originals." J. C. Ullom

Library J 93:1788 Ap 15 '68 120w

JAMES, DANIEL, ed. The complete Bolivian diaries of Ché Guevara, and other captured documents. See Guevara, E.

JAMES, HOWARD. Crisis in the courts; this book is based on a series of articles that appeared weekly in The Christian Science Monitor, April to July, 1967. 267p $5.50 McKay 347.9 Courts—U.S. Justice, Administration of 68-18723

"An examination of the condition of the American state court systems . . . based on [observations made] during a nationwide tour." (Library J) Index.

"This is a revealing and important book. The frightening aspect of it is that James . . . did not have to delve into behind-the-scenes machinations and courthouse corruptions . . . to document the depressing failure of one-third of this nation's constitutional government. All he had to do was sit in the spectator sections of courtrooms, particularly the lower criminal courts. . . . The book has its faults. . . . But the important thing is that [it reminds us that the criminal court] is—and must remain—open to examination, and that responsibility for its operations and end products lies not only with lawyers and judges but with all of us." F. C. Shapiro

Book World p4 Je 2 '68 800w

"[The author] visited courts in session and interviewed individuals connected with judicial administration, plaintiffs, and defendants seeking justice in the courts. He sets forth inadequacies of the present systems . . . and lists recommendations advocating still greater reform. This is a thought-provoking book about an urgent problem and should be of interest not only to students of political science but to all informed readers." H. M. Burns

Library J 93:2254 Je 1 '68 200w

JAMES, RALPH E. The concrete God; a new beginning for theology—the thought of Charles Hartshorne. 236p $7.50 Bobbs

231 Hartshorne, Charles. Theology. God 67-25172

This study shows "Hartshorne's views as they relate to those of some of the dominant philosophical figures and movements of our time. His early writings on Husserl, Heidegger, Peirce and Whitehead are examined. . . . [His] later writings on theology are discussed: his bipolar concept of God, real freedom and change in God, Christ, and the Church." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Except for its useful Hartshorne bibliography, friends of Hartshorne will find nothing pleasing in this book. It reads much like a senior honors paper. There is a lack of technical exposition and logical clarity in Section I, and the discussion of God, Christology and the church in Section II proceeds with a naïveté that suggests the author has widely read his favorite metaphysician but paid insufficient attention to the history of the theological issues he is concerned with." M. F. Allshouse

Christian Century 85:1340 O 23 '68 450w

"A provocative study. . . . Mr. James's book is specifically concerned with the defense of Hartshorne's theory that the abstract, 'classical' God is dead and has been replaced by a 'concrete' God. . . . Although sympathetic to Hartshorne's views, Mr. James . . . presents his commentary logically and sincerely. Christianity is challenged, but not denied. . . . Since Mr. James's presentation is 'professional' rather than 'popular,' the book is suitable for academic libraries, or those with a wide circulation of books dealing with the 'Death of God' controversy." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 92:4005 N 1 '67 140w

JAMES, WILLIAM. The writings of William James; a comprehensive edition; ed. with an introd. by John J. McDermott. 858p $15 Random house

191 Philosophy 67-11593

In "this volume of his essays . . . the complete original editions of Pragmatism and A Pluralistic Universe as well as the 1943 edition of Essays in Radical Empiricism are offered in addition to twenty-eight of James's essays, selected from his writings in psychology, philosophy, religion, morals and psychological research. Also included are autobiographical writings and a corrected and updated version of the Annotated Bibliography of the Writings of William James, published originally in 1920 by Ralph Barton Perry, as well as a Chronology of important events in James's life. The editor's introduction provides a . . . discussion of the significance of [James's writings]." (Publisher's note)

Choice 5:786 S '68 80w

"A valuable contribution to the current William James revival. In selecting from James's writings, Mr. McDermott has chosen not only the well-known James classics but has also drawn from unpublished papers and from newspaper interviews, and combined all into a comprehensive portrait. . . . [The editor's] brief introduction illuminates his subject with remarkable clarity. This is a volume both for the specialist and for the earnest beginner." B. P. Brennan

Library J 93:1900 My 1 '68 100w

"A good introduction to James. . . . The vast selection of pieces represents the diversity in James' thinking that most collections miss; there is . . . a learned introduction that is rough sledding but provides a good account of James' ideas, particularly his changing ideas of consciousness. Mr. McDermott argues persuasively for the loose, rather than the strict, constitutional interpretation of James' thought, trying to grasp the total vision of this eclectic thinker, rather than tapping here and there at the logic to see if it rings hollow. He stresses James' relevance to diverse movements in thought today; to him James is a contemporary." Joseph Featherstone

New Repub 157:18 O 14 '67 1500w

JAMESON, THOMAS. The hidden Shakespeare; a study of the poet's undercover activity in the theatre. 168p $4.95 Funk

322.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 67-28569

In the first two chapters the author suggests "that the enigmatic character of Prince Hal—later King Henry V—in Shakespeare's Lancastrian Tetralogy is the result of the dramatist's 'undercover activity' in getting back at political censorship. The puzzling 'poet's-pen' speech of Theseus in A Midsummer-Night's Dream and the sudden change of Polixenes into the tyrannical father in The Winter's Tale are explained . . . in the third and last chapter as Shakespeare's 'undercover literary skirmishing' against threats coming from the playwright's trade." (Choice) Indexes of authors and of subjects.

"A pretentious item on Shakespeare that both the general reader and the scholar can do without. The speculative thesis on undercover activity is of such slim substance that it could easily be presented in a brief, concise essay. This view is borne out by the padding format of the 'book' which leaves the top third of every printed page blank. A far more satisfactory treatment of problems in these history plays. . . . may be found in A. P. Rossiter's lecture, 'Ambivalence: The Dialectic of the Histories,' in [his] Angel with Horns [BRD 1962]." Choice 5:482 Je '68 300w

"[The] professor of English at the University of New Mexico uses a private fantasy to describe a popular work. . . . Professor Jameson, perceptive and well read, rides high on his hobby horse galloping around a notion." James Sandoe

Library J 92:4001 N 1 '67 100w

JANEWAY, ELIOT. The economics of crisis: war, politics, and the dollar. 317p $10 Weybright & Talley

330.973 U.S.—Economic policy. U.S.—Politics and government. War—Economic aspects 68-12133

"Viewing the American economy in world terms and with historical perspective, [the author] explores the interrelated forces which determine the industrial and financial state of the nation: war in Southeast Asia, civil unrest in our cities, politics in and out of Washington, Wall Street and its markets, the increasing strength and independence of the rest of the developed free world, and the new Communist challenge, among others." (Publisher's note) He suggests that in the past we have "been able to make war pay . . . in terms of economic growth and future prosperity . . . [but argues that] today a different situation exists: war, rather than helping the economy, is hindering future growth because we find ourselves in a situation similar to that of Britain during the 19th Century." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of names.

"If the reader has the means to follow the meandering facts and events presented in this book, he will learn that the United States has fought a number of wars in its almost two centuries of independence [and that] . . . some of the effects have been favorable, others unfavorable. 'The Economics of Crisis' is a loose collection of historical names, dates, and personalities brought together in the form of a book. It lacks the unifying thread that a book should have and the depth of analysis that the title would indicate. The only common denominator of the book is that it deals with historic events; but no attempt is made to draw any conclusions from the events or to suggest any development of policies that may be useful in future crises. . . . [The author] fails to tell the reader what the economics of crisis is and whether there is [a] common element running through all the various previous crises, except that they all require additional government spending." A. J. Giunta

Best Sell 27:407 Ja 15 '68 270w

"Alongside this analysis, familiar leftist conceptions about war-making seem almost childish in their innocence of the realities of power and money. Here we find no sparring with sinister abstract phantoms, such as the proprietors of the 'military-industrial complex,' but, rather, a fascinating account of how scheming, fallible, flesh-and-blood men sought and wielded power in time of crisis. Some of the intriguing play of motive and counter-motive may be the product of Janeway's ingenuity, but there is no doubt that we have come down from the clouds of half-baked theory to the muddy ground on which wars are fought and financed. . . . [This] is Eliot Janeway's first book since [The Struggle for Survival [BRD 1951, 1952], the authoritative account of America's economic mobilization during World War II. Seventeen years is a long dry spell for an analyst and a journalist attuned to the moment, but the storing up of insight has produced its rewards." R. J. Whalen

Book World p4 F 4 '68 1600w

Reviewed by Stanislaw Wellesz

Commonweal 88:471 Je 12 '68 1400w

"Dr. Janeway brings out factors which others have not even hinted at; that we must be continually on a wartime footing because of our major confrontations as a world power. . . . As [he] points out, he has merely delineated the monstrous problem we face. He does not have to offer solutions, for solutions are known by anyone who knows political economy, but the suggestions are not being followed. This is an extremely thought-provoking book which gives a new perspective on a major problem. Highly recommended for public and academic libraries and for special collections." R. W. Haseltine

Library J 93:70 Ja 1 '68 460w

"One suspects that [this] book will receive short shrift from historians, economists and social scientists alike. Janeway presents a picture of the world, at least of the United States, through glasses so curiously tinted that at times the landscape is almost unrecognizable, and he presents very meager evidence in proportion to the large number of stimulating, occasionally plausible, frequently novel, but probably erroneous propositions. . . . Mr. Janeway's view that American economy stagnated in 1967 is hardly borne out by the statistics. One gets the impression from the book, therefore, of a brilliant and insightful mind, untrained in the social sciences, and unaware of the need for the testing of propositions even in history, out of touch with most of the thought in his own field, but nevertheless, because of these very deficiencies, occasionally striking through to very challenging ideas and propositions." K. M. Boulding

N Y Times Bk p24 Ja 21 '68 750w

JANICE. Little Bear's Thanksgiving; ll. by Mariana. unp $3.50; lib bdg $3.35 Lothrop

Bears—Stories

67-22583

"Sleepy, simple Little Bear tries to keep awake to celebrate Thanksgiving with Goldie, a yellow-haired little girl, but he fails, of course. His friends, Owl, Squeaky, Sparrow, and Squirrel try to wake him from his deep winter sleep on Thanksgiving Day. When nothing else works, they whisper in his ear the list of marvelous foods traditional for Thanksgiving. They finally arouse him and hurry him off to the party where they all feast merrily. Afterwards, Little Bear goes back, full and happy, to finish his winter sleep. . . . Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

JANICE—Continued

"Young listeners and lookers will find this new adventure of Little Bear as engaging as its three predecessors. Little Bear is so plump and cuddly and he has such interesting friends. . . . A beguiling read-aloud book." P. G. Book World p24 N 19 '67 110w

Horn Bk 44:79 F '68 20w

"Grandmothers should have [this book] on hand to read to visiting grandchildren as an appetizer while the turkey is roasting. One picture shows the Pilgrims sitting with the Indians around the first Thanksgiving table. The story is slow-moving, and the text a bit lengthy. Its possibilities for entertainment depend strictly on good timing." K. G. Burt Christian Science Monitor pB2 N 2 '67 60w

"Friends of Little Bear are not as likely to enjoy this as much as the other titles in the series. The illustrations are the familiar charming delicate washes, with tiny details that children love, but the trite story is not as funny as the other books." Marjorie Lewis

Library J 92:3840 O 15 '67 140w

JANOWITZ, MORRIS, ed. On social organization and social personality. See Thomas, W. I.

JANSSON, TOVE. Comet in Moominland; written and ill. by Tove Jansson; tr. by Elizabeth Portch. 192p $4 Walck, H.Z.

67-28419

"Jansson won the 1966 Hans Christian Andersen Medal for the previous Moomin books, and this new adventure [begins] . . . when an ominous star appears over Moominvalley. Moomintroll sets forth on a journey to the observatory, gathering friends [and adventures] along the way. . . . Ages eight to ten." (Sat R)

"Plot? Irrelevant. Characters? Moomins, Sniff, Hemulens, Snorks, a Muskrat Philosopher (who sits and thinks about how unnecessary everything is), Hattifatteners, Snufkin, tree-spirits, water-spooks. . . . But it's no use. . . . Why do children and other enlightened people love this? As Louis Armstrong said of another great art: if you got to ask, lady, you'll never know. All ages." D. B. W.

Book World p20 Je 2 '68 110w

Reviewed by C. F. Ruffin

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 2 '68 90w

Horn Bk 44:320 Je '68 120w

"Moomins are small, cheerful, imaginary creatures who resemble hippos; their names are Moominpappa, Moominmamma, and Moomintroll; and they live in the Moominvalley of Moominland. . . . [The story has] copious pictures and seems to be well translated. . . . The real trouble, I'm afraid, is that this fantasy-world of Moomins and Moominlore is so delightful to the author that she has forgotten to make it clear to the reader. . . . Her obvious and lengthy enjoyment of them has somewhat dampened my own. I might even say that it has given me a case of Moomincholy." Barbara Wersba

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p43 My 5 '68 110w

"[This] will undoubtedly be eagerly received by Moomin-addicts. The comet never strikes, the world is saved, and nothing much is accomplished save entertainment of the readers, but the fanciful nonsense needs no other purpose." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:38 My 11 '68 70w

JANSSON, TOVE. Moominpappa at sea; written and ill. by Tove Jansson; tr. by Kingsley Hart. 192p $4 Walck, H.Z.

67-1121

"Moominpappa (trying, as always to matter) sees his family's life as disturbingly safe and fixed, and plans to move to an island found on a map. 'That's where we're going to live, and lead a wonderful life, full of troubles', [Moominmamma] explains to the rest with her usual pre-science. The island proves strange and temperamental; why is the lighthouse abandoned? Who is the silent fisherman? [Moominmamma] tries to grow roses in seaweed; Moomintroll is secretly kind to the awful, freezing Groke; secretly longs for a word from the beautiful heartless sea-horses; shrewd Little My [the Moomins precocious adopted child] sees all but doesn't waste words." (TLS) The author was awarded the 1966 Hans Christian Andersen Medal for her Moomin books. "Age nine and up." (Book Week)

"Moominpappa at Sea brings an unexpected change of scene and mood [from the previous Moomin books]. It is an intense and frequently melancholy affair, more subtle and unsettling in its examination of personal quandaries and generally lacking the gaiety and variety of color found in the previous books. There is a new note of maturity and hardihood in this adventure. . . . The sea, awesome, mysterious, and changeable, permeates the story and Miss Jansson renders its lonely beauty with inspired assurance. . . . Despite the emphasis on the adults and their struggle to come to terms with a new way of life, ultimately it is Moomintroll whose compassion miraculously warms the Groke and brings an end to the restless hostility of the island. A new strength and sobriety inform this story, suggesting that Moomintroll has begun to learn the ways of the world." H. L. Maples

Book Week p6 (spring children's issue) My 7 '67 390w

Horn Bk 43:341 Je '67 160w

"The more one reads about Moomins the less one knows about them. . . . Since we have never learned what Moomins are in the first place, . . . or what their purpose is in the vast scheme of things, our empathy is frail. An added burden is that the stories have no real beginning or end, so that reading them in sequence is as baffling as reading them out of sequence (or upside down, for that matter). Some vital links have been lost, and these seem to be plot, character, theme and common sense." Barbara Wersba

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p43 My 5 '68 110w

"This is a superb piece of invention; moreover, one need not have read any earlier works in the saga to 'know' its characters. For Moomin fantasy is far from being inconsequent; it is based, like many a more resounding Scandinavian drama, on thought and behavior—however weird the creature who thinks and does. The resolution is admirable. There may have been moments of gloom or alarm, yet there is not a false move or detail in this gifted story."

TLS p429 My 19 '66 160w

JANTSCHER, GERALD R. Trusts and estate taxation (Nat. com. on gov. finance. Studies of gov. finance). 211p $6.75 Brookings

336.2 Taxation—U.S. Inheritance and transfer tax 66-30131

"This study analyzes a . . . collection of data to show the actual dispositions in trust of a group of decedents for whom federal estate tax returns were filed in 1957 and 1959. The author reviews the difficulties of extending the present estate tax to trusts and discusses ways to eliminate the current discrepancy between the taxation of trust ownership and outright ownership. In conclusion he suggests a formula for taxing trust interests when they are terminated, based on the value of payments received by a beneficiary in relation to the total value of the trust." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The study is about half legal and half statistical and both parts are carried through with meticulous concern for accuracy. . . . Professor Jantscher combines a firm knowledge of the law, statistical sophistication, and clear mathematical and literary exposition to produce a first-rate work on a difficult subject." E. R. Rolph

Am Econ R 57:953 S '67 420w

"The author is a member of the staff of the Office of Tax Analysis, United States Treasury. . . . [He] points out that during the early years of the federal estate tax, no attention seems to have been paid to the revenue that would be lost in later years by the use of the trust device, which permitted successive future transfers without tax. . . . This study has been made to 'add to the knowledge of the ways in which trusts are presently being used; for once this understanding has been gained, we will have a more secure basis upon which to recommend changes in the present tax law.' The author examines [his subject] carefully. . . . The book is an important addition to the growing literature on this subject." K. L. Trefftz

Ann Am Acad 374:203 N '67 470w

Choice 5:1183 N '68 110w

JAPRISOT, SEBASTIEN. The lady in the car with glasses and a gun; tr. from the French by Helen Weaver. 240p $4.50 Simon & Schuster

67-22938

Novel of suspense, in which Danny Longo, a Parisian secretary "borrows" her employer's Thunderbird to go from Paris to the Mediterranean. "En route she meets people who recognize her as someone who has passed that way before. When she finds the body of a man in the trunk of the car, she knows that she is the victim of a murderer's plot." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 27:396 Ja 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:4031 N 1 '67 60w

"The French are particularly good (remember 'Diabolique'?) at bringing off a plot that seems to pile impossibility upon impossibility, only to be simply, if fiendishly, explained. Example in point: Sebastien Japrisot's [novel], ably translated by Helen Weaver. . . . Fine exercise in terror, beautifully plotted, with disturbing ambivalences." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p56 D 10 '67 60w

"Whodunit? Who is responsible for keeping this magnificent thriller hidden? Why haven't critics heaped praise upon it? Why haven't readers fought to buy it? Unlike most novels published this year, [this book] can be—and must be—read in one sitting. It cannot be put down, and that, mystery-lovers, is the ultimate test. Last year in France, 'Lady' spent months on the bestseller list—an achievement few suspense novels ever match. And it also won the coveted Prix d'Honneur. . . . You must read the book. It is a chilling, baffling psychological fooler that sparkles with all the juicy terrors that can attack the heart and body." Howard Junker

Newsweek 70:106F D 18 '67 300w

"The final explanation is too ingenious for belief: up to that point the story is gripping, and the heroine sympathetic."

TLS p512 My 16 '68 60w

JARDINE, COLIN CHARLES BAYNE. See Bayne-Jardine, C. C.

JASPER, RONALD C. D. George Bell, Bishop of Chichester 401p $11.20 Oxford

B or 92 Bell, George Kennedy Allen, Bp. 67-108893

A biography of the man who "during his years as dean of Canterbury in the late 1920s and his early years as bishop of Chichester was able to attract [important writers and artists] for drama commissionings and art festivals; . . . [who] needed the British government for action in behalf of German Jews as early as 1934 . . . and labored incessantly throughout World War II in behalf of refugees. . . . Bell publicly decried the Allied saturation bombing of German cities and America's use of the atomic bomb on Japan . . . [and he] was at the centre of all the decisive developments [of the quest for Christian union]. These five items are among the major themes amplified in the book." (Christian Century)

"Ten years have passed since the death of . . . the Anglican bishop of Chichester whose ecumenical work has been of decisive importance for western Christendom since the late 1920s. . . . Jasper handles the intricate web of Bell's relationship with the church and world with mastery. He invites the contemporary with-it generation of Christians to take a careful look at how Bell brought it all off." F. D. Lueking

Christian Century 85:621 My '68 600w

"This is a quiet biography of a quiet man, the kind of biography which Bell would have liked, because he would have hated to be written up. The stature is all there in the book; but some readers will almost miss it, because the biographer prefers to understate. At times we seem to be reading of an ordinary and lovable man, without much colour. Lovable indeed he was, and certainly he had neither eloquence nor panache. . . . But he had plenty of colour, even if he preferred to hide it. The gentle manner could mask strong opinions about people and things, and private conversation with him stirred and excited."

Economist 225:293 O 21 '67 480w

"[This] is a thoroughly worthwhile and readable account of a very great churchman. It is difficult to believe that it will not have successors, for the very completeness of Bell's religion brought him into the mainstream of the life of his time; but his successors, if and when they come, cannot fail to be in Canon Jasper's debt."

TLS p179 F 22 '68 850w

JASPERS, KARL. The future of Germany; tr. and ed. by E. B. Ashton; with a foreword by Hannah Arendt. 173p $4.95 Univ. of Chicago press

320.943 Germany (Federal Republic)

67-25510

A philosopher at the University of Basel who was dismissed from the University of Heidelberg by Hitler presents "criticisms of the Federal Republic of West Germany. . . . [The foreword claims] that Jaspers' main thesis is that West Germany is 'well on its way to abolishing parliamentary democracy, and may be drifting towards some kind of dictatorship which, under certain conditions . . . could become a threat to peace in Europe.' [Jaspers maintains that] Germans are ruled by 'party oligarchy' . . . personified in the present 'Grand Coalition' of the two principal parties. . . . [and concludes that] the West Germans should help their East German brethren economically, should abandon the 'Hallstein Doctrine,' grant recognition of East Germany, . . . rely on the alliance with the United States, stay non-nuclear, propagate peace." (New Repub) "In the American version those chapters which were made obsolete by the end of the Erhard regime are [omitted]. . . . In 'Postscript 1967' [the author] shows why the neonationalists could make headway in recent elections." (Library J) The book is translated from the third part of Wohin treibt die Bundesrepublik? and includes material from the author's Antwort zur Kritik meiner Schrift "Wohin treibt die Bundesrepublik?"

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl

America 118:616 My 4 '68 70w

Reviewed by Eric Waldman

Ann Am Acad 337:169 My '68 800w

Reviewed by Hans Speier

Bul Atomic Sci 24:23 D '68 3500w

Choice 5:1041 O '68 200w

"The book retains Jaspers's still valid basic criticism of the West German democracy and the serious condition in which the whole nation finds itself. . . . Jaspers may not always be right . . . but he deserves to be read carefully. For all academic and larger public libraries." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 92:4424 D 1 '67 150w

"Alas, it would be difficult to imagine a piece of writing more uneven in its thought and argument than [this]. It is full of trenchant criticisms . . . full of good ideas and interesting proposals—interspersed by frequently nonsensical political judgments. Jaspers knows nothing about politics. . . . [He] fails to note that when Adenauer eventually went, it was because of popular clamor against him. . . . At another point Jaspers writes that all German generals, save those who actively opposed Hitler, were 'cowards.' This is a wild oversimplification. Again, he declaims against 'emergency legislation.' There has been virtually none in the history of the Federal Republic. . . . Yet this book concludes with a spate of good ideas." Terence Prittle

New Repub 157:30 N 11 '67 1300w

"In contrast to the aloof attitude of many German scholars, [Jaspers] has plunged into the battle for men's minds, to warn his countrymen of the fragile roots of their freedom, which he feels deeply, has come to them as a gift of the Western victors, not as the fruit of their own struggle. . . . [He] raises vital issues for Germans to ponder and act on. Outside Germany, those who hope for a bright future of a democratic Germany can read Jaspers's appeal as both a warning and a sign of hope for the growth of a more active democratic spirit among Germans." P. E. Mosely

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 31 '67 500w

Reviewed by Daniel Schorr

Sat R 50:29 D 16 '67 600w

"The terrible and perhaps impossible demand Jaspers is making of his countrymen is that they choose to be good rather than try to be great. In his book, The Future of Mankind [BRD 1961], he presented the same irritatingly simple ultimatum to the world. . . . In his anxiety to avoid what he regards as the German sins of dogmatism and obsessive blueprinting, Jaspers is even more vexingly silent than most philosophers about the ultimate question:

JASPERS, KARL—Continued

Just how do men make themselves better? The book offers no answer, only a corrective statement of the problem."

Time 90:119 D ■ '67 750w

TLS p847 Ag 8 '68 700w

Reviewed by R. M. Hunt

Va Q R 44:132 winter '68 600w

JAWORSKYJ, MICHAEL, ed. & tr. Soviet political thought; an anthology. 621p $15
Johns Hopkins press

320.5 Communism—Philosophy. Communism—Russia. Dialectical materialism 67-23573

"A collection of translated selections from Soviet writings on political theory, published from the Bolshevik Revolution to 1961. . . . Professor Jaworskyj seeks to reveal the complexity and richness of Soviet political thought as expressed in the writings of [such] political and intellectual luminaries [as Stuchka, Podvolotskii, Pashukanis, Krylenko, Naumov, Trainin, Vyshinskii, Konstantinov, and assorted "collective authors" from the 1950's]. . . . The selections themselves are . . . grouped into contributions of the ideologically less rigid 1920's, the Stalinist era, and post-Stalin times." (Library J) Indexes of names and of subjects.

"Aside from the editor's introduction—a heavy going didactic exercise in shopworn platitudes—the documents offer several agreeable surprises to students of Soviet political and legal philosophy. Selecting from lesser known writings Jaworskyj has successfully conveyed the essential arguments and modes of reasoning of the regime's leading legal and philosophical apologists between 1917-1961. For several good reasons, the foremost being our easier access to more meaningful empirical data, the institutional and legal emphasis in the teaching of Soviet politics went out of fashion about 10 years ago. Only a few dedicated historians of Stalinist legal doublethink will be interested in this nostalgic compendium for purposes of current research on Soviet politics."

Choice 5:556 Je '68 130w

"Not all specialists in Soviet studies will completely accept the 'thesis,' as presented and implied in this book. . . . but it will surely spur serious rethinking of popular beliefs about the history of Soviet Russia. . . . It breaks what is essentially new ground for non-Russian reading students [by] eschewing the conventional focus upon the ruminations of Marx, Lenin, and Stalin,—the 'hero-approach.' . . . In his introductory material [Jaworskyj] makes it clear that, while premises were orthodox, conclusions varied greatly. . . . For informed readers." Hyman Kublin

Library J 92:4164 N 15 '67 200w

JAY, ANTONY, Jr. auth. The English. See Frost, D.

JAY, ANTONY. Management and Machiavelli; an inquiry into the politics of corporate life. 244p $4.95 Holt

658 Industrial management 68-10057

In this interpretation of the psychology and conduct of modern corporations the author's thesis is that "the corporation reflects the same principles of management as the medieval political state. . . . [He attempts to demonstrate] that corporations are in fact states: some feudal, some Tudor, some eighteenth-century Spain, some Renaissance Italy. They have barons and courtiers, orthodox religion and dissenting nonconformism, war and peace treaties. Their presidents and chief executives bear resemblance to Bismarck or George I or Czar Nicholas II." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"It would be risky to call Jay's book seminal, for similarities between the worlds of politics and business have been grasped at least intuitively by both politicians and businessmen. But his spirited approach and his obvious zest for the task lead him to at least six or seven specific observations which are well worth pursuing by both businessmen and history students, as well as those of us who recognize the makings of a good new parlor game when we see it." Mark Strage

Book World p5 F 4 '68 600w

Christian Century 85:172 F 7 '68 20w

Reviewed by Alan Harrington

Commonweal 88:77 Ap 5 '68 1300w

"[Mr. Jay] has written entertainingly, often with tongue in cheek, filling his book with interesting historical allusions and illustrations which he sometimes stretches to make the point; but the net effect is a rather unusual and vividly perceptive treatment of managerial issues. This work is in sharp contrast with typical writings on business management and will appeal particularly to students and administrators who are of a literary cast of mind." Paul Wasserman

Library J 93:545 F 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by E. T. Chase

New Repub 158:37 F 24 '68 1500w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson

New Statesman 74:439 O 6 '67 250w

"[Mr. Jay] is a lively writer and an ingenious soul. His bright idea would have made an excellent essay in a periodical like Encounter. Like many a bright idea, this one does not quite justify extension into a book." Robert Lekachman

N Y Times Bk R p16 F 11 '68 800w

New Yorker 44:158 Mr 23 '68 60w

"The book is an interesting, though superficial and unconvincing, foray into an unexplored field. For all its faults—perhaps precisely because of them—Management and Machiavelli should grace the shelves of men who aspire to rank and power." Theodore Levitt

Sat R 51:57 Mr 23 '68 1500w

JAY, SIMON. Sleepers can kill. 237p $4.50
Doubleday

68-17816

"A Communist cell planted in New Zealand after the war sleeps peacefully for . . . years until the bright scientists at Ardmore, an Auckland University Engineering College, develop a revolutionary kind of maser that becomes a secret weapons project based on a new application of the laser principle. The strange death of a cleaner at the college alerts the army and the secret service section, called Fisheries, to the danger, and Mike Connor has to become a bird watcher, among other things, to find the answers." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:185 Ag 1 '68 60w

"Jay has concocted an adventure touched with humor and possessed of an agent a cut above the vicious-chop-to-the-neck boys." A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p12 Ag 18 '68 90w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:2694 J1 '68 90w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p16 Ag 25 '68 100w

"A New Zealand thriller, promising, rather than excellent, but certainly deserving notice, about the patient tracking-down of a long-quiet enemy sleeper cell suddenly activated."

TLS p380 Ap 11 '68 30w

JEANNERET-GRIS, CHARLES ÉDOUARD.
See Le Corbusier

JEDRZEJEWICZ, WACLAW, ed. Diplomat in Berlin, 1933-1939. See Lipski, J.

JEFFARES, A. NORMAN, ed. Fair liberty was all his cry; a tercentenary tribute to Jonathan Swift, 1667-1745. 410p $11 St Martins

828 Swift, Jonathan

67-12827

This anthology "contains discussions and studies of [Swift's] life and work by leading scholars and critics. Some of the articles have been commissioned while others are reprinted. The contributors are: J. C. Beckett; Marjorie W. Buckley; Herbert Davis; Bonamy Dobrée; Irvin Ehrenpreis; Mackie L. Jarrell; Claire Lamont; R. R. Leavis; George P. Mayhew; Vivian Mercier; Nora M. Mohler; D. Nichol Smith; Marjorie Nicolson; George Orwell; Ricardo Quintana; A. L. Rowse; Kathleen M. Williams; T. G. Wilson; Virginia Woolf; W. B. Yeats." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

"Two critical essays appear for the first time: a balanced analysis of Swift's humor by Bonamy Dobrée and harmless but pretentious 'discovery' by Marjorie Buckley of the 'Key to the Language of the Houyhnhnms.' Other pieces commissioned for the book include the editor's introduction, Ricardo Quintana's 'Modest Appraisal' of Swift scholarship, 1945-65, and Claire Lamont's checklist of Swiftiana, 1945-65. These latter aids are valuable, but since (except for Quintana's commentary) the information is in standard bibliographies, hardly justify the price. But the book is sufficiently attractive in binding, critical apparatus . . . and range of content, and it should be useful for reserved reading in 18th-century literature courses. . . . The range emphasizes how diverse are estimates of Swift as man, writer, and churchman and, perhaps more significant, how scanty is the evidence on which some estimates are based."

Choice 5:195 Ap '68 160w

Reviewed by J. V. Guerinet

Mod Lang J 52:384 O '68 600w

"The collection is not exclusively literary. It will appeal to the general reader by the liveliness and readability of most of the essays and the wide range of subject-matter. The topics range from Professor J. C. Beckett's cool essay on 'Swift as an Ecclesiastical Politician' to Vivian Mercier's 'Swift and the Gaelic Tradition', though the latter finds it difficult to make much of his subject. The Irish parts of the volume . . . are among the most entertaining."

TLS p941 O 5 '67 350w

Va Q R 44:xxiv winter '68 90w

JEFFARES, A. NORMAN. W. B. Yeats, man and poet. 365p il $6; pa $2.50 Barnes & Noble
B or 92 Yeats, William Butler 66-31815

This study is based on a "chronological documentation of the poet's life related to brief exegeses of the poems in the order in which they were composed." (Poetry) For the first edition see BRD 1949.

"This is still an acceptable introduction to Yeats. It takes up Yeats' life and works as a single unit—quoting when it must illustrate the former, commenting when it must clarify the latter. Although it does not take up the works as such, it does explain the autobiographical allusions of the works cited. It is now, however, a book which should be read straight through: its usage is too casual (e.g. misplaced modifiers, a grotesque overworking of 'due to'), and it relies too heavily upon the letters to Olivia Shakespeare for a complete picture."

Choice 4:532 J1 '67 140w

"The insights gained are rarely individually profound but in the aggregate make a rich and meaningful, if somewhat kaleidoscopic, pattern. But the positivistic approach breaks down at points when the man who attempted to communicate with the spirit world and often believed he did so is seen to fall out of the net of Jeffares' assumptions. The section dealing with Yeats' production from August, 1931, to February, 1932, seemed to suffer particularly from this disorder. . . . Apart from such limitations, the virtue of this work is its clarity, a quality lacking in some recent studies of Yeats, and it should continue to be valuable to the undergraduate student." Bruce Cutler

Poetry 112:54 Ap '68 230w

JEFFREYS, M. V. C. John Locke: prophet of common sense. 120p $3.75; pa $2.35 Barnes & Noble

370.1 Locke, John [67-92529]

A study of the seventeenth-century English philosopher's views on education.

"[The] emeritus professor of education (University of Birmingham) is well known for numerous books and articles on education. He has written his study of Locke's ideas about education, both in their historical context and in relation to the problems of our own age, in an effective style; the book is well documented. Particular attention is given to the index, suggestions for further reading, and an interesting appendix on the Mellon Collection of Locke Papers. Compact but thorough, it is a most important new study of distinct value for upper division and graduate level courses in philosophy or foundations of education."

Choice 5:240 Ap '68 150w

"[This book] profoundly involves an author who 'cannot help liking' his subject. There ensues a strenuous historical-biographical-philosophical sprint, with occasional pauses to lament such recent iniquities as transistors and teen-agers. Unlike Gay, Jeffreys minimizes Locke's influence on Rousseau. Contrary to Garforth, he reads Conduct of the Understanding as emphasizing habit rather than stressing learning how to learn. But the whole evinces a Spartan utility, serving the student while honoring the master." John Calam

Sat 11 50:82 O 21 '67 70w

"One of the difficulties in discussing John Locke as a 'philosopher of education' is that he was never interested in 'education' in the modern narrow sense of the word. He disapproved of all schools. His subject was upbringing, or more precisely the upbringing of a gentleman. . . . One of the several merits of Professor Jeffrey's admirable exposé of Locke's Thoughts on Education is that he avoids the common mistake of supposing that what Locke had to say had anything to do with public instruction as such, or even with the breeding of a scholar."

TLS p114 F 1 '68 700w

JEFFRIES, SIR CHARLES. Illiteracy; a world problem. 204p $5 Praeger

379 Illiteracy

67-24683

The author surveys "the problem of illiteracy and discusses the special techniques that have been evolved to overcome it . . . —the pioneer work of missionaries, mass education, literacy campaigns, and the programs of UNESCO and the United Nations itself. . . . [There is] a description of the literacy campaign in Northern Nigeria and a survey of similar recent campaigns in French-speaking Africa and in Cuba. Sir Charles examines the provision of reading material needed to follow up literacy campaigns and the use of mass media. He concludes with an evaluation of the social, economic, and political implications of [illiteracy]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1002 O '68 180w

"[The author] is content to assume that literacy is a good thing and to leave it at that without even posing the necessary question: literacy for what? . . . [He] does not suggest how literacy, once achieved, can be prevented from becoming an unused skill that is either forgotten or the source of 'unsatisfied aspirations.' He even says that literacy should be considered a goal in itself, divorced from education programmes that might detract from the achievement of that goal. . . . The most interesting parts of the book are the sections that examine particular literacy campaigns, such as that led by the author's brother in Northern Nigeria. . . . For all his enthusiasm for his subject, Sir Charles fails to ask, much less answer, the crucial questions."

Economist 226:44 F 10 '68 380w

"Jeffries, former deputy under-secretary of state in the British Colonial Office, attempts to bridge the gap between fact and fiction about illiteracy and he presents the layman with a very personalized and informal account of pioneer attacks on the problem and the psychological, intellectual, and technical aspects of current programs, dwelling most on past efforts of the Commonwealth in promoting literacy. . . . [But he] omits the efforts made in combating illiteracy in the Western Hemisphere—outside of a description of the program of the Cuban revolutionary government in 1960. . . . Thus this book is recommended only for larger libraries and those maintaining comprehensive collections on international education." B. J. Brewster

Library J 93:2001 My 15 '68 240w

JEFFS, RAE. Brendan Behan: man and showman. 256p il $4.95 World pub.

B or 92 Behan, Brendan

68-13713

This volume covers the period 1957 to 1964. Mrs. Jeffs had been Behan's publicity manager. She "took down on tape, transcribed, and often edited Brendan Behan's Island [BRD 1963], Brendan Behan's New York Rebel [BRD 1964], and Confessions of an Irish Rebel [BRD 1966] and was constantly at the writer's side toward the end of his life. . . . She depicts not only the showman Behan—the drunken fool he so often played in public—but the inner man that she, among few others, was privileged to see." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:570 N 30 '68 70w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p4 Mr 17 '68 750w

JEFFS, RAE—Continued

"The book lacks the ebullience of Brendan's own work and, like his behavior on most of the occasions described, tends to be painful and embarrassing. [Jeffs] touches only briefly and superficially on the roots of his problem.

The book is recommended for academic and larger public libraries." J. F. Moran
Library J 93:1889 My 1 '68 180w

Reviewed by Desmond MacNamara
New Statesman 72:750 N 18 '66 280w

Reviewed by Kenneth Allsop
N Y Times Bk R p10 My 12 '68 1050w

"If the book were not about the writing genius of Behan, it would have to be ticked off as a tiresome account of one long, repetitive drinking jag. Because it is about Behan one reads closely. . . . Mrs. Jeffs provides an intimate view of book publishing in England and the United States. Seldom is the reader made privy to the difficulty in getting a finished manuscript from an important author, the struggle to wrench the proofs from his hands and, finally, the urging and the coaxing to get him to produce another profitable work. . . . The author is to be commended for setting down the sad tale of this strange friendship. Four years after Behan's death at forty-one, it does provide insight into his mind, and his methods. Some day Mrs. Jeffs's book will furnish valuable background for a full-dress biography." Louis Zara

Sat R 51:43 Ap 13 '68 650w

"Rae Jeffs has written a sad book. It deals with the last, lost years of a writer of genius: a catalogue of drunkenness and humiliation with only an occasional glimmer of kindness or wit to hint at his truer nature. . . . In effect Mrs. Jeffs is only explaining how Brendan Behan's last books came to be written at all. Without her there would certainly have been none, and her book, for all its chronicling of the demonic waywardness of an alcoholic, is a touching tribute to a man who was ruined but never wholly destroyed. . . . There are one or two minor mysteries in Mrs. Jeffs's book which will at least intrigue the reader. . . . The proof-reading could have been improved." TLS p1000 N 3 '66 1000w

JENCKS, CHRISTOPHER. The academic revolution [by] Christopher Jencks & David Riesman. 580p $10 Doubleday

378.73 Colleges and universities—U.S. Education, Higher 68-15597

"This book attempts a sociological and historical analysis of American higher education,' [the authors] explain. . . . 'It begins with a general theory about the development of American society and American colleges, then moves on to discuss different species of colleges and their relationships to the various special-interest groups that founded them. Not only does it try to describe the past and future of these relationships—it also tries to evaluate them.' . . . [This is] the first of a two-volume set; the second is to be called 'The Academic Enterprise,' and will include detailed studies of colleges in operation." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by A. T. Wilder
Atlantic 222:87 Ag '68 1050w

Reviewed by George Keller
Book World p1 My 19 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Dennis Duffy
Canadian Forum 48:128 S '68 1600w

"[The authors] have performed a tremendous service in this [volume] addressed to the relationship between higher education and American society. They have placed into some coherent form what has been happening on the American campus during the Vietnam decade. They define the 'academic revolution' as the rise to power of the academic professors. The partial triumph of meritocracy, subsumed by the life-style of the national upper middle-class, has created the life-style of the new university and the new faculty. The authors doubt that 'adults can indefinitely contain the generational revolt' and they predict that 'in the long run, undergraduates are almost certain to win increasing autonomy.' . . . [They] think little will be changed because, after all, a student is a person in the process of becoming something else. . . . It's hard to make revolutions stick when classes change each year. This volume is eminently worth reading (although it is not, stylistically, readable and the printing is terrible) since it is the first major attempt to describe the many aspects of American higher education." Arnold Reichman

Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 20 '68 350w

Reviewed by Richard Horchler
Commonweal 89:359 D 6 '68 60w

Reviewed by J. W. Stein
Library J 93:1893 My 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Allen Lacy
Nation 207:120 Ag 9 '68 800w

Reviewed by Martin Duberman
New Repub 158:26 Je 22 '68 2000w

Reviewed by H. D. Aiken
N Y Rev of Books 11:30 Jl 11 '68 4000w

"[The] essays on Catholic and Negro colleges and universities are impressive, covering in detail the development and present ecology of these distinctive institutions and telling the reader all he could conceivably wish to know about their peculiar problems and characteristics, and providing a shrewd if hardly startling prediction of their future. . . . The most valuable section of the book is its discussion of the function of higher education in the quest for social mobility. . . . [However, the authors] do not see the colleges and universities as agencies of major social change—and they are rather scornful of those who do. . . . Student activism is taken seriously only as a menace." E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Times Bk R p2 My 19 '68 2600w
New Yorker 44:95 Ag 10 '68 130w

"The fascinating story of the sociological development of higher education in this country is now told—exhaustively, unevenly, without adequate balance or documentation, and sometimes brilliantly. . . . At the conclusion, the reader feels inundated by a confusion of personal opinions, factual data, and frequent, sweeping historical references. . . . The most telling chapter by far is one in which the authors claim that American colleges and universities have never been democratic in accessibility and have become increasingly less so. . . . The apparent satisfaction with which Jencks and Riesman view 'the triumph of academic professionalism' belies their concern over rejection of the lower classes from our institutions of higher learning. . . . [The book] accepts no viable alternative. . . . Excellence is too narrowly defined." E. D. Eddy

Sat H 51:82 My 18 '68 2150w

Reviewed by Marvin Bressler
Science 161:1120 S 13 '68 2100w

"[A] very elaborate study of the present and the future of American higher education. With great boldness, the authors go in for prophecy as well as extremely acute and heavily supported description. Whether they would prophesy as confidently today as they did a year ago is a matter for speculation, and perhaps even more a matter for speculation and for alarm is the thesis which they do advance. . . . It is to be hoped that [this] book will be gratefully studied by the numerous British educators who think, with very little foundation for the belief, that they know a great deal about the American educational system from the elementary school up. . . . Some of the problems created by the 'subway colleges' are present in Britain, and perhaps we are, as Professor Jencks and Professor Riesman suggest, rather too much dazzled by the social advantages which are assumed to come from residential education to notice at what a great cost, in more than money, these advantages are often bought." TLS p1213 O 31 '68 1250w

JENKINS, FRANCES B., jt. ed. Bibliography. See Downs, R. B.

JENKINS, ROMILLY. Byzantium; the Imperial centuries, A.D. 610-1071. 400p maps $10 Random house

949.5 Byzantine Empire—History 66-21455

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. E. Seaver
Class World 62:109 N '68 340w

Reviewed by J. M. Hussey
Engl Hist R 83:148 Ja '68 170w

Reviewed by D. A. Miller
Social Studies 59:273 N '68 450w

JENKINS, ROY. Essays and speeches; ed. by Anthony Lester. 288p $5.95 Chilmark press 828 Great Britain—Politics and government
—20th century 68-11920

A "series of essays and speeches by [the] British member of parliament who reached the front rank while still in his forties." (Library J) The first section "is concerned with individual British politicians from Gladstone, Balfour, Curzon and Lloyd George to Bevan and Gaitskell. Other topics considered are Britain and the Common Market; the late President Kennedy; the election of the present Pope; the nature and function of the public corporations; and the state of the law concerning obscenity. . . . The book is rounded off by a series of speeches made while in office during the past two and a half years." (Publisher's note)

"Mr. Jenkins's account of his struggle as a back-bencher endeavoring to put through a private member's bill is most illuminating to the American reader. His concern with the law and with controversial issues such as obscenity while he was Home Secretary are of considerable interest and make good reading. . . . For the larger public, college, and university libraries." P. W. Filby
Library J 93:1491 Ap 1 '68 120w

"[The author is now in] the crucial position of Chancellor of the Exchequer and is . . . regarded in many quarters as the likely successor to Harold Wilson as leader of the Labour Party. This gives added interest to what is a well-written and interesting collection of historical essays in its own right. Recommended for political science and browsing collections." Norman Horrocks
Library J 93:2887 Ag '68 150w

Reviewed by Jean Gardner
N Y Times Bk R p49 My 12 '68 280w

"Among politicians it is vastly easier to be distinguished as a writer than as a statesman: the competition is virtually non-existent. If he were a fraction ■ good as he is, Roy Jenkins would still be outstanding in that league. . . . He has the gift—rare in politicians and journalists alike—of being assertive, even aggressive without egotism. This valuable political miscellany is more worth an index than many books so provided. Perhaps it was modesty that omitted one. More likely, the author is too busy now to bother with things like that. . . . Many of the thoughts—like those, from the earlier brink, about going into Europe—are still relevant. He can admirably summarize both personality and achievement, as in the pieces about Dalton and his friend Hugh Gaitskell. In view of the headlong rush of events one would forgive the book for dating far more than in fact it does."
TLS p1122 N 30 '67 550w

JENKINS, ROY. Mr Balfour's poodle: peers v. people. 320p pl $5.95 Chilmark press 942.082 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century 68-11176

First published in England in 1954, this is an account of the constitutional crisis "which began in 1909, when the House of Lords rejected a money bill passed by the House of Commons (the Liberal budget), and which ended in 1911, when the Parliament Act drastically reduced the power of the Lords." (New Yorker) Index.

"[The now] Chancellor of the Exchequer has always been an intelligent and civilized politician, moderate but not dull, with an uncharacteristically probing mind. His book is a sound study of the conflict between Asquith and the House of Lords. Those whose libraries carry such histories and who missed this fascinating study the first time can now remedy the lack." H. J. Steck
Library J 93:2867 Ag '68 140w

"When Mr. Jenkins is good, he is most enlightening; accurately and broadmindedly, he describes the individuality of almost everybody within the Liberal coalition, and explains the virtues and practical contributions of men as diverse as Asquith, Lloyd George, and Sir Edward Grey. But Mr. Jenkins cannot appreciate a Tory."
New Yorker 44:126 Je 1 '68 210w

JENNER, DELIA. Letters from Peking. 105p pl $4.80 Oxford 67-93514
915.1 Peking—Description
In 1963, as an English girl of nineteen, the author "went with her husband to China and taught at the Peking Broadcasting Institute. Her book offers a selection of letters written home during the two years of her stay." (TLS)

"Jenner's slim volume . . . might well be dismissed ■ teenaged naiveté were it not for the often fascinating eyewitness pictures drawn of Peking's indoctrinating skills. Given far more than the customary locomotive rights, she accepts at face value the usual staged interviews . . . and tends to attribute all ills to pre-Communist mismanagement, thus illustrating the hazards involved in personal observation. But she also offers new insights into sometimes mundane subjects (e.g. diets, prisons, pets) and clearly delineates the status of educational programs."

Choice 4:1430 F '68 180w

Reviewed by Margaret Prang
Pacific Affairs 41:424 fall '68 200w

"The physical presence of China itself escapes [Mrs. Jenner]. . . . With people she is more successful, but here, too, her comments are sometimes artless. . . . The merit of her book is that it does much to present the Chinese ■ recognizable human beings; its defect, that she so often fails to give the details that would have been worth reading."

TLS p677 JI 27 '67 400w

JENNINGS, DEAN. Barbara Hutton; a candid biography. 301p pl $7.95 Fell

B or 92 Hutton, Barbara 68-18140

The life of the Woolworth heiress from childhood to the present.

Reviewed by Roberta Wasserman
Library J 93:3778 O 15 '68 120w

"This is a lowering record of seven marriages and general waste, unhelpt by the author's phrases piquantes." Arthur Marshall
New Statesman 76:548 O 25 '68 120w

"More depressing than anything else is the tepidness of the response which the whole sad story evokes. Tragedy it is not, if only for lack of dignity about the way what must once have been a viable life has been wasted. But surely, one should feel some degree of human compassion for the pudgy little girl whose heredity seems to have been bad and whose environment was certainly unstable. . . . Alas, the tears will not flow, possibly because the Princess sheds them so freely on her own behalf. For whatever reason, such sympathy as one can summon goes to certain of her husbands."

TLS p1230 O 31 '68 320w

JENNINGS, ELIZABETH. Collected poems, 1967. 265p $7.50 Dufour 67-27373

This volume contains selections from seven previous volumes of poetry by the author, her "translations of the Michelangelo sonnets and a group of recent, hitherto unpublished poems." (Publisher's note) Index of first lines.

"[The author] writes with restraint but ■ deep inner turmoil is evident. The gentle aura of the many faces of love, which surround the poems soon becomes a cry of bereavement and anguish. . . . Her lyrics are simple and many of them are rhymed. Curiously they do not read well aloud but they have a quiet impact of beauty. This poetry cries out from the inside." Jerome Cushman
Library J 93:3566 O 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Julian Symonds
New Statesman 74:476 O 13 '67 380w

"[There is] a remarkable consistency about this work, in which the few sidetracks and diversions are almost consistently weaker and less certain than the main progression. . . . Even at their most raw, as in the later poems of sickness and breakdown, [a] formality preserves a composure which, running counter to what the poems are about, adds to, rather than diminishes, the tension felt like an unheard note behind the level cadences and the cool words. It is as if Miss Jennings fixes and assuages turbulence and disorder by speaking so calmly and in such level tones. . . . This is a substantial and impressive book. . . . The excisions from the earlier books seem on the whole the right ones."

TLS p840 S 21 '67 460w

JENNINGS, J. N., ed. Landform studies from Australia and New Guinea; ed. by J. N. Jennings and J. A. Mabbutt; with a foreword by E. S. Hills. 434p 11 maps $19.50 Cambridge

551.4 Physical geography—Australia. Physical geography—New Guinea 67-94464

"This volume aims to provide a geographical and topical sampling of recent landform investigations in the greater Australian area. The use of soils in understanding the formation and evolution of landscapes [and] the factor of climatic differences, both spatial and temporal, and its role in the production of landscape features is [discussed]. . . . The 17 articles by 17 authors cover areas from Tasmania to New Guinea and topics from corals to karsts. Modifications of slopes by slides, sloopwash, periglacial processes, and more ordinary forms of erosion are considered. Features of coastal and interior areas are described." (Science) Chapter bibliographies. Indexes of authors cited; place names; general index.

"In this excellently written and well planned book a touch of the dramatic serves as a thread of continuity, if not in detailed subject, certainly in the wide geographic extent from glacial to tropical landforms. The editors have chosen an impressive list of contributors who impart the feeling of intense interest in the particular physiographic features they have studied. The reader could enjoy the book even more had the editors included a simple regional map for the benefit of us who have not lived in Australia."

Choice 5:522 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by R. P. Sharp

Science 159:867 F 23 '68 500w

JENSEN, OLIVER. American album [by] Oliver Jensen, Joan Paterson Kerr [and] Murray Belsky. 352p 11 $17.50 Am. heritage; for sale by Simon & Schuster

917.3 U.S.—Social life and customs 68-29348

A collection of three hundred and twenty photographs taken in the United States by both professional and amateur photographers "from the era of the daguerreotype in the 1840's to the [early] 1900's [accompanied by text and captions]." (Library J)

"The past shows little to regret; our cities were always hideous. But it was in the small towns and the country that most of middle-class life went on in those days, and most of the charm is there. . . . It is too bad that the jocose and condescending text accompanying these photographs makes the vulgar error of supposing there is something innocent and absurd about the past. Less nudging in the ribs and more accessible information about the only things one needs to know—where, when, what, of and by whom—would have done better justice to a splendid collection of photographs." Eve Auchincloss

Book World p6 S 1 '68 650w

"This large book of photographs is a superbly produced volume that gives a close-up look at American life. . . . A few scenes by Brady, Muybridge, and others are familiar, but the majority of photographs by little-known photographers are published for the first time. . . . The original prints are enlarged to full-page size. . . . This enlargement plus careful printing and slick paper stock creates stunning scenes of quiet farm life or wretched slums. Mr. Jensen's text is informative; his captions, a counterpoint to the pictures. The focus is not on historic events, but on how people lived, played, toiled, dressed, and traveled in buckboard, boat, trolley, and early automobiles. This book is a notable addition to the literature of photography and social history and well worth the price. Public libraries can anticipate a demand for it." T. W. Wright

Library J 93:4285 N 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R p7 S 8 '68 360w

New Yorker 44:248 N 30 '68 230w

Reviewed by M. R. Weiss

Sat R 51:55 N 30 '68 40w

JETT, STEPHEN C. Navajo wildlands; "as long as the rivers shall run"; phot. by Philip Hyde; with sels. from Willa Cather [and others] ed. by Kenneth Brower; foreword by David Brower. 160p $25 Sierra club

917.91 Southwest, New—Description and travel 67-30536

This volume "praises the beauty and interprets the significance of America's natural scene [It is illustrated by] 74 color photographs of the area roughly bounded by Denver, Salt Lake City, Phoenix, and Santa Fe." (Choice)

"A fine addition to the series. . . . [The photographs] are excellent. The main text by geomorphologist Stephen C. Jett (University of California at Davis) is intercepted by quotations by other writers. These are in another typeface, but the difference is not enough to set them apart from the main text. The photographs appear now on the left, now double spread, now on the right; the rhythm thus imposed is distracting. . . . Recommended for libraries specializing in geography, anthropology, conservation; of secondary value to photographic collections."

Choice 5:525 Je '68 130w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 8 '68 250w

"The large form and high gloss of this sensitively made volume are not pretentious. Centered near the Four Corners of Utah, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico, the landscapes from Shiprock to Window Rock—Black Mesa, Monument Valley and the Canyon de Chelly—can support this showmanship, which might crush a less strongboned countryside. . . . The photographer shows physiographic vista and single rock, hogan and trail, yet he never photographs a man's face. The Navaho who hold the land are too private a people to cheapen with candid shots, he explains. The text is mainly a set of lyrical and apt citations, from Willa Cather and Oliver La Farge and Navaho myth. The landscape holds a magical appeal to eye and mind that rises from these pages like smoke from piñon fire."

Sci Am 218:138 Je '68 270w

JETTMAR, KARL. Art of the Steppes [tr. by Ann E. Keep]. 272p 141 11 54col 11 maps $6.50 Crown

709.39 Art, Scythian. Animals in art 67-17700

"The birth of the 'animal style,' widest known of the styles associated with the Steppe peoples, is treated in the last of 15 chapters which discuss the character and archaeological contexts of earlier Scythian, Anan'ino, Sarmatian, Minusinsk, and other artifactual and art materials of the many . . . nomad cultures of the Pontus, Central Asia, and Siberia." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Index. First published in German under the title: Die frühen Steppenvölker.

"Jettmar is probably the leading living non-Russian scholar of the cultures and arts of the Steppe peoples. . . . Fifty-four superb, hand tinted color plates, 141 drawings, three maps, and a two-page chronological chart. Exemplary bibliography and index. To supplement the few maps and drawings of tomb architecture, one can turn to E. Phillips' The Royal Hordes [BRD 1966], a lesser achievement. This book will probably appeal most to archaeologists and anthropologists as a synthesis and reconstruction of material published in Russian or in sources not readily obtained. The art historian should find it equally instructive despite its inevitably heavy concentration on chronology and archaeological problems. All scholarly libraries should purchase the series."

Choice 5:766 S '68 250w

"[The author] deals with the south Russian Scythian and Sarmatian schools and also with those which evolved in the east, . . . as well as in the Caucasus. . . . In each case he provides an outline of the archaeological explorations which have been carried out in these regions as well as a summary of the known history, customs and way of life of each community, combining it with an account of their art and of its development and idiosyncrasies. . . . He gives his own opinions in the last chapter; these are of particular interest when dealing with the question of the style's origin and the extent and duration of its influence in various regions of the eastern and western cultural worlds. The volume thus presents the reader with a more embracing survey than can be found elsewhere, for it deals in the round with the art as a whole instead of probing in depth into that of a specific group or feature of it as most recent books on the subject do. The text is lucid and readable. . . . The data is presented with such clarity that the complexities of the subject tend to pass unrecognized."

TLS p1008 O 26 '67 700w

JEWETT, SARAH ORNE. Letters; with an introd. and notes by Richard Cary. enl & rev ed 186p $7.50 Colby college press

816

68-1503

To the ninety-four letters "which comprised his original 1956 edition [of the letters of this American author, the editor] added forty-eight new 'Colby' letters . . . found in the manuscript collection of Colby College . . . [or] printed in the Colby Library Quarterly." (New Eng Q)

"Three collections of Jewett's letters preceded the present 'enlarged and revised' edition: Annie Fields' (1911), Clara Carter and Carl Weber's (1947), and Cary's in 1956. . . . The present edition has . . . little that is new."

Cary has used his appreciative 1956 introduction and has augmented his very detailed notes to suit the new letters. The text of the letters needed no revisions except for minor matters of punctuation and occasionally of taste in diction. A valuable contribution to the rising interest in Jewett's life and work."

Choice 5:484 Je '68 130w

"The publication of one hundred and forty-two letters by Maine's 'foremost literary lady' is not a particularly significant event. This is not to imply that Sarah Orne Jewett herself lacks significance, but only that the letters in this collection are neither especially interesting in themselves nor do they clarify in any important way the regional genius responsible for Deephaven and The Country of the Pointed Firs. . . . Cary's revisions of the introductory matter and notes are perfunctory, consisting of minor stylistic changes and a few corrections of fact. In Cary's judgment, apparently, the enlargement of the letter collection has not changed his conception of Miss Jewett in any substantial way. Therefore the form of his new edition betrays its only possible justification." Edwin Gittleman

New Eng Q 41:474 S '68 480w

JINKS, ROY G., jr. auth. Smith and Wesson, 1857-1945. See Neal. R. J.

JOBÉ, JOSEPH, ed. The great age of sail [by] B. W. Bathe [and others] with the collaboration of Jean Merrien; tr. by Michael Kelly. 252p il pl col pl $30 N.Y. graphic

623.8 Ships—History. Navigation—History 67-27010

"The curators of the naval museums of Italy, France and Great Britain . . . [have] collaborated in recording and illustrating the development of sailing ships and the skills of those who built and handled them. . . . [The book describes] the evolution of sailing ships in Europe, from the products of the Catalan shipyards of the fifteenth century to . . . the iron five-masted barque, the Preussen. . . . [The text] consists of five main chapters, surveying the design and construction of ships of war and commerce, their performance and the progress of navigational and mechanical aids that gradually improved their economic viability." (TLS)

Choice 5:390 My '68 190w

"This is a glorious representation of the 400-year history of sailing ships. It differs completely from Björn Landström's book, The Ship: an illustrated History [BRD 1962], in that it contains reproductions, does not cover the same time span . . . and is a series of contributions by a number of international authorities. It is an elegant book, designed to attract the public, and it would make a beautiful gift. . . . [It] should be in any maritime collection and in special collections. The 268 illustrations (44 of them in color) are magnificent." P. W. Filby

Library J 92:4393 D 1 '67 110w

"These chapters are so scholarly and readable that to prefer any one of them would be individual. Nevertheless one reader found M. Etienne Taillemite's 'Life Abroad and Ashore' the most informative essay available on the subject, written with the authority of a scientist and in prose that recalls the style of the late Poet Laureate. Interspersed between these chapters are monographs on ships that marked the development of naval architecture, each with its rich complement of plans and diagrams. Those on the Vasa by Anders Franzen and on the Preussen by Captain Helmut Grubbe are but examples of the authenticity and superb documentation of them all. Between the covers of this great book are reproductions of pictures, nautical prints, photographs, plans and elevations assembled from every maritime collection in Europe. The exquisite line and wash drawings of Thomas Ender are remarkable."

TLS p1090 N 16 '67 650w

JOHANN, ROBERT O. Building the human. 192p $4.50 Herder & Herder

233 Man (Theology)

68-20491

A collection of philosophical essays written over the past five years and now reprinted from various journals. "Each essay attempts a critical evaluation of some current idea, habit or attitude in the light of how it works out in practice. . . . The essays . . . are grouped under three main headings. . . . [Part I concerns the] nature of intellectual inquiry. . . . [Part II examines the] character of the situation in which we find ourselves . . . [and] the world as on-going event. . . . Some of the features of the response that seems called for are explored in Part Three. Each of the three parts begins with a selection of shorter essays touching on various aspects of the theme under consideration. These short essays first appeared in the pages of America magazine." (Pref)

"The title of this book should have been Sermons in Catholic Philosophy. Johann's . . . effort appears to be a metaphysical rescue operation in which he restates traditional points of view, often in fresh and interesting ways. . . . The table of contents itself is dialectical, with its three parts titled, respectively, 'Thought,' 'Situation' and 'Response.' Johann's treatments of thought and response are much more convincing than his treatment of situation. . . . Among the thinkers [he] most often cites are Teilhard [de Chardin], H. Richard Niebuhr, Tillich and Joseph Fletcher. . . . [His] volume offers a gently modern interpretation of the Catholic faith—one that seeks to move the reader away from orthodoxy and toward the humanistic tradition. The greatest strengths of the work are readability and an irenic spirit." E. W. Mills

Christian Century 85:1438 N 13 '68 290w

"An interesting book; Father Johann has been considerably influenced by American philosophy, and this influence shows to good effect."

Commonweal 88:274 My 17 '68 50w

"Notwithstanding the fact that [the author] clearly identified himself as a committed Catholic, his book does not exemplify any standard Catholic philosophic position. Much of what he has to say on the human situation and on man as a responding creature exhibits the same sensitivities found in the writings of existential thinkers. . . . [His] book, a highly literate, quite beautifully written and not particularly original statement of position on the philosophic study of man, is recommended for libraries with philosophy collections intended for informed laymen. It is not essential for specialized academic collections." R. A. Gray

Library J 93:1486 Ap 1 '68 200w

JOHN OF THE CROSS, SAINT. The poems of St. John of the Cross; original Spanish texts and English versions newly rev. and rewritten by John Frederick Nims; with an essay A lo divino by Robert Graves. rev ed 151p $5; pa $1.95 Grove

861

67-27891

This volume includes a "discussion of St. John and his art, . . . and a brief commentary on each poem. . . . [The preface examines] the borrowing process by which profane songs are adapted to sacred uses." (Library J)

"This collection, which contains painstaking and effective reworkings of earlier published translations as well as new translations, including most of San Juan's lyrics, shows remarkable fidelity to the originals, clarity, and sensitivity. The introduction . . . abounds in important and fascinating background and interpretive material; and the author has added some useful notes on biography and editions."

JOHN OF THE CROSS, SAINT—Continued
This is not basically a 'scholarly' text; but Nims' reputation as a scholar is well established, and the book should have a wide readership."

Choice 5:782 S '68 120w

"Mr. Nims suggests that while poetry cannot be translated it can sometimes be re-created, and he has succeeded magnificently in his demanding task. On the purely mechanical level, he has preserved intact the rhyme schemes and rhythmical patterns of the poetry. More significantly, St. John's almost erotic spiritual fervor comes through with brilliant freshness." R. C. Turner

Library J 93:1000 Mr 1 '68 230w

JOHN STANDS IN TIMBER. See Stands In Timber, J.

JOHNPOLL, BERNARD K. The politics of futility; the General Jewish workers bund of Poland, 1917-1943. 298p $8.75 Cornell Univ. press
320.9438 General Jewish workers' league in Lithuania, Poland and Russia. Jews in Poland 67-13044

In this study of the role of a minority party, the author analyzes the reasons for the failure of "the Jewish Socialist movement, the Bund, in Poland." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Joseph Dunner

Am Pol Sci R 62:667 Je '68 1650w

"[Professor Johnpoll] makes an important contribution to three areas of scholarly inquiry: the tangled history of Polish politics during the interwar years, the tragic history of East European Jewry, and the tortured history of European Socialism. The well-chosen title is equally applicable to all three areas, but the author has something more specific in mind: the history and fate of the Jewish Workers Bund itself, an organization in which these three currents dramatically merged. . . . The Bund was engaged in a 'politics of futility,' according to the author, since standing alone, even if totally successful in winning the Jewish masses to its ranks, the Bund could never hope to win State power as representative of a minority group. . . . This work combines good scholarship with sympathy for the subject matter." R. E. Zelnik

Ann Am Acad 376:162 Mr '68 380w

"Johnpoll deals with a movement barely known, hardly ever discussed, and makes thereby a signal contribution. . . . The movement was a total failure. The members of the Bund refused to merge with other socialists, and they represented only a fraction of even the Jewish population, being opposed to Zionism and Hebrew and dreaming of a cultural autonomy, based on Yiddish in Poland. They never even had the strength to elect a single candidate to a national office and maintained themselves as an ineffectual group till the final holocaust after 1939. Johnpoll tells this depressing and somehow inspiring story with sympathy and understanding. The only criticism raised might be the arbitrary and faulty transliteration of Polish. Highly recommended for specialized collections dealing with the history of Slavic Europe or Jewish history."

Choice 5:114 Mr '68 200w

JOHNS, FRANCIS A. A bibliography of Arthur Waley. 187p $12.50 Rutgers Univ. press

016.895 Japanese literature—History and criticism. Chinese literature—History and criticism 67-20388

Listed here are "Waley's many translations, critiques, commentaries, and reviews. . . . There are compiler's notes on editions and impressions." (Library J)

Choice 5:752 S '68 120w

"Is there a student of Chinese and Japanese culture who is not deeply indebted to the late Arthur Waley? . . . How extensive his writings were has never been completely known until this thorough bibliography was compiled by [the] librarian, Rutgers University. . . . The bibliographical entries are painstakingly accurate. . . . The book is recommended for libraries with collections on China and Japan." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:1886 My 1 '68 120w

"Mr. Johns's painstaking bibliography lists three dozen full-length books, about 100 articles, and the same number of reviews. His total familiarity with Waley's published work has enabled him to include articles and essays that appeared many decades ago in obscure and often defunct journals, translations of Waley's writing into foreign languages, and musical settings (by Benjamin Britten, Aaron Copland, and others) of the Chinese poems that Waley first introduced to the West. . . . The meticulous care . . . lavished on this bibliography appears in many of [the] notes, which provide valuable information for students of Waley's work and its influence. . . . As well as the usual bibliographical details, Mr. Johns has, wherever possible, recorded the number of printed copies in each edition."

TLS p464 My 2 '68 550w

JOHNSON, ANDREW. The papers of Andrew Johnson; v. 1, 1822-1851; eds: Leroy P. Graf and Ralph W. Haskins; editorial associates: Harry T. Burn, Jr. and Patricia P. Clark [sponsored by the Univ. of Tenn. the Nat. hist. publications comm. the Tenn. hist. commission]. 700p il $15 Univ. of Tenn. press

973.8

67-25733

The first of ten projected volumes of the papers of the Southerner who was the United States Vice President during the Civil War and President during a part of the Reconstruction. Genealogy. Index.

Reviewed by R. J. Roske

Am Hist R 73:1637 Je '68 380w

Choice 5:402 My '68 160w

Reviewed by J. H. Parks

J Am Hist 55:404 S '68 500w

"The editors have carefully sought out all of the personal and official papers, transcribed them, and provided ample introductory material, identifying notes, a chronology, illustrations, and other expected features of a documentary source such as this. They have done their work well. Available here is the raw material for an account of a self-made man—from tailor's apprentice to Congressman. These early years of an important American politician have been imperfectly known in the past; this book makes possible a new understanding of [him]." W. S. Powell

Library J 93:1140 Mr 15 '68 130w

"Notwithstanding such obstacles as a lack of early documents—caused, quite simply, by Johnson's limited literacy and the loss of papers in the Civil War—the editors have assembled a useful and intermittently absorbing collection, ranging from his indenture as an apprentice tailor in North Carolina in 1822 to his service in the State Legislature, and his election to Congress for five consecutive terms beginning in 1843. Appendices carefully record his votes in both legislative bodies. Items of interest include Johnson's opposition to Martin Van Buren in 1836, even though Van Buren was the hand-picked heir of Johnson's alleged hero, Andrew Jackson; his opposition to Federal financing of the Smithsonian Institution; his consistent and enlightened defense of the Homestead Bill, and his blistering attack on critics of the Mexican War. . . . One looks forward most eagerly indeed to [the] subsequent volumes. . . . The collection is a must in any serious library of the Civil War and Reconstruction eras." Wilson Sullivan

Sat R 51:46 F 24 '68 1000w

JOHNSON, ANNABEL. Count me gone [by] Annabel and Edgar Johnson. 188p $3.95; lib bdg $3.79 Simon & Schuster

68-16147

In this novel "an 18-year-old boy [Rion Fletcher] rebels against his view of middle-class values and suburban security. In trying to find a better purpose in life than merely being a success, he lands himself in an auto crash—with the possibility of disorderly conduct charges against him. The reasons behind the crash come out in a series of flashbacks as the boy tries to explain his predicament to a lawyer." (Christian Science Monitor) "Ages 12 and up" (Book World)

"The traumatic teens are replacing the happy-go-lucky youth of another era. . . . [Rion's] troubles are an unhappy phenomenon of our time, and the reader does see the world through his disenchanted eyes. However, the validity of the story is lessened because the secondary characters are right out of the TV casting room: the gambler with a heart of gold; Doug's brittle girl friend; the phony young business man. Doug, one of the main contributors to Rion's problems, is a caricature. Even the squariness of older brothers wouldn't talk like a psychology textbook. Older teens . . . may identify with Rion, but they won't receive any help. Rion is a non-hero who has no answers and who, in his own words, doesn't even know the questions." J. H. Clarke

Book World p14 O 13 '68 210w [YA]

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 13 '68 150w

"[This novel] is almost entirely a monologue. . . . As Rion describes the conflict which developed between him and his brother and between Doug and his fiancée, three very different but real products of suburban society emerge. Maintaining the realism of the situation, the authors do not launch Rion safely into the future. . . . His fate is each reader's conjecture. A book at once disturbing and revealing." Marion Marx

Horn Bk 44:431 Ag '68 240w

Reviewed by Bernice Levine

Library J 93:3983 O 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:1280 D 17 '68 40w

"[Here] is a powerful and convincing portrait of alienation—an 18-year-old boy's alienation. . . . The stuff of his discontent is familiar, although not as familiar as it should be in books designed for Young Adults. In the language of one culture: under-achievement, inadequate goal orientation, anti-social response-style. In the language of another culture: the whole Bag of Meaninglessness. His parents want him to be something he is not; he wants to be someone he hasn't yet met." John Leonard

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p8 My 5 '68 450w [YA]

JOHNSON, ARTHUR M. Boston capitalists and Western railroads; a study in the nineteenth-century railroad investment process [by] Arthur M. Johnson and Barry E. Supple. 392p maps $10 Harvard univ. press

658.1 Railroads—Finance 67-13254

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by L. E. Davis

Am Econ R 58:217 Mr '68 1100w

Reviewed by T. C. Cochran

Am Hist R 73:607 D '67 430w

Va Q R 44:cxxiv summer '68 140w

JOHNSON, CAROLYN W. Winthrop Murray Crane: a study in Republican leadership, 1892-1920. 100p $2 Smith college

B or 92 Crane, Winthrop Murray 66-30523

"This study is an effort to examine the political career of . . . one of the more powerful members of the now-neglected second echelon of Republican regular leadership between the 1890's and 1920. . . . Crane presents special problems for a would-be biographer because he published nothing, made very few public statements, and can be met directly only through a rather small collection of letters. . . . Hence this study is a sketch, and an attempt to locate Murray Crane, to identify his background, to trace his activities, and, by discovering where he was, to establish a framework for tentative conclusions about what he was." (Pref) Bibliography.

"Crane, a powerful member of the Republican party for three decades . . . first served as lieutenant governor and then governor of Massachusetts, and finally moved on to the United States Senate, where he was in the 'second rank' of Senate leadership from 1904 to 1913. Crane is portrayed as being a strong, prudent, honest politician who preferred to work behind the scenes. . . . Though brief and limited in scope, this sympathetic work is a useful contribution to the literature of the period." A. M. Boom

J Am Hist 55:165 Je '68 180w

"Johnson has provided us with an exquisite miniature of a superior citizen. . . . She makes an impressive effort to penetrate Senator Crane's reserve which separated his private life from his varied public roles, and gave rise to a mystique which underlined his extraordinary talents and heightened his considerable power in industry, finance, and politics. [Her] carefully documented quotations and her tactfully reported anecdotes reveal multiple dimensions of the Crane character." F. B. Morse

New Eng Q 41:310 Je '68 1100w

JOHNSON, DORIS. A cloud of summer, and other new haiku; il. by W. T. Mars. 48p $3.50; Titan ed $3.48 Follett

811

67-8149

These "original compositions . . . include observations on nature and everyday life. Attuned to the American child ages 6-9." (America)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan

America 117:519 N 4 '67 40w

"[This book] is well intended. Children are supposed to respond readily to this Japanese verse form and many children do like to compose haiku, so the model of three unrhymed lines of five, seven and five syllables makes for a feasible classroom exercise. Unfortunately, these are written in pseudo-Japanese. Too coy." Eve Merriam

Book World p10 D 24 '67 60w

"The adult author of this collection of original haiku has not succeeded. Some of the poems are acceptable, though sentimental, expressions (their coyness reflected perfectly in W. T. Mars' wash drawings), but none evoke the multi-level response which is the particular charm and merit of haiku." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 92:3840 O 15 '67 150w

Reviewed by John Unterecker

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p61 N '67 100w

JOHNSON, E. RICHARD. Silver Street. 151p $4.95 Harper

68-17040

This first novel describes "life on the seamy side of a river port city. Tony Lonto, the homicide bull who grew up there, knows it better than anyone else on the force. Therefore, he is the one to follow through on the shooting of Willie Mack, a pimp with only three 'dogs' on his string, and Tony has to follow fast before too many others meet the same fate." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:135 Je 15 '68 20w

Reviewed by A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p14 J1 21 '68 90w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1923 My 1 '68 80w

"[This novel] deals with the seamy side of a large city slum and is harshly carved out in the vernacular of its inhabitants. . . . [The author] spares none of his characterizations, exposing, though with no little sympathy, the human strengths and weaknesses of the people about whom he writes." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p38 J1 14 '68 120w

"This is a toughie of toughies, set in the main streets of an unspecified American megalopolis, and it gets powerfully under one's skin. The author is an inmate of the Minnesota State Prison at Stillwater." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:34 J1 27 '68 30w

JOHNSON, EDGAR, jt. auth. Count me gone. See Johnson, A.

JOHNSON, ELECTA, jt. auth. Yankee sails the Nile. See Johnson, I.

JOHNSON, ERIC W. Love and sex in plain language; il. by Edward C. Smith; foreword by Joseph Stokes, Jr. rev ed 68p $3.50 Lippincott

612.6 Sex instruction—Juvenile literature

67-14367

"Slightly revised and updated with the addition of two new chapters—'Heredity: What Is Passed On to Us by the Sperm and the Egg,' and 'Sex Difference Between Men and Women,'—this maintains the . . . factual presentation of the first edition. . . . [Index] Grades eight to eleven." (Library J)

"The impact of the widespread use of the contraceptive pill is minimized. The short statement on homosexuality is more realistic than in the former edition. Only the best of the illustrations from the first edition have been retained. Not enough new material is included to warrant replacement of the old edition." A. B. Martin

JOHNSON, E. W.—Continued

Library J 92:2659 J1 '67 90w

"This is a very good and responsible book, in a class which has seen great improvements in the past few years, written without prevarication or sentimentality or verbosity."

TLS p596 Je 6 '68 90w

JOHNSON, HARRY G. Economic policies toward less developed countries. 279p $6.75 Brookings; pa $2.50 Praeger

338.91 International economic relations. Economic policy. Underdeveloped areas 67-14972

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by G. M. Platt

Am Pol Sci R 62:682 Je '68 700w

Choice 4:1420 F '68 170w

Reviewed by David French

Commonweal 87:697 Mr 8 '68 290w

Reviewed by Oscar Gass

Pol Sci Q 83:119 Mr '68 1450w

JOHNSON, HARRY G. Essays in monetary economics. 332p $7.50 Harvard univ. press

332.4 Money. Finance [67-88230]

The first five essays "survey recent monetary theory, the next two discuss monetary policy in Canada and the United States and the last three deal with fiscal policy and the balance of payments in developing countries." (Economist) Chapter bibliographies. Indexes of subjects and names.

"Chapter 4 contains some material which has not been published before, and 'deals in what is hoped is a relatively simple way with the complex problem of the role of money in growth models.' . . . [In it] Johnson tried to present a complex problem in a simple way, using graphs rather than mathematical proofs. The exposition is heuristic rather than rigorous; and many will welcome such an attempt. Others may feel that if a picture is worth a thousand words, an equation is worth three pictures. As a result of the heuristic approach the reader is not shown under what conditions the equilibrium is stable or unstable. In fact, Tobin's system (which is the basis of Johnson's model) is dynamically unstable; and Johnson's could also be unstable. Monetary growth theory is in its infancy. In another five years we may expect from Johnson a survey of this field of the same quality as his survey of monetary theory which is reprinted as chapter one of this book." J. L. Stein

Am Econ R 58:607 Je '68 1200w

"Penetrating insights characterize the essays. . . . Lucidly written, almost all the articles can be comprehended even by those only familiar with economic reasoning and problems. They offer still more to the advanced student and the professional economist. This collection of Johnson's articles, many of which are not easily obtainable otherwise, is a 'must' purchase."

Choice 5:530 Je '68 200w

Economist 223:1366 Je 24 '67 100w

TLS p1264 D 28 '67 700w

JOHNSON, HAYNES. Fulbright: the dissenter [by] Haynes Johnson and Bernard M. Gwertzman. 321p il $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Fulbright, James William. U.S.—Politics and government—1945- 68-17789

This "biography of the Democrat Senator from Arkansas . . . focuses on his political career. In the first part the authors sketch in his background, family and education, giving a chapter to his years at Oxford as a Rhodes scholar and another to his career before going into politics. In the remaining three-fourths of the book they trace the development of Fulbright's ideas and actions first in the House and then in the Senate where he has served since 1945." (Library J) Index.

"This book should perhaps be classified as a campaign biography, but it is far from being the ordinary goose-grease job. It is friendly, but not fulsome, and in spots it is sharply critical. The authors know how to write prose that may be read almost painlessly." G. W. Johnson

Book World p10 Ag 18 '68 750w

"This is a long pro-Fulbright biography, a book whose subject and point of view we do not find hard to take, especially in the light of the senator's contributions to education and foreign affairs. Fortunately, the authors do not gloss over his retrogressive racial policies (or his recent silence on the subject). Recommended for those who want to learn the art of politics as courage, as compromise, as fateful dilemma."

Christian Century 85:945 J1 24 '68 70w

Reviewed by C. R. Sheldon

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 11 '68 600w

"Considerable research has been done by the authors. . . . Even though this is an unauthorized biography they had access to private papers and correspondence. The book is well written, documented, sympathetic, but not uncritical. An appendix contains the texts of the Senator's major speeches. Recommended for public libraries." Jean Deuss

Library J 93:2648 J1 '68 150w

Library J 93:4144 D 15 '68 20w [YA]

"The book's focus . . . is on Fulbright's internationalism and its evolution to his current position on American overseas involvements. . . . [but] the authors never really evaluate Fulbright's influence on recent foreign policy."

. . . Fulbright's series of 1966 speeches, subsequently published as 'The Arrogance of Power' [BRD 1967] warrant more than the sketchy summary the authors provide. . . . The Arkansas Senator has easily the best mind in our highest deliberative body, and his thinking calls for a more revealing discussion than the authors are able to give in their chosen compass. All in all [they] have produced an extremely useful collaboration, a welcome replacement to Tristram Coffin's euphoric biography [Senator Fulbright, BRD 1966]. . . . The authors' fondness for short snappy paragraphs creates an initial—and unjustified—impression of superficiality. There is a sober book to be taken seriously." Andrew Hacker

N Y Times Bk R p6 S 22 '68 800w

JOHNSON, IRVING. Yankee sails the Nile, by Irving and Electa Johnson. 256p il col il maps $7.50 Norton

916.2 Egypt—Description and travel. Yankee (Ketch) 66-18627

"Continuing their series of small boat voyages to faraway and interesting places, Captain and Mrs. Johnson and crew (many connected with the National Geographic Society) sailed up the Nile beyond the Aswan Dam into Nubia. This was a tricky operation, involving a time deadline before construction on the new dam closed off through traffic, and constant difficulties with low water." (Library J)

"Fine descriptions of the valley's monuments and perceptive comments on the fellahin and their way of life [result in] an uncommonly lively and absorbing travel book. Widely known for their films, the Johnsons have an eager audience. Recommended generally." W. C. Allen

Library J 91:5600 N 15 '66 100w

"It is a thousand pities that the Johnsons were unable to confine themselves to what should have proved a rich, colourful travelogue of their sail up the Nile without tossing in a history lesson like the unwanted gift on a detergent packet. . . . Whenever the authors forgo the role of mentor for the more rewarding task of recording their experiences, the real Egypt of the Nile—pyramids, temples, tombs, suffering and hardship—emerges wondrously clear, effortlessly and dramatically. And as history students may be quick to observe, there is corroborative evidence on an early page that the British were once in Egypt too, but this, like Farouk, seems best forgotten. A pity perhaps, but then this is a history à l'américaine."

TLS p336 Ap 4 '68 300w

JOHNSON, J. EDMUND, jr. auth. Social scientific studies of religion: a bibliography. See Berkowitz, M. I.

JOHNSON, LYNDON B. To heal and to build: the programs of Lyndon B. Johnson; ed. by James MacGregor Burns; prologue by Howard K. Smith; with commentary by Chester Bowles [and others] epilogue by Eric Hoffer. 506p il $8.95 McGraw 353.03 U.S.—Policy and government—1961- .

World politics—1945- . U.S.—Social policy
68-26311

The editor "presents 47 selections from President Johnson's public statements on the programs he set forth between January, 1965, and April, 1968. Mr. Burns has grouped these statements into four parts, which he has further broken down into eight subdivisions, each with an introductory essay by an appropriate authority." (N Y Times Bk R) Chronology. Index.

"The title is about the only thing that is impressive about [this] book. . . . All the [introductory] essays, with the exception of the excellent one by Walter W. Heller, are filled with praise for the President and with explanations as to why it is necessary to have the 'credibility gap' and the 'open option.' . . . The book's selection of Presidential speeches leaves something to be desired. Two of Johnson's most important speeches are not included. . . . The book contains only one speech prior to 1966, a time when the President had the services of Richard Goodwin, the speechwriter who authored the early rhetoric of the Great Society. The Presidential messages and remarks read like a catalogue of material accomplishments rather than as statements of what must be done." R. J. Meister

America 119:106 Ag 17 '68 490w

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey
America 119:561 N 30 '68 50w

Reviewed by Keith Eubank
Library J 93:2341 Ag '68 230w

"'Sometimes I have been called a seeker of consensus. . . . I have never denied it. Because to heal and to build in support of something worthy is, I believe, a noble task.' The enormous scope of that task the President has outlined in the statements that provide the bulk of this volume. . . . [which] provides raw material of the highest value." Quincy Howe

N Y Times Bk R p16 S 1 '68 850w

"Burns has collected the President's more important speeches and messages and has included in his volume nine chapters on the Johnson record written by men who are supporters or sympathizers. It would have been a campaign book if Johnson had become a candidate, [but it] is a valuable reference nevertheless." Carroll Kilpatrick

Sat R 51:32 S 21 '68 600w

JOHNSON, PAMELA HANSFORD. The survival of the fittest. 468p $6.95 Scribner

68-17332

This novel "describes the activities of a small group of English writers from Munich through and beyond the time of the Kennedy assassination. The central story is that of Jo, the unsuccessful novelist, coupled with that of Kit, internationally acclaimed, and those of their tight literary group." (Library J)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 222:101 J1 '68 460w

"Miss Johnson, really C. P. Snow's Lady, is a polished writer in that she makes what happens important. At times her writing is captivating. . . . At other times it seems so impersonally emotional that the characters she writes about retreat into the printed words instead of darting into the reader's consciousness. . . . I wish that less had happened to fewer characters so I would have a better understanding of and sympathy for both those who didn't survive and for the fittest. I have little doubt that women all over the world will buy this book." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 28:128 Je 15 '68 850w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Christian Science Monitor p7 My 23 '68 600w

Reviewed by H. L. Leet
Library J 93:1916 My 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Gerda Charles
Nation 207:124 Ag 9 '68 700w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:311 Ag 13 '68 320w

"[The author] is one of the very few living (or indeed dead) women novelists who is able to describe sexual happiness in women with interest or conviction. . . . Reading the book is a curious experience; vague and casual from moment to moment, it is nevertheless compulsive and cumulatively gripping. Its mood is elegiac: characters, places, periods, history, are evoked, suggested, rather than solidly dramatic [although] there are moments of drama. . . . But events are subordinated to a sense of the long emotional shifts and structures of whole lives, and the group's corporate life. All the time tone and style are muted, close to cliché, never sharp. . . . [The author] is still a finished and unassuming artist." A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 75:654 My 17 '68 480w

Reviewed by R. G. Davis
N Y Times Bk R p22 J1 7 '68 1300w

New Yorker 44:158 My 25 '68 100w

"Only in England do serious and sophisticated writers still compose long, densely populated, intransigently realistic novels that chronicle the life cycle of a generation against a historical background still fresh in the memory without conceding an inch of bloody territory to any literary fashion past or passing or to come. . . . [In this] novel, human motive is what it always was. . . . and plot lines move straight as arrows toward their appointed place in the scheme of things. . . . [The] pivotal character is a novelist named Kit Mallings, who is obviously modeled, at least in part, on Dylan Thomas. . . . Kit's friends (they include 'Belphoebe,' obviously modeled on Dame Edith Sitwell) fall in and out of love; . . . produce children in and out of wedlock; die or survive. And they talk. And they explain. They talk and explain, explain and talk." S. M.

Newsweek 71:97A My 27 '68 140w

Reviewed by James Hall
Sat R 51:24 Ag 3 '68 500w
TLS p497 My 16 '68 500w

JOHNSON, PAT. Horse talk; with phot. by Walter Osborne. 130p $4.95 Funk 798 Horsemanship—Juvenile literature.
Horses—Juvenile literature 67-26038

The author gives instructions "on choosing a mount, on riding techniques, on care of horse and equipment. In addition, she provides information on the evolution of the horse and its place in history." (America) Index. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"In this book for horse lovers of all ages, an expert shares her enthusiasm for riding. . . . [The photographs] complete the enchantment of the book." Ethna Sheehan

America 117:520 N 4 '67 60w

"Written in a clear style, this book discusses both English and Western riding. . . . Although written for beginners, it does not oversimplify, as do many other children's books on this subject; however, it does not sufficiently emphasize the practice and actual experience necessary for attainment of skill. In addition, there are several misleading statements. . . . Horse Talk can provide an informative introduction to the sport. The photographs are excellent; the format is double-columned, but clear and attractive." Janyce George

Library J 93:292 Ja 15 '68 140w

JOHNSON, RICHARD M. The dynamics of compliance; Supreme court decision-making from a new perspective. 176p $5.95 Northwestern univ. press

347 U.S. Supreme Court. Religion in the public schools 67-27473

The author "presents the problems that ensue after the court has decided a controversial constitutional issue. He examines the social and psychological variables involved in the process of implementation of the court's decisions on religious practices in public schools. He relates his findings to a survey made of parents, school officials, and influential community members of a rural school district and concludes that their attitudes seriously affected the manner in which the rulings were carried into effect." (Library J) Index.

"The few virtues of this book lie in the summaries of the literature on the Supreme Court as a decision maker, and as the source of 'messages' containing policy directives for those affected by its decisions. In addition, there is an account of the original doctoral research. . . . The new material contained in this book could most appropriately be presented in two or three journal articles. The remainder is a plodding rehash of the standard sources. P. Kurland's Religion and the Law [of Church and State and the Supreme Court, BRD 1963] is a far better analysis of the central issues."

JOHNSON, R. M.—Continued

Choice 5:1041 O '68 210w

"Students of constitutional law would be well advised to read [this, it] . . . should be of value for patrons of law, university, and large public libraries." J. J. Marke
Library J 93:2683 J1 '68 190w

JOHNSON, STANLEY. The presidential plot.
216p $4.95 Simon & Schuster

68-19943

"President Ellsworth Barnes, a barely disguised President Johnson, drops his Vice-President in favor of Panther Jones, a black militant for peace in Vietnam, and is re-elected. The nonhero, a presidential aide, plots with the director of the CIA to insure the temporary absence of the President so Panther Jones can make peace in his stead. Using murder and blackmail of cabinet members — weapons, the conspirators arrange the quarantine of the President with the Apollo astronauts after their return from the moon. Peace in Vietnam is quickly arranged and the terms satisfy everyone." (Library J)

"In a devastatingly ingenious way, a coup d'état is planned and carried out whereby the President of the United States is relieved of his office by means entirely within the rules of the Constitution. . . . [However,] the crude portrayal of the President and the language attributed to him is nauseating at times and unworthy of the author. The ending is much too pat and sounds like 'pie-in-the-sky' thinking."

Best Sell 28:185 Ag 1 '68 120w

"The plot of this short amoral novel is ingenious and absorbing. The Washington locale, its politics and people, is depicted with cynical wit. Space science is knowledgeably interwoven. The characters are largely contemporary political figures with thinly veiled names and personalities. This clever and malicious novel should have a wide appeal especially to readers of adventure and suspense, science fiction and political satire." Muriel Weins
Library J 93:2259 Je 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Anne Kincaid

Library J 93:2739 J1 '68 70w [YA]

"The Hardy Boys had better motivation than the assorted clowns in this political fantasy. . . . A thriller may have outrageous assumptions—if they are complemented by reassuringly plausible detail, and a pace that allows little time for skepticism. I can take my anti-Americanism as well as the next man, but it must have greater maturity to be rather fun." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p36 J1 14 '68 190w

JOHNSON, VANCE. The fabulous Toby and me. See Schaffner, N. E.

JOHNSON, WILLIAM A. The steel industry of India. (Rand ser) 340p maps $7.50 Harvard univ. press

338.4 Steel industry and trade. India—Economic conditions 66-23471

"The purpose of this book is to attempt to gain a better understanding of problems of industrial growth by examining in depth the industry on which India has placed greatest emphasis in her development programs. . . . The book also focuses on . . . first, . . . the relative supply of various factors of production needed for a growing economy and how the economy might overcome critical factor scarcities; [and] second, . . . the role of government in the development process." (J Pol Econ) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This is a useful study of India's experience in expanding her steel industry during the past 10 years. The book's chief merit lies in its careful empirical testing of theoretical criteria (e.g., the social rate of return) to decide whether or not (1) the Indian Government has been wise to give such heavy emphasis to iron and steel, (2) the new mills have been put at sensible locations and have adopted the most appropriate production processes, and (3) these big public projects have achieved reasonable operating efficiency. . . . The most interesting part of the book is Johnson's measurement of the social returns from the industry's expansion during the second and third Plans. . . . The compression of a thorough and well-documented dissertation into a well-organized, well-focused book is not easy, and the author and his editors deserve only middling grades for organization and selectivity. . . . In the end, not much is said about some of the larger issues of industrial growth at which the author bravely aimed. But . . . Mr. Johnson has written a book anyone interested in Indian steel definitely should read." G. B. Baldwin

Am Econ R 57:1402 D '67 650w

"Though the book is not an in-depth study, it is quite suitable for a general reader, who wants to get acquainted with the subject and who has little previous knowledge of the Indian conditions. However, its economic framework is only partial analysis, which is a very treacherous tool, indeed—especially for studying a capital goods industry in an economy made to develop by purposive action." P. N. Mathur

Ann Am Acad 376:196 Mr '68 460w

Choice 5:384 My '68 130w

J Pol Econ 75:902 D '67 380w

Reviewed by M. D. Morris

Pacific Affairs 41:304 summer '68 1200w

JOHNSON, WILLIAM WEBER. Heroic Mexico; the violent emergence of a modern nation. (The mainstream of the modern world) 463p $6.95 Doubleday

972.08 Mexico—History

68-11790

This is an account of the Mexican Revolution of 1910 and its political results to 1940. The author presents "a political-biographical study of revolutionaries who, having triumphed, turned their armies against each other." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

"The bibliography lacks commentary and lumps relatively dependable sources indiscriminately with sensational, superficial, and dated ones. Johnson's writing skill, however, is admirable. In sum, while no scholar need hurry to lift up Johnson's book, it does serve as a vivid introduction to . . . a broad and vital topic."

Choice 5:1030 O '68 150w

"Though a well-written and enjoyable narrative . . . this book contains nothing that cannot be found in a dozen or so other books about Mexico. It is at best a restatement of what has already been said. . . . The alphabetical listing of principals and a chronology of important dates pertinent to the subject are of real value to the reader. The book has sufficient worth to recommend it for purchase by college and public libraries." P. L. Marr

Library J 93:1140 Mr 15 '68 140w

"Johnson [is] a writer in the narrative model with an unerring instinct for the pertinent phrase to describe the actions of men. . . . He gives the reader a vivid picture of the tragedy and power of the Revolution. . . . He reveals an enthusiasm for the guerrilla, Pancho Villa, who, he believes, championed agrarian reform. Middle-class spokesmen—Madero, Carranza, Obregon and Calles—emerge less heroic." R. E. Ruiz

N Y Times Bk R p54 S ■ '68 600w

JOHNSTON, GEORGE. Home free. 64p $4.25 Oxford

S11

A collection of poems.

"Johnston is called a light poet (a suspiciously evasive term). Frankly, I didn't like the poems: they were not funny, and clearly many of them were intended to be. Then there was the irritating undertone of petulance; one got the feeling that these poems were safety valves allowing a steam pressure of about a quarter pound per square inch to escape. Before long one begins to sense through the type, the spectral image of a downtrodden fellow, full of peevish, trudging the streets in damp shoes and an old mac. . . . Light poetry, if it attempts to be funny should have 'bite'; if the poet is trying to write real poetry, it should gain the reader's sympathy by the soundness of the poet's response. Within this frame of reference Home Free fails, for me." Alan Pearson

Canadian Forum 47:185 N '67 600w

"Many of the poems in [this book] are jingly comments about the surface of dailiness, pointing out this and that as if expected to. The two long poems in the volume, for example—Under the Tree, which rests on the existence of legal hanging, and Love in High Places, which satirizes the rise to prominence of a Canadian politician as he compromises 'Promises, youthful idealism, [and] private integrity'—while compassionate or witty along the way, do not accumulate meaning or emotion as they proceed. From this kind of verse, one tends to remember the best quips." Marvin Bell
Poetry 111:325 F '68 230w

JOHNSTON, JOHANNA. A special bravery; il. by Ann Grifalconi. 94p $3.50; lib bdg $3.23
Dodd

920 Negroes—Biography—Juvenile literature
67-20777

Descriptions "of the accomplishments of 15 American Negroes whose bravery has made them outstanding. . . . Arranged chronologically, the accounts begin with Crispus Attucks and end with Martin Luther King, Jr. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

"Set in short, widely spaced lines, the text is easy-to-read, concise, and informative. Strong black-and-white line drawings by Ann Grifalconi successfully interpret and reinforce the mood of each sketch. A thoroughly satisfying biographical collection which provides a simple but stimulating introduction to Negro history." B. S. Miller
Library J 92:4252 N 15 '67 80w

"Frederick Douglass worked to abolish slavery; Booker T. Washington started Tuskegee Institute; Matthew Henson is celebrated for his arrival at the North Pole. Most of the heroes lived during slavery, so it is through the four living (Marian Anderson, Ralph Bunche, Jackie Robinson and Martin Luther King) that the child is enabled to bridge the past and present. Realistic readers will question some of the lines. That Harriet Tubman escaped to the 'North where Negroes could be free,' will puzzle today's child locked in a Northern Ghetto. . . . Miss Johnston's own special bravery is in her frank, didactic treatment of prejudice and discrimination." M. B. Young
N Y Times Bk ■ p26 Ja 14 '68 140w

JOHNSTON, MARJORIE, ed. The cosmos of Arthur Holly Compton. See Compton, A. H.

JOHNSTON, RONALD. The wrecking of Offshore Five. 191p $4.50 Harcourt 68-12577

"As the rig Offshore Five is drilling for oil in the North Sea, an old mine is hit by the company tanker and the rig collapses. Two men, the geologist and the foreman, are trapped inside the rig beneath the sea. The oil company's young director rushes to the site of the accident, feeling more concern for the geologist's knowledge of oil in the area than for the lives of his men; rescue operations are begun. The thoughts of the two trapped men and those of the company director and the tanker's captain form the basis of the narrative." (Library J)

"A basically simple plot, which ■ greatly enhanced by the author's excellent characterizations and by the fantastic financial issues." Best Sell 28:68 My 1 '68 60w

"The characterization is sketchy, but since this is an adventure in the finest Alistair MacLean tradition, most readers will overlook this weakness. Recommended for public library fiction collections." Marilyn Gresser
Library J 93:1653 Ap 15 '68 110w

"Mr. Johnston balances interesting contrasts between the personalities of the two submerged men—and between the heroism of the rescue crews, versus the crassness of home-office tycoons. These values are spliced onto some ingenious undersea operations that the author plays out with maximum tension." Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk ■ p54 Ap 21 '68 60w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:33 My 25 '68 30w

JOINT COMMITTEE ON BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SERVICES TO HISTORY. Bibliography and the historian; ed. by Dagmar Horna Perman. 176p $6; pa $3.75 ABC-CLIO

907 Bibliography. Historiography. Information storage and retrieval systems 68-12982

"Part I of this book consists of essays describing the Joint Committee on Bibliographical Services to History and the proceedings and recommendations of the Belmont Conference, held in May, 1967. Part II is 'devoted to technological developments in the field, especially the use of the computer.' Part III consists of essays describing bibliographical developments in the Library of Congress and the National Archives. New systems of bibliographical service concerned with the recording of research in progress and periodical literature are examined in Part IV. Part V deals with 'Past Achievements and New Directions,' and Part VI with various details involved in planning a program." (Am Lit)

Am Lit 40:265 My '68 120w

"This tightly written volume reports the first stages of a program that was launched in April 1965, when the Executive Board of the Organization of American Historians proposed to the American Historical Association and eight other historical societies 'the creation of a joint committee to study and make recommendations concerning the provision of more comprehensive, accurate, and expeditious bibliographical control over the field of history.' . . . The purpose—and result—[of the Conference] was largely educational. . . . The results, which are presented in detail in this fascinating volume, were both encouraging and discouraging. . . . Those who have hoped that the computer would prove a magic genie in the bibliographical field will be disillusioned. . . . Yet historians should not lose heart, for the Belmont conference did come to grips with the basic problem for the first time." R. A. Billington
J Am Hist 55:373 S '68 600w

"The studies were prepared for the conference by knowledgeable bibliographers, information scientists, historians, and librarians. . . . None of these stimulating papers could possibly have been written before the second half of this century. They are an expression of new technologies, new services, and new systems. The librarian, as reader, will find no better means of learning about the present capabilities of the computer in the storage, retrieval, and dissemination of bibliographical information. He will be brought up to date on specific projects which have close relationships to the humanities and social sciences. The papers on the machine are clearly stated and highly informative. Quite as valuable are those on automation in the Library of Congress. . . . The papers show the need, in planning, to avoid the fragmented and repetitive." G. D. McDonald
Library J 93:3526 O 1 '68 400w

Reviewed by R. L. Brubaker
Library Q 38:456 O '68 850w

JOLIET, PAUL V., jt. auth. Accidents and homicide. See Iskrent, A. P.

JONES, A. H. M. Sparta. 189p maps $6.50
Harvard univ. press
938 Sparta—History 67-7233

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by T. W. Africa
Am Hist R 73:1114 Ap '68 400w
Choice 4:1299 Ja '68 200w

Reviewed by J. J. Farber
Class World 61:301 Mr '68 200w

JONES, ADRIENNE. Sail, Calypso! il. by Adolph LeMoult. 210p $4.95 Little 68-21169

"Separately, two lonely boys stumble on a derelict sailboat half buried in the sand. Each decides to devote his summer to restoring it and is enraged when he discovers the other's claim to it. After considerable antagonism they realize that only combined effort can restore the sailboat. . . . Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"Two very different boys, a boat, a golden summer are given such reality by the author and are so perfectly realized by the illustrator that the reader feels part of the experience. No more can be asked of any book." J. H. Clarke

JONES, ADRIENNE—Continued

Book World p22 (children's issue) N 3 '68 160w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:286 N 22 '68 80w

"What makes this story special is the relationship that develops between Clay and Paul. The author blends the details of their growing friendship into a suspenseful search for gear for Calypso and a race to get her launched before summer's end. . . . The quiet, introspective account of the boys' attitudes and behavior builds up to a thunderous climax. . . . Excellent characterization in an exciting adventure." D. F.

Horn Bk 44:561 O '68 190w

"The strength of the book is the character interaction, and the slow, believable growth of a friendship. It seems only incidental that one of the boys is Negro. The dialogue is realistic, sometimes humorous, and readers are introduced to sailing jargon slowly, since neither boy is initially conversant with it. A threatening stranger and a storm at sea add the spice of danger to a well written and appealing book." D. Y. Shaffer

Library J 93:3971 O 15 '68 80w

JONES, ALEXANDER, ed. The New Testament of the Jerusalem Bible. See Bible. New Testament

JONES, BILLY M. Health-seekers in the Southwest, 1817-1900. 254p il $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press

613.1 Health resorts, spas, etc. Southwest, New—History 67-15572

"Jones first summarizes those conditions in the Mississippi Valley which gave rise to the health cult of the arid, elevated West. Organizing by historical periods, he shows how Civil War, Spanish American War, World War I, etc. affected the quest for health. The destination of health seekers explains the origin of a number of Western towns. . . . [There is a] section on medical practices and attitudes [as well as] . . . sections demonstrating how medical men exiled their hopeless patients, who, after the discovery that micro-organisms caused lung disease, were rejected and segregated by the communities which only a short time before saw the health seeker as a boon." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Extremely well documented study of a unique facet of Western history, in a style which should appeal to the general as well as professional reader. . . . After 1900 climatic cures gave way to medication, rest, and diet control at home. Convincingly, Jones contends that 20 percent of those migrating West in the 19th century were health seekers. This is, therefore, a book long overdue. Despite the title, both California and Oregon are included in the discussion."

Choice 5:257 Ap '68 300w

"The trek of invalids westward increased greatly after the Civil War. About a third of the people in Colorado by 1880 were there because of health problems in their families. Southern California, after the railroads reached it, became a vigorously promoted 'Sanitarium Belt.' Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona also attracted the afflicted. Many of these were wheezers and coughers, for the Southwest was often the final retreat of those with tuberculosis. . . . This study is based on an exhaustive examination of much primary, published source material. It is a valuable survey of a frontier less glamorous than furs or mines but quite important in the development of the West." W. S. Greever

J Am Hist 54:662 D '67 300w

JONES, BRADSHAW. Murder has no friends. 184p $4 Bobbs

68-26793

"The bodies of three nude women are found in London, the corpses . . . having been printed with the numbers 1, 2 and 3. Home Office pressure on luckless Scotland Yard sends ordinarily desk-bound Superintendent Carson into the action." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 28:293 O 15 '68 60w

"The search takes [Detective Carson] from London to Manchester to the docks of Southampton, and then to the Welsh hills. Expert British procedural, swift and tightly plotted." M. K. Grant

Library J 93:2900 Ag '68 70w

"This is a pleasant enough yarn, but the motivation puts unkind stress on credibility." A. J. Hubins

N Y Times Bk R p68 N 17 '68 80w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:45 O 26 '68 30w

JONES, CHARLES O. Every second year: Congressional behavior and the two-year term. 118p $6 Brookings

328.73 U.S. Congress. House 67-30596

Jones examines the "debate over the length of term, analyzes the alternatives to the present two-year term, and assesses the prospects for change. He considers the effects of the two-year term on House members, the problems associated with it . . . and the reasons for failure of most efforts to bring about changes. He concludes that the two-year term will be retained for the present." (Foreword) Index.

Reviewed by R. H. Davidson

Am Pol Sci R 62:980 S '68 800w

"[The author] covers well the 'logical' case for change to a four-year term recently proposed by President Johnson and by numerous political scientists over the years. . . . The change to a longer term is not considered in isolation—as has often been the case with reformers—but rather places the effects in the setting of the political system itself. . . . A finding, likely to be surprising to many, of the author's 1966 questionnaire to congressmen is the immense popularity of the two-year term. . . . Some will believe that [Jones'] data could be used to 'prove' the need for changes as well as to oppose it—and will be disappointed that he does not support it." H. A. Bone

Ann Am Acad 378:168 Jl '68 370w

Choice 5:1222 N '68 130w

"Jones concisely and clearly shows the reasons put forth by concerned individuals in support of or opposition to [a four-year term] and/or similar proposals. . . . This well-written book, which is a valuable addition to the Brookings Institution's Governmental Studies program, should be acquired by all public and academic libraries." J. J. Fox

Library J 93:1002 Mr 1 '68 170w

JONES, CHRISTOPHER WILLIAM. Listen, pilgrim; with a foreword by Daniel Berrigan. 134p $3.95 Bruce pub.

248.8 Christian life

68-16811

The author is an ex-seminarian "whose vocation is to move as occasion and people require, to listen and advise in the confessional of the bar or bus station, to make his home among the losers of society, the winos, prostitutes and addicts of the big cities and little towns across the United States. Listen, Pilgrim is partly an account of his pilgrimage, partly a meditation on the Church today." (America)

"The book is written in a poetic prose style that is reminiscent of Whitman and Péguy without succeeding . . . as a vehicle for what Jones has to say. The author himself comes through as an earnest and original contemporary follower of Christ. . . . Still his book misses fire. . . . Unless sustained by imagery, interior rhythm and concrete detail, poetic prose becomes monotonous and inflated. Whole sections of his re-telling of Gospel incidents are flat and uninspiring compared to their sources. His reflections sound preachy, and the repetitions, so effective in Péguy, lack point and purpose. . . . The best sections of his book are his own stories of encounters with people. . . . But even here his style is more of a hindrance than a help, creating a sense of self-conscious moralizing and a melodramatic sentimentality that a straight prose version would have avoided." J. F. Cotter

America 118:233 F 17 '68 550w

Reviewed by T. P. McDonnell

Critic 26:69 Je '68 500w

"This is a book for the strong stomach as Mr. Jones has experienced much of the raw and ugly parts of our world. One regrets that he does not recognize the necessity of the economic and social reordering of society as being the first step in achieving a reconciled world. However, his theological insights into our society will be helpful to both the committed and the uncommitted. This is a book for many people—the worshipper, the seeker of truth, the observer of the social scene. From it, each will gain new understanding and guidance. It is an important book." Jane Van Meter

Library J 93:1487 Ap 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by David Poling

Sat R 51:36 My 18 '68 70w

JONES, DAVID PRYCE-. See Pryce-Jones, D.

JONES, E. STANLEY. A song of ascents; a spiritual autobiography. 400p $4.95 Abingdon

B or 92 Evangelistic work 68-17451

A "Protestant evangelist here presents . . . the life story of his faith. . . . [He describes his] more than 50 years of direct, person-to-person spiritual work with groups and individuals on a worldwide basis, especially in the East." (Library J) Index.

"[The author has a] very readable style. . . . With this book he furthers the point and appeal of his witness, which has won for his prolific works a strong readership over the years. . . . The late Dr. Martin Luther King was among those markedly influenced by his writings. Libraries can count themselves gainers for the purchase of this book." Lawrence Mills

Library J 93:2503 Je 15 '68 100w

"In his autobiographical [book] Jones tells what has happened to that young Methodist preacher who went out to India in 1907. He has been friend and confidant of such leaders as Mahatma Gandhi, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Kagawa, Moise Tshombe, Martin Niemöller, Martin Luther King, Jawaharlal Nehru, and Franklin Roosevelt. . . . The Christian message that Jones has presented is really the forerunner of much that is being expressed in the ecumenical movement today." David Poling

N Y Times Bk R p10 Ag 11 '68 750w

JONES, EMRYS. Human geography; an introduction to man and his world. rev ed 240p maps $5; pa $2.25 Praeger

910.03 Geography, Commercial 66-14506

The theme of this book is the study of "place" in relation to human activities. Topics discussed include the growth and density of world population, "divisions of mankind, movements of mankind, obtaining food, farms and villages, mining and manufacturing, towns and cities, and communications." (Am Anthropol) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Jones is Professor of Geography in the University of London's School of Economics. This volume, a revised version of a 1964 edition, is directed to the American market. It is . . . designed primarily for students in high schools, colleges, and universities. Certainly the writing and concepts are clear and simple enough to be fully comprehensible to the lowest rank of the target audience. . . . The exposition is lucid and comprehensive, even though the section on race is of the vintage of Ripley. The chapters on settlements, 'central in human geography,' are especially good. They are specific, systematic, and authoritative." Fred Kniffen

Am Anthropol 69:551 O '67 340w [YA]

"An interesting approach to the field of cultural geography. . . . [The section on] forced and voluntary [migrations] . . . has some discussion of cultural, technical, and scientific knowledge which the migrants carried with them. The urban geographer would be interested in the discussion of the growth of the 'shelter pattern.'"

Choice 3:834 N '66 110w

JONES, GENE. Where the wind blew free; tales of young westerners. 195p il $3.75; lib bdg $3.48 Norton

920 Indians of North America—Captivities—Juvenile literature. Frontier and pioneer life—The West—Juvenile literature 67-15443

The author "presents the stories of ten young men and women—whites, Indians, and half-breeds—most of them not well-known but all part of the drama of the expansion westward. [For example] we read about Baptiste Charbonneau, son of Sacagawea and a French trader, at different stages of his life a companion to royalty, a mountain trapper, and mayor of San Luis Rey, who chose to spend his last years among his mother's people; about Cynthia Ann Parker, a Comanche captive at nine, who having spent twenty-four years among the Indians slowly died of unhappiness when fate placed her again in white society." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:183 Ag 1 '67 200w [YA]

"[Mr. Jones shows] genuine sympathy for his subjects. . . . The book helps to fill the void left by a general overconcentration on the biographies of popular Western heroes like Kit Carson and Buffalo Bill." M. M.

Horn Bk 44:194 Ap '68 200w

"The suggestions for further reading are appropriate although most are far more advanced than this title. Good adventure, this may also be related to curriculum demands and will appeal to reluctant readers." A. B. Martin

Library J 92:2659 J1 '67 100w

"[This book] contains little hackneyed material. A great deal of research obviously went into writing it—perhaps too much. . . . [Each chapter is preceded by a] foreword or chapter poem. . . . But why quibble? [This] is a superior job. If your Westerner is able to read on an adult level, he may strike gold. Not always easy digging, but the real metal just the same." Dan Cushman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p20 My 17 '67 200w [YA]

JONES, GWENDOLYN. Packaging; information sources. 285p $8.75 Gale res.

016.6585 Packaging—Bibliography 67-18370

This is "an annotated guide to the literature, associations, and educational institutions concerned with containers and packaging." Sections 1-10 are subject divisions: 'General'; 'Management Considerations'; 'Materials and Methods'; 'Packages'; 'Machinery and Machine Operations'; 'Protective Packaging and Shipping Containers'; 'Standardization and Testing'; 'Physical Distribution'; 'Military Packaging'; and 'Packaging Special Products.' Each section is a bibliography of books, pamphlets, and reports issued by commercial publishers, government agencies, and associations. . . . Section 11 is a list of periodicals, indexes, and abstracts in which packaging information can be found; section 12 is a list of packaging associations; and section 13 lists schools that offer courses and programs on packaging." (Library J) Subject index and author-title index.

"In a laudatory prefatory note, a packaging engineer states that 'a compendium such as this has long been needed in the packaging field—to date none has been generally available.' To fill the gap, the librarian of the St. Regis Paper Company has brought together in a compact volume a staggering collection of source material. Jones' exhaustive work is intended 'for all packaging practitioners—designers, engineers, marketing men, economists, and industry suppliers.' . . . An essential book for those in or interested in the packaging field."

Choice 5:33 Mr '68 120w

"Literature of manufacturers has been excluded as have periodical articles, except for special issues. . . . The entries in all sections have explanatory annotations. The bibliographic treatment of the subject seems very exhaustive under the limitations indicated. All companies concerned with packaging should consider purchasing this book. In libraries, the use of this guide to informational sources will be limited to those patrons interested in the subject." D. E. Thompson

Library J 92:3027 M 15 '67 170w

JONES, HOWARD MUMFORD. Belief and disbelief in American literature [pub. for] Frank L. Weil inst. for studies in religion and the humanities. 153p $5 Univ. of Chicago press

810.9 American literature. Religion in literature 67-25521

"In this book, based on a series of six lectures, . . . [the author discusses] the religious attitudes of representative writers from the 18th Century to the present. He considers Tom Paine, Irving, Bryant, Cooper, Emerson, Whitman, Twain, and Frost." (Library J) Index.

JONES, H. M.—Continued

Reviewed by Floyd Stovall
Am Lit 40:398 N '68 600w

"This little volume may indeed be a 'suave and cultivated book,' as the dust jacket claims, but it is still something of a disappointment. The title is misleading, suggesting polarities that Jones does not offer. . . . At the outset [he] makes it clear that his concern is not what religious belief has meant to our literature but rather what the religious views of selected writers were. This approach results in some superficial sections of background material and an overall fuzziness of focus, in contrast to [R.] Stewart's American Literature and Christian Doctrine [BRD 1958], which looks with single purpose for the presence or absence of the concept of original sin in the work of selected writers, or [C.] Brooks' The Hidden God [BRD 1963], which finds religious, if not always specifically Christian, values revealed in the art of some major authors of our time."

Choice 5:777 S '68 200w

"Though never minimizing their heterodoxies and heresies, Mumford Jones dissents from the idea that the unconventionality [of American writers] represented atheism."

Christian Century 84:1660 D 27 '67 90w

"To do Mr. Jones credit, he says that he would have written a different book if he had chosen another set of writers including, for example, Poe, Hawthorne, James, Faulkner, and Eliot. He is undeniably correct in his assumption. The fact that his lectures were meant for a popular audience results, at times, in a too general and capsulized treatment of cultural and intellectual background, but by and large what he has to say is sound and sensible. The chapters on Twain and Frost are excellent. Making use of the latest biographical studies, he shows quite persuasively the relationship of their personal conflicts to their religious ideas. Highly recommended for academic libraries." Arnold Smithline

Library J 92:4418 D 1 '67 170w

New Yorker 44:135 F 24 '68 120w

"'Imaginative American writing,' Mr. Jones says, 'has more or less turned its back upon the church and upon theology; it has not turned its back upon the necessity of belief of some sort in man as man.' What a belief in man as man amounts to, or what indeed it means, Mr. Jones does not say. He is a learned scholar and a celebrated lecturer, but he has not been severe with himself in [these lectures]. . . . His theme is important, but it requires more profound consideration, if it is to be considered at all."

TLS p902 Ag 22 '68 360w

JONES, J. HARRY. The Minutemen [by] J. Harry Jones, Jr. 426p $6.95 Doubleday 323.2 Anti-Communist movements. Vigilance committees 68-17786

A reporter for the Kansas City Star describes a group founded in 1961 in the United States for the "purpose of eventually taking counterrevolutionary actions against international Communist forces which members believe some-day will attempt to gain control of the United States Government." (Library J) Index.

"Jones's investigative reporting is excellent. The material he has used is based on his personal observation and interviews with those who actively support or oppose the organization. His book makes one think about and fear the type of people who are attracted to extremist organizations. . . . The most detailed and definitive work on the subject to date, [this book] should be acquired by public and academic libraries." J. J. Fox

Library J 93:3541 O 1 '68 180w

"This [is an] informative if ill-organized and somewhat inconclusive report. But [it] has an undoubted documentary value, and the author has written with admirable dispassion about this bizarre phenomenon." E. M. Yoder
Sat R 51:40 O 12 '68 750w

JONES JAMES. The ice-cream headache, and other stories; the short fiction of James Jones. 238p $5 Delacorte press

68-12048

A collection of twelve short stories and one novella. The author provides a general introduction and brief individual prefatory remarks. Some of these stories have appeared previously in such publications as Collier's Magazine, Harper's Magazine and Playboy.

"[These short stories] trace James Jones's development as a writer from 1947 to date. The subject material is surprisingly varied, ranging from love and war to intimate evocations of childhood. Outstanding examples of the latter are two sensitive and superbly realized stories, 'The Valentine' and 'A Bottle of Cream.' Among the adult stories are a slick view of bachelor girls in New York, 'Sunday Allergy,' and 'Secondhand Man,' a study of the disintegration of a man and his marriage. Personal, vigorous, meaningful, this collection should interest older young adults and those adults who do not usually read short stories." R. H. Donahugh

Library J 93:572 F 1 '68 110w [YA]

"The majority of the thirteen stories in this collection by a highly successful novelist were written in the late forties and throughout the fifties; they are anything but dated, and the variety of experiences they convey results not only in very moving fiction but, cumulatively, in a compact social history of what it was like for Mr. Jones's generation to grow up, go to war, marry, and, generally, to become people in America. If you've been permanently turned off by Mr. Jones's most recent novels, reading this book may renew your interest in what he writes next." Sara Blackburn

Nation 206:800 Je 17 '68 90w

Reviewed by John Thompson

N Y Times Bk R p52 Ap 21 '68 700w

"Not that [Jones] is clumsy in the [stories collected here] as he often is in his novels, but it is evident that he is working hard to express things he finds difficult to say. There are brief prefaces which may seem egoistic, but will interest those who know his work—and might even want the forewords to be longer. The best story, perhaps, is the one most reminiscent of From Here to Eternity [BRD 1951]: a First Sergeant . . . dominates a convincing and deeply-felt account of battle experience. But there is equal feeling in the less 'predictable' stories of childhood which are emotional, but not guilty of the sentimentality of which he seems to suspect himself."

TLS p333 Ap 4 '68 150w

JONES, KEN, Jr. auth. Soccer science. See Eastham, G.

JONES, LEROI, ed. Black fire; an anthology of Afro-American writing; ed. by Leroi Jones and Larry Neal. 670p $8.95 Morrow

810.8 Negro literature. American literature—Collections 68-23914

An anthology of previously published essays, poems, short stories and plays by over seventy black writers.

"[This anthology] is almost uniformly angry and explosive in its content. . . . It is hard to say whether all [the contributors] have as deep a hatred of the white man and the culture in which they live as the selection chosen by the editors would indicate. Certainly it is no surprise to find Stokely Carmichael, Ed Bullins, Calvin Hernton in full frenzy of anger and threat of destruction, but there are others, too, who might have given vent, quite reasonably, to an anger that would be more controlled and seem less vicious in other contexts."

Best Sell 28:349 N 15 '68 150w

"Although some of the essays contain good insights, and a few of the stories and plays a certain power (the poems with rare exceptions are very poor), they generally all fall apart in embarrassing, adolescent, pedantic, and hysterical race-war ravings of revenge and retribution. However justified the anger and the politics of these young writers . . . shoddy writing is shoddy writing, and these pieces do not suddenly become revolutionary or Africanized as a result of their racial stance or liberally sprinkled obscenities." Edward Margolies

Library J 93:2659 J1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 11:10 D 19 '68 1800w

New Yorker 44:250 D 7 '68 80w

"The editors, by implication, set for themselves and their authors an enormous and revolutionary task: both to define a black esthetic and to illustrate scope and vitality. The ambitions of Black Fire make it newsworthy and instructive, but the disparity between its ambitions and its achievement is painful and embarrassing. . . . A few of the assembled works have a scatological energy that succeeds in impressing one with the violence and passion of the author's emotions, but the expression never achieves the precision and control which are the hallmarks of successful art. . . . The volume places in sharp focus the old controversy between the particular and the universal relevance of esthetic standards, and makes one consider afresh the relationship between political and cultural programs and the achievements of the human imagination." Peter Berek

Sat R 51:35 N 30 '68 2100w

JONES, LEROI. Black music. 221p il $5 Morrow

781.7 Musicians, American. Jazz music. Negro musicians. Negroes 67-29844

In this collection of "record reviews, liner notes, interviews, articles and comments which have appeared in Down Beat, Metronome, Negro Digest, Kulchur and The Jazz Review—along with a couple of previously unpublished articles—[the author attempts an] . . . explanation of what [the] new jazz is about. . . . [A final chapter] traces the developing line of black music from Africa through the church, to rhythm and blues, on one hand, and to the new jazz on the other. . . . [Jones attributes] the lack of general understanding of the new jazz . . . [to the fact that] most published jazz critics are white. . . . [There are] pieces on the growth of the jazz avant-garde and on New York loft-and-coffee-house jazz, [and] talks with Cecil Taylor and Don Cherry and Wayne Shorter." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[This collection of pieces] written in the 1960's provides a clear picture of where one segment of the modern Negro community stands musically—and socially. . . . It is a valuable statement by a frequently angry, sometimes eloquent and always important writer. It is also a valuable record of the dramatic change in Mr. Jones's style during these years. His writing at present eschews standard form in the same way that his subject departs from conventional musical thinking. Like his earlier book, Blues People: Negro Music in White America [BRD 1963, 1964, this book] is a recommended addition for libraries developing or expanding collections in this area." R. A. Hamm

Library J 92:3425 O 1 '67 110w

Library J 93:3340 S 15 '68 20w [YA]

"The key element in Mr. Jones's book is his final chapter, previously unpublished, which serves as an epilogue to the darting glimpses of the new jazz and the new jazzmen that make up the rest of the book. . . . Because the book is a miscellany of casual pieces, the reader's progress becomes disorderly and repetitious. But there are so many strong, guiding beams of light . . . one can only wish that, instead of pasting together these old pieces, Mr. Jones had used them as the basis for a deliberate book on black music." John Wilson

N Y Times Bk R p46 Mr 17 '68 500w

JONES, LEROI. Tales. 132p $4.50 Grove

67-27881

A collection of short stories by the author of the "novel The System of Dante's Hell [BRD 1965]. . . . [Many of these stories] appeared originally in various magazines. . . . [A number of them concern the author, his parents,] his college years at Howard University; his writer's romance with words and literature; the growing alienation of his years in the Air Force; his relationships with wife, girl friend, and a number of homosexuals; the perennial problem of thinking white and being black; finally, fame, increasing isolation, and total acceptance of the black world." (Sat R)

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p7 D 24 '67 750w

"The 16 tales comprising Jones' latest volume are a mixture of wit and terror projected like a missile against the white establishment. Not just another 'hate whitey' volume, Jones' book of snapshots of the Negro is presented with considerable skill. . . . Abrasive situations abound . . . [but] through it all one is aware of a clever artist at work. . . . This volume belongs in the college library along with Jones' other books. . . . His is a unique expression of the complicated and desperate world of the American Negro."

Choice 5:50 Mr '68 160w

Reviewed by Nat Hentoff

Commonweal 89:359 D 6 '68 10w

"These seem to be incidents torn from the stuff of the author's life. . . . Some are painfully understandable and clearly etched, others are seemingly disconnected word clusters. Whether the nonstandard orthography is accidental or planned, whether the shorter pieces are random musings at the typewriter or fashioned works of art, is not clear. The temptation is to compare these disjointed sections with stream-of-consciousness writing, but the connective flow is absent. Many readers will be thrown off by such items as 'A Chase (Alighieri's Dream)' which, except for the initiate, will seem to be so much meaningless type on paper. 'Uncle Tom's Cabin: Alternate Ending' alone makes the collection worth buying." J. M. Elrod

Library J 92:3445 O 1 '67 130w

Reviewed by Robert Bone

N Y Times Bk R p36 F 4 '68 480w

"[The author] is so conspicuous a provocateur, he brings out the moralist in us all. The temptation to preach, nag and yammer at him is overpowering—the impulse to tell him that as a writer he is his own worst enemy. . . . The worst and most frivolous pages in these sixteen 'tales' are as bad as any he's ever perpetrated—offensive, frenetic, loud-mouthed jive, the work of a rank amateur. . . . If his party manners were all, we could all bid good-bye to Mr. Jones without regrets. . . . [but he] is a real writer, at his best a truly gifted one. . . . He strikes his richest vein when he writes of childhood, of the small black boy—the 'short skinny boy with the bubble eyes.'" Saul Maloff

Newsweek 70:103B D 4 '67 600w

"The earlier tales are done in a frequently bewildering telegraphic style that is more notation than expression. Moreover, the writing fluctuates between the precision and elegance (not necessarily virtues) of 'white' language and the crude strength of 'black' slang. . . . Although many of the sixteen tales . . . can be read independently, the book is more a novel than a collection of stories. Characters, names, places, and symbols, most of them rooted in Jones's earlier work, recur throughout. . . . It is understatement to say that the quality of these stories is uneven. The strain of anti-intellectualism and the cultivation of spontaneous self-expression are so strong that the writing frequently gets out of control. Despite redeeming paragraphs or episodes, a few of the stories are downright amateurish. But, while it spoils some of the pieces, this method is the source of the book's strength. . . . Jones triumphs because he is consistently able to inspire language with new life and rhythm." H. S. Resnick

Sat R 50:28 D 9 '67 1450w

JONES, MADISON. An exile. 153p $4.50 Viking 67-20292

"Sheriff Hank Tawes was at the dangerous age. His wife nagged at him. Their marriage was foundering. . . . He was respected as an honest sheriff in these Tennessee hills but his wife thought he could do better. No man was more ready for temptation. And it came. Flint McCain, a moonshiner, uses his daughter to seduce the sheriff. Tawes, thus hooked, can keep the 'Feds' from finding the still. Guilt-ridden by his desire for Alma McCain, Tawes becomes enmeshed in deceit." (Library J)

"This deceptively simple little novel is rewarding to a degree. Every word about the middle-aged sheriff in a small Southern town who becomes hopelessly infatuated with a bootlegger's moll is plain and comprehensible. His temptation and sin are thoroughly credible in view of the briefly but surely sketched deterioration of his marriage. . . . In a sentence, it's the story of a middle-aged man's exile from his former values and so from himself. If the woman hadn't been there one feels he would have fallen into some other trap as compensation for his increasing sense of loss of childhood and of love. The sheriff is a good man with whom one identifies entirely. His tragedy could be anybody's and it matters." K. G. Jackson

Harper 235:115 O '67 140w

"The author's variation on the theme of sin and retribution has a poetic intensity that raises his slight novel somewhat above the ordinary. A college teacher of literature, he has several well-received novels to his credit.

JONES, MADISON—Continued

[Among them, A Buried Land, BRD 1963, The Innocent, BRD 1957, and Forest of the Night, BRD 1960]. Earl Tannenbaum
Library J 92:2808 Ag '67 150w

"A triumph of craftsmanship. Style and content are in complete harmony. The characters are vividly real; their function, as symbols in the author's larger perceptions, is unforced and organic. . . . The controlled point of view is one of the technical joys of the book. We see and feel everything through Hank's mind. . . . [The technique] permits Mr. Jones to treat the world outside of Hank impressionistically. . . . 'An Exile'—first published in The Sewanee Review—is an intensely Southern book, but like the best of Southern fiction is not self-consciously so. The basic human problem cuts across geography." W. T. Jack

N Y Times Bk R p22 S 3 '67 700w

Va Q R 44:viii winter '68 140w

JONES, MARY ALICE. The Bible story of the creation; comments by Mary Alice Jones; il. by D. K. Stone. 44p $2.50 Rand McNally
222 Creation—Juvenile literature 67-21608

The author "explains, verse by verse, the biblical account of the creation and its relationship to today's world. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by Madeleine L'Engle

Book World p13 Ag 4 '68 120w

"This book is written in a strong and simple manner. [The] color illustrations supplement the text adequately, but the black-and-white drawings vary considerably in quality. The binding unfortunately is very poor, and unsuitable for library use." F. L. McClure
Library J 93:1800 Ap 15 '68 80w

JONES, MAUREEN, jt. auth. Wooden Images. See Laliberte, N.

JONES, MOLLY MASON. Guiding your child from 2 to 5. 366p $8.75 Harcourt
649 Children—Management 67-20312

"Dr. Jones, a parent who has raised two children of her own, has also worked with hundreds of youngsters during her years [from 1936 to 1967] as Director of the Mary B. Eyre Nursery School at Scripps College. . . . [Her advice] ranges from toilet training and temper tantrums to nursery schools and the problems of working mothers. She offers . . . suggestions on safety measures, play materials, books, music, and television." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A thoughtful philosophy of child rearing which stresses understanding the complete child rather than reacting to specific incidents of behavior. . . . [The] textbook style reduces the effectiveness and readability of this worthwhile book." Janet Freedman
Library J 93:89 Ja 1 '68 150w

"A very full coverage of concerns including the general nature of little children, their learning and play activities, their feelings, and their relations with other people. Parents-to-be as well as those already facing the pressing demands of early child-rearing will appreciate her mastery of the topic, plain style, and generous listings of appropriate books and playthings." John Calam
Sat R 51:56 J1 20 '68 80w

JONES, RICHARD. The three suitors; a novel [Eng title: The age of wonder]. (Atlantic monthly press bk) 311p $6 Little 68-13967

"The protagonist, Mignon Benson-Williams, an elderly widow, lives with her equally elderly brother in the family home in Wales. Her husband was a prominent civil servant and, in her heyday, Mignon frequented if not the actual corridors of power at least the adjoining rooms. Now she finds herself in a backwater, neglected except for infrequent visits from family and friends. But the radical in Mignon still burns. She turns a chance suggestion that she publish her husband's private papers and diaries into a personal crusade. In her encounters with the three men who come to examine the papers—the suitors of the title—she in effect reenters the lists, rejoins her battle with the world." (Christian Science Monitor)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:126 Ap '68 430w

Reviewed by J. W. Hattman

Best Sell 27:472 Mr 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by R. V. Cassill

Book World p4 Mr 24 '68 700w

"Jones's first novel stands in relation to the general run of contemporary fiction as the Grand Tour to an eight-countries-in-two-weeks-hotels-and-tips-included package-deal of today. [The novel] sets a leisurely pace. There is time to linger, to absorb atmosphere, examine complex relationships from every angle. . . . The reverberations from these quiet clashes, their impact on Mignon and those around her make for a delicate play and counterplay of personalities that adds up to a fascinating whole—and a novel worth rereading." P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 14 '68 160w

Reviewed by John Thompson

Commentary 45:74 Ap '68 290w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:105 Ap '68 320w

Reviewed by M. L. Garvey

Library J 93:772 F 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Eric Rhode

New Statesman 74:20 J1 7 '67 230w

Reviewed by John Wain

N Y Rev of Books 11:34 Ag 22 '68 1100w

"[Jones] describes the texture of his heroine's predicament in fresh, original accents flecked with poetry and humor. The Benson-Williams's family tree, complete with a flourishing illegitimate twig, grows large as life for the reader to marvel at. The three suitors: a pre-Raphaelite young editor, a vulpine pop journalist, and an American artifact salesman, are crisp cameos. And about the entire novel there is a leisurely almost turn-of-the-century atmosphere which makes each revelation a delight." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p28 Mr 24 '68 190w

"It is clear that [the author] intended to write an entertaining, balloon-puncturing novel, not an exposé, a polemic, or a titillation. Further, he meant to write it with a decent regard for human values and the basic disciplines of his craft. . . . Old age at bay in a diminishing world, liberal vs. reactionary, young wastrel looking ahead vs. nostalgic young intellectual looking back, doers vs. talkers, entrenched snobs vs. self-made, traditionalists vs. innovators—they are all here, skittering about in this Welsh hinterland, providing the stuff of which subplots are made. There's even a thread of youthful romance, featuring a rudderless young man and a toothsome, Jaguar-driving girl who knows how to steer." James Kelly

Sat R 51:36 Mr 16 '68 750w

JONES, WEYMAN. Edge of two worlds; il. by J. C. Kocsis. 143p $3.95 Dial press 68-15256

In this "novel, the protagonist is a Texas boy, Calvin. Bound for the east to attend law school in 1842, he finds himself lost on the prairie, sole survivor of a Comanche massacre. During his wanderings, tired and hungry, he comes upon Sequoyah. . . . Wanting to break away and find his way home but recognizing the Indian's need—and his courage—and his own dependency upon him, Calvin accompanies him on the long, hard, dangerous journey across Texas in pursuit of Sequoyah's dream: to find in Mexico the origins of the Cherokee. . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (Book World)

"In The Talking Leaf Weyman Jones told of a Cherokee boy whose life was changed by Sequoyah, the Indian who invented a written language for his people. . . . [This is an] equally unusual and moving novel. . . . Much of the story is true, its inventions have the feel of truth, and all of it is related with insights and imagination." Polly Goodwin
Book World p18 S 29 '68 190w

Horn Bk 44:698 D '68 150w

"An author's postscript to this novel separates fact from fiction, yet up to the book's last sentence readers will be so absorbed that the question of historical validity will not arise. Even when he writes fiction, Mr. Jones is obviously telling no lies about life. . . . In the end, Calvin, who has learned much from this wise man, emerges proud of Sequoyah's hard-earned respect and continues eastward instead of turning tail for home. Calvin is the fictional part of Sequoyah's true story, but Calvin's passage into the adult world makes a book, manly in style and content, that can by extension, help guide its readers through the gap between two worlds." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:1812 Ap 15 '68 150w

"Thrown together by chance on a desolate prairie, the two traditional enemies find that the survival of each literally depends on the humanity of the other. This is a fascinating theme, and one that the author explores with depth and beauty. Modeling the Cherokee on an actual personage who invented a written language for his people, Mr. Jones thus pits a highly civilized red man against a youth whose concept of civilization is white." Barbara Wersba

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 My 5 '68 150w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:68 N 9 '68 50w

JONGMANS, D. G., ed. Anthropologists in the field; ed. by D. G. Jongmans [and] P. C. W. Gutkind. (Samenlevingen buiten Europa) 292p $9.75 Humanities press

572 Anthropology

"A result of a lecture series on field work at the Institute of Cultural Anthropology of the University of Amsterdam, the 10 articles in this volume purport to elucidate how cultural anthropologists carry out their research. . . . The articles cover: social description; the problem of reliability and validity; participation and quantification; field work among the Djuka; social surveys in non-Western areas; participants' view of their culture; history in the field; restudy as a technique for the examination of social change; orientation and research methods in African urban studies; the anthropologist in government service; some ethical problems in modern field work. . . . [Some of the articles] have been published previously in journals." (Choice)

"All the essays are written in a style that is at once elegantly literate and personally lively. Each essay is interesting and useful in its own way. Several of them make particularly valuable and original methodological contributions. Most notable among these are [those by] P. E. De Josselin De Jong [G. K. Garbett, and J. Vansina]. . . . In a way not necessarily planned or fully intended by its editors and authors, [this] is also a source of primary data on the contributors' underlying attitudes toward the essential nature of their discipline. . . . [It] is a somewhat defensive, frequently nostalgic, but, on the whole, honest and constructive acknowledgment by a group of anthropologists that the 'happy days of ethnographic osmosis' . . . have come to an end." R. C. Fox

Am J Soc 74:92 Jl '68 1200w

"The viewpoints of the Dutch anthropologists are especially valuable as offering contrasts and comparisons to the more familiar approaches and techniques of American and British anthropologists. Perhaps the most valuable part is a comprehensive annotated bibliography on field work methods. . . . A valuable book for anthropologists and advanced students in social science."

Choice 5:1230 N '68 180w

JOOST, NICHOLAS. Years of transition: the Dial, 1912-1920. 321p il $8.50 Barre

051 The Dial

67-23654

The author of Scofield Thayer and The Dial (BRD 1965) "plots the editorships of F. F. Browne of the genteel tradition (Woodrow Wilson, Henry Blake Fuller, Harriet Monroe, H. M. Kallen, Archibald Henderson); Martyn Johnson of the new American literature of social and political liberalism (John Dewey, Thorstein Veblen, Harold Stearns, Bertrand Russell, Conrad Aiken and Amy Lowell); and Scofield Thayer and James Sibley Watson of the final and most famous years (T. S. Eliot, W. B. Yeats, E. E. Cummings, Marianne Moore, D. H. Lawrence and Hart Crane)." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[Mr. Joost's] discussion of editorial policy is admirable, and his analysis of the significant contributions to the magazine does justice to both the subjects and the writers. Sometimes the chapters and even occasionally the sentences carry more ballast than seems necessary, and certainly quotation is excessive. But readers who remember the Dial of the 1920's are probably unaware of its earlier evolution; for them and especially for the student of American periodical history this study is of major importance. [This is] a handsome volume, with clear typography on good stock and a number of photographs of prints and drawings from Scofield Thayer's personal art collection (he owned works by Beardsley, Gropper, Dehn, Chagall, and E. E. Cummings). It should perhaps be noted that certain pages suffer slightly from inadequate inking." J. T. Flanagan

Am Lit 40:247 My '68 600w

"A chronicle of the most exciting years of a magazine that for a time had no peer among American journals of contemporary literature and the arts."

Christian Century 84:1496 N 22 '67 30w

Reviewed by G. L. Groman
J Am Hist 55:168 Je '68 490w

"In a well-researched, liberally footnoted text [Joost] traces the decline, rebirth, death, and new lease on life of the magazine in Chicago and later in New York. Two concluding essays place the Dial in relation to the times and to other magazines. The book, which is well printed and illustrated, lacks the appeal of the first study, but will please subject specialists." Bill Katz

Library J 93:754 F 15 '68 180w

"The book is a poorly written, rambling, dull piece of work, with a great deal of matter which had already appeared in [Joost's] earlier study. [It] is clogged with material that belongs in footnotes rather than in the text. . . . The chronology is never under control, and the narrative seesaws back and forth between The Dial of the 1920's and The Dial of an earlier time. As a result [this] is not a book to be read except for reference. Fortunately, it has substantial documentation." R. S. Kennedy

New Eng Q 41:476 S '68 600w

Va R 44:xxxx summer '68 70w

JORDAN, AMOS A., ed. Issues of national security in the 1970's; essays presented to George A. Lincoln on his sixtieth birthday; ed. by Amos A. Jordan, Jr. 336p $7.50 Praeger 355.03 U.S.—Military policy. U.S.—Defenses.

Lincoln, George Arthur 67-20483

Comprised of 14 essays, the book is a tribute to Lincoln, the long-time faculty member at the U.S. Military Academy. The contributors include Eisenhower, General Charles H. Bone-steel, Commanding General of the Eighth Army in Korea, and the new Chancellor of Pittsburgh, former Air Force Colonel Wesley Posvar." (Choice) Each author "attempts to present and analyze a different aspect of the broad problems that will affect national security in the 1970's, for example, arms control, international organizations, NATO, military technology, research, and decision-making. Each writer approaches his topic first by giving a brief history, then summarizing the present situation, and concluding with observations on how defense problems will develop in the next decade. . . . They all agree upon the necessity of a standing military force to balance that of the Soviet Union . . . [and] they concur that United States intervention in small wars will continue." (Library J)

"A number of the essays offer timely and provocative commentary. Most interesting is the suggestion found in several essays that the U.S. should more carefully evaluate when, where, and for what purpose it intervenes with military force in the 1970's. . . . The book suggests there are high ranking military officers . . . [who are] thoughtful, moderate, and perceptive. This in itself is sufficient reason for purchasing the book. More specifically, the book could well serve as a reader for courses in national security affairs."

Choice 5:408 My '68 100w

"That the role of the professional soldier has altered since the period before World War II is demonstrated by this collection of 14 essays and an introduction written by 13 officers or former officers and two civilians, eight of whom hold Ph.D's. . . . Although considerable repetition occurs, each essay is a thought-provoking and deliberate effort to understand the role of American military power. . . . This well-written, authoritative book should not only please Colonel Lincoln but should also be in every university and large public library." John Buechler

JORDAN, A. A.—Continued

Library J 92:2598 J1 '67 230w

JORDAN, ROBERT M. Chaucer and the shape of creation; the aesthetic possibilities of inorganic structure. 257p $6.95 Harvard univ. press

821 Chaucer, Geoffrey 67-29628

This study explores "the relations between Chaucer's narrative art and the central presuppositions of medieval aesthetics. . . . [The author] begins by examining the elements of medieval aesthetic theory and tracing its classical and Christian sources. . . . [He then analyzes] Troilus and Criseyde, the Canterbury Tales as a whole, and six individual tales." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Jordan looks at Troilus and Criseyde and The Canterbury Tales from a structuralist position. . . . It is in the idea of juxtaposition as employed in the Gothic cathedral that Jordan's thesis has its home. . . . The resultant interpretations work well with only a few straining somewhat under the burden of demonstrating that Chaucer never wandered beyond the allegorical-symbolic reserve (it is still difficult to believe this in the Wife of Bath's case). The book extends [C.] Muscatine's [Chaucer and the French Tradition] admirably and reinforces the notion that Chaucer was locked within his age. Limited but important bibliography."

Choice 5:484 Je '68 180w

"[Readers may] be uncomfortable with the severely analytical and intellectual approach, the failure to parade literary allusion and relish, and, more justifiably, the sometimes awkward style and even misuse of words. But [this] is a serious book on literature. . . . In his criticism [Jordan] overstates his governing architectural metaphor and tries to make it do too much, but he goes far to demolish the 19th-century preconceptions that still hinder so many from seeing Chaucer plain. He presents a Chaucer who is to be enjoyed for the intellectual explicitness, brilliance and clarity of his artistic structures." Derek Brewer

New Statesman 76:806 D 6 '68 230w

"Some of Jordan's points have already been made, though with different emphases. . . . Some have already been refuted, owing to the early release of some chapters as essays in professional journals. But the sum of all the (discrete) aspects of Jordan's art is a significant book of interest to those who would understand Chaucer in his own terms."

Va Q R 44:clvi autumn '68 120w

JORDAN, W. K., ed. The chronicle and political papers. See Edward VI, King of England

JORDAN, WINTHROP D. White over black; American attitudes toward the Negro, 1550-1812; pub. for the Inst. of early Am. hist. and culture. 651p $12.50 Univ. of N.C. press

973 U.S.—Race relations. Negroes—History 68-13295

The author seeks "out the origins, meaning and explanation of Negro debasement in America." (N Y Times Bk R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This mountain of a book is one of the most important contributions to date on the subject of race in America. While its author cuts the story off at 1812, by surveying the fears which whites developed vis-à-vis Negroes in America he presents a 651-page foundation for understanding racial stereotypes and a background for understanding still-persisting American ambivalence over Negro rights."

Christian Century 85:302 Mr 6 '68 70w

"In spite of Jordan's heroic effort to control his vast body of material . . . problems of organization remain. The reader is shuttled between passages of integrated social-intellectual history and more traditional 'history of scientific ideas' sections, sometimes without adequate preparation or justification; and in the last hundred pages the book's unity, which the author earlier sustains, diminishes. Jordan's methodology may also be challenged since he sometimes relies on limited evidence for large, intuitive generalizations. . . . Generally, however, one is impressed by [his] imagination and persuasiveness in arguing from fragmentary data. . . . [The book's] richness of information and insight, its sensitive, penetrating analysis of the unspoken as well as the explicit, its union of breadth with depth, make it a brilliant achievement." R. D. Brown

New Eng Q 41:447 S '68 1000w

"Mr. Jordan has tackled one of the most abstruse, subtle, tangled, controversial and certainly one of the most important problems of American history. It has tripped many scholars. Fully aware of all this, the author (who teaches history at the University of California at Berkeley) has put simple solutions and flashy theories aside and brought to his task a patience, skepticism, thoroughness and humility commensurate with the vast undertaking. He combines these qualities with imagination and insight. The result is a massive and learned work that stands as the most informed and impressive pronouncement on the subject yet made." C. V. Woodward

N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 31 '68 1250w

Reviewed by W. L. Rose

Va Q R 44:477 summer '68 950w

JORDAN, Z. A. The evolution of dialectical materialism; ■ philosophical and sociological analysis. 490p $12 St Martins

146 Dialectical materialism 67-19737

"The first part of the study investigates Marx's philosophical and sociological views and explores the relation of Marx and Engels to Hegel, Feuerbach, Saint-Simon and Comte. . . . Engels's transformation of the naturalism of Marx into dialectical materialism is traced in the second part, and a systematic account of its revisions as carried out by Plekhanov, Lenin and Stalin is presented. . . . The problem of the justification of historical materialism and its relation to dialectical materialism is discussed in the third and last part of the study. . . . [The concluding chapter] gives ■ short history of the term and a concise analysis of the concept of scientific socialism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Indexes of names and subjects.

Reviewed by John Lachs

Ann Am Acad 378:201 J1 '68 900w

"One, if not the best, of many books on dialectical materialism available. . . . [Jordan's] contribution is to the history of ideas rather than to political science. The book is well and lucidly written. . . . [It] is suitable for and comprehensible by undergraduates, although it will be used primarily as a source study for research papers. Good index; excellent footnotes; comprehensive bibliography."

Choice 5:786 S '68 130w

"Professor Jordan (already known ■ the author of an authoritative study of philosophy in Poland) has . . . provided a much-needed historical and critical study of both Marxism and Marxism-Leninism, in their respective philosophical aspects. Anyone who takes the trouble to read him will at any rate have gained ■ clearer mental picture of how the peculiar construct known as 'dialectical materialism' came into being. . . . I should myself be inclined to argue that Professor Jordan overstates the utter incompatibility of Marx's naturalism (an inheritance from the French materialists of the eighteenth century, principally Holbach and Diderot), with the speculative or 'metaphysical' materialism of the later Engels." George Lichtheim

N Y Rev of Books 10:27 Ap 11 '68 1650w

Reviewed by George Lichtheim

Pol Sci Q 83:451 S '68 600w

"[This book] is distinguished for its originality as well as for its learning. . . . The case is well-documented and ably argued. . . . Dr. Jordan [displays] not only his acumen ■ a philosopher but also his deep knowledge of the history of ideas in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. He does this, moreover, in ■ style so admirably clear that even the reader whose knowledge of philosophy is rather elementary will have little difficulty in following the argument. Loss of patience is more likely to be the reader's affliction than failure of understanding; for Dr. Jordan ■ repetitious, sometimes almost intolerably so. With no loss to scholarship, he could have reduced this book to perhaps half its present length."

TLS p1183 D 7 '67 800w

JOSE, F. SIONIL, ed. Asian PEN anthology; with an introd. by Norman Cousins. 358p $7.50 Taplinger

895 Oriental poetry—Collections 67-10849

This anthology "was the outcome of the first All-Asian P.E.N. conference held in Manila in 1962. It includes both short stories and poems from Australia, India, Indonesia, Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Thailand and Taiwan. Burma, Ceylon, Hong Kong, and Vietnam are each represented by one or more short stories, and Malaysia and Pakistan by poems. . . . Most of the 27 stories and 31 poems were previously published in small collections or in journals—both Asian and Western. . . . Many titles appeared first in Asian languages." (Library J)

"Some contributors, like Japan's Yukio Mishima, are well known; others, like Vietnam's Phan Du, are relatively unknown outside their own country. The fiction and poetry are of a high quality, and the 40-plus writers represented give an excellent indication of the contemporary literary scene in non-Communist Asia. . . . Should be on the shelf of every library interested in Asian studies."

Choice 5:1138 N '68 130w

"Short-story readers will find here fascinatingly fresh locales, and novel 'atmospheres,' yet almost no overpoweringly high-caliber achievements per se; death, heartbreak, and alienation rule most plots. Yukio Mishima's 'Three Million Yen,' however, transmits a notable if low-keyed shock effect. The poems (in translation most are necessarily in amorphous free verse) are varied and vivid; for this reviewer the work of the Indian professor Nissim Ezekiel is artistically most noteworthy. The volume, perhaps pardonably, is marred by scores of typographical errors." B. W. Fuson

Library J 92:4158 N 15 '67 230w

JOSEPH, JOAN. Peter the Great. 190p $3.50; lib bdg $3.34 Messner

B or 92 Peter I, the Great, Emperor of Russia—Juvenile literature 68-25096

A biography of the emperor "who, from 1696 when he became the sole ruler of Russia until his death in 1725, strove to change his nation from a medieval country to a modern power. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:277 O 1 '68 140w

"Miss Joseph invents a great deal of plausible dialogue to carry her narrative. . . . The titanic subject emerges as a complex man [and the book] makes interesting reading." Julia Losinski

Library J 93:4419 N 15 '68 60w

JOSEPH, M. K. The hole in the zero. 191p $3.95 Dutton

68-15661

"Boss Kraag, a tycoon, his daughter Helena, and his heir Merganser arrive at the edge of the universe for a trip into Chaos. They are met by the local warden Paradine, who lives in a cliché setting tended by a robot who impersonates stock characters of fiction. Once in Chaos, the expedition is sabotaged by Merganser, and the four characters are plunged into a series of episodes, without logic or continuity, sometimes alone and sometimes encountering each other in various forms." (TLS)

Reviewed by R. W. Ryan

Library J 93:1654 Ap 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Janet Hellerich

Library J 93:2133 My 15 '68 90w [YA]

"The minor characters are synthesised of plastiflesh and magnetic tapes to just the degree of convincingness generally afforded minor characters in novels. The punctilious, doddering butler who drops his aitches, the verbose housekeeper with her malapropisms, the Australian-idiomatic bush pilot, the Viennese psychiatrist are retained for sentimental reasons by the rulers in a universe of lightspeed travel and infinite possibility. In the absence of characters proper the fantasy is sustained by a delightful jargon which cleverly stops short of committing itself to the pictures it hints at. . . . Joseph consciously demonstrates that to write of the future is merely a means of escaping into a freer prose style. All novels are really about the past. As Kierkegaard said, life must be lived forward but understood backward." Gabriel Chanan

New Statesman 74:293 S 8 '67 200w

"Mr. Joseph appears to enjoy melting the personalities of his hallucinating voyagers lost in Sargasso of infinity. But since the finite identities of Boss Kraag, his spoiled daughter, her rotten fiancé, and their space guide, Seth Paradine, are calibrated to kiddie-cartoon dimension, the infinite variations tend to induce fatigue at ground level." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 11 '68 100w

"The first two chapters of [this novel] suggest that Professor Joseph is the most stylish writer of satirical SF since Vonnegut. . . . [This] is not so much a novel as a series of phenomenological enquiries into the way man organizes and interprets chaos. Echoes of Blake, Joyce, Yeats, Plotinus, Christ abound; race, myth, religion, conscience all have their part in a remarkable turmoil. Professor Joseph is brilliantly allusive; but the ending, when the sole remaining character—alone, apparently, in a cosmic junkyard—recreates paradise, is disappointingly facile in view of the complexity and variety of the argument that goes before. But it is never less than inventive, and often disturbingly and memorably written."

TLS p844 S 21 '67 300w

JOSEPH, STEPHEN. Theatre in the round. 179p il $6.50 Taplinger

792 Arena theater

68-17640

"A study of the history, theory, and practice of theater. . . . Mr. Joseph, lecturer in drama, University of Manchester, traces this history of the medieval cycles of mystery plays. He includes . . . analyses of the relationship between acting space and audience, problems of lighting and sound, of planning a production, of acting and stage management, and even of economics." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This amply illustrated book is at once valuable and annoying. . . . The book is annoying because it is much too personal. The deferential tone of the first chapter and the digression of two long chapters on the history of Mr. Joseph's own company tend to put off the reader. The book is not a disciplined and scholarly treatise, which it could easily have been. However, it remains an informative and practical introduction." T. E. Luddy

Library J 93:3152 S 15 '68 170w

"[This book] is partly a well-reasoned defence of the theatre-in-the-round method . . . and partly a step-by-step guide for setting up such a theatre. It dwells in detail on seating plans, . . . make-up, and production; and its approach is a model of factual clarity. For any amateur group or local council considering such a theatre, it will be an invaluable help. . . . But it is still true that round production (even with the aid of the 'superellipse' which Mr. Joseph recommends) denies the spectator a focal point; and denies the actor the advantage of direct address to the audience."

TLS p592 J1 6 '67 750w

JOSEPHSON, MATTHEW. Infidel in the temple; a memoir of the nineteen-thirties. 513p $8.95 Knopf

B or 92 U.S.—Intellectual life. U.S.—Social conditions. U.S.—History—1933-1945

66-10030

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Paul Kintery

Best Sell 27:407 Ja 15 '68 750w

Reviewed by W. C. McWilliams

Commonweal 87:476 Ja 19 '68 1150w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:78 Ja '68 320w

Reviewed by N. I. Huggins

J Am Hist 55:178 Je '68 400w

Reviewed by M. R. Konvitz

Sat 51:33 Ja 27 '68 1300w

JOSEPHUS, FLAVIUS. Revolt in Judea: the road to Masada. See Tamarin, A. H.

JOSEPHY, ALVIN M. The Indian heritage of America [by] Alvin M. Josephy, Jr. 384p il maps $10 Knopf

970.1 Indians—History

68-12661

The author "presents the history, the archaeology, and the ethnology—including origins and languages—of all the major Indian cultures from Alaska to Patagonia. He illuminates the social patterns and concepts . . . that gave rise to the stereotype Indian of American folklore, and . . . examines the impact on (and debt to) the Indian of the . . . early explorers and settlers. He describes . . . the destruction of the tribes, and the persistence of Indian cultures . . . and analyzes the situation of the Indian . . . today." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

JOSEPHY, A. M.—Continued

Best Sell 28:273 O 1 '68 220w

"The author is not a trained anthropologist or historian, but . . . he has respect for scholarship and is trying to write something compact and flowing enough to attract the general reader without being so casual with facts and sources that the specialists are disgruntled. . . . [In spite of] technical flaws and the fragmentary and hurried treatment of many important subjects that space limitations impose, the book has unusual touches and solid merits. . . . A special feature . . . is that [it] does not begin with 1492, but with the first indications of man's occupancy of the region. . . . American Indians should not complain of the treatment that they and their forebears receive in this book; it breathes appreciation of their worth and indignation at their long travail." Morris Opler

Book World p4 S 22 '68 1200w

"This sympathetic yet authoritative book is destined to become one of the most valuable reference works on American Indians. . . . [The author] manages to capture the very meaning of the Indian's way of life. . . . His excellent bibliography contains . . . a list of libraries containing important Indian collections. This is a first purchase for libraries." J. L. Buelna

Library J 93:2862 Ag '68 170w

Reviewed by George Merrill

Library J 93:4742 D 15 '68 120w [YA]

Reviewed by D'Arcy McNickle

Nation 207:699 D 23 '68 1050w

"The greater part of the book is devoted to setting the Indian scene, to bringing the story of Indian progress to the moment of sudden and total catastrophe [with] the arrival of the white man. . . . Many of Mr. Josephy's pages are so packed with facts that they are hard to take in, but these are facts of such interest and value that few readers will wish to be deprived of this informative compilation of them. In many longer passages Mr. Josephy's account is as dramatic as the events he is narrating. The one minor weakness lies possibly in the somewhat cursory manner in which he disposes of the white conquest of the Indians in the United States." Dale Van Every

N Y Times Bk R p16 O 6 '68 650w

JOUBERT, GEORGES. How to ski the new French way by Georges Joubert and Jean Vuarnet; tr. from the French by Sim Thomas and John Fry. 207p il $5.95 Dial press

796.9 Skis and skiing

A French coach and a French olympic champion "present" complete course of ski instruction based on the . . . techniques of today's champions, of all nationalities. . . . [The book] applies these advanced techniques to the needs of recreational skiers—beginners, intermediates, and experts. . . . Special consideration is given to teaching children and to adapting the author's methods to one's past instruction in the American, Austrian, or French system." (Publisher's note) Originally published in French under the title Comment se Perfectionner à Ski.

"Joubert and Vuarnet must be taken seriously by the advanced skier; . . . the new 'serpent' technique will be hotly discussed by pros. It was obviously a hard task to translate the often untranslatable. Still, somebody could have converted centimeters to inches and kilometers to miles. As for the novice, she had better go to ski school." C. W. Casewit

Book World p12 Ja 7 '68 160w

"Skiing the French way is more a mixed bag of tricks, as practiced by their champions, than it is something exclusively French in conception. But it does tell one how to undo whatever it is the authors believe to be wrong with the American or Austrian method! . . . The instruction is clear, informal, and what is most important—the reader feels he can trust his instructors. For libraries wherever there's an interest in skiing." F. B. Davenport

Library J 93:204 Ja 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Janice Kelly

Library J 93:2135 My 15 '68 90w [YA]

JOYCE, JAMES. Giacomo Joyce; with an introd. and notes by Richard Ellmann. 16p $10 Viking 828

67-28920

"In the summer of 1914, James Joyce was living in Trieste, winding up A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man [BRD 1917], and beginning Ulysses [BRD 1934]. At some unknown moment during this period, he painstakingly wrote out a fragmentary, poetic account of his middle-aged love affair with a local girl who studied English with him. The manuscript takes up eight sheets of oversize paper held between the dull gray covers of a school notebook." (Newsweek) This volume contains a reproduction of the handwritten text.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:143 F '68 160w

"We scent one of the arts of publishing, the deliberate creation of a collector's item. For what have we, in fact, paid our $10? Why, that same thing once cited [in Richard Ellmann's James Joyce, BRD 1959] as a mere 'unpublished notebook,' some 2,500 words, three-fifths of which were transcribed in the biography. Plus a full set of facsimiles and an introduction by Ellmann a third longer than the Joyce text. . . . What is Giacomo Joyce? A slender collection of impressions and epiphanies, exercises in Joyce's curiously idiosyncratic disruption of English sentence rhythms. . . . His infatuation with—was it Amalia Popper?—seems unimportant in comparison with his interest in how infatuation can be written about. As such an exercise, Giacomo Joyce was briefly important to him. . . . After 54 years the epicenter of such interest as lingers would seem to be a publisher's accounting department." Hugh Kenner

Book World p8 F 11 '68 900w

Choice 5:30 Mr '68 50w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 18 '68 460w

"[The book's] florid figures, abrupt turns of thought, and the central dilemma are interesting; however, the piece remains an exercise. Richard Ellmann's introduction is informative and well done. . . . [The contents are] provided with a series of notes explaining the text and pointing to similar usages in A Portrait and Ulysses. An essential purchase for scholarly libraries but probably not required—in this format and at this price—in smaller general collections." Lloyd Griffin

Library J 93:997 Mr 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by Anthony Burgess

Nation 206:309 Mr 4 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Matthew Hodgart

N Y Rev of Books 10:3 F 29 '68 1650w

"[Mr. Ellmann's] new presentation stresses, perhaps unduly, the artistic merits of this autobiographical document. Whether or not it is 'a great achievement' may well be arguable. That it should be described as a novel is, I think, an unwarranted source of confusion. Mr. Ellmann did much better by it in 'James Joyce,' when he referred to it as a prose poem. Though we exaggerate to call it a story, it is indeed a fascinating record, especially for those who wish to follow the interplay between a writer's career and his literary expression. . . . [However] it is hard to believe that these jottings, although carefully recopied by Joyce himself, were ever intended for publication. . . . 'Giacomo Joyce' derives its interest from its very closeness to unmediated experience, on the one hand. On the other, it enables us under expert guidance to retrace the development of motifs and cadences which appear in Joyce's finished work." Harry Levin

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ja 21 '68 900w

Reviewed by John Updike

New Yorker 44:167 Ap 6 '68 3000w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov

Newsweek 71:91A Ja 22 '68 320w

Reviewed by Paul Kresh

Sat R 51:23 My 25 '68 400w

Time 91:93 Ja 19 '68 550w

TLS p526 My 23 '68 800w

Va Q R 44:lvil spring '68 200w

JUAN, EPIFANIO SAN. See San Juan, E.

JUAN DE LA CRUZ, SAINT. See John of the Cross, Saint

JUDAH, J. STILLSON. The history and philosophy of the metaphysical movements in America. 317p $7.95 Westminster press

280 Sects. Metaphysics 67-11672

"In the middle 19th Century, a number of small occult groups originated in the United States, largely as a result of the Transcendental movement. [They represented] a revolt against the conservative authority and the organized Protestant churches, particularly predestinarian Calvinism. . . . Dr. Judah, a professor at the Pacific School of Religion, Berkeley, California, attempts in this book to trace the similarities in thought and common origins of such diverse metaphysical organizations as the Spiritualists, the Christian Scientists, the Theosophists, the Rosicrucians, and many others." (Library J) Index.

"The occult wing is differentiated from the healing wing of the metaphysical movements. This is the first comprehensive treatment of the Arcane School and the Astarte Foundation given apart from their own publications. Interviews, personal experience, and documents are used. . . . Thoroughly footnoted, with excellent index. Recommended."

Choice 5:360 My '68 160w

"Judah makes a good case for his contention that underlying the metaphysical movements is a basic, rather eclectic philosophy which was given colorful expression in a number of variant styles in the 19th century. Through this 'unitive' approach Judah has drawn together a coherent book dealing with the historical development and present form of a group of religious bodies of optimistic, idealistic orientation. . . . In his attempt to relate the story of the metaphysical movements to the larger history of religion in America, the author does not succeed as well as with his unitive approach. His first chapter, 'The Mirror of American Culture,' has a number of slips. . . . The influence of the metaphysical groups on the more traditional churches, especially with respect to healing, is stressed. . . . Judah's book offers convenient and compact summaries of the principal beliefs of each body; his is a useful work of reference." R. T. Handy
Christian Century 85:144 Ja 31 '68 450w

"[This] book is lucidly written, and the fascinating, well-documented stories about these groups should appeal to a wide audience of general readers and scholars. Recommended for college, university, and all but the smallest public libraries." J. A. Clarke
Library J 92:1015 Mr 1 '67 160w

JUDD, GERRIT P., ed. A Hawaiian anthology. 255p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

919.69 Hawaiian Islands. American literature—Collections. English literature—Collections 67-10888

This volume contains both fiction and non-fiction, primarily American and British. The three sections of the book cover Hawaiian history, Hawaiian places and traditions, and literary interpretations of the Islands. Contributors include Hiram A. Bingham, Charles Nordhoff, John Toland, Padraic Colum, Mark Twain, and Robert Louis Stevenson. Glossary. Bibliography.

"Recommended for any library's browsing collection even though it is not as good as a similar but larger anthology. A Hawaiian Reader, edited by [A.] Day and [C.] Stroven [BRD 1960]. Judd has strengthened his selections by adding John Toland's vivid account of the bombing of Pearl Harbor. But at the same time he has lost the entire dimension of ancient Hawaiian songs and legends contained in Day and Stroven. Aside from this, the editor's choices are sound and have not been anthologized before, and the book will be a nice complement to the earlier anthology."

Choice 4:1150 D '67 80w

Reviewed by L. B. Saunders
Library J 92:575 F 1 '67 100w

JUDSON, SYLVIA SHAW. For gardens and other places; the sculpture of Sylvia Shaw Judson. $10 Regnery

730.924 67-25634

"Basically a book of . . . illustrations of the work of [an] American woman sculptor. Many of the figures and groups were photographed in garden location. There is a two-page statement by the artist and a brief summary of the facts of her career. The plates are identified . . . at the rear of the volume." (Choice)

"While this is a visually attractive monograph, it does not raise questions of style or the relationship of the work to the total pattern of American sculpture, and that may be a weakness. For libraries particularly concerned with all aspects of American sculpture, and possibly for those interested in landscape architecture, this volume would help complete their coverage."

Choice 5:336 My '68 90w

"Franz Schulze, artist and teacher, wrote the foreword to this book, anticipating the modern art buff's rejection of Mrs. Judson's conservative style. . . . It is a good statement to be read by anyone who has trouble thinking about art. Mrs. Judson's major work is the statue of the Quaker martyr, Mary Dyer in front of the State House facing Boston Common, where she was hanged in 1660. It is a good example of how dramatic reticent realism can be. The garden sculptures, particularly of animals, are charming and in good taste. All Mrs. Judson's work expresses an effective simplicity. . . . Photographs, brief notes, and quotations combine to make this an impressive book although there may be few budgets that will stretch to include the cost of it." J. B. Lopez

Library J 93:1620 Ap 15 '68 110w

JULIEN, CLAUDE. Canada: Europe's last chance; tr. from the French by Penny Williams; with introd. by Blair Fraser. 178p maps $6.50 St Martins

320.971 Canada—Civilization. Canada—Foreign relations. Canada—Politics and government 68-18335

"Julien, foreign affairs editor of Le Monde, argues that Canadian independence is essential to European independence. By this he means that a Canada free from the . . . control now exercised by the United States is Europe's only real chance to play a role in world affairs not dictated by Washington." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author's] analysis of the factors which forged the quiet revolution [in Quebec] and the debate over the place of French Canadians within Confederation are the best parts of the book—inclusive and critical, based upon personal contact as well as reading. . . . Julien is brutally frank in reminding French Canadians that 'it was neither the English nor the Americans who had imposed on them antiquated and mediocre schooling, an agricultural economy, and a reactionary, corrupt political apparatus. These things they chose for themselves.' . . . What rescues this book from time and makes it still a 'challenging appraisal' is the manner in which Julien links the French Canadian question to the fate of the western alliance." C. C. Berger
Canadian Forum 48:90 Jl '68 900w

"A fine, concise, very readable account of some of Canada's problems and potential. Excellent translation. Recommended for all library shelves."

Choice 5:1360 D '68 170w

"[This] book is more valuable as a commentary on French affairs than it is as an assessment of the future of Canada. Most of the material that Julien presents is readily available elsewhere; and libraries that already have substantial Canadian collections probably will not need it. It is recommended, however, for the French history collection of college and university libraries." L. S. Fallis

Library J 93:2510 Je 15 '68 110w

"An exceptionally readable, informative, and well-informed book which provides as good a primer for readers in the United States, who wish to understand Quebec, separatism or the Canadian search for identity as we now have. Sensible, sensitive, short, M. Julien's study merits high praise, and it should prove valuable to high school and college teachers who wish to inform themselves accurately and quickly on the Canadian scene." R. W. Winks
Social Studies 59:282 N '68 500w

JULLIAN, PHILIPPE. Prince of aesthetes: Count Robert de Montesquiou, 1855-1921; tr. from the French by John Haylock and Francis King [Eng title: Robert de Montesquiou: fin-de-siècle prince]. 288p 11 $6.95 Viking

B or 92 Montesquiou-Fezansac, Robert, comte de 68-11419

A biography of the poet who served as a model for Huysman's Prince of Decadents and Oscar Wilde's Dorian Grey. Bibliography.

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p6 Mr 24 '68 1050w

JULLIAN, PHILIPPE—Continued

"Jullian . . . admirably rehabilitates Robert de Montesquiou in this full length study. . . . This authoritative volume reads well in an English translation which levels out some of the peculiar bumps of Jullian's French prose style. This highly significant contribution toward our understanding of certain enigmas and inconsistencies of turn-of-the-century art, letters, and society will interest not only students of literature and sociology but collectors of Gallé glassware as well! It should also focus attention on the need for proper literary study of the forgotten poetic and critical works of Montesquiou, who may soon enjoy . . . a sort of reincarnation."

Choice 5:632 J1 '68 170w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 236:106 Ap '68 270w

"[The] author of Edward and the Edwardians [BRD 1967], has had signal success with [this book]. . . . [He] has written an art history of the period as well as a biography. Count Robert de Montesquiou launched art nouveau in the 19th Century and knew intimately the Frenchmen and the English artists who followed in his train. He deserves all that Mr. Julian says of him in this well-constructed and fascinatingly written story of men and women who had brilliant and often disappointing lives. . . . For general purchase." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:181 Ja 15 '68 160w

"Montesquiou was so utterly bizarre that the only human being he can be compared to is Sarah Bernhardt with whom he may have had a brief affair. If he did, this was his sole excursion into real life. . . . [His] story has a curious symmetry to it. Made famous in 1884, before he had uttered more than a few epigrams, by Huysmans' portrayal of him as Des Esseintes in A Rebours, he was irretrievably wrecked by Proust's canonisation of him as the Baron de Charlus. . . . It is a sour tale, told with too much gusto by M. Jullian. The translation is clumsy." Anita Brookner

New Statesman 74:381 D 22 '67 500w

Reviewed by G. D. Painter

N Y Rev of Books 10:28 Ap 25 '68 2550w

Reviewed by W. G. Rogers

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 10 '68 650w

New Yorker 44:184 Ap 13 '68 120w

"It might have been thought that the first full-length biography of Montesquiou, based on unpublished letters and papers in family collections and the Bibliothèque Nationale, would reveal this 'Prince of Decadents' as a grossly misjudged figure, caricatured by his contemporaries and underestimated by posterity. . . . In spite of Philippe Jullian's sympathy for his subject, his book only confirms that Montesquiou was an arrogant dilettante with a small talent for versifying, a gift for eccentric interior decoration, an acid wit, and a monstrous vanity. . . . M. Jullian sprinkles his book with illuminating and lively anecdotes about le gratin, and he deals fully and fairly with the social background to Montesquiou's life. However, for a supposedly serious study, his biography is curiously reticent about his subject's sex life. [The author] overestimates Montesquiou's importance in the creation of Huysmans's immortal aesthete."

TLS p150 F 15 '68 500w

JUMP, JOHN DAVIES, ed. Tennyson; the critical heritage. 464p $8 Barnes & Noble

828 Tennyson, Alfred Tennyson, 1st Baron [67-110235]

The author has selected "critical items ranging from the first review, January 1831, of Tennyson's first volume of poetry to an excerpt from a book published in 1891, the year before the poet's death. Ranging in length from a couple of pages to over 40, these include articles, reviews, extracts from books, etc." (Choice) Index.

"Nearly half [of the selections] are reprinted in full except for the substitution of line references for lengthy quotations from poems; those which have been cut have been cut skillfully with omissions clearly indicated. The excellent 19-page introduction includes many small bits of criticism, related to the long pieces by cross references. The special virtue of the book is that the selections have not only their inherent worth as Tennyson material but also the added value of showing how both the taste in poetry and the critical theory changed during the 60 years covered. . . . For advanced students in Tennyson or in Victorian criticism."

Choice 5:343 My '68 110w

"[These reviews] show, in general, an unusual display of reciprocity between writer and reviewer. Tennyson, like Hardy after him, was agonizingly sensitive to bad reviews, but unlike Hardy he was eager to learn from them and remodel himself. . . . [After 1842] only Arnold and Hopkins retain the cool academic method of assessment, taking him up on points of style and language. This type of analysis is half a compliment. But the discordant voice rang out in 1869 with no delicacy or ambiguity. What astonishes today is the identity of the rebel: Alfred Austin. . . . Among the many instructive facets of an entertaining book is this disclosure of Austin as a journalist."

TLS p10 Ja 4 '68 500w

JUNGK, ROBERT. The big machine; tr. by Grace Marmor Spruch and Traude Wess. 245p pl $6.95 Scribner

539.7 Nuclear physics. European Organization for Nuclear Research 68-17355

"The machine of the title is a giant proton-synchrotron at Geneva, built and operated by the European Organization for Nuclear Research (CERN). The book . . . includes technical information about the proton-synchrotron and the work it does. . . . [a] history of the multi-nation CERN organization. . . . and a collection of personal profiles of the men associated with CERN." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. Originally published 1966 entitled Die Grosse Maschine.

"[The book is] written for the layman in fairly clear language. . . . [and] contains an excellent elucidation of modern science—what it is and what it means. . . . In his sensitive evocations of the scientific mind, Mr. Jungk uses accounts of the men who run the 'big machine' to explain just how scientists think. Altogether, an interesting and significant book with a grossly oversimplified title." R. L. Hough

Library J 93:2675 J1 '68 210w

"The author of 'Brighter Than a Thousand Suns' [BRD 1958] . . . has produced a very good and important book . . . [about the] atom-smasher that belongs to the Conseil Européen pour la Recherche Nucléaire. . . . [He] makes interesting points about the course of events in the world of small particle physics and, by implication and extension, in the universe of all modern science. It is these general considerations tied so directly to the careful examination of the specific case at CERN that give this book its unusual value. . . . The explanation given here of how [the scientists] work together is a concise textbook in the sociology of the new physics community and, in some sort, of all the communities of modern science." E. E. Morison

N Y Times Bk R p3 S 1 '68 1200w

"There is not much particle physics in the book (not enough, in fact, for clarity), but there is a careful and many-sided report of the history of the machine of the [CERN]. . . . The execution of a big and vexed neutrino-detection experiment is reported from concept to completion, mostly in the words of a key participant; many good conversations are recorded, if a little stiltedly, about big laboratories and about the people in them. It is not all roses, although Jungk does appear to be a bit overawed by all those restlessly clever people and their fast talk. He raises the central questions, never far from the reflections of the trade. . . . The fascination of this book is its eyewitness account of the two Russian laboratories."

Sci Am 219:164 N '68 650w

JUST, WARD S. To what end; report from Vietnam. 209p $4.95 Houghton

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 68-17299

The author offers an impressionistic record of the war in Vietnam as he saw it during 1966-67 while there reporting for the Washington Post.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 118:608 My 4 '68 40w

"[The] book is beautifully restrained, innocent of all polemics and still irresistibly persuasive, a panorama of Vietnam's people, politics and meaningless disasters in a picture built of the most delicate of pointillist dots. Even as one began to think that the only alternative to passionate intensity was Washington's platitudes, one is recalled to gentle reason. . . . Quite remarkably, never does [the author] write of anything so insufferable as refugee camps, Vietnamese corruption, napalm burns and senseless death. Let others tell of Vietnam's seamiest side—Just has recognized that the bright side of Vietnam's war is wretched enough." John Sack

Book World p3 Ap 7 '68 900w

Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 50w

"In some places [Just] succeeds. He catches the life of the néo-colons. . . . He sees the American embarrassment at playing Goliath. Throughout, he has enough irony not to crusade, even against the credibility gap. What does the book then lack? Any real feeling of the Buddhists, for one thing, even in their stronghold of Hue. Any probing exploration of Vietnamese generals' cliques and political factions, for a second. Any good look at the all-important attempt at pacification and security in the countryside, for a third. . . . If we are to accept any choice in the war, . . . then even if the war evolved like some Pinteresque happening, we must now treat it as a Shakespearean tragedy, susceptible of rational analysis and, above all, preliminary solutions. The abdication of this role, especially by a correspondent who had the reputation among his colleagues of worrying about the war even while others were worrying about personal affairs, leaves a void indeed." Elizabeth Pond

Christian Science Monitor p19 Ap 4 '68 550w

Reviewed by R. F. Delaney

Library J 93:1150 Mr 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:125 Ap 8 '68 750w

Reviewed by Richard Dudman

Sat R 51:36 Je 15 '68 320w

"Just does not argue. To What End is an almost apolitical and unusually successful attempt to convey a sense of Viet Nam's violent confusion. Just examines the now familiar ambiguities of the war with detail that is not often found in books of this kind. . . . [His] detached and determinedly accurate assessment belongs to a tradition of war reporting that traces back to Thucydides, the ancient historian whose account of the Peloponnesian War is depressingly relevant today. Thucydides was no polemicist either, but his message was clear: the exercise of power, however necessary it may seem, can lead a city-state—or a nation—into unforeseen danger."

Time 91:98 Ap 12 '68 420w

JUSTER, F. THOMAS. Household capital formation and financing, 1897-1962 [pub. by] Nat. bur. of economic research. 146p $6 Columbia univ. press

332 Credit, Consumption (Economics) 66-25244

"This study concentrates on the long-term trends and the short-term variability of capital formation and credit in the household (consumer) sector of the U.S. economy. Its major thesis is that consumers are now a more important determinant—both direct and indirect—of the growth and the cyclical variation in the nation's total fixed capital investment than are business enterprises. Time-series data are used to examine a number of interrelated problems that are part of this broad picture." (Introd. and summary) Index.

"Beyond the mainly quantitative approach, the author provides a limited amount of theoretical analysis, including an examination of certain important conceptual problems. . . . This work presumably is not intended to make its mark in terms of presentation of mainly new or original materials: its raison d'être—and a good one indeed—is its presentation of a convenient, up-to-date summary and interpretation of the basic data in the areas covered, plus a restatement and vigorous defense of recent thinking with respect to underlying concepts to which Juster himself has made a number of contributions. Juster does this well and so reinforces the case for certain changes in conventional thinking, particularly with respect to the concept of capital formation, while making it easier for workers in the field to push on further. His findings and analysis offer a challenge to business cycle theorists. They will also be useful to makers of economic and financial policy." Ervin Miller

Am Econ R 57:1366 D '67 650w

Reviewed by H. T. Oshima

Ann Am Acad 337:221 My '68 600w

"The findings should indicate the direction of numerous new studies in the area of capital formation. Recommended for economics collections." H. S. Camenson

Library J 92:234 Ja 15 '67 190w

K

KAAM, ADRIAN VAN. See Van Kaam, A.

KABERRY, P. M., jt. ed. West African kingdoms in the nineteenth century. See Forde, D.

KAEI, PAULINE. Kiss kiss bang bang. 404p $7.95 Little 791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism. Moving pictures—Production and direction 68-15561

The author of I Lost It at the Movies (BRD 1965) presents a collection of her film essays and reviews, along with a section of two hundred and eighty capsule reviews. Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 28:51 My 1 '68 360w

"[This book] is not only fresh, bracingly literate and intelligent, but is happily characterized by a merciless ability to cut through modish hyperbole and see movies plain. . . . [Miss Kael] sees through the pretensions of the new trendy films . . . which do no more than flirt with contemporary concerns. . . . Almost everywhere, I find [her] judgments wonderfully apt. . . . At times, perhaps, she takes an obvious pleasure in bringing too-heavy guns to bear on big easy targets. . . . Arguably, some of the shorter reviews slipped in to fatten the book should have died with the ephemeral movies they justifiably condemn." Mordecai Richler

Book World p4 Ap 28 '68 800w

Choice 5:980 O '68 160w

"[This book's] main interest is in a kind of semi-reference work. . . . It is also of interest as an indirect road map to the psychology of the author. . . . While Miss Kael's outspoken nature functions as an asset to her reviewing, its highly personal quality often impedes her attempts at thorough criticism. . . . [She] is not so much a film critic as she is a movie reviewer . . . who is at least as interested in the psychology of watching films and the sociology of response to films as she is in the works themselves. . . . Consequently, her book will be of little value to artists or aesthetes who have a true interest in the many complexities and rewards of a thorough understanding of the art of film. But it will be a joy to anyone who just likes movies and appreciates a cogent, witty collection of someone else's tastes." David Sterritt

Christian Science Monitor p9 My 4 '68 850w

"Kael's criticism is filled with personal observations. . . . Personal revelations can be effective, but when they are given the status of crucial evidence they distort criticism. . . . Kael's strength (and it is a valuable one) is her insight into popular culture—the mass media aspects of film. She is a brilliant exposé of cant and hypocrisy. . . . [She] is also bright on the topic of youth. . . . Kael is almost paranoid in her continual attacks on other critics. . . . [Her] approach seems sly and self-aggrandizing. She is master of the simple film, but the more difficult the film the less appropriate, the less essential, she is. Basically, in [this book] Miss Kael is self-indulgent." F. A. Macklin

Commonweal 88:444 Je 28 '68 1000w

"[Miss Kael] thoroughly documents each essay and major review. Her style is polemical, caustic, and sophisticated. . . . Chapters on the filming of The Group, biographies of Marlon Brando, Orson Welles and Stanley Kramer, a list of films for children and . . . capsule reviews are the best parts of the book." W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:1016 Mr 1 '68 200w

Nation 207:221 S 9 '68 130w

Reviewed by Arlene Croce

Nat R 20:560 Je 4 '68 2250w

Reviewed by Walter Kerr

N Y Times Bk R p4 My 5 '68 1400w

KAEMPFFER, F. A. The elements of physics; a new approach. 291p $8.50 Blaisdell pub.

530 Physics

67-10231

"The purpose of the present work is to reassert the problematic aspects of those branches of physics, such as Newtonian mechanics, that are traditionally considered as elementary and are accordingly the subject of most introductory physics texts. Although the work contains over one hundred numerical examples and exercises left to the reader (always with answers given on the spot in parentheses) the traditional preoccupation in elementary courses with indoctrinating the student in methods for solving numerical problems has been intentionally de-emphasized." (Pref) Chapter bibliographies. Subject and author indexes.

"An interesting survey of physics intended primarily for use as a textbook by nonscience students. It can also serve as good collateral reading for freshman physics majors. . . . The format of the book is rather unorthodox: each chapter is divided into a main section which carries forward the major development, and a 'Details' section which consists of a collection of additional details, numerical problems (with answers), etc. which relate to the material of the main section. Although this book is relatively short, it is quite dense, and in its 24 chapters such diverse topics as the conservation laws of mechanics, the arrow of time, the concepts of charge and field, variational principles, the exclusion principle, elementary particles, etc. are treated. . . . Recommended as a worthwhile addition to the undergraduate physics library collection."

Choice 4:1283 Ja '68 200w

"Many authors try to live up to the brave subtitle of this book, and this graceful writer, an experienced theoretical physicist at the University of British Columbia, has managed to do it. . . . An appendix raises the great issues of probability and of rational numbers and their extension. Kaempffer's principle throughout is to face elementary problems with an approach of great conceptual depth. The book would seem to require a maturity and experience rather beyond the upper-class nonscience students it is in part aimed at (perhaps not in happy Vancouver), but for many a Scientific American reader with a somewhat rusty and fretful memory of an earlier college physics and a keen desire to find his way into the modern world of it will prove a find."

Sci Am 216:150 Je '67 340w

KAHLER, ERICH. The disintegration of form in the arts. 133p il $5; pa $2.95 Braziller

701 Art—Philosophy. Esthetics 68-12888

The author of The Meaning of History (BRD 1964) "discusses the meanings of form in its human sense and in its application to the arts. In poetry, painting, literature, language and communication, in the life of Western man itself, he traces the stages of the breakdown of form, in the organic sense of meaningful coherence in human experience. [He has] selected representative works from the various movements in contemporary art—from Picasso's abstractionism and later Abstract Expressionism, through assemblage to Pop and Op, [to show that] what is happening in art is what is happening to man in our day." (Publisher's note) The material in this book was originally presented as a series of lectures at Princeton in 1967. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book contains] three helpfully illustrated lectures: 'The Forms of Form,' 'The Preliminary Stages of Disintegration' and 'The Triumph of Incoherence.' . . . [In the last lecture Kahler traces] the growing insecurity of language and communication. He sorts out three phases of . . . linguistic disintegration . . . [and] associates this with the rise of science and technology, and the longing for the safety of mathematical formulas. . . . He points out how, both by trying to mimic this process and by attempting ineptly to escape it, art becomes a new, artless, scientifically tinged art for art's sake. . . . One may disagree with certain details of the presentation . . . but the basic argument is so well thought out and so sagely marshaled that this third lecture deserves to be reprinted by a foundation . . . and distributed free of charge wherever people convene . . . a giant anti-happening." John Simon

Book World p21 My 12 '68 1000w

Reviewed by John Simon

Commonweal 89:361 D 6 '68 140w

Reviewed by P. G. Kuntz

J Aesthetics 27:244 winter '68 550w

"The ideas [these lectures] contain are a robust affirmation of human values in the arts. As such, they are an intelligent criticism of the contemporary art world, and a prophecy that mankind may come to no good if current trends continue. Mr. Kahler believes that our computer-oriented society has so effectively dehumanized our sensibilities, that we no longer care for communication but only for slogans, the smallest functioning part of increasingly empty lives. Youthful readers may feel that Mr. Kahler is a little old-fashioned, his humanism a little too much like the Renaissance. But to those of us . . . to whom art means more than computers and commercial exploitation, he has a message that may well be an avenue of rebirth." R. A. Beale

Library J 93:742 F 15 '68 200w

"The interpretation of the changing styles of art as manifestations of the evolving human spirit will not stand up to searching criticism. . . . [Professor Kahler's] allegiances lie with expressionism, and what worries him most in the pronouncements of contemporary critics and artists, whom he quotes fairly and liberally, is their avowed rejection of expressionist aesthetics. But need we really see this rejection as a symptom of dehumanization? . . . Clearly one must respect and endorse the author's stand against inhumanity, but does it serve this important purpose to make our flesh creep about the agonies of the human condition in this age of science? Are we really as dehumanized and fragmented as he depicts us? Is there no human warmth left, because our modish art is cool? After all, we can take it or leave it." E. H. Gombrich

N Y Rev of Books 10:3 Je 20 '68 1400w

"It is distressing to find that a critic who wishes to discuss modern art movements should make so little effort to understand the human impulses behind them. . . . [Kahler identifies] the play element and the idea of distancing in modern art movements . . . with 'the conscious destruction of consciousness' although some artists claim that their work is a result of efforts to expand consciousness. The author is unwilling to explore possibilities of coherence that might be other than organic, and his comments have, therefore, an irrelevance even to the illustrations that he provides."

Va Q R 44:cxxvi summer '68 240w

KAHLER, ERICH. Out of the labyrinth; essays in clarification. 241p $6 Braziller

901.9 Civilization

67-19871

"Ten essays originally published elsewhere, which attempt to clarify a single problem—the identification of that which 'may be considered permanent in man,' and that which changes in his evolutionary development. Kahler feels that this clarification is essential to the preservation of that which is human in man. The scientific and technological advances that led, for example, to the production of the atomic bomb have outstripped man's psychic and mental advances. Thus, man loses his sense of history and his sense of the evolution of human conditions, both essential for his human equilibrium." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Christian Century 84:1135 S 6 '67 40w

"Readers who enjoy the unfolding ideas of Lewis Mumford and some of our scientific moralists will find Kahler stimulating. For public, college and university collections." Harold Bloomquist

Library J 92:2797 Ag '67 160w

"Here is yet another one of those tedious collections of exigent prose that intellectuals are forever gathering together under some grandiose title. . . . Scholarly impedimenta to the contrary, Out of the Labyrinth is nothing more than an anthology of miscellaneous essays on art, history, science, utopia, myth, and culture. . . . This is not to say that the book is devoid of interest. There are several excellent essays; and if the reader is prepared to put up with a certain amount of dogmatism he will not go away totally empty-handed. The essays on 'Culture and Evolution,' 'Science and History,' and 'The Reality of Utopia' are of particular interest, while those devoted to art and symbolism leave a great deal to be desired." P. P. Witonski

Nat R 20:709 J1 16 '68 190w

KÄHLER, HEINZ. Hagia Sophia; with a chapter on the mosaics by Cyril Mango; tr. by Elynn Childs. 74p 99il col pl $16 Praeger

726 Istanbul. St Sophia. Mosaics 67-29605

This book recounts how, "in 537, in the city of Constantinople, work was completed on Hagia Sophia, the Church of Holy Wisdom. Built at the command of Justinian to embody the might and magnificence of his empire, the church became a wonder of the ancient world, and its fame has persisted." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"The most detailed account of the church's exterior and interior yet published. . . . [The book includes] extensive quotations from Byzantine descriptions of the building, invaluable texts now made accessible to the undergraduate for the first time. . . . Familiarity with architectural terminology was obviously less important than cognizance of the original language in selecting the translator; some phrases and even whole sentences, are virtually meaningless. There are neither footnotes nor index."

Choice 5:475 Je '68 200w

"Hagia Sophia was a Christian church for over 900 years, and a Muhammadan mosque for nearly 500 years more. It is now a museum. Dr. Kähler, who is director of the Institute of Classical Archaeology at the University of Cologne, describes in this book . . . the architectural and artistic beauties of the great church. . . . The 5th-Century Procopius and the 10th-Century Constantine VII Porphyrogenetos are quoted at some length. . . . For the general reader, a handsome beautifully designed book." P. F. Moran

Library J 93:540 F 1 '68 180w

"[This] full and thorough account . . . [includes] a very convenient account of the mosaic decoration; . . . this is especially valuable for it constitutes the most complete and up-to-date survey of what is to be seen that is at the moment available. There are two very attractive plates in colour taken from Fossati's great book of 1852, two colour plates of the mosaics, and ninety-nine excellent plates in monochrome."

TLS p1252 D 23 '67 170w

KAHN, DAVID. The codebreakers; the story of secret writing. 1164p il maps $14.95 Macmillan (N Y)

652.8 Cryptography 63-16109

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by C. H. Gordon
Ann Am Acad 375:240 Ja '68 700w
Economist 226:51 F 17 '68 1100w

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo
New Repub 158:32 F 10 '68 1150w

Reviewed by Alexander Cockburn
New Statesman 75:277 Mr 1 '68 750w

Reviewed by M. H. Pearl
Science 161:35 J1 5 '68 850w
Time 91:94 F 16 '68 800w

KAHN, E. J. The separated people; a look at contemporary South Africa. [by] E. J. Kahn. Jr. 276p $5.95 Norton 916.8 Africa, South—Description and travel.

Africa, South—Race relations 63-10880

The author spent three months in South Africa for The New Yorker. He discusses the effect of apartheid as he observed it while "traveling thousands of miles and interviewing hundreds of people in an effort to assess the land and its national character." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This is the best, up-to-the-minute 'popular' treatment of South Africa that is available. It includes the only lengthy American eyewitness description of the trial of the assassin of South Africa's late Prime Minister H. Verwoerd that is currently available here. This book deserves to be in all community and general libraries and even in senior high schools. Although it contains a few very minor errors, all colleges and universities should possess it."

Choice 5:1202 N '68 170w

Reviewed by Arnold Reichman
Commonweal 88:665 S 27 '68 900w

"Mr. Kahn found many human-interest stories to record in this glimpse of white South Africa. . . . [He] also discusses Southwest Africa and gives a good background of the situation prior to the World Court decision, and some of the reasons the case was lost. . . . [This] is good reading, and it may be advisable for us to read all we can on South Africa and its racial problems if the reading reminds us of our own responsibilities." M. D. Herrick

Library J 93:764 F 15 '68 200w

"It was impossible for [Kahn] as for any other visitor, to canvass informed or politically aware opinion among Africans. There is less excuse, however, for his failure to relate the ruthless legislation and secret police surveillance (he describes it and mentions in passing that African leaders are in jail) that has crushed the African and Indian opposition movements, and that outlaws even so much as a private discussion group. . . . This is the best and most intelligent book about South Africa to be written by an observer for a very long time, yet just how successfully a man as generally fair-minded and astute as Kahn can be kept gliding over the surface is shown again and again. . . . The real reason for the blur between cause and effect in Kahn's view of the separated people is that like all onlookers who come to South Africa now, he was viewing the situation from the confines of the enclave of 3.5 million whites."

Nadine Gordimer

Nation 206:21 J1 8 '68 2100w

Reviewed by Wilfred Cartey
New Repub 158:25 Je 29 '68 750w

Reviewed by C. C. O'Brien
N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 7 '68 220w

"[Kahn's] narrative trips lightly over the surface of South African life, stopping here and there for a perceptive insight, never dwelling tiresomely on any of the many South African quandaries. Kahn has a good reporter's eye for the bizarre. . . . [He] is making no argument. He is simply covering the scene. That is fine, except that he never really gets down to examining the dynamics of apartheid. He describes the repression but almost makes it sound gratuitous, which it is not. It is almost as if there had never been any black opposition to crush or any politically motivated violence. . . . Kahn finds the African, on what must have been a relatively slight acquaintance, apathetic, subservient and cheerful. That is not wrong, but the African is also bitter and sardonic and inexpressibly sad." Joseph Lelyveld

N Y Times Bk R p3 My 12 '68 460w

Reviewed by Charles Miller
Sat R 51:24 J1 27 '68 600w

KAHN, F. D. Quasars; their importance in astronomy and physics, by F. D. Kahn and H. P. Palmer. 112p il $5.50 Harvard Univ. press

523 Quasars 67-6465

"The past few years have seen a great deal of . . . investigation of the powerful point-sources of radio emission from the universe. More than sixty of these have now been identified with star-like objects which have peculiar spectra and apparently lie far beyond the limits of our own galaxy. . . . [The authors] describe how the quasars are recognized by their peculiar optical and radio emissions, and give some details of the methods used. In discussing the implications of these discoveries, the authors give [accounts] . . . of the behaviour of electrons in a magnetic field, . . . of the structure of a star and the theory of gravitational collapse. The importance of the new discoveries in settling some of the unresolved problems of cosmology is briefly explained." (TLS)

"A remarkably up-to-date exposition of the unsolved problem of quasi-stellar objects by experienced optical and radio astronomers. Suitable for the general intelligent reader with a background of elementary courses in physics and astronomy. After the presentation of pertinent observational facts, various possible models for the quasar are offered with judicious criticism. Wherever specialized theory is required analysis at the algebraic level is given. A dozen excellent plates and some 20 line diagrams clarify the text. . . . So far no other book at this level has appeared covering the recent developments in this exciting field of research."

Choice 4:1132 D '67 90w

Reviewed by James Terrell
Science 159:291 Ja 19 '68 650w

"[Quasars] promise to change all our previous ideas about the structure of the universe, and this new book [will be welcomed]. . . . It is clearly written for students, and some knowledge of physics and mathematics is necessary. . . . At this early stage in the study of quasars the authors do not commit themselves to a definite opinion. . . . With the help of this very clear account of a complex subject, the reader will be able to make his own assessment of the present position." TLS p470 My 25 '67 280w

KAHN, F. D.—Continued

KAHN, HERMAN. The year 2000; a framework for speculation on the next thirty-three years, by Herman Kahn and Anthony J. Wiener, with contributions from other staff members of the Hudson inst; introd. by Daniel Bell. 431p $9.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.2 Twentieth century. Science and civilization 67-29488

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Ernest van den Haag
Am J Soc 74:200 S '68 750w

Reviewed by R. L. Meier
Bul Atomic Sci 24:51 Ja '68 950w
Choice 5:525 Je '68 170w
Economist 227:54 Ab 20 '68 700w

Reviewed by A. L. Fessler
Library J 93:565 F 1 '68 240w

Reviewed by Poul Anderson
Nat R 20:90 Ja 30 '68 1900w

Reviewed by Nigel Calder
New Statesman 75:552 Ap 26 '68 290w

Reviewed by K. E. Boulding
Sat R 51:36 F 10 '68 1550w

Reviewed by W. E. Moore
Science 160:647 My 10 '68 420w
TLS p346 Ap 4 '68 1200w

KAHN, ROGER. The passionate people; what it means to be a Jew in America. 350p $6.95 Morrow

301.45 Jews in the U.S. Jews—Social life and customs 68-14812

A journalist who is an editor with the Saturday Evening Post attempts to define the distinctive identity of American Jewry, using a "combination of historical chronicles and character-sketch vignettes—most of his short biographies are fictional composites of real people he has interviewed. . . . He examines Jewish religion in its various forms, Jewish philanthropy, and the disproportionate representation of Jews in science, art, business, medicine, music, law, entertainment, psychiatry, publishing, education, and so on." (Library J)

Reviewed by Harvey Sicherman
Best Sell 28:106 Je 1 '68 650w

Reviewed by Walter Karp
Book World p10 Je 9 '68 500w

"[Mr. Kahn] displays a lack of knowledge and understanding both of his subject and of the faith which he espouses 'consciously.' . . . Twenty pages are spent on a clinical description of [a] nightclub dancer, but only four and a quarter pages are devoted to the roles of Bernard Malamud, Erich Leinsdorf, Saul Bellow, and Leonard Bernstein, among others. . . . [This book] overemphasizes the vulgar and ignores many important issues. It is a negative picture. . . . There are some [few] fleeting moments of excellence. . . . By writing this volume, Mr. Kahn has called attention to the importance of studying each other's faith. It is hoped that non-Jews will be able in the near future to read a book about what it means to be a Jew in the U.S. This is not that book." M. J. Bandler

Christian Science Monitor p9 Je 27 '68 650w

"Given the intrinsic interest of his material and the jazzy skill with which he handles it, Kahn's book is hard to resist. But resist it we must. For the truth is that [it] is more significant as a publishing phenomenon than as a contribution to understanding what it means to be a Jew in America. . . . [The book is] replete with technical errors. . . . [and] it labors to engage, even to entice, the reader's attention—a compulsion that frequently issues in vulgarity and distortion. . . . [However, it] does touch on one theme which has so far been insufficiently explored . . . the theme of the Holocaust. . . . It is to Kahn's credit that he is sensitive to this problem, which crops up in several portraits." Marshall Sklare
Commentary 46:82 O '68 2350w

"[The author] has succeeded as well as it is possible to succeed in a nearly impossible task. . . . He paints a colorful picture of American Jewry based on much research and many interviews throughout the country . . . [and presents] a fascinating combination of flavor and fact, entertainment and information. One might argue that some of his 'representative' types are unique rather than representative; but it is all here—the results on American Jewry of effort from within and pressures from without: economic, social, religious pressures, the pressures of anti-Semitism. Mr. Kahn has written an objective, sympathetic mélange and his book is highly recommended as a useful, popular addition in general collections." George Adelman

Library J 93:1912 My 1 '68 190w

Reviewed by Calvin Trillin

N Y Times Bk R p12 Ag 25 '68 800w

"Kahn has a staggering problem on his hands—the ancient ghost of 'Jewish identity,' an elusive shadow which everyone is a bit bored by, most of all Jews, yet one which no one seems able or willing to let lie, least of all Jews. Kahn, acting wisely if only in self-defense, crowds the question from all sides. The result is a compote of means and methods—a curious mixture of stylish journalism, popular sociology, instant history, and quasi-fictional sketches and episodes—an encompassing strategy for comprehending an intransigent subject. The encircling net captures some weird fish. . . . Still, the reader is rewarded generously. Kahn leads him through the mystifying varieties of religious Judaism—Reform, Conservative, Orthodox, Hassidic; and provides a sobering account of the long, infamous history of American anti-Semitism. . . . Individual identities and types are plausibly established, but the mystery of 'identity' remains resistant to the best intentions." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:105A My 20 '68 450w

Reviewed by Arthur Hertzberg

Sat R 51:25 Jl 6 '68 550w

KAINZ, LUISE C. Portraits and personalities: an introduction to the world's great art [by] Luise C. Kainz [and] Olive L. Riley. 127p il col il $7.50 Abrams

709 Portrait painting—Juvenile literature 67-15901

Through a survey of portraiture, the authors seek to describe some of the art and artists of the Western world from antiquity to the present. Glossary. Index. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"The authors of this volume for readers of junior-high-school age and up are experienced teachers of art in the New York City schools. They set out with the happy notion of limiting a formidable subject to a survey of portraiture. . . . The authors, alas, soon become bogged down in a conventional chronological approach, slogging doggedly (if spottily) through the history of art. The reader, in turn, becomes weighed down by verbiage—dusty clichés and historical pre-judgments. . . . Fifty-seven color plates and 17 black-and-white illustrations are, for the most part, well chosen and reproduced." S. G. Lanes

Book World p12 S 1 '68 290w [YA]

"This text is divided into seven broad, artificial headings—'Early Image Makers,' 'Windows on the World,' 'New Pathways in Art'—that group such diverse artists as Gilbert Stuart and El Greco ('Mysticism and Realism'), Ingres and Cezanne ('Color Comes to Life'). Brief biographies are combined with general analyses of one or two major works by each artist. . . . [Some of the] paintings in this text prove to be too bright, overly glossy, and lacking nuances of color. Fortunately, school and public libraries already have available such books as [A.] Ruskin's [The Pantheon] Story of Art for Young People [BRD 1964], [A.] Chase's Famous Paintings [BRD 1963] and [H. and D.] Janson's Story of Painting for Young People; [From Cave Paintings to Modern Times. BRD 1952], all of which are better organized and more analytical regarding each painter's life and art." M. J. Shapiro

Library J 93:3971 O 15 '68 160w

KAJIMA, MORINOSUKE. The emergence of Japan as a world power, 1895-1925. 403p $5.75 Tuttle

952.03 Japan—History—1867-1945 68-11079

The author's "study of the thirty years from 1895 to 1925 . . . [is divided] into two parts:

(1) an analysis of diplomatic negotiations beginning with the Triple Intervention of 1895, through the Anglo-German-Japanese rapprochement and the Anglo-Japanese Alliance of 1898-1902, the Japanese-Russian War and its aftermath, a Japanese-American Agreement of 1907-1908, and various other alliances and treaties to 1925. This part occupies 18 of the chapters. (2) An historical Survey begins with the treaties signed after the Sino-Japanese War in 1895-1896 through the aftermath of World War I and the Washington Conference of 1919-1931." (Best Sell) Chronology. Index.

"[This study] was awarded Japan's highest honor for books of academic and scientific research, the Japan Academy Award, . . . in 1959. It is the result of years of study and of participation in foreign affairs by the author and is important for its presentation of documentation little known previously except perhaps, to the most diligent of Western scholars. . . . A beautifully designed book, printed in Japan, this commends itself as an important item for collegiate and public (reference) libraries."

Best Sell 27:373 D 15 '67 210w

"A work of the thirties, [this] gives one a sense of déjà vu along with an apologia for Japanese imperialism—Japan was motivated by a desire for peace and defense of her legitimate interests while Russia was 'insincere,' 'cunning,' and 'aggressive.' China is charged with intransigence over the Twenty-one Demands and causing the Manchurian Incident by 'flouting Japan's honor and interests.' Should have been revised in light of subsequent developments. A recapitulation of diplomatic maneuvering, that makes no effort to place matters in a broader context and to relate foreign policy and internal political forces, little furthers our understanding."

Choice 5:543 Je '68 200w

Economist 227:52 My 11 '68 400w

"Essentially concerned with the more formal aspects of Japanese foreign policy vis-a-vis the great Western powers, [Kajima] reviews, in the style and approach of the career diplomat, the successive steps in Japan's course to international greatness. While these are generally well established, Mr. Kajima does present many new details and little-suspected nuances of interpretation. His technique of historical writing has been passé in the United States, if not in Europe, for many years. Still, students who have not yet run the gauntlet of this era of Japanese diplomatic history will find merit in this study." Hyman Kublin

Library J 92:4502 D 15 '67 150w

Reviewed by H. M. Vinacke

Pacific Affairs 41:286 summer '68 360w

KALMUS, H., ed. Regulation and control in living systems. 468p il $13.75 Wiley

574.1 Biological control systems 66-29870

This volume "employs the engineering approach to the study of life and attempts to restore the communication between engineers and biologists. . . . Regulation and control are . . . presented as universal and important features of life at all its organizational levels." (Publishers note) Bibliography. Author and subject indexes.

"[This book] has excellent selectivity of material. The topics are covered uniformly well. The illustrations are pertinent and helpful. The bibliography is extensive and useful. One can profit from this book if he has only the most basic knowledge of the biological sciences. Certain areas are equally rewarding to the professional biologist. Perfect for short period reading, as one can start at any of many different chapters and read for brief periods without destroying continuity. Recommended."

Choice 5:520 Je '68 100w

"The book consists of separate chapters by different authors, and is divided up into general sections on Principles and Methods, Cells and Individuals, Development and Genetics, and Groups and Populations. The editor has contributed several chapters, with most of the remainder written by his fellow faculty members at University College, London, and the rest by colleagues at other British institutions. . . . This book consists of a brief introduction to engineering control systems and a series of descriptive chapters on biological regulation, with no particular unity in viewpoint or consistent depth of coverage and sandwiched between layers of semi-philosophical vincer, but with some interesting individual expositions."

A. C. Brown

Science 159:1346 Mr 22 '68 550w

KAMEHAMEHA IV, King of the Hawaiian Islands. The journal of Prince Alexander Liholiho; the voyages made to the United States, England and France in 1849-1850; ed. by Jacob Adler. 188p $8 Univ. of Hawaii press

B or 92 U.S.—Description and travel. Great Britain—Description and travel. France—Description and travel 67-27052

The diary kept by a Polynesian prince "during his yearlong visit to the [United States and Europe]." (Library J)

"Understandably, [the author's] observations and impressions are artless and it is difficult at times to determine how he was influenced by his experiences. Still, we have here the candid record of observations and, occasionally, the thoughts of a teen-ager who was later to become King Kamehameha IV. . . . Recommended for readers interested in Hawaii." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:2240 Je 1 '68 90w

"The diary tells little of the political history of the period, but the editor borrowed skillfully from other documents so that the notes and the introduction (primarily a revision of the notes) give one a sense of historical sequence and identify the persons mentioned. Although the account stops abruptly, the editor has cleverly furnished a conclusion. . . . In his diary Liholiho reveals himself as a sensitive and somewhat spoiled youth with an eye for the ladies and a high regard for material things. . . . The journal of the fifteen-year-old prince rarely shows his feelings or contemplates the world." Maryanne Force

Sat R 51:71 Je 22 '68 350w

KAMM, JOSEPHINE. The Hebrew people; a history of the Jews. 224p il maps $4.50; lib bdg $4.11 McGraw

909.174 Jews—History—Juvenile literature. Jews in Europe—History—Juvenile literature 68-12307

An "account of Jewish history from biblical times through the events of June and early July, 1967. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:65 My 1 '68 100w

"Well-written, well researched, and up-to-date, [this] should appeal to the general reader and prove helpful to students doing research. Particularly commendable is the inclusion of archeological findings such as those at Masada. The viewpoint is objective and the coverage of topics well balanced. Despite the fact that coverage of such a complex subject in a brief work can, of course, be only superficial, this is a welcome addition." Bernice Levine

Library J 93:1812 Ap 15 '68 100w

KAMMEYER, KENNETH C. W., jt. auth. The university student. See Bolton, C. D.

KAMPF, LOUIS. On modernism; the prospects for literature and freedom. 338p il $10; pa $2.95 Mass. inst. of technology

001.2 Learning and scholarship. Literature 67-16499

A professor of humanities at M.I.T. discusses modernism; "its genesis in philosophy and art, . . . its present expressions in Büchner and Beckett, Gelber and Doris Lessing, and . . . its future: either freedom or chaos." (Choice) Index.

"[Kampf], a mighty Kämpfer against 'camp,' insists that 'modernism' defies definition. He then proceeds to define it at length. . . . He poses as the central question of our day: 'What does the mind's passion for order have to do with the external world?' and passionately orders his material from Descartes, Bernini, and Hume to account for the lack of a single accepted order. Curiously, he ignores almost completely those who have sought a new order in nature. . . . [However] the study contains some acute insights."

Choice 5:618 Jl '68 160w

KAMPF, LOUIS—Continued

"For all its passion and its being on the right side, one can't quite call this a good book; its energy is sometimes only argumentative fuss, its historical instances arbitrary and ill-balanced. It is far too long; substantial excursions into Baroque aesthetic, the philosophy of Hume, and so forth, are worked out beyond the necessity of the argument, which sags in consequence. At 100 pages and three dollars, it would have had more readers and hit them harder. . . . The length and price of this book constitute an involuntary sellout to the Establishment Mr. Kampf attacks. . . . In the end Kampf stands for an old-fashioned humanity with its eyes open to the world." Frank Ker-mode

N Y Rev of Books 9:27 O 26 '67 1000w

KANE, ROBERT S. Eastern Europe A to Z; Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania, Yugoslavia—and the Soviet Union; maps by Louise E. Jefferson. 345p $6.95 Doubleday

914.7 Communist countries—Description and travel. Europe—Description and travel. 67-19081

The sixth of the author's A to Z volumes. For South America A to Z see BRD 1962.

Reviewed by C. W. Casewit
Book World p20 Je 9 '68 100w

"This volume is the latest in a well-established series of competently written, useful guides for the intelligent, albeit not overly educated, tourist. The formula is slick—a snattering of history, followed by rapid-fire suggestions, for shopping, dress, accommodations, sight-seeing trips, basic facts on currency, and so on. The pace of the text, like that of the trips it is meant for, fairly leaves one gasping for air. . . . Nevertheless, the overall tone is an agreeable one. . . . Mr. Kane, travel editor of Cue magazine, approaches his subject frankly but with an open mind. . . . Recommended for public libraries." V. D. Newman

Library J 93:1141 Mr 15 '68 100w

KANNIK, PREBEN. Military uniforms in color; written and il. by Preben Kannik; English ed. by William Y. Carman. 278p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

355.1 Uniforms, Military 68-21267

A "handbook of the characteristic uniforms worn by the military forces of the world from the 16th Century to the present. These are presented in chronological order in a series of 512 . . . figures in color, followed by a series of brief comments on each part illustrated. . . . [The index is] arranged alphabetically by country. . . . Kannik's intent is to illustrate a typical uniform of each country to provide a general historical impression of the uniforms of participants in past military conflicts." (Library J) Glossary. Index. First published in Danish under the title Alverdens uniformer i farver.

"[The] illustrations and the text include an impressive amount of information. . . . Although the book is an interesting work in its field, it is not a definitive reference to the uniforms of any particular country. Moreover, the Orient, Africa, and Latin America receive scant attention, probably because of the difficulty of obtaining accurate information. This is an interesting and attractive guide with all its color, variety, and often curious detail." L. B. McCauley

Library J 93:3118 S 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:68 N 16 '68 110w

KANTOR, MACKINLAY. Beauty Beast; a novel. 382p $6.95 Putnam

68-12099

This novel "takes its title from the name of a male slave purchased by the young, beautiful, twice-widowed owner of a plantation, Apoxsee, in a Gulf Coast community of the American South, in 1854. . . . [It is the] story of one woman, Sidney Shalop, and the man—or rather, men—she loved." (Publisher's note)

"Ponderous, slow-moving, to this reader [this] is soap-opera material with touches of melodrama, strung on a psychological thread of sexual frustration. A Faulkner might have handled its theme successfully in a short story; stretching it to novel length only reveals the story's essential thinness. To sum up, in his new book Mr. Kantor has combined lust, sadism, incest, and miscegenation to produce a dish that seems likely to appeal only to the indiscriminating palate." J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 27:452 Mr 1 '68 500w

"[The author's] problem is that he hasn't much to say, but goes ahead and says it just the same for almost 400 pages that seem like more, so long are they in passing a given point. . . . In [this book] he is telling of the ante-bellum South and its 'peculiar institution'—human slavery—that had so much to do with bringing on the war of which he wrote so memorably in Andersonville [BRD 1955]. . . . It is to be said for Mr. Kantor that he appears to have done his homework conscientiously in the little details of day-to-day life in a slave society, the horrors of body and spirit. But they are buried almost beyond sight under all those words." J. K. Hutchens

Book World p3 F 25 '68 650w

"This turgid and scarcely readable opus will be touted as Kantor's 'most important and controversial' novel since Andersonville and Spirit Lake [BRD 1961], but, as in the case of so much of [his] work, it leaves a lot to be desired. . . . In the first two-thirds of the novel Mr. Kantor gives flashbacks of [Sidney Shalop's] life with her first two husbands and shows her increasing dependence upon and lust for Beauty Beast. The culmination comes when she attempts to seduce him and is rejected. . . . It has been done before and done better. There is a jarring combination of careful approximations of antebellum speech patterns and a 'post-Baldwinian' rendering of what is going on in the character's mind." E. N. Frazer

Library J 93:1021 Mr 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Calvin Trillin

N Y Times Bk R p5 Mr 3 '68 800w

Time 91:98 F 23 '68 190w

KANTOR, MACKINLAY. The day I met a lion. 341p $5.95 Doubleday

818

68-10547

"This selection of non-fiction pieces by the novelist who won a Pulitzer prize for 'Andersonville' [BRD 1955] was compiled by the author himself and is made up of pieces written during a period of thirty-one years." (Best Sell)

"Although the expanse of years Kantor deals with saw great changes in the world, a record of those changes appears here only in the choice of subject matter. As a stylist and a thinker Kantor had gone as far as he was ever going to go back at the point of time when Edward VIII was deciding that he wanted Wallis Warfield Simpson more than Britain's kingship. When Kantor writes about the past he turns on a Walt Disney type of nostalgia which compels you to feel (he wants you to 'feel' rather than to 'think') that the millenium was strangely compressed into the era of his boyhood. [He] has gone to experience, he says, for the pieces which appear in this collection, yet usually he writes like a skilled journalist adapting materials for their human interest value." J. J. McAleer

Best Sell 27:479 Mr 15 '68 550w

"[The pieces here] range from a childhood encounter with traveler Carl Akeley in 'The Day I Met a Lion' and [Kantor's] early days in Iowa, to his Air Force years and recent times. One which appeared originally in Esquire, 'How to Tell Dirty Stories,' and another for animal lovers, 'Lobo,' are good to note. All of his stories are tributes to the positive side of human nature, and will appeal to many public library readers and to young adults." E. W. Cummings

Library J 93:68 Ja 1 '68 140w [YA]

KANZER, ALAN. One man, one vote. See Lee, C. B. T.

KAPITSA, PETER. Peter Kapitza on life and science; addresses and essays coll. tr. and annotated with an introd. by Albert Parry. 271p $7.50 Macmillan (N Y)

508 Science

68-23640

The first part of this book "is devoted to four men of science—Benjamin Franklin, Lomonosov, Paul Langevin, and Ernest Rutherford. . . . [The second part] consists of essays and speeches on Unity of Science and Technology; The Institute of Problems of Physics; Problems of Organizing Scientific Work; Dimensions of Scientific Work and the Role of the Scientist-Organizer; Theory, Experiment, Practice; . . . Effectiveness of Scientific Activity; and Mastery of Achievements of Science and Technology. The book concludes with two interviews with Kapitsa." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Kapitsa] is a wonderfully gifted man, both intellectually and psychologically. . . there is a certain resemblance to [J. R.] Oppenheimer. In a lecture published in this book, Kapitsa talks about the role of the scientific impresario, or scientist-organizer. It is in this role that both he and Oppenheimer have made their biggest impact on their time. . . Dr. Parry has performed a public service in making Kapitsa's lectures and essays available to the English-speaking world. [However] like most Kremlinologists, particularly those in touch with émigrés, Dr. Parry tends to see mysteries and complications where none exist. . . The book ought to have been read in proof by someone familiar with the Cambridge scene. . . [There are some] slightly tiresome [slips]. Still, the book is valuable and adds to East-West understanding. It would be worth having if only for Kapitsa's letters to his mother." C. P. Snow

Book World p4 S 8 '68 1050w

"This work is . . . by one of Russia's leading scientists. . . [It] contains something for the student, scientist, and layman. Several pieces are devoted to famous men. There are a number of interesting sidelights on people other than those under discussion. Mr. Kapitsa's respect and admiration are especially evident in those sections devoted to Rutherford. . . A more comprehensive coverage of Kapitsa's works is available in a three-volume set, Collected Papers of P. L. Kapitsa, edited by Professor Dirk ter Haar. If your library cannot afford that set, it may want to substitute this volume." L. J. Creek

Library J 93:3014 S 1 '68 140w

"The one unfortunate element of this book is Mr. Parry's introduction. It adds almost nothing to our knowledge of Kapitsa and serves to confuse the reader more than to enlighten him. There are unnecessary innuendos and apparently a number of errors of fact. . . In a very real sense one can learn more about Kapitsa the man from his essays than from any conceivable biography. Reading them is a rewarding experience." Harrison Brown

N Y Times Bk R p3 D 22 '68 1300w

KAPLAN, BENJAMIN. The Jew and his family. 205p $5.95 La. state univ. press

301.45 Jews—Social life and customs

67-21376

"The basic conception of the family . . . in this book is that of a unit of interacting and intercommunicating persons enacting the social roles of husband and wife, mother and father, son and daughter, brother and sister. . . The undertaking will be confined to the construction of a 'model' (in a sense an empirical abstraction as far as possible), a methodological technique known in sociology as the 'ideal type'. . . The three ideal families chosen are the biblical family, the family of the shtetl in nineteenth-century Eastern Europe, and the modern American family." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"The writing is characterized by nostalgia and an idealization of life in the shtetl, in which the author, [who is a professor of sociology at the University of Southern Louisiana], was born and raised. . . The family, he points out, is central in all groups, but is especially so in the case of the Jews. . . In America, however, it no longer serves as a cementing force in Jewish life. The author is, therefore, filled with apprehension about the future of the American Jews. . . [He] quite clearly is extremely subjective in his attitude towards the problem he discusses. He is too emotionally involved to analyze the issues scientifically. The book, therefore, could hardly be considered a sociological work. It is rather an emotional outpouring of a highly sensitive individual. It is beautifully written, poetically conceived, and rich in allusions. As such, it deserves high praise. As a scholarly work it is rather inadequate." Samuel Koenig

Ann Am Acad 376:204 Mr '68 650w

"[This study] must be judged as a commentary on what is happening to Jewish family life against the background of what appears to have been Jewish family life in other periods of history. Interesting though superficial, well written though nostalgic, and preceded with statements of awareness of the shortcomings of this type of informal approach."

Choice 5:1230 N '68 180w

KAPLAN, HAROLD. Urban political systems; a functional analysis of metro Toronto. 320p $8.50 Columbia univ. press

352.0713 Toronto metropolitan area—Politics and government

67-29577

The associate professor of political science at Toronto's York University has used Metro Toronto as a test case of 'structural functionalism,' the analytic approach to political systems developed by sociologist Talcott Parsons." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by William Michelson

Am J Soc 74:105 J1 '68 400w

"Although the book is focused upon the Metro Toronto system, the author repeatedly refers to other systems in a manner that encourages comparative analysis. Particularly striking are numerous observations about Metro Toronto that are in sharp contrast to those that have been made about urban systems in the United States. . . The book is well-written and exceptionally well documented. The extensive footnotes provide an excellent bibliography of both functional theory and urban politics. The emphasis is theoretical exposition, and the author comments that students more interested in Metro than in theory may be disappointed. The book's orientation requires no apology. . . Few [books] exist that soundly combine a conceptual framework with a specific research problem. Professor Kaplan's book is a valuable contribution toward achieving this combination." J. L. Cox

Am Pol Sci R 62:643 Je '68 900w

Choice 5:871 S '68 100w

"[This] is a meticulous application of theory to practice, an intensive analysis of 'role' interaction, and an unreal, nearly unreadable academic exercise. It will appeal to a very limited group of functionalist social scientists. Even for other academics, the jargon, the avoidance of personalities, and the dryness of the writing will prove unpalatable. . . However, there is much here of interest to students of municipal government, and to municipal politicians. Given the attention paid the Metro experiment, and its adoption in cities like Winnipeg and Nashville, Mr. Kaplan's evidence of the relative failure of Metro Toronto to meet its real tasks is of some practical importance." M. S. Cross

Library J 92:4424 D 1 '67 200w

KAPLAN, HERBERT H. Russia and the outbreak of the Seven years' war. 165p $5.75 Univ. of Calif. press

940.2 Seven Years' War, 1756-1763. Russia—History

68-12249

A reappraisal of Russian "influence in shaping the incipient stages of this major European conflict. . . [The author examines] Russia's relations with Austria, France, Great Britain, and Prussia. . . [and attempts to] illuminate several crucial aspects in the formulation of [Russian] foreign policy and in the conduct of court politics." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] demonstrates the leading role in policy making played by Empress Elizabeth, rather than Bestuzhev and/or M. Vorontsov. This book is more than a complement to such earlier works as J. Oliva, Misalliance: A Study of French Policy in Russia during the Seven Years' War [BRD 1965] for Kaplan has thoroughly exploited the archives in Russia as well as Vienna, Paris, and London, producing a superbly documented study which must be taken as the definitive account of its subject. The subject, however, is rather narrow, making this less than a basic book for all libraries. . . Since the number of sound accounts of any aspect, broad or narrow, of 18th-century Russia is so small, any library which supports work in Russian history should have this book."

Choice 5:1207 N '68 170w

"Kaplan, associate professor of history at Indiana University, has made an exhaustive study of Russian diplomacy leading up to the Seven Years' War. He describes the background, and the interrelationships of the other participants and traces all the tangled threads of negotiations, discussing the motives, personalities, and intrigues of the various officials involved. . . . He believes that this period resulted in a reorientation of Russian foreign policy. This scholarly, specialized study should be of value to students of 18th-Century Europe, and to students of Russian history generally." J. S. Robotham

KAPLAN, H. H.—Continued

Library J 93:1628 Ap 15 '68 100w

KAPLAN, LAWRENCE S. Jefferson and France; an essay on politics and political ideas. 175p $5.75 Yale univ. press

973.4 Jefferson, Thomas. U.S.—Foreign relations—France 67-13441

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. I. Shulim
Am Hist R 73:593 D '67 430w
Choice 4:1296 Ja '68 180w

Reviewed by J. M. Roberts
Engl Hist R 83:354 O '68 340w

KAPLAN, MILTON, jr. auth. The ungentlemanly art. See Hess, S.

KARAN, PRADYUMNA P. Bhutan; ■ physical and cultural geography. 103p il col il maps $17.50 Univ. of Ky. press

915.4 Bhutan 67-17842

"Based on several sources of information, including fieldwork in the area during 1964-1965, [this book] begins with an . . . account of the modern exploration and history of the country. This is followed by a discussion of the contemporary political scene as well as the physical, economic, and social characteristics of the mountain kingdom. The survey is rounded off with a look at some of the current trends in Bhutan's 'economic and political geography.'" (Pacific Affairs) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a preliminary study, the first systematic geographic appraisal of its kind. . . . Mr. Karan analyzes the significant physical and cultural factors of Bhutanese geography in relation to political and economic changes. The book is brimming with illustrations, line drawings, black-and-white and color plates, and maps of all kinds. . . . [The] bibliography draws on written English sources. . . . A book well worth its cost. Highly recommended for specialists and well-informed, interested readers." R. S. Dillon

Library J 92:4018 N 1 '67 220w

"Although the cartography is often of ■ pedestrian nature, on the whole this is an attractively produced volume." K. S. Sandhu

Pacific Affairs 41:331 summer '68 230w

KARCZ, JERZY F., ed. Soviet and East European agriculture; ed. with ■ pref. by Jerzy F. Karcz. 445p maps $10 Univ. of Calif. press

338.1 Agriculture and state. Agriculture—Russia. Agriculture—Europe, Eastern 67-10620

A collection of revised editions "of the papers presented at the August 1965 conference at the University of California, Santa Barbara . . . [concerning] problems of agriculture in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe . . . by anthropologists, geographers, historians, and political scientists as well ■ agricultural scientists. . . . [The topics] range from problems of farm employment to the importance of the corn program and the role of women in the countryside. . . . Papers also are included on Yugoslavian, Czechoslovakian, and Polish agriculture." (Am Pol Sci R) Index.

"Economists contributed several empirical studies to the volume—Naum Jasny on costs and prices, Norton Dodge and Murray Feshbach on employment of women. Of the empirical studies, Nancy Nimitz' article on agricultural employment deserves note since both her estimates and her methodology are of considerable interest. . . . [In an excellent essay] Alec Nove discusses the relationship between the local officials and the peasant under collectivized agriculture. . . . Contributions to the volume by geographers Robert Jensen, Jeremy Anderson, and Warren Hultquist gives a single, overwhelming impression. This is an impression of incredible inefficiency in Soviet planning of technical matters related to cropping, regionalization, and location. . . . This book contains several useful articles. Its most serious lack, in my view, is the absence of any contributions by scholars from the countries being studied." J. G. Thornton

Am Econ R 58:293 Mr '68 900w

"Some of the essays are more readable than others and some are more informative than others. Nevertheless, every one of the papers must be regarded as a worthy contribution. . . . A careful reader of this volume will discover the shortcomings of Soviet and Eastern European agriculture have not been economic alone. Indeed, evidence offered by several of the contributors leaves the impression that in spite of new capital inputs, political and social factors are destined to block any foreseeable solution to the problems of Soviet and Eastern European agricultural problems that would be regarded as satisfactory. Those who would understand the recent history of the Soviet Union, or hope to probe for future trends, will need the material presented in this volume." R. D. Laird

Am Pol Sci R 62:290 Mr '68 600w

"The quality of the analysis is generally high and will compare favorably with any recent monographs on the subject, and the coverage is almost encyclopedic. In addition to the principal papers, there are comments upon each prepared by other members of the Conference. . . . Generally, the work is directed toward the professional scholar in the field of Soviet-type economies. There is little to appeal to the general reader, although any intelligent layman can get a great deal of value out of a careful reading. Extensive and numerous tables and other compilations of statistical data; careful documentation and a wealth of bibliographical references. Altogether it is a quite scholarly work."

Choice 4:880 O '67 200w

KARDOUCHE, GEORGE K. The U.A.R. in development; a study in expansionary finance. 170p $15 Praeger

332 Egypt—Economic policy. Banks and banking—Egypt 67-14184

The author "examines the economic and monetary problems of the Egyptian economy while it was striving toward rapid economic growth through industrialization in the period 1952-64." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[Kardouche] concerns himself with the consequences of a massive deficit-financed investment program. . . . [His] analysis, in Chapter 6, of the currency-money and reserve-deposit ratios as determinants of the money supply, while interesting, is so only to the specialist, not on Egypt but in monetary theory. . . . [However] the book is without any index, and the footnotes are so inconveniently tucked away near the back of the book between Appendix D and the Bibliography that one soon loses interest in checking the author's references." W. O. Thweatt

Am Econ R 58:218 Mr '68 800w

"The study is based upon the author's Ph.D. dissertation and presents a very technical exposition. Four appendices, 22 pages of notes, and a six-page bibliography add to the usefulness of the volume for specialized research libraries. Not recommended for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 4:880 O '67 100w

KARLEN, DELMAR. Anglo-American criminal justice, by Delmar Karlen, in collaboration with Geoffrey Sawyer and Edward M. Wise. 233p $6; pa $1.95 Oxford

343 Criminal law. Justice, Administration of 68-75418

"This book compares and contrasts the workings of criminal justice in England and the United States. . . . It is based upon papers from members of a team of prominent American jurists who visited England to study criminal justice in action, and from a comparable team of British jurists who returned the visit. . . . The first part analyzes the institutions and machinery of criminal justice: the police, the prosecution, the defense, the courts, and the prison systems. The second part traces chronologically the stages of a criminal case: pre-trial proceedings, trial, sentencing, appeals and post-conviction remedies." (Publisher's note) General index. Index to cases.

"The book is scholarly if readably written; its information is accurate, and its conclusions are judicious. Primarily, it addresses itself to the interested lawyer or public official. In this country those headed for the bar examination—an institution without counterpart in England where the Inns of Court and the Law Society hold examinations for the barristers or solicitors respectively—may profit by it. The overall impression, or rather conclusion, an informed reader may arrive at (is that) the American administration of criminal justice differs from that of England far more than is popularly assumed." Karl Loewenstein

Ann Am Acad 378:175 J1 '68 550w

"The current preoccupation of the [U.S.] with problems of criminal law makes this book an extremely timely contribution to our understanding of the criminal processes. . . . [Its] utility should be immense to American lawyers and judges as well as to British barristers and jurists. . . . A fine contribution to the much needed literature dealing with the problem of criminal justice."

Choice 5:834 S '68 120w

KARMÁN, THEODORE VON. See Von Kármán, T.

KAROL, K. S. China; the other communism; phot. by Marc Riboud; tr. from the French by Tom Baistow. 474p $7.95 Hill & Wang 915.1 China (People's Republic of China)

66-27608

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by John Israel

Book World p3 Mr 17 '68 170w

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo

Nation 206:613 My 6 '68 70w

Reviewed by Margaret Prang

Pacific Affairs 41:424 fall '68 200w

TLS p203 F 29 '68 220w

KAROLIDES, NICHOLAS J. The pioneer in the American novel, 1900-1950. 324p $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press

813 American fiction—History and criticism. Frontier and pioneer life. Characters and characteristics in literature 67-15573

The author attempts "to report the image of the pioneer as it is seen in about a hundred novels published between 1900 and 1950, and to suggest how novelists have responded to the tacit mandates of that literary school which was dominant at a particular time. About 1920, he finds, there was a swing from the genteel-romantic novel to a 'more realistic' one." (Am Lit) Bibliography. Index.

"A book about books more than about pioneers. . . . Its main business seems to be classification. The reader is instructed, but he is also so oppressed by the sheer bulk of relentlessly categorized materials that finally he cannot cope with it. . . . The image is delivered in terms of the pioneer's physical stature, facial characteristics, dress, moral qualities, etc. . . . Despite quotations from novels, the types refuse to become people; the pioneers are seen in classifications, not in actions. . . . [The author] engages in virtually no dialogue with other scholars who have followed the same trails. There are a few footnotes, a substantial bibliography, and a good (analyzed) index. The book is soberly, even solemnly, written." Alexander Cowie

Am Lit 40:96 Mr '68 500w

Choice 5:343 My '68 180w

"Although Karolides has discussed probably more than enough novelists to validate his judgments, he omits some who are if not more important at least more serious than many he has chosen to include. . . . Perhaps more significant is his failure to discriminate aesthetically among them: all books seem to have equivalent weight in his scales—juveniles, blown-up dime novels, melodramatic westerns, pedestrian chronicles. . . . It must be added that the style and proofreading are extremely careless." J. T. Flanagan

J Am Hist 54:915 Mr '68 320w

KARP, WALTER. Charles Darwin and The origin of species. See Horizon magazine

KARSH, YOUSUF. Karsh portfolio. 202p pl $10 Nelson

779 Photography—Portraits. Photography, Artistic [67-106656]

This volume contains forty-eight photographs of international figures such as Churchill, Nehru, Khrushchev, Hemingway and Picasso together with individual biographical sketches.

"Despite its title, [this] is in effect a new edition of . . . Portraits of Greatness, since 34 portraits and accompanying text to each appear in both books. The 14 new portraits are of artists and of people who have become prominent in the 1960's. The collection is well reproduced and fully representative of the Canadian photographer's work, but only highly specialized libraries will need both volumes."

Choice 4:1372 F '68 70w

"Whether or not one likes this bravura style with its rich blacks and brilliant highlights, there is no denying the impact of the different personalities, the artist's photographic skill, and the excellence of the quality of reproductions. Karsh's short squibs accompanying each picture are informal, but add little to our knowledge of the sitter; it is the photograph which tells the story. A few of these photographs appeared in an earlier book, Portraits of Greatness [BRD 1960], but not so many that the enjoyment of this new volume will be diminished. Recommended to large collections as a companion piece for the original." R. L. Enequist

Library J 92:4496 D 15 '67 100w

"[These are] unmannered but masterly portraits . . . all superbly reproduced by velvety gravure. They confirm a view that Armenian-born Karsh is among the greatest since photography began. . . . Not only does the composing and the portrayal of inner character impress but also the perfect technique of chiaroscuro. In his vivid documentation of those that have left a mark on their time, Karsh has created a legacy which will be of value to future historians."

TLS p1211 D 14 '67 130w

KASH, DON E. The politics of space cooperation. 137p $4.95 Purdue univ. studies

629.4 Astronautics—U.S. International cooperation 67-64072

This "study describes the development of United States policy in peaceful outer space cooperation after the first shock of Sputnik in 1957 had worn off. [The author] uses two approaches . . . a conservative one, and one that he calls innovative. The innovative approach aiming for a change in the climate of opinion and hoping for a breakthrough in foreign policy justifies extensive international cooperation as the road to peace. The conservative approach aims to maintain free world confidence in the strength and leadership of the United States, and proposes narrowly defined cooperation of mutual advantage to the partners." (Library J) Index.

"[The] Director of the Program in Science and Public Policy, Purdue, has written an intelligent, sophisticated summary and analysis of U.S. participation in international space programs from the time the first earth satellite was launched. Emphasis is upon positive, peaceful activities carried on under the concept of cooperation, rather than on military implications, and upon the policy implications of American participation. Stylistic qualities are excellent. Readership audience is specialized and limited in number. Unusually complete table of contents. . . . A useful summary of existing literature, this volume will be of value to any college or university library, but is essential only to the latter."

Choice 5:408 My '68 140w

Reviewed by A. F. Peterson

Library J 92:4165 N 15 '67 130w

KASSIL, LEV. Brother of the hero; tr. by Anne Terry White. 118p il $3.95 Braziller

68-16107

A Russian schoolboy, Geshka Chermish, "seeks reflected glory by claiming kinship with the national hero whose name he happens to share—and learns the hard way that glory cannot be acquired by reflection. . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (Book World)

"A sturdily written school story, completely Anglo-Saxon in its attitudes. . . . As always,

KASSIL, LEV—Continued

[the translator] demonstrates that translation is a great creative art. . . . [The book is] well and generously illustrated." D. B. Whitman
Book World p33 (children's issue) My 5 '68 130w

"Warmth and humor as well as an understanding of children are reflected in the events of the story: the teasing friendships of the students; the fierce rivalry between the boys' hockey team, captained by Geshka, and the girls' hockey team, captained by Anna; the arrival of the hero, 'stocky, gay, with white teeth'; the wonderful conclusion with all of 5B crowded around the flier as together they solve problems of mathematics and brotherhood. Directly told, with an artless, almost old-fashioned enthusiasm." S. D. L.
Horn Bk 44:420 Ag '68 170w

"The place of this book in American libraries is difficult to define, but it is a fascinating example of literature written to serve social ends. . . . The pervasive, almost subliminal, moralizing, the utterly unblemished character of the gallant young hero of the Soviet Union, and the timeworn machinery of the plot combine to give the book an archaic air. . . . [It] is more interesting as an example of a Russian juvenile book than for any intrinsic value, and a teacher or librarian might well ask children to compare their reaction to its pat conclusions with the provocative, open-ended moral issues raised by such recent American titles as Ellen Grae [by V. Cleaver, BRD 1967] and Harriet the Spy [by L. Fitzhugh, BRD 1965]." Janet French
Library J 93:2114 My 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by Robert Ostermann
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 My 5 '68 60w

KASSOFF, ALLEN, ed. Prospects for Soviet society; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 586p $10; pa $3.95 Praeger

309.147 Russia—Social conditions—1945—Russia—Politics and government—1953—67-20485

A collection of essays by various authors in which each, following his description of present conditions, speculates on probable trends in Russian society during the next few decades. "Individual essays range in subject from agriculture to the family, from the role of science to the future of the national minorities, and finally to the effect of all these upon the stability of Soviet institutions and the international behavior of the Soviet Union. Each one not only includes . . . summaries of background and current information, but explores possible avenues of change." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Although the essayists do not entirely avoid the safe prediction that Russia's future is the 'middle course' between repression and relaxation, their studies of the different aspects of the modern USSR make clear just how difficult is not only the observer's task but also that confronting the rulers of the Soviet Union today. In almost every sphere analyzed it seems evident that the traditional method of change, 'the imperative from above,' may no longer be adequate for modern Soviet society." R. H. Johnston

Library J 93:759 F 15 '68 120w

"These seventeen longish essays by American scholars and 'Sovietologists' are skilfully edited by Professor Kassoff of Princeton University, who provides introductory notes and a summing up. . . . By far the best essays are those that provide factual information and survey the demographic changes, the development of agriculture and industry, and trends in education and science. These . . . form a compendium of facts and figures useful as reference material for students interested in the economic background of the Soviet Union. The presentation of relevant statistical data is lucid, and the authors, wisely refraining from over-interpretation, let the array of conscientiously collected facts speak for themselves." TLS p892 Ag 22 '68 800w

KASTNER, JONATHAN. Sleep; the mysterious third of your life [by] Jonathan and Marianna Kastner; ill. by Don Madden. 116p $3.25 Harcourt

612 Sleep—Juvenile literature 67-22392

The authors explain "what scientific studies have learned about the nature and necessity of sleep, what happens when we sleep or go for a long time without sleep. They discuss dreaming and whether or not we can learn from recordings while we sleep. . . . Age twelve and up." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:173 J1 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Isadora Kunitz
Library J 93:3971 O 15 '68 60w

"A lucid, entertaining and up-to-date summary of what science has learned of the importance and functions of sleep. . . . Will make excellent bedtime reading for teen-agers and parents alike—that is, if they can resist the power of suggestion." Jane Brody

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p18 My 5 '68 200w [YA]

KASTNER, MARIANNA, jt. auth. Sleep. See Kastner, J.

KATZ, SAMUEL. Days of fire. 317p 11 maps $5.95 Doubleday

956.94 Katz, Shmuel. Irgun Zvai Leumi. Israel—History 67-15347

The memoirs of a leader of the Irgun, an underground organization fighting the British in Palestine during the 1930's and 1940's. Katz's "account is both a personal memoir and a survey of the political, informational, and propaganda activities of the Irgun, with which he was . . . connected almost from its beginning. He deals briefly with the Irgun's military operations." (Library J) First published in Hebrew under the title Yom ha-esh. Chronology. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[The passage of] time provides a better perspective but has not yet cleared all the bad feelings between members of the Irgun and the official Jewish establishment of those days. . . . Katz is most critical of establishment policies and activities, and especially those of its leader, David Ben-Gurion. . . . Because he was one of the protagonists in the drama, Mr. Katz's opinions and conclusions have to be taken cautiously, but there is new evidence to support some of his conclusions. A very interesting and well-written memoir, his book is recommended to both academic and public libraries." David Shavit

Library J 93:1621 Ap 15 '68 100w

"Katz's hero—the only participant he sees as unblemished—is Vladimir Jabotinsky, the leader of the opposition to the Zionist movement. His villains are manifold. Britain is the major enemy, but there are many others in his lexicon: Chaim Weizmann, David Ben-Gurion, Moshe Sharett, Golda Meir. . . . Published in Hebrew in 1966, Katz's book created a political sensation in Israel. He charges the Haganah with torturing members of the dissident Irgun; he denounces not only Ben-Gurion but underscores the weaknesses in leaders of the Irgun. . . . Of all his charges against the Establishment the one that stirred up the greatest contention in Israel was his account of the burning of the Altalena, the Irgun ship that . . . was shelled by the Palmach, the striking arm of the Haganah." Ruth Gruber

Sat R 51:38 My 18 '68 490w

KATZ, SHLOMO, ed. Negro and Jew; an encounter in America; a symposium comp. by Midstream magazine. 141p $4.95; pa $1.45 Macmillan (N Y)

301.451 Negroes. Jewish question 67-23622

A collection of articles "written for, and first published in, the Jewish review Midstream [December 1966] . . . [which attempts to describe] the factors contributing to Negro anti-Semitism." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The replies [of the contributors to this volume] shed a little light, offer few solutions, and often reflect little intimate understanding of the situation. But they supply a valuable record of how people deal with a distressing anomaly of intergroup relations. Responses range from Floyd McKissick's charge that Jews take unjustified credit upon themselves for the civil-rights movement to Joel Carmichael's declaration that Jews have already demanded too much of themselves. Writers tend either to adopt the view that anti-Semitism in the ghettos is incidental to the landlord and merchant role or, like Howard Fast, to find the source in the Negro's immersion in a deeply anti-Semitic Christian tradition." R. H. Turner

Am J Soc 74:198 S '68 350w

"This collection of short essays is repetitious with reference often to the same opinions and experiences of contact between Negro and Jew. There is little historical development; proof is based mainly on recent events, such as riots in slum areas. One essay would have been sufficient. I do not feel that this book offers much that is constructive although a few suggestions are made." Shirley Thurston
Library J 92:2797 Ag '67 110w

"With a few exceptions, the contributors are Jewish. . . . The collection does convey a thorough—if one-sided—view of the factors contributing to Negro anti-Semitism. . . . Of somewhat greater interest are the multitude of viewpoints brought by the authors (who range from Arthur A. Cohen to Harry Golden) to the question of the Jew's reaction to Negro anti-Semitism. . . . In the end, the reader is likely to gain more insight into the vitality and diversity of Jewish opinion than into the problem of Negro-Jewish relations."
N Y Times Bk R p10 Mr 10 '68 200w

Reviewed by B. E. Olson
Sat R 51:82 My 11 '68 850w

KATZ, STANLEY NIDER. Newcastle's New York; Anglo-American politics, 1732-1753. 285p $6.95 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

974.7 New York (State)—Politics and government. U.S.—History—Colonial period 68-14261

In this study, the author "discusses the impact on the colonies of English politics and imperial administration [and of] the selection of colonial governors. . . . He describes and analyzes . . . the conduct of New York politics . . . [and] examines the actual operation of the provincial government, closely tied as it was to the family-dominated social structure of the colony. [He] exposes New York's relation to the complex web of administrative formalism and patronage that marked the England of Thomas Pelham-Holles, Duke of Newcastle, England's principal colonial administrator during this era." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"In tracing the administrations of three colonial governors (William Cosby, George Clarke, and George Clinton), the author uncovers the intricate web of Anglo-American connections which determined the play of colonial politics to the detriment of imperial policy. Well written and logically organized, this study is based upon extensive research in British and American manuscripts. . . . Especially useful for upper level courses in English and American history."
Choice 5:362 S '68 180w

"Katz's main thesis is that 'operation of the political system in colonial New York cannot fully be understood in terms of a closed provincial society.' . . . There are a few points with which this reviewer must quibble. Katz overemphasizes the uniqueness of his evidence. In treating colonial agents, for example, he suggests they were chosen for their familiarity with New York and loyalty to their employers. However, their prime qualification in the earlier period was their relationship to influential English politicians. . . . A few minor errors should be corrected. Adolph Philipse was not the father of Frederick Philipse, but rather his uncle. . . . Lest these carping criticisms mislead, it must be said that Katz's fascinating monograph provides an important dimension to colonial New York history." L. H. Leder
J Am Hist 55:380 S '68 550w

"[The author] shows clearly how chances for success in New York depended on connections in England. Lewis Morris's long and unsuccessful mission in England is the subject of a fascinating chapter. The book is a little broader than its title indicates. The opening chapter, for example, is a good account of England's colonial machinery. Mr. Katz describes the people who sought colonial governorships (usually needy Englishmen) and the people who were appointed (those with connections in high office). This well-written and thoroughly researched book is recommended for large public libraries and academic libraries." Jerome Nadelhaft
Library J 93:2237 Je 1 '68 140w

KATZ, STEVE. The exaggerations [sic] of Peter Prince; the novel. 281p il $6.95 Holt 68-11389

In this "first novel Steve Katz strikes out at many of the conventions of fiction while charting the quixotic adventures . . . of Peter Prince. [He] includes illustrations, overprinting, excised passages, potential passages, parallel columns, and extended parenthetical figures." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:150 O '68 30w

"A fine example of contemporaneity of form. . . . One of the most pleasing elements of this work lies in Mr. Katz's revelation that he is unsure of the course of the novel from the very beginning. This is good fiction—fine iconoclasm." Robert Baker
Library J 93:2898 Ag '68 110w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 207:286 S 23 '68 100w

"The reader will encounter [the book's] real distinctions as readily by flipping from one typographical curiosity to another as by trying to read it in any traditional way. . . . The putative title character is rarely more than a talking point, and sometimes only a typographic constellation of alphabetic symbols. The only constant character is the author, and he is not well realized. Instead of images we get his fingerprints—rather sticky ones, as if he had been eating his own hot fudge sundae without a spoon while he fumbled the manuscript into its present sequence. . . . One concludes that this novel must have been intended as a filibuster." R. V. Cassill
N Y Times Bk R p4 S 8 '68 600w

"[The author] has produced the non-novel of non-novels. . . . Typographically speaking, Katz is quite clever. Parts of his text are crossed out with huge X's. . . . And he is engagingly self-conscious, archly revealing to the reader that the writing of his 'thing' is not going too well. . . . A plethora of 'beeps' also papers over whole passages of possible prurient interest. . . . Katz's attack on the book as form is largely tongue-in-cheek. . . . [He] not infrequently comes off as an expert, and linear, craftsman. . . . At points, the 'story' breaks down into three separate stories printed side by side in three columns on the same page, and the reader gasps for air. . . . [An idiot's delight that] threatens everyone's sanity." T. G. P.
Newsweek 72:89 S 9 '68 600w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 51:34 S 7 '68 460w

KATZ, WILLIAM LOREN. Eyewitness; the Negro in American history. 554p il $9.75 Pitman

301.451 Negroes—History 67-10833

The author presents this narrative "for the most part . . . in the words and pictures of those who made history. Each quotation used in the narrative, as well as the eyewitness sections, is by a person contemporaneous with the events [or] people described." (Library J) The book describes the contributions of Negroes in every period in our history—from the early explorers to today's champions of equality and civil rights. Index.

"Katz has done a creative job in selecting and weaving the excerpted documents. . . . Recommended as a good beginning source reference."
Choice 5:257 Ap '68 100w

Christian Century 84:1570 D 6 '67 30w

"Aiming at the teacher of the conventional United States History course at the secondary level, Katz combines narrative with original sources in a unit by unit approach that is closely keyed to the chronological pattern followed by most history teachers. With the Teachers' Guide . . . which includes sample units, bibliography, audio-visual aids, and other numerous suggestions, Katz has outflanked those members of Boards of Education, social studies supervisors and history teachers who complain about the lack of ethnic instructional materials usable in the classroom. . . . [He] has done students and teachers a great service by producing a comprehensive text and source material that require little change on the part of the teacher and the least revision of a U.S. History course." Larry Cuban
Harvard Ed R 38:611 summer '68 3150w

"Mr. Katz has a slight tendency to over-emphasize the contributions of certain individuals in relation to others, but this is ■

KATZ, W. L.—Continued

minor criticism of this well-illustrated and thoroughly researched book." Edward Mapp
Library J 93:73 Ja 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by H. N. Meyer
Nation 206:737 Je 3 '68 340w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
Sat R 51:41 Mr 23 '68 170w

KAUFFMANN, LANE. Another Helen; ■ novel.

300p $5.95 Lippincott

68-14131

"Six years before the story opens, Eleanor Davenport had left her husband and a 15-year-old son [Ken] to roam Europe with a dashing French adventurer. As the novel opens her lover is killed and Eleanor is brought home by her husband seemingly to pick up the strands of a happy though interrupted marriage. The book concerns this summer of readjustment." (Library J)

Reviewed by T. L. Vince
Best Sell 28:27 Ap 15 '68 750w

Reviewed by Norman Stein
Book World p13 Ap 7 '68 280w

"Appealing, articulate characters and a plot that begins where most end make this an absorbing story. Recommended for all fiction collections." Patricia Stiles
Library J 93:1021 Mr 1 '68 80w

"There is no Hector in this Iliad to be dragged by his heels; actually, there are no heels. And that is what is so unsatisfying about Mr. Kauffmann's amiable ramble of a novel. George retrieves his tarnished bride without rancor—and therefore without deep passion or feeling of any kind. The slickers out there in Bradley's Bluff cover all problems with thickly buttered rhetoric and are so civilized as to cast very little shadow. Even when son Ken is about to become an unwed father, Eleanor does not lose her forensic cool. Was this the kind of dish that launched a thousand ships?" Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p45 Mr 31 '68 180w

"I am inclined to be angry with Mr. Kauffmann because there is so much about his work that is admirable, and so much more that he is on the point of throwing into the gutter. He abuses a gift, and this is a cosmic discourtesy. . . . Some seven readers out of ten will enjoy [this novel] and not without good reason, because it is a notably readable book. It'll make a movie. . . . [However] Helen is an extraordinarily mediocre loose woman, her son is a dreary little boy, Bradley's Bluff a tedious township, and [this book] an insult to the reader who was led by the author's earlier promise to expect better things." Gerald Kersh
Sat R 51:40 Ap 6 '68 460w

KAUFMAN, ARNOLD S. The radical liberal; new man in American politics; foreword by Hans J. Morgenthau. 175p $5.95 Atherton

320.5 Liberalism. U.S.—Social conditions
67-23696

The central theme of this "book is the claim that chronic disorders in American society—especially in the ghettos and on the campuses—can best be understood in terms of the growing gap between the rhetoric of American liberalism and the reality of people's lives. The author advocates . . . a politics of radical pressure. As he sees it, one cannot be authentically liberal without being radical; the defects of American society are so fundamental that only by taking the ax to institutional roots can chronic social evils be eliminated. Much can be achieved by working within the conventional political structure, but there are times and places when unconventional actions are fully justified. In this light he explains and defends many of the beliefs and practices of the Black Power movement, the New Left, and the campus radicals." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:871 S '68 160w

"What is needed is a new breed of indefatigable radicals, passionately moral, yes—but also coldly calculating and unfailingly energetic in pursuit of liberal goals." Mr. Kaufman accepts the view that a radical change in American attitudes regarding foreign policy, Negro rights, and education is imperative, but can be accomplished without revolution. His book, which contains this pragmatic platform for the liberal activist, is recommended for academic and public libraries." J. S. Freedman

Library J 93:1489 Ap 1 '68 160w

"Kaufman is a professor of philosophy who has been active in teach-ins and civil-rights efforts in recent years. He offers here not a book of philosophy but one of political strategy based upon a traditional political philosophy. In the face of rejection in activist circles, of the term 'liberal' in favor of the more ominous 'radical,' Kaufman proposes a 'politics of radical pressure' as precisely what is needed to secure the traditional aims of liberalism. . . . [His] excellent critique shows that the title 'liberal' is wildly misapplied to pseudo-realism, which is the deluded stance of the administrator who believes that politics is somehow amoral and that its processes should be conducted in the light of morally uncontaminated 'facts.' . . . His conclusions are uniformly instructive, not least for the fact that they counter the views of many who would object to them in the name of liberalism itself." N. S. Care

New Repub 158:42 Mr 23 '68 1500w

"[Kaufman] shows that the liberal tradition embodies enduring aspirations and insights, but he does not demonstrate that they can provide a way out of the present darkness. Indeed he does not even demonstrate, except by wholly spurious comparisons, that these aspirations and insights are peculiar to liberalism. . . . [His] argument throughout is so abstract that he can reconcile contradictory points of view to prove that 'radicalism' is merely a logical extension of liberalism—and not a criticism of some of its leading assumptions. . . . Fond of reconciling irreconcilables, Kaufman is forever exhorting his readers to avoid 'either-or's.' . . . In place of analysis he offers vapid generalities." Christopher Lasch
N Y Rev of Books 11:3 Jl 11 '68 2800w

KAUFMAN, WILLIAM I. The chocolate cookbook. 168p pl $4.50 Doubleday

641.6 Cookery—Chocolate 68-10545

"Beginning with 'The Story of Chocolate and Chocolate Making' [the author] proceeds to give . . . recipes for cakes (both starting from scratch [and using] mixes,) cookies, pies, breads, desserts, candies, frostings, sauces, and beverages." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Gloria Levitas

Book World p7 My 12 '68 50w

"Mr. Kaufman has done it again—taken a specialty and devoted an entire book to its delights and versatility. . . . This book should prove a happy addition to any library and can be heartily recommended for novice and experienced cooks." R. G. Dorman

Library J 93:79 Ja 1 '68 200w

KAUFMANN, CARL B. Man incorporate; the individual and his work in an organized society. 281p $5.95 Doubleday

301.5 Work. Corporations 67-10389

A publications manager for DuPont seeks "to demonstrate how dynamic [modern large-scale business] organizations are and, in turn, how varied is the work life of the employee. . . . He suggests that individuals need not lose their personal identity to the corporate body as the corporations in their dynamism provide ample opportunity for self development. In the first half of the book he [outlines] the history of Western civilization. . . . The remainder of the book focuses on the modern corporation: the variety of persons who become executives, the adaptability of organizations to its personnel, the decentralization of management, the rationalization of management, destruction of clichés about 'organization men,' and the social usefulness of the modern corporation." (Choice) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[Kaufmann] has written a book which lies somewhere between the analytical levels of Peter Drucker [Managing For Results, BRD 1964] . . . and a personal account of a business executive about the modern large-scale business organization and its staff. . . . It offsets the popularized conception gained from W. H. Whyte's Organization Man [BRD 1956] or [V.] Packard's Pyramid Climbers [BRD 1962]. Kaufmann implicitly accepts the values which have led to the development and dominance of complex organizations in our society." Choice 4:1285 Ja '68 210w

"This is an informed commentary on work and workers in an industrial society in which the corporate form of organization dominates. The vantage point is that of a corporate insider looking out. Some of the commonly circulated clichés regarding corporate operation and personnel management are debunked in a highly literate and urbane manner. The emphasis is on the constructive aspects of corporate behavior. . . . For libraries." William Gibelman
Library J 92:252 Ja 15 '67 200w

KAUFMANN, MYRON S. Thy daughter's nakedness. 698p $3.95 Lippincott

68-24134

The author "alternates the story of Ed Gordon's attempts to establish himself as rabbi to a congregation in a small town near Boston with an account of daughter Millicent's love affair with Les, a young intern whom she meets while working on a Boston newspaper; her first job after graduation from college." (Library J)

Reviewed by Rita Anton

America 119:334 O 12 '68 700w

Reviewed by H. L. Sicherman

Best Sell 28,287 O 15 '68 950w

"Millicent . . . turns out to be a drab, infuriating little mouse indeed. . . . She is set back in the Truman era . . . [and] is unable, therefore, to shed any light of her own on the problems which continue to beset her gender. . . . One doesn't really know whose side Kaufmann is on, and perhaps he didn't know either, since in neither the parents' nor the daughter's generation did he create a character able to compel our sympathy or our allegiance." Lucy Rosenthal
Book World p14 O 27 '68 900w

"Ed [the father] is the more interesting . . . of the two [main characters]. . . . Millicent is a little prig, incredibly naive and militantly virginal—she shuns sex in favor of intellectual companionship—which makes her sudden submission to sexual intimacy with Les somewhat unbelievable. The love scenes are crude, extremely explicit and often unintentionally humorous. . . . The popularity of Mr. Kaufmann's earlier novel, Remember Me to God [BRD 1957] should insure the book's instant success and the theme, plus the emphasis on frank sexuality, may land this one on the best-seller list." A. C. Ringer

Library J 93:3156 S 15 '68 260w

Reviewed by Ronald Sukenick

N Y Times Bk R p66 O 27 '68 650w

KAULA, EDNA MASON. African village folktales; il. by the author. 155p $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

398.2 Folklore—Africa—Juvenile literature.
Animals—Stories 68-14690

"This anthology contains 20 stories, including one about Ananse, the rascally well-loved spider and one about Kalulu the hare. The geographical range of the stories collected . . . from South Africa to Egypt. Most offer strong moral lessons, and each . . . is prefaced by a short account of the homes, speech, dress, and growing-up process for children in the tribe with which the story originated. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"A well selected and well presented collection." Harold Lancour

Library J 93:2734 J1 '68 80w

"The cumulative effect of [the descriptive] prefaces is a wonderfully comprehensive picture of the whole continent—not only the obvious geographical diversities but the subtle diversities in the personality of the people. By the time a reader sits down for the story hour, he is a friend and neighbor." Jean Fritz
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 My 5 '68 200w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:138 D '68 70w

KAULA, EDNA MASON. The land and people of Rhodesia. 158p il $3.25; lib bdg $2.93 Lippincott

916.89 Rhodesia—Juvenile literature 67-19263

Chapters describe the origins of the people, their customs and traditions, the role of Europeans, agricultural and educational progress, conservation of wildlife and relations with Great Britain from 1961 to 1966. Index. "Grades six to eight." (Horn Bk)

Horn Bk 44:79 F '68 20w

"Miss Kaula gives a sympathetic description of Rhodesia and its people and an account of its turbulent history. The necessary simplification gives, perhaps, a more optimistic tone to the book than is warranted. Nevertheless, it is an accurate, restrained, and generally balanced statement of a complex and sensitive situation. It should serve its purpose to convey an appealing portrait of a young and lusty nation to youthful readers." Harold Lancour
Library J 92:3865 O 15 '67 70w

KAUNDA, KENNETH D. A humanist in Africa: letters to Colin M. Morris from Kenneth D. Kaunda. 136p $3.50 Abingdon

320.01 Political science—Philosophy, Africa—Politics, Nationalism 68-11713

These letters were written to the missionary and president of the United Church of Zambia who says "for a number of years, Dr Kaunda and I have kept going a running debate by letter, discussion and memorandum on a whole range of topics. It is from this mountain of material that I have selected the contents of this book. . . . These are his thoughts on the march, dictated in haste, linked by me in chapter form and amplified where necessary by personal discussion. My concern has not been to select his views on matters of immediate topical interest. I have attempted [rather] to illustrate [his] thought processes and philosophy of life." (Intro)

"The present book offers an exposition of [Kaunda's] personal, social, and political philosophies. He discusses humanism, multi-racialism, African psychology, nationalism, and pan-Africanism, his extended credo thus neatly supplementing the material in his autobiography (Zambia Shall Be Free, [BRD 1963]) and his published speeches. . . . Unfortunately, the present volume gives no indication of the date of composition of the 'letters,' nor does Morris indicate the extent to which he has 'edited' the texts."

Choice 5:541 Je '68 200w

"The president of Zambia sounds off against vestigial colonialism in a series of meaningful letters."

Christian Century 85:52 Ja 10 '68 40w

Reviewed by Louis Barron

Library J 93:1639 Ap 15 '68 100w

"More position papers than personal letters, these pieces set forth Kaunda's ideas about independence, government, nationalism and African unity, and do so with Kaunda's usual straightforwardness and intelligence. . . . It is political realities that really inform this book, and those realities are limned so well that any non-African wishing to get a quick, sharp notion of the African political character might well start with this small volume."

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 24 '68 190w

"Mr. Morris sums up President Kaunda as 'a good man whom power has not corrupted and who is the exponent of a humanism in politics which may be Zambia's most precious gift to Africa'. It is a fair assessment, and this short volume shows how deep-rooted is Dr. Kaunda's belief in principle as the necessary concomitant of power."

TLS p895 S 29 '66 300w

KAVALER, LUCY. Dangerous air; il. by Carl Smith. 143p $3.95 Day

614 Air—Pollution—Juvenile literature 67-10819

An introduction to the subject of air pollution "as caused by motor vehicles, industry, power generators, as well as home heating and incineration. . . . Mrs. Kavalier describes and explains the past disasters caused by pollution in Donora, Pennsylvania; Glasgow, Scotland; London, England; and the Meuse Valley in Belgium. She also gives evidence of the dangers of smoking, of certain weed-killers, jet planes of the future, and other products of a mechanized civilization. Examples are given of ways in which the general public can help to eliminate pollution. [Index.] Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"[This book] discusses an important public problem and must be read carefully and critically. . . . It is a matter of individual style and taste, of course, but I felt that Mrs. Kavalier might better have used fewer examples and described the relevant chemistry more completely." H. C. Stubbs

KAVALER, LUCY—Continued

Horn Bk 43:767 D '67 260w

Reviewed by M. B. Wenger
Library J 92:4613 D 15 '67 110w

"How dangerous the air is, Lucy Kavalier explains in horrifying and well-substantiated detail, pointing out that it is not the thermal inversion that is so dreadful but the slow, persistent contamination of air by man. . . . Soberly told, the story of our dangerous air is challenging and dramatic." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 50:44 O 21 '67 90w

KAVIC, LORNE J. India's quest for security: defence policies, 1947-1966. 263p maps $7.95 Univ. of Calif. press

354.54 India—Defenses 67-16788

This book describes "the organization and equipment of the Indian Army, Navy, and Air Force during the period 1947-1962, and . . . India's 'Himalayan policy,' both diplomatic and military, during the same period. [Some] developments affecting defense since 1962 are mentioned. These include . . . [the] Indian defense program made public in early 1964, . . . the Indo-Pakistan war of September 1965, and . . . current pressures to embark on a nuclear weapons program." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by N. D. Palmer
Am Hist R 73:1226 Ap '68 500w

"Two chapters of particular interest deal with defense production, 1947-1962, and with civilian-military relations. . . . Throughout the work problems of defense against Pakistan are curiously neglected. . . . Apparently, Mr. Kavic does not consider this problem to be a serious one. . . . He looks at India's defense policies almost exclusively from the point of view of Himalayan defense. The eleven Appendices contain useful but outdated notes and tables. The seven maps are helpful, but badly executed." N. D. Palmer

Ann Am Acad 376:167 Mr '68 550w

"[Kavic] has established himself as a major authority in his field with this book. He has exploited the source materials and the limited secondary literature extremely well. Strongly recommended."

Choice 5:250 Ap '68 300w

"In making this study, Mr. Kavic, a history instructor at Simon Fraser University in Canada, has kept both feet firmly planted on the ground. . . . It is difficult to dispute his conclusions. He finds that while India's search for security has been rooted in realism, its estimates of dangers (especially in the case of China) have not always been well founded. Students of Indian and international affairs would be well advised to look at his book." Hyman Kublin

Library J 92:4152 N 15 '67 180w

Reviewed by C. V. Crabb
Pacific Affairs 41:308 summer '68 430w

KAWAKITA, MICHIAKI. Contemporary Japanese prints. 208p 10il 47 col il $25 Kodansha 769 Engravings, Japanese. Color prints, Japanese 67-26310

The author "analyzes the history of the modern prints of Japan . . . [and offers] notes on each plate, together with a biographical paragraph on the artist." (N Y Times Bk R)

"'Creative print' is the label used by Mr. Kawakita for the modern Japanese woodcut, copperplate, lithograph, and similar art forms [which] limit the artist to no school but allow him complete freedom of expression and technique, bringing into play symbolism and abstraction. . . . [The plates] show clearly the wide range of expression and style possible. . . . Mr. Kawakita's book is worth the high price." R. L. Enequist

Library J 93:537 F 1 '68 130w

"[This book, written by] one of the foremost critics in Japan, has been excellently translated. . . . [It succeeds in bringing] us up to date on some of the best print-makers of our day. . . . Some rough idea of the excellent achievements of the Japanese in the print field can be gained through such a book, but heaven help those who think that its plates truly reflect the qualities of the original. . . . At best, the reproduction is a ghostly and airless image. . . . Because of this 'inherent vice' . . . the excellent text quite outstrips in interest the flatulent plates." Gordon Washburn

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 24 '67 380w

KAWATAKE, MOKUAMI. The love of Izayoi & Seishin; a kabuki play; tr. by Frank T. Motofuji. 172p $3.95 Tuttle

895.6 66-16266

This is a translation of "the four principal acts of the seven comprised in Izayoi and Seishin. . . . By the criteria of kabuki this work is classified as a 'domestic' rather than an historical or dance play. . . . It moves from one dramatic crest to the next as the morally wayward priest, Seishin, and his 'bosom companion,' the prostitute, Izayoi, travel the road of crime and sin. Typically neither malefactor escapes inevitable retribution." (Library J)

Choice 4:1388 F '68 160w

"Translations into English of 19th-century kabuki plays are rare. Except for readers of Japanese, the prolific productions of Mokuami, the foremost Japanese playwright of the era, are a closed book. Professor Motofuji of the University of California has served devotees of the Japanese theater well. . . . If one cannot see this play staged, a reading of this translation will suffice. For special collections on Japan and the theater." Hyman Kublin
Library J 91:4969 O 15 '66 140w

"Any translation of Mokuami's work marks a noteworthy event, and Motofuji's choice . . . is most felicitous. The play is one of the seven or eight masterpieces that Mokuami wrote before the Meiji Era began, and it numbers among a great dramatist's best works. Every act is exciting. . . . But the reader should realize that he is getting watered-down Mokuami. . . . As for the translation . . . some lyrical passages are outstanding, but a clumsy turn of phrase frequently spoils the colloquial scenes. Passages are left out, or truncated. . . . Careless misprints mar the book. Aside from matters of translation . . . several basic questions remain. . . . Mokuami wrote for an audience whose standards of criticism differed vastly from those now fashionable. . . . Today's reader or playgoer must learn to make proper allowances. Therefore, it is all the more lamentable that the translator was unable to provide us with a more thoughtful introduction and a more skilful translation." L. M. Zolbrod

Pacific Affairs 40:155 spring-summer '67 480w

KAY, MARA. The burning candle. 159p $3.50; lib bdg $3.35 Lothrop

68-14076

"Seventeen-year-old Zora Radich, schoolgirl in a small Yugoslavian town during the early days of the Communist takeover, watches in dismay as Communism turns relatives and friends into corrupt, backstabbing monsters. . . . [Despite] the oppressive atmosphere, Zora retains her integrity and is bolstered by her romantic interest, young Stevan. . . . Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"This authentic novel creates an atmosphere of interest, excitement and a magnetism that holds the reader's interest throughout."

Best Sell 28:113 Je 1 '68 100w

"A fervent propaganda harangue, simple-minded and melodramatic. . . . One-dimensional characterizations and a plot which is simply a catalog of Communist evils defy believability and are outdated for this time when the merits of blind belief in or adherence to causes are being challenged, or at least discussed, by most young people." D. G. Stavn

Library J 93:4420 N 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by Kate McQuade
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p12 My 5 '68 160w

"The author lived in Yugoslavia . . . and knows what she is writing about, though there is little that is essentially Yugoslav in this book; it could be about any totalitarian regime anywhere. The hardships for those who live under such a regime (especially if they have the courage to stand out against it) are clearly shown. But the author is—understandably—biased and does not allow that the communist regime may have brought any good to Yugoslavia. Nor does she have time for the majority who both live their lives decently and manage to avoid coming into conflict with the regime."

TLS p1075 N 24 '66 230w

KAY, MARA. Masha. 280p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.59 Lothrop

68-27705

"Masha knew that she had been sent away to school because it was the only way she could get an education; her widowed mother was too poor to provide it. There was little enough opportunity for girls in Russia in 1815, but the Smolni Institute for Noble Girls, founded by Catherine the Great, provided scholarships for children of war casualties. The book follows Masha through the nine long years of life at Smolni, where the standards of conduct were as rigorous as the curriculum, and where a shy country child had to cope with terrifying visits from the Royal Family, snobbish schoolmates, stern teachers, and complete separation from family and the outside world. . . . Ages eleven to thirteen." (Sat R)

Best Sell 28:422 Ja 1 '69 130w

"So Alcottian in its postures, [this] could have been written a hundred years ago. . . . Like any Alcott heroine, Masha and her classmates are taught needlework and good manners. Other aspects of adolescence are decorously ignored, and when we leave them at seventeen the girls are only bigger, not older, than when we met them at eight. But the book has the Alcott fidelity to its period, and yields the nostalgic, dimity-and-lavender pleasure one finds in re-reading Little Women." D. B. Whitman

Book World p30 (children's issue) N 3 '68 150w

Horn Bk 44:698 D '68 330w

"Stories about the girls boarding schools are no longer the mode, but this one is different. . . . The extraordinary thing is that the reader accepts the rigid discipline just as the heroine comes to do, for its administrators are utterly convincing. It is even possible to accept that the girls are as often happy as frustrated. This is a funny, heart-breaking, sobering and entirely enchanting book." Barbara Willard

New Statesman 75:694 My 24 '68 110w

"The story is saturated with small episodes about dormitory pranks and schoolgirl rivalries, but the characterization is deft and the period details and the setting are interesting." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:69 N 9 '68 150w

TLS p579 Je 6 '68 440w

KAZAKOV, IURII PAVLOVICH. See Kazakov, Y.

KAZAKOV, YURI. Arcturus the hunting hound, and other stories; tr. from the Russian by Anne Terry White; il. by Bradford Holland. 119p $2.95; lib bdg $3.70 Doubleday

68-14186

"Tales of a people whose existence is centered in the forest, river and sea. The setting of the stories is the region east and north of the Ural Mountains and along the Bering Sea." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:114 Je 1 '68 80w

"[These stories] are unmannered and unsophisticated, but not untrue or unwise; childlike but not childish; and the best of them . . . ask and reward deep reflection. Kazakov writes of boys and animals as if he were a combination of both. . . . The best of the five stories is 'Nikishka's Secrets.' If this delicate, fragmentary story of a boy's kinship with discovered nature had been written by Chekhov, as it well might have been, it would be in a dozen anthologies. . . . As always, [A. T. White] demonstrates that translation is a great creative art. . . . Age ten and up." D. B. Whitman

Book World p33 (children's issue) My 5 '68 130w

"[These] stories capture the poetry of earth. Whether it be Arcturus, the blind hunting dog; Teddy, the bear escaped from a circus; Volodya, the city boy nearly drowned while fishing; or Nikishka, the simple eight-year-old boy who traveled miles by horse to visit his father, a fisherman—the lives of men and animals are felt as responses to nature. . . . The Soviet writer suggests Turgenev, in his sympathetic depiction of the subtle relationships that bind men and animals and nature." P. H.

Horn Bk 44:324 Je '68 120w

"[These stories] contain strong characterizations and lean heavily on descriptive detail that thoughtfully reveals the relationship between nature and man. Their reflective style and mature content are not apt to win an immediate audience among young American readers, but those with a degree of literary sophistication will find the stories a rewarding reading experience. . . . Grade eight and up." Doris Solomon

Library J 93:3983 O 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by Robert Ostermann

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 My 1 '68 70w

KAZAMIAS, ANDREAS M. Education and the quest for modernity in Turkey. 304p $6 Univ. of Chicago press

370.9561 Education—Turkey. Turkey—Social conditions 66-20585

Professor of educational policy studies at the University of Wisconsin, the author has divided this work into three parts. "Part I is an historical survey of the educational system in the Ottoman Empire. . . . Part II deals with the development of a national system of education. . . . In Part III, the author deals with the relationships between education, religion and problems of political culture. Further, he discusses the role of the lise (the Turkish counterpart of the American senior high school) in Turkish society and the characteristic values of lise students. A good part of the discussion here is based on empirical surveys which Kazamias carried out recently in Turkey." (Am Soc R) Glossary, Index.

"In very lucid style, Kazamias discusses the different types and functions of schools which existed in the early period of Ottoman history and traces their evolution into modern forms. . . . [This] is an enlightening book written by a cautious social scientist." Baha Abu-Laban

Am Soc R 33:145 F '68 500w

"Kazamias, a competent scholar in comparative education, has produced the first comprehensive study of education and modernization in a Middle Eastern country that combines substantial historical and sociological analysis. . . . [It is] readable and not overly technical. . . . While there are some problems with historical interpretation and sociological method, it provides a very good introduction and context for further inquiry. Besides being useful for courses on Turkey and the Islamic area, the book presents an important case study which will be of value to undergraduates and scholars interested in the processes of educational development and modernization in general."

Choice 4:1294 Ja '68 210w

"Perhaps the most interesting finding of the present study is the discovery that while Turkish students continue to find careers in business unattractive, there has been a sharp increase in their desire for high positions in the technical and free professions (engineering, science, law, and medicine) and a substantial decline in their aspirations for high administrative and military office. Mr. Kazamias does not, however, give an adequate explanation of either the causes of these changing attitudes or their consequences for economic and political development. The most serious omission in this book is the lack of historical or contemporary information on military education in Turkey." E. K. Trimberger

Poi Sci Q 33:502 S '68 380w

KAZANTZAKIS, HELEN. Nikos Kazantzakis: a biography based on his letters; tr. by Amy Mims. 589p il $12 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Kazantzakis, Nikos 68-14840

The author of Zorba the Greek (BRD 1953) had urged his wife to write a book about him. This volume is based on an outline found among his papers after his death. Index.

"Though recognized in most of Europe and China, Nikos Kazantzakis was hardly published in Greece until it was almost too late to matter to him. In this country some of his work has been published, but the general reader has not yet become acquainted with him. If any biography is going to bring Kazantzakis to Americans, this is it. The book is very long, and hardly objective. It badly needs a list of his published works. But it is the kind of book Kazantzakis would have loved." H. J. Cargas

America 119:497 N 16 '68 370w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:150 O '68 30w

KAZANTZAKIS, HELEN—Continued

"Anyone who is concerned with Kazantzakis, Greece or, for that matter, modern literature, will welcome the appearance in English of his widow's biography of him. Not a true biography, it consists merely of a selection of his letters strung together with an anguished commentary. It is not well organized. The translation is indifferent. The editorial notes are inadequate, exasperating and frequently inaccurate. But never mind. . . . These letters of his, like his books, shake with the inner struggle of a 20th-century Odysseus, forever voyaging to new Ithacas of the soul." Edward Fenton
Book World p4 O 27 '68 900w

Reviewed by R. B. Wilhelm
Commonweal 89:449 D 27 '68 700w

"Those who have read the works of the great Greek writer . . . will be delighted by this new volume. . . . Many hundreds of his letters are included in the text and reveal the intensity with which this man lived. Most of the letters were written to his wife while he was on his never-ending travels in various countries. They provide an intimate record of his thinking and feelings throughout the major portion of his creative life and complement his writing in Report to Greco [BRD 1965]. Those who have read his novels will see the same passion and anguish in his letters. . . . This is a moving story of a major modern writer and is highly recommended for libraries both large and small." C. W. Stucki

Library J 93:3127 S 15 '68 140w
Newsweek 72:108 N 11 '68 450w

"[Helen Kazantzakis] crystallizes her husband's many-faceted image through excerpts from his letters and journals and through interlacing commentary of her own, without ever losing sight of the goal to which they were both dedicated. Despite the multitudes of particulars, extending from those in the youthful student's fumbling letters to his parents to her minute account of his death at seventy-four in Germany, she never betrays her husband's attitude toward factual inconsequence. Her commitment to her husband is so total that her voice and his are indistinguishable. . . . A writer herself and an experienced hand at biography, she handles a Herculean task with seeming ease and consummate taste. It seems unlikely that we shall ever have a portrait more definitive." Robert Maurer
Sat R 51:37 O 26 '68 1800w
Time 92:63 D 27 '68 700w

KAZEMZADEH, FIRUZ. Russia and Britain in Persia, 1864-1914; a study in imperialism. 711p $15 Yale univ. press

955 Iran—History

"Russia's advance into Central Asia, and Great Britain's growing concern about the northern boundaries of India brought both into a long-drawn-out duel over Persia. . . . [The author tells the story] from its beginnings in 1864 to its first dissolution after World War I when Imperial Russia was supplanted by the Soviet Union; Britain bowed out of this part of the world, and the Persians themselves established their first strong central government in more than a century." (Library J)

"Kazemzadeh has followed the traditional path . . . ably recounting diplomatic conversations and documents, presenting the behind-the-scenes disputes over policy in both London and St. Petersburg, and occasionally touching on economic rivalries between Britain and Russia. But he largely ignores broader questions of motivation, policy formation, and national strategy with which imaginative diplomatic historians have lately become involved, and treats his subject very much in a vacuum. Nor is he at all concerned with the bearing of events in Persia on the various theories of imperialism, despite the attention this point has long been granted. As the only book we are ever likely to have on its subject, this work nevertheless deserves purchase by all but the smallest academic library."

Choice 5:660 JI '68 160w

"This is the first time that a complete picture has been drawn of the methods by which policies towards Persia (and towards each other) were formulated in both London and St. Petersburg, and steps taken to implement them."

Economist 227:x1 Ap 27 '68 100w

"Professor Kazemzadeh of Yale bases this work upon an impressive array of British, French, and Persian archival material and published documents and books from nearly all of the Western countries involved in Persia in the half-century he covers. . . . This is a work of exhaustive research which will be useful to the scholar and the specialist working in this field."

J. C. Shipman

Library J 93:1149 Mr 15 '68 200w

KEARNEY, JAMES R. Anna Eleanor Roosevelt; the evolution of a reformer. 332p $5.95 Houghton

B or 92 Roosevelt, Eleanor (Roosevelt)
68-12730

This is a study of Mrs. Roosevelt's "development as a social reformer, with emphasis on her role as First Lady from 1933 to 1941. . . . Her earlier life is treated only as it relates to her developing social conscience and political activity." (Library J)

"Basing his study on the Roosevelt Papers at Hyde Park and on Mrs. Roosevelt's own voluminous journalistic output, Kearney writes with sensitive insight about this remarkable woman. Particular attention is given to her role as a newspaper columnist; her influence with F.D.R.; her ability to win friends for the New Deal among Negroes and other minority groups; and her genuine impulse to right injustice and suffering. At the same time, Kearney does not gloss over her weaknesses. . . . Kearney also has some balanced observations about the much discussed 'romance' between F.D.R. and Lucy Mercer Rutherford. A worthwhile book, but librarians on limited budgets may wish to compare it with Eleanor Roosevelt: An American Conscience, by T. K. Hareven [BRD 1968]."

Choice 5:1214 N '68 160w

"[The author] has caustic comments to make about available biographies of Mrs. Roosevelt, but this book will not replace them. As a study of her evolution into a reformer, it appears to be well balanced. . . . Interesting to students of the politics of the 1930's and to well-informed laymen, this book should be in many public libraries and in college, university, and special collections." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 93:1621 Ap 15 '68 210w

KEARNEY, ROBERT N. Communalism and language in the politics of Ceylon. 165p $6.50 Duke univ. press

409.5493 Language and languages. Ceylon—Politics and government 67-28068

This volume "traces in historical perspective the developments relating to political interaction between the Sinhalese majority community and the Tamil minority community of Ceylon, since independence. . . . [It discusses] how issues of language and religion come to play a . . . role in a developing traditional society given the basic tools of a democratic political system." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] work is easy to read and, on the whole, is a welcome addition to the scholarly literature on Ceylonese politics. . . . However, there is some question as to how much of an addition the book really is. . . . [It] suffers considerably from the lack of a conceptual framework of analysis. . . . In his attempt to factor out and report only on the language issue, [Kearney] has neglected to put into perspective the relationship of linguistic identification to ethnic, religious, and/or national identification. . . . Nor is there any answer to be found to such important questions as: What is the relationship of any language to any nationalist movement—and specifically of the Sinhalese language to Sinhalese nationalism? . . . Is it unfair to ask . . . that [the book] add either some further insight or some further information to . . . Howard Wriggins's Ceylon: Dilemmas of a New Nation? [BRD 1961]. As far as this reviewer can determine, it adds none of the former and surprisingly little of the latter." M. R. Singer

Ann Am Acad 378:188 JI '68 450w

"The book, written in a simple, lucid, and easily comprehensible style, is highly recommended for undergraduates and graduates studying politics of South Asia or underdeveloped societies."

Choice 5:682 JI '68 150w

KEATING, H. R. F. Inspector Ghote caught in meshes. 215p $4.50 Dutton

67-20554

"Inspector Ganesh Ghote is . . . faced with the murder of an American who was presumably shot by a gang of highway robbers. . . . The victim, a physicist, was the brother of world-renowned Professor Gregory Strongbow. . . . The tourist bureau assigns an attractive young girl [Shakuntala Brown] to correct the professor's impression of India. . . . [Ghote] is in the middle of proving his theory and that it was planned murder, not robbery, when he is given the special assignment of finding out what secret information the dead man passed on to his brother. The result is much trouble for the inspector." (Publisher's note)

"Here is an imaginative novel filled with action. Its characters, especially the excellent literary creation, Inspector Ghote, are superbly drawn."

Best Sell 27:406 Ja 15 '68 50w

Reviewed by Dick Adler

Book World p14 F 25 '68 150w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:4436 D 1 '67 60w

"[Ghote] is his usual perturbed, lovable, self-doubting, awkwardly heroic self in [this novel, which] . . . is a trifle short on plot for its length: but the color and the suspense sequences are fine—especially a grand siege within a pornographically decorated temple." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p43 F 4 '68 90w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:52 F 24 '68 20w

"Keating's stories of Inspector Ghote of the Bombay C.I.D. steadily improve, and this present one, about apparent dacoity and possible politicking, is very good. Mr. Keating manages to convey a convincing India without falling into patronage, contempt or Indian chauvinism."

TLS p543 Je 15 '67 40w

KEATING, H. R. F. Inspector Ghote hunts the peacock. 224p $4.50 Dutton

68-25767

"Inspector Ganesh Ghote [of the Bombay C.I.D.] is sent to England to deliver a paper at a conference on drug smuggling. He is met at London airport by a . . . relative with a missing niece. Constantly barging into situations completely outside his control, Ghote tries to placate his relative by finding the girl, known as the Peacock. All does not go smoothly at the drug conference, either—yet, in the end, he weaves the threads of a succession of minor failures into the fabric of a double triumph." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 28:211 Ag 15 '68 70w

"Dear, fazed Ghote arrives [in London] . . . brimming with fancies and nostalgia over an England that never was except, perhaps, in the Henty stories for boys. Struggling against disenchantment, Ghote is immediately plunged into a search for his wife's cousin's husband's niece (one of those fine distinctions any Bengali will instantly recognize). The little Inspector goes about unlearning the land he thought he knew, wrapped in a monstrous greatcoat of Indian manufacture and Victorian inspiration. In the course of solving the disappearance, he rediscovers the dignity and grandeur of an England in modern guise. Keating gives us Ghote in three dimensions, each of them unfailingly delightful and wise." A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p12 Ag 18 '68 170w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:3583 O 1 '68 20w

"A fine, mischievous addition to this series, [which includes Inspector Ghote's Good Crusade, BRD 1966]." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p16 Ag 23 '68 90w

"Ghote's pursuit of three suspects which involves his reactions to a London he didn't expect is the book's chief attraction; but detection-wise it signifies little, flashes of intuition ranking fairly low in this field and, indeed, in this particular case, as very much of a last-minute resort."

TLS p380 Ap 11 '68 100w

KEDDIE, NIKKI R. Religion and rebellion in Iran: the tobacco protest of 1891-1892. 163p $6.50 Humanities press

955 Iran—Politics and government [67-77359]

This is "an account of the Tobacco Monopoly, a fifty-year concession granted to an English company for the production, sale, and export of tobacco in all of Iran. At the beginning the author makes the statement that 'the protest against this concession was the first successful mass movement in modern Iranian history, and led to a defeat of the government and triumph of the protesters in their demand for a total cancellation of the concession.' The next 130 pages of the book is an . . . effort to give a detailed explanation of this statement." (Pol Sci Q) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Keddle investigates the origins and course of the tobacco protest movement. . . . The main outlines . . . are well known. . . . [However] the virtue of Keddle's study is to supply much more detail on the protest movement and its ramifications. . . . [Her] principal source is the Foreign Office archives . . . but she also uses to good effect the French Foreign Ministry archives, published materials in Persian and Western languages, and some recent articles in Russian. This book will not have the wide use its research deserves because it is very hard to read. It is cluttered with long quotations, with much discussion of sources, and with a barely relevant excursus on Jamal-ad-Din. The publisher has not helped matters by putting most notes at the end of the chapters." R. H. Davison

Am Hist R 73:555 D '67 430w

Choice 5:850 S '68 140w

"This little study is a useful introduction to Iran's most significant modern historical event—the Constitutional Movement of 1905-11. . . . The study of Persian constitutional history has been badly neglected by scholars of Iranian studies. No comprehensive history has been published on the subject in English since Edward G. Browne wrote his rather personal narrative [Persian Revolution of 1905-1909, BRD 1911]. The present introductory monograph is therefore timely and no doubt will be welcomed by students of Persian history." Hafez Farman-Farmanian

Pol Sci Q 83:167 Mr '68 320w

KEDOURIE, ELIE. Afghani and 'Abduh; an essay on religious unbelief and political activism in modern Islam. 97p $6 Humanities press

297.0922 al-Afghānī, Jamāl al Dīn. Muḥammad 'Abduh. Islam and state 66-19655

The author discusses "two 19th-century Muslims who were prominent both in anticolonialist agitation and—in the case of 'Abduh at least—in religious reform." (Choice)

"A well researched but overly hostile debunking job by a brilliant scholar with an axe to grind. For libraries with highly specialized Middle East collections only. . . . Ninety-seven pages for $6.00!"

Choice 5:250 Ap '68 50w

"Afghani has become one of the posthumous heroes of Arab nationalism, a movement towards which Professor Kedourie has always shown a marked, and no doubt salutary, lack of sentimental enthusiasm. It is safe to say that he will never look quite the same again, but not that he has been altogether discredited. . . . It is as yet too much to say of him—and still more to say of 'Abduh—that the man of religion had feet of clay. In this respect Professor Kedourie writes subjectively and seems more sure than many would be that he possesses the means for measuring a man's inner integrity."

TLS p828 S 8 '66 1250w

KEELING, MICHAEL. Morals in a free society. 157p $3.50 Seabury

241 Christian ethics

68-11557

The author "recognizes that there are many sources of Christian moral judgment, and that there can be no final answers. . . . The specific issues which [he] examines in the light of Christian moral ideas are: criminal law, abortion, euthanasia, marriage and family, homosexuality, work and labor relations, poverty, race, education, politics." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. General index. Index of biblical references.

"If one is interested in what a fairly liberal, but certainly not radical, present-day Church of England clergyman thinks about a host of moral issues, this book will have some value. . . . Those seeking a new contribution to the problems of morals in a free society will be disappointed. [Keeling's] attempt to combine contemporary sociological and psychological insights with theology gives his writing more an air of ambivalence than clarity."

KEELING, MICHAEL—Continued

Choice 5:514 Je '68 180w

Christian Century 85:86 Ja 17 '68 30w

"Each generation must reassess its moral attitudes in the light of new knowledge and technological and social developments. This reassessment is [the author's] purpose in the present book, for failure to correct outmoded assumptions might lead to harm and reverse the Christian intent. . . . [Mr. Keeling is] writing about industrial England, but his ideas are as pertinent to America; comparable United States statistics have been added to the text. Many will find stimulating thoughts in this well-written little book." Jean Deuss

Library J 93:1903 My 1 '68 120w

KEEPNEWS, ORRIN, comp. A pictorial history of jazz; people and places from New Orleans to modern jazz; comp. by Orrin Keepnews and Bill Grauer, Jr; text and captions by Orrin Keepnews; new ed. rev. by Orrin Keepnews. 297p $5.95 Crown

781.5 Jazz music. Musicians—Portraits

66-4300

The compilers have tried to bring this volume up to date "by the inclusion of developments and personalities of the ten years that have passed since A Pictorial History of Jazz was first published [BRD 1956]. This revised edition also contains over 200 new photographs." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The first edition has become a classic. Consequently, revisions will be critically scrutinized by aficionados. In the first 200 pages, the major changes are a considerable juggling of the material on blues singers and substitution of more flattering pictures of some of the leading jazz people. . . . There are a few questionable additions. . . . The New York Dixieland people are switched back and forth, leaving out duplications of one or two figures and adding some excellent shots of Teagarden and Bud Freeman. Similar changes are found in the section on the Dixieland revivalists. From the 'hop' period on, the changes are numerous and good. Chapter 20 is almost entirely new and current. The prose is about as before, varying from mere identifying captions to occasional snatches of first-rate writing, typified by the warmly sensitive word portrait of Bix Beiderbecke."

Choice 4:1390 F '68 210w

"Comparing this revision with its 1955 original shows that editor Keepnews has made limited but worthwhile changes of emphasis. . . . The 1955 book gave very slight notice to Miles Davis, Horace Silver, John Lewis and Charles Mingus; this fault has been corrected. But the 1966 volume seems equally several years behind the times: Archie Shepp and Albert Ayler are mentioned but where are Herbie Hancock, Anthony Williams, John Handy, Grachan Moncur III and Bobby Hutcherson? Reproductions of photos on uncoated stock remain murky, but this revision is essential to libraries in the field. The original should be kept as well." Collin Clark

Library J 91:3734 Ag '66 130w

KEETON, ROBERT E. After cars crash: the need for legal and insurance reform [by] Robert E. Keeton [and] Jeffrey O'Connell. 156p $4.95 Dow Jones-Irwin

368 Insurance, Automobile

67-23772

A popular version of the authors' Basic Protection for the Traffic Victim "which discusses present methods of insuring and compensating for automobile injuries and which offers detailed proposals for reform. Part 1 tells the story of an imaginary Jim Crane after he is involved in an automobile accident and seeks to recover for his injuries; delay, uncertainty, high legal fees, etc. Part 2 presents the case of Jim Crane as it might have been under the 'Basic Protection Plan' which pays the victim without regard to proof or fault. Part 3 discusses some related problems including the underwriting and marketing of insurance." (Choice) Index.

"[This book is based on] a controversial and widely debated book. . . . Likely to be widely read by those interested in a popular treatment of the subject. . . . Appendix includes an outline of the proposed plan for reform of the automobile insurance system."

Choice 5:234 Ap '68 200w

"This book was written for two reasons: to show how archaic and unjust many of our automobile insurance practices are, and to present a plan, called Basic Protection Insurance, that would remedy many abuses and initiate nation-wide reforms. . . . [The authors] present their case for reform in a lucid, understandable fashion. A much needed book, it is one for all public libraries." Frederick Davenport

Library J 92:3051 S 15 '67 200w

KELLEN, BETTY. Gautama Buddha in life and legend. 192p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.70 Lothrop

294.3 Buddha and Buddhism—Juvenile literature 67-22598

The author presents a "portrait of a rather spoiled young aristocrat who became a great religious teacher through suffering and the desire to find answers to the most basic questions of human existence." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Age twelve and up." (N Y Times Bk R)

"This account is worthwhile because it affords students an insight into a culture and religion which is too obscure and distant for many. A bibliography and index make this reference material for Junior and Senior High School."

Best Sell 27:362 D 1 '67 90w [YA]

"In an unusually smooth blend of legend and fact (neither ever confused with the other), Mrs. Kelen writes a perceptive, occasionally wry, always interesting biography of the founder of Buddhism. . . . The first section of the book is based on a poetic Sanskrit account, but all later events and conversations follow those given in the Pali Canon. Through the liberal use of . . . anecdotes, the Buddha emerges as a three-dimensional human being. . . . The teachings of Buddhism, its place within the Hindu tradition, and its so-called atheism are all clearly explained, and the bibliography lists excellent adult works for further reading." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:306 Ja 15 '68 220w

"The rare achievement of this book is not just the interest and charm of the material or the scholarship with which it is handled, or even the warmth and grace of the writing, but the tone and attitude maintained by the author in dealing with serious, therefore difficult, religious questions. Thus Mrs. Kelen manages to be sympathetic and respectful toward the Buddhist sacred writings without surrendering objectivity. The result is a book to enrich the mind and the spirit as well." Richard Horchler

N Y Times Bk ■ p26 Ja. 14 '68 160w

KELLEN, EMERY. Stamps tell the story of the United Nations. 95p il $3.95 Meredith

383.2 United Nations—Juvenile literature.

Postage stamps—Juvenile literature 68-13300

"The history of the United Nations—its founding, charter, offices and work—is described and pictured in nearly 80 enlarged black-and-white illustrations of UN stamps. One stamp appears on each page, with a brief explanation of the occasion for the stamp's issue or a description of the function it honors. . . . The main color of each stamp together with the name of its designer and his country is given. . . . Grade five and up." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:442 Ag '68 40w

"The care exercised in the choice of designs and the use of internationally significant and understood symbols is well explained. . . . Since the UN is the sole international body to issue its own postage stamps, it is useful to have its stamps covered in a single volume, rather than as part of a general work on stamps. This is also a good gift item for collectors to all ages." Jeraline Nerney

Library J 93:2734 Jl '68 130w

KELLAWAY, GEORGE P. Education for living. 151p $4; pa $2.25 Cambridge

370.1 Educational sociology. Educational psychology 167-10058

The author suggests "that education should serve as a means of passing on to a child 'all that is required to fit him for a full place in society.' . . . He contends that in order to achieve this goal the 'teacher must know his children individually and understand the society in which they are working.' . . . An appendix offers a series of topics for discussion and essays." (Choice) Index.

"A large part of the book is devoted to the rather shaky assumption that human behavior is largely instinctive. In general, the book suffers from overgeneralization and underdocumentation. . . . [It] falls far short of the criteria for a scholarly manuscript. . . . Because of its brevity, the book could be used to augment an undergraduate course in educational psychology or child growth and development."

Choice 4:1424 F '68 240w

"[This book] bears all the marks of the kind of dreary detailing of abstractions which is characteristic of some books on education. . . . In summary form, it iterates a series of observations of a trite and tedious nature. Such general books seem to be of limited value to intending or practising teachers, and provide none of the texture of life inside a school, or of an understanding of the place of the school in society."

TLS p622 J1 13 '67 260w

KELLER, MORTON. The art and politics of Thomas Nast. 353p il $12.50 Oxford

741.5 Cartoons and caricatures. Nast, Thomas 68-19762

The author, "a historian at Brandeis University, has assembled 241 of Nast's cartoons, grouping them topically. . . . Keller provides an introductory essay for each major division of his work. The essays place the cartoons in their political context, giving as well a brief narrative of the period 1862-1885." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography.

Christian Century 85:622 My 8 '68 30w

"For reasons of both strength and weakness—the visual strength of his images; the weaknesses of our own society—cartoonist Thomas Nast still speaks to this day. . . . The divisive and embittered feelings of the 1870's . . . too often seem to predict the State of the Nation 1970 as well. Indeed, Nast's cartoons showing the caricatured excesses of black-white relationships are the only ones sadly that need no copious footnotes or explanations today. . . . Methodically and tellingly Mr. Keller traces the history of the era as it sets itself up in scenarios for Nast's pen: the varying issues (an open society, temperance, 'bumptious nationalism'), the evolving style (the introduction of caricature through the suggestive face of President Andrew Johnson; the technical responses, etc.); and the power of journalists as a whole. Unfortunately, though supposedly studying the 'art and politics,' Mr. Keller rests his case on a single leg of the tripod of art, political environment, and personality. . . . And [he] never glimpses the man behind the work." J. H. Kay

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 13 '68 800w

Reviewed by Gerald Weales

Commonweal 88:573 Ag 23 '68 1100w

"[The author] writes extremely well, is always objective about his subject, and provides a clear, concise portrait of social and political conditions of the Gilded Age. The book is recommended for journalism, art, and history collections." Bill Katz

Library J 93:2644 J1 '68 150w

"America's foremost political cartoonist, Thomas Nast (1840-1902), is most widely known for his forceful caricatures that helped lead to the fall of New York City's notorious Tweed Ring in 1871. . . . A few errors have crept into this otherwise handsome publication. . . . The title promises somewhat more than the book delivers. Although Keller opens the work with a useful discussion of political cartoons as an art form within Western European culture, he does not devote as much attention to Nast's own artistic development prior to joining Harper's in 1862. This is, however, a minor cavil. Keller's valuable book contributes to our understanding both of the breadth of Nast's work and of a relatively neglected period of our political history." D. R. B. Ross

N Y Times Bk R p7 My 19 '68 300w

Va Q R 44:clxxviii autumn '68 200w

KELLER, MORTON, comp. Theodore Roosevelt; a profile. 194p $5.95 Hill & Wang

B or 92 Roosevelt, Theodore 67-26854

"The selections in this anthology were taken by Mr. Keller from books of ten different authors—William Allen White, John Blum, Stuart Sherman, H. L. Mencken, Hamilton Basso, John Chamberlain, Louis Filler, Dixon Wecter, Richard Hofstadter, and Howard K. Beale—books that were published between 1920 and 1956." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Keller contributes a brief introduction that surveys T. R.'s changing historical reputation. Most of the excerpts are well known to the specialist and are from works available in most college libraries. The volume may have limited value as supplementary reading for undergraduates; but they would do better simply to read Blum's The Republican Roosevelt [BRD 1954]."

Choice 5:257 Ap '68 200w

"The selections range from Mencken's acidulous, 'Roosevelt I,' to Beale's adulatory 'Theodore Roosevelt and the Rise of America to World Power.' None of the selections was written during the lifetime of Roosevelt. . . . A nicely done book that will be wanted by libraries having extensive holdings in American history and biography." P. E. Edlund

Library J 92:3632 O 15 '67 100w

KELLETT, RICHARD. The merchant banking arena; with case-studies. 182p $6 St Martins

332.1 Banks and banking—Great Britain 67-13166

A history of five London merchant banks, from their origins to the present, containing an "analysis of their evolution and account of their activities." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[Kellett] has drawn on the scholarly literature, public documents, and bank reports, and his treatment also reflects a firsthand knowledge of the industry. . . . [However, he] tends to elaborate on details without much attention to the broader historical and economic setting. Consequently, the book is of limited value to either historians or economists. Students with a special interest in financial intermediaries may find it more relevant. They can find out who is who among merchant bankers. They will even discover in which banks bowler hats are still in style. They can learn something about what these banks do, even though they will not find any analysis of decision-making processes. The style and content of the book reflect the author's experience as a financial columnist." G. V. Rimlinger

Am Hist R 73:1537 Je '68 500w

"[Kellett has] turned up many interesting bits of information, but his organization is diffuse rather than systematic. The merchant bankers of England—roughly the equivalent of American investment bankers—played an important role in the development of London as the world's financial center of the 19th century. Since 1914 they are less important and more diverse. R. Hidy in The House of Baring in American Trade and Finance [BRD 1950] covers less ground but goes much more deeply into the subject."

Choice 5:530 Je '68 100w

TLS p755 J1 18 '68 320w

KELLOGG, CHARLES FLINT. NAACP; a history of the National association for the advancement of colored people; 2v; v 1, 1909-1920. 332p il $8.75 Johns Hopkins press

301.451 National Association for the Advancement of Colored People 66-28507

"In this account . . . Professor Kellogg, of Dickinson College, has used the reports of the Association, the personal papers of personalities involved, and the publications of the period." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This study of the early years of the NAACP, the first of two volumes, supersedes for its period all of the earlier studies of the organization, as well as the egocentric memoirs of several founders. . . . Faults of the book stem from the nature of institutional history and from isolation from other historians of the Negro. . . . If [Kellogg] had consulted other Negro historical literature, particularly in the journals, his treatment of some controversial topics would have been more authoritative and balanced. . . . Though far from flawless in conception and execution, this will be one of the bigger monuments in the current reconstruction of Negro history." L. R. Harlan

KELLOGG, C. F.—Continued

Am Hist R 73:615 D '67 550w

Reviewed by George Osborn
Ann Am Acad 337:207 My '68 600w

"A thoroughly researched, carefully documented, sober narrative, solidly grounded in a wealth of manuscript material. Although he does not bring alive the spirit and commitment powering the nascent Negro-rights movement, [the author] presents a balanced, credible picture of leaders like Du Bois and Oswald Garrison Villard; and he clearly depicts substantive issues confronting the organization. . . . This book incorporates a storehouse of valuable information. But its emphasis on narrative detail is often at the expense of analytic insight. . . . Moreover, [Kellogg's] consideration of the 'new abolitionism' needs anchoring within the historical context of the Progressive era." N. J. Weiss
J Am Hist 54:696 D '67 370w

"Despite the great detail in this well-documented story and Professor Kellogg's restrained manner, it is often gripping. Professor Kellogg makes it quite evident that dissension among leaders, the question of the role of the white liberal, and even involvement in questions of international peace . . . are not new to the movement for Negro betterment. The illustrations following the text might have been more effective had they been integrated with it. There is a good index." J. M. Elrod
Library J 92:2567 J1 '67 140w

Reviewed by Louis Ruchames
Nation 207:315 S 30 '68 1300w

KELLOGG, MARJORIE. Tell me that you love me, Junie Moon. 216p $4.95 Farrar, Straus 68-24600

A first novel "about three characters, Warren, Arthur and Junie, who set up platonic housekeeping together, squabble amiably, seek work, vacation at the seashore and, in various ways, find love. . . . Warren is a paraplegic, Arthur a near-spastic and Junie a hideously deformed victim of an acid attack." (Time)

Reviewed by T. A. Dowling
America 120:27 Ja 4 '69 280w

Reviewed by M. F. O'C. Moriarty
Best Sell 28:334 N 15 '68 420w

Reviewed by Lucy Rosenthal
Book World p8 N 10 '68 650w

Reviewed by Richard Staub
Commonweal 89:131 O 25 '68 550w

Reviewed by J. M. Hoagland
Library J 93:4579 D 1 '68 190w

"Far better—more original, literate and deeply felt—than most novels being written today, but not, by any means, the masterpiece some reviewers have called it. Written in a tight, overly controlled style, this first novel is very affecting, but a bit too 'well-crafted.' . . . What's annoying about [it] is its craftsmanship. [It] is, in effect, a well-made play, replete with easy motivations, tidy psychological summations and mechanically developed details. Each character is assigned one, and only one, traumatic memory that governs all his behavior. . . . Miss Kellogg is also unable to leave a single detail alone. If she mentions an owl early in the book, she feels obliged to turn the poor bird into a motif, and again and again to return to it, as though she had taken too literally Chekhov's advice never to describe a gun on the wall unless it was going to be fired by the end of the story. There are guns and there are guns; surely Chekhov didn't mean for the roar of light artillery to drown out the sound of fire." Edmund White
New Repub 159:38 N 23 '68 900w

"By almost any criteria that I can think of, this rare little novel is going to deserve considerable praise and admiration and will, I hope, receive it. . . . The book is beautiful and will be remembered, I believe, not because of its eery details and assorted oddities but because it is simple, truthful and consoling. There are pain, compassion and understanding in this writing. It is a very gentle-spirited, small and special novel." Jonathan Kozol
N Y Times Bk R p4 O 6 '68 800w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:73 N 9 '68 80w

"[The author's] characterizations are neither bathetic nor sensationalized. Whenever the book begins to soften into sentimentality, which is a little too often, she flashes a cauterizing wit. She also resists the temptation to moralize. The common humanity of her people reveals itself indirectly, through their power to stir other lonely beings whose disfigurements are merely emotional. . . . [However] the ending is too pat. But Miss Kellogg displays an easy, lightly satirical command of the hospital-medical milieu, as befits a professional therapist. . . . And, perhaps most promising of all, she writes with a crispness and economy that is all too rare in any novel—first, last or in between."

Time 92:110 O 11 '68 300w

KELLOGG, RHODA. The psychology of children's art, by Rhoda Kellogg with Scott O'Dell. 109p col il $10 CRM; for sale by Random house

704.9 Children as artists. Art—Psychology
67-31963

"The authors state: 'All children everywhere draw the same things in the same way at the same age.' They then trace the development of children's perceptions, from age 2 to age 7, through the use of scribble patterns, outlines, shapes, and symbols." (Library J)

"A superb text for public school art teachers, teacher trainees, and interested parents."
Choice 4:1322 Ja '68 200w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:310 My 24 '68 40w
Horn Bk 44:200 Ap '68 300w

"Rhoda Kellogg, nursery-school educator and children's art collector in San Francisco, and Scott O'Dell, author of Island of the Blue Dolphins [BRD 1960], combined their abilities to produce this extremely attractive book. . . . [Its] particular contribution to the field are its numerous illustrations, all in dazzling color. The authors do not give technical information on media or detailed analysis; their purpose is to make adults aware of the pattern of development and the beauty of children's art. Appropriate for education classes and art sections in public libraries." Delores McColm
Library J 93:89 Ja 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Janet Malcolm
New Yorker 43:185 D 16 '67 350w

KELLY, LAWRENCE C. The Navajo Indians and federal Indian policy, 1900-1935. 221p maps $7.50 Univ. of Ariz. press

970.5 Navaho Indians. Indians of North America—Government relations 66-27381

"This is the story of the design and implementation of a federal policy concerning [the Navajos] in a critical period of their history. . . . After an introductory chapter sketching Navajo history and culture, Kelly discusses the expansion of the reservation, the oil boom of the early 1920s, and the experience of the Navajos under three commissioners of Indian affairs, Charles H. Burke, Charles J. Rhoads, and John Collier." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"How did Federal legislation affect the Navajo? How did the Diné react to the legislation? Therein lies the essence of Kelly's well researched volume. Much is made of the Dawes Act, the accretions made to the Navajo reservation by executive orders, and the various laws relating to mineral resources. . . . Interwoven in the fabric are the role of the oil companies, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the personalities who helped to make Indian policy. . . . Neophytes will welcome especially the discussion of the 'New Policy' ushered in under Cato Sells in 1917 and the report of the Meriam Commission. . . . An epilogue brings the Navajo case well into the 1950's."

Choice 5:362 S '68 140w

"Kelly views developments principally from the Washington angle, and there is relatively little on the Navajo reaction. One does get a detailed and credible account, in prosaic tones, of the complex factors and forces which shape Indian policy. . . . Kelly's evaluation of the Indian policies of Commissioners Burke, Rhoads, and Collier is searching but fair. . . . Although the Navajos are rather shadowy figures in most of this book, what federal policies meant to them is best seen in the section on education and health. Here Kelly almost waxes eloquent in denouncing policies . . . which placed Navajo children in boarding schools far from their parents, if they provided education for them at all. . . . Kelly is to be congratulated on a well-researched, analytical study." W. T. Hagan

J Am Hist 55:420 S '68 650w

"The main focus . . . is federal Indian policy as it affected the Navajos, but the issues apply to all Indian tribes. . . . [This] book is a valuable addition to the literature of the Navajos and of the New Deal and is recommended for subject collections." H. E. Smith
Library J 93:3135 S 15 '68 110w

KELLY, ROBERT. The scorpions. 188p $3.95
Doubleday 66-20978

"The [narrator and] protagonist of this . . . first novel is a . . . New York psychiatrist, but its hero is Kelvin, his Ur-Rolls-Royce. . . . Together he and his owner set out for Fort Lauderdale in quest of the Scorpion people, who may or may not be an optical illusion. Their journey becomes a fantasy peculiar to . . . the Marquis de Sade." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by J. J. Murray
Best Sell 26:397 F 1 '67 500w

"The best features of [this book] are its (Lolita inspired?) dissection of the U.S. motel-gas station-eatery society, and its spoof of the big-time psychiatrist. . . . The Scorpions of the title are weak stuff as the core of a novel . . . [and the] rather pretentious (and unresolved) ending leaves a flat taste."
Choice 4:830 O '67 90w

"Kelly is writing from the point of view of the destroyer rather than the destroyed, and gives us an uncomfortable picture of the will to smash, rather than the will to resist destruction. . . . [The narrator of this novel] has his own religion, a kind of perpetual and puerile Black Mass concocted of astrology, psychoanalysis, bump-reading, and other trash. . . . [The book is] a picaresque adventure that reads like nothing so much as vintage Ellery Queen, with some advanced James Bond to bring it up to date. What this is all about is a matter of squinting at half-meanings and innuendo. It seems to be a poet's way of saying that an inhuman force has been let loose into the world, a subtle brutalization the symptoms of which are everywhere in gratuitous violence, whether of juvenile delinquents or governments or Hell's Angels or the bored gluttony of the LSD cranks. . . . Mr Kelly offers an entertaining yarn nevertheless." Guy Davenport
Nat R 19:207 F 21 '67 380w

"Much the better half of the author's lively, engrossing, and erudite first novel lies in the beginning when he is preoccupied by his central character, a fastidious, rich, egocentric psychiatrist in New York City, whose professional services come high and his erotic tastes low. An insidiously dry sense of humor keeps the narrative within tolerance for all its nonsense about an automobile out of science fiction, its occultism, predisposition toward obscure languages out of the writer's imagination, its concern with astrology, cabalistic gimcracks, and above all its pagan orgies described in such meticulous detail. In the second half interest flags as the author's ingenuity falters, until it grinds to a completely indeterminate end reminiscent of Joyce, but without rationale."
Va Q R 43:lvi spring '67 110w

KELSO, LOUIS O. How to turn eighty million workers into capitalists on borrowed money [by] Louis O. Kelso and Patricia Hetter. 198p $4.95 Random house
330.15 Capitalism. Finance—U.S. U.S.—Economic policy 67-22635

The authors' premise is that capital and not labor is the source of affluence in an industrial society. They suggest the adoption of a Second Income Plan which would provide industry "with the techniques for financing its large expansion of the future, while protecting and greatly strengthening the private ownership of existing capital against further redistributive erosion, at the same time [enabling] employees, through stock-bonus or profit-sharing plans, to acquire equities issued in the course of building the new economy, which would be paid for out of income produced by the resulting new physical capital." (Sat R) Bibliography.

Reviewed by D. E. Thompson
Library J 92:4499 D 15 '67 200w

"The proposals set forth in this concise, mind-stretching book will strike the economic establishment as revolutionary and even impossible—but are they? The scheme projected here . . . is not expected to be implemented overnight. . . . Kelso, a specialist in corporate finance and co-author of The Capitalist Manifesto [BRD 1958] and The New Capitalists [BRD 1961] has collaborated with a director of the Institute for the Study of Economic Systems in San Francisco in an effort to point up the weaknesses of the Keynesian philosophy, which since the 1930s has dominated economic thought and direction in the United States. More importantly, they present the alternative theory of universal capitalism. . . . An objective of the Second Income Plan is to create an economy that would have several times the per capita productive power of the present one. . . . The ways and means to build this new concept . . . described in detail in chapters 16 and 17 . . . makes interesting and stimulating reading. A revealing section of the book deals with the noneconomic employment of people." S. W. Clements
Sat R 51:25 Ap 6 '68 1600w

KELVIN, NORMAN. E. M. Forster; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 196p $4.95 Southern Ill. univ. press
823 Forster, Edward Morgan 67-10282
A new study of the English novelist.

"A dozen or so monograph studies of Forster's work have appeared. . . . The worst is undoubtedly this . . . ground out to order for its series like so much sausage, without a shred of news and in uncommonly bad prose."
Choice 5:195 Ap '68 140w

"Forsterian charm has its problems. Nevertheless, its operation and effects are important because it is so intimately involved with his authorial presence. One of the defects of books like Norman Kelvin's is that you could read it from cover without ever guessing that his subject was a delightful man." Stephen Wall
New Statesman 76:87 Jl 19 '68 400w

KEMP, BETTY. Sir Francis Dashwood: an eighteenth-century independent. 209p pl $8.50 St Martins

B or 92 Le Despencer, Francis Dashwood, 15th Baron. Great Britain—Politics and government. Book of common prayer—History 67-10578

A biography which attempts a reassessment of the life of a "politician, patron and promoter of the arts, active member of the leading societies of 18th-century England, [who,] . . . in conjunction with Benjamin Franklin, revised the Book of Common Prayer." (Choice) Index.

"A sober account of the life and achievements of 'Hell Fire Francis.' . . . The unsavory reputation of the group which met on his property at Medmenham is claimed to be the invention of Wilkes and Charles Churchill, inveterate political opponents of a man who, whether in or out of office, remained consistently all his life a political independent in thought and act. The book is detailed, clearly if somewhat ploddingly written, and carries conviction. . . . Will become the standard study of an important, if minor, figure in English politics."
Choice 4:1165 D '67 120w

"Miss Kemp has brought to her task remarkable and rigorous erudition, which is most impressive. [The footnotes] are a mine of information about political and social byways of eighteenth century life. . . . There is no doubt that Dashwood emerges from her pages a more solid and significant figure than the fribble of legend, and in particular the description of his early years in opposition is of much interest. Even so, there must remain some doubt whether Miss Kemp does not push his claim too hard. . . . The book has two other drawbacks. Miss Kemp has dealt in separate sections with Dashwood's political life, his activities as a connoisseur and with his work on the abridgment of the prayerbook. The outcome is a certain amount of confusion and overlap in the narrative. And, lastly, if in the book Dashwood has been made respectable, he has become irremediably dull."

Economist 222:834 Mr 4 '67 400w

Reviewed by I. R. Christie
Engl Hist R 83:618 Jl '68 400w

Reviewed by A. J. P. Taylor
New Statesman 73:52 Ja 13 '67 500w
TLS p122 F 16 '67 750w

KEMPE, C. HENRY, jr. ed. Battered child. See Helfer, R. E.

KENEALLY, THOMAS. Bring larks and heroes. 247p $4.95 Viking 68-92229

"'Lover, poet, scholar by the standards of his day, and soldier-by-accident, Corporal Halloran of the British Army, posted to a remote penal colony, finds himself confronted with some strange and often brutal realities. He must face up to the heart-breaking needs of his girl, [Ann], the challenge of his countrymen, mainly Irish—both heroes and blackguards—at odds with this alien world; the discipline of his superior officers; and the commands of his own conscience. . . . The drama turns on the secret possibility of an escape by privateer and a . . . violent prisoners' revolt.'" (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 60w

"Who is God? Does God exist? Is God interested in man? These are questions raised throughout. . . . Running through this book is also a sense of the grotesque and corrupt. . . . Clearly Mr. Keneally has attempted here something more than casual entertainment. . . . One questions, though, its purpose—as a work of social protest it is two centuries late. . . . The idiom of the whole is strictly that of the 20th century. Only plot details peculiar to the 18th century belong to that era historically; as far as language goes, the time of the story could be 1968. A new Australian author, . . . Mr. Keneally has a talent. But . . . talented though he is, Mr. Keneally is scarcely the Australian James Joyce." J. S. Phillipson
Best Sell 28:159 J1 15 '68 850w

"This novel with a somewhat obscure setting—a penal colony (Sydney, Australia?) in the late 18th Century—leans heavily on rapid-fire conversation and pithy descriptions for its somewhat limited holding power. . . . [It] is an appropriate purchase for large libraries adding out-of-the-ordinary fiction." Clarence Gorchels

Library J 93:2259 Je 1 '68 90w

"By Keneally's fictional talent, all is made vivid as fresh blood; . . . we learn in the course of this cruel narrative that a sentence of death by torture (500 lashes of the cat-o'-nine-tails amounted to just that) could be handed out by a kangaroo court of Marine officers as casually as a parking fine would be imposed today. . . . The story's hero is given what might be called Eichmann's choice: do evil for duty's sake or rebel. . . . Inevitably, his girl hangs, and he hangs. It is as economical, as predestined as that. The last paragraph is visible from the first page. Readers wary of the plush language of the 'gadzoos, hussy!' school may be suspicious of the special idiom of Bring Larks. But there is no Errol Flimflam here. Keneally has devised a garbled-Gaelic speech that seems perfectly to fit the character of his protagonist who, like another gifted innocent, Billy Budd, speaks with the tongue of men and angels. . . . This is a high-pitched book, but not only to Australians will the pitch ring true. What Keneally is saying is that out of man's appalling origins, grace and art will come, through courage. His story is as lovely and as spare as a falcon stooping."

Time 92:68 Ag 16 '68 500w

KENISTON, KENNETH. Young radicals; notes on committed youth. 368p $5.95; pa $1.95 Harcourt

301.43 Youth—U.S.—Political activity, Radicals and radicalism 68-23578

The author of The Uncommitted (BRD 1965, 1966), which was a study of alienated youth, now focuses on "a number of young people who worked from June to September, 1957, for Vietnam Summer, an organization opposing American involvement in Southeast Asia. The focus of the book is on the psychological development of these young men and women and on the impact upon them of their experiences in the New Left." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[Keniston's] 'sample' is limited. . . . His observations are based on his discussions with only 14 activists, twenty-three years old on the average, all white and all but three of them men. None of them has known poverty; none came from the ghettos. . . . Obviously, also, Keniston was . . . predisposed favorably. Yet his rigorously appreciative interpretation . . . is his most valuable contribution to his subject. . . . On one important matter, Keniston, while prolix, is opaque. All the young radicals he interviewed, he says, are psychologically non-violent. . . . On the other hand, Keniston could hardly deny, and does not, that the New Left has taken a turn toward disruption and resistance and that this implies an increasing tolerance for, or will for, violence. He does not seem to have pressed his subjects on this decisive issue. . . . Yet Keniston has done us old birds a service. He has talked at length with young radicals who trust him and told us what they said and what he makes of them."

Ronnie Dugger

Book World p3 Ag 4 '68 1150w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster
Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 22 '68 320w

Reviewed by Walter Goodman
Commentary 46:95 S '68 1500w

Reviewed by A. M. Greeley
Critic 27:87 O '68 650w

"Not representative of all dissenters, the young people studied here are the voice of youth dissatisfied with society and seeking revolutionary changes. This exceptionally readable book will be of permanent value and wide appeal in public and college libraries." A. S. Meyers

Library J 93:2510 Je 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Anne Kincaid
Library J 93:3996 O 15 '68 150w [YA]

Reviewed by P. Ardery
Nat R 20:759 J1 30 '68 220w

"[It is] fascinating to find a youngish professor of psychology in the Department of Psychiatry at the Yale Medical School, whose academic credentials are impeccable, bearing witness, almost against his will, to the fact that the attitudes of many young radicals are evidences not of counter-revolutionary obsolescence and maladjustment, but of a highly developed sense of moral responsibility. . . . Keniston takes the psychological alienation of the American college student seriously, but . . . goes so far as to suggest that 'alienation, as I have studied it, and the current phenomenon of student protest seem to me two quite distinct, if not opposed, phenomena.' . . . As Keniston puts it, . . . the young radicals 'seek an orientation to the future' that recognizes how the adoption of dehumanizing and destructive means can turn professors of the noblest ends into monsters. . . . [I am] impressed by what Keniston . . . refers to as the search for . . . 'new concepts of man and society.'" H. D. Aiken

N Y Rev of Books 11:30 J1 11 '68 4000w

Reviewed by S. V. Roberts
N Y Times Bk R p2 My 19 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Peter Lomas
Science 161:773 Ag 23 '68 1400w

"[This book] is unusually clear and free of psychological jargon. In trying to understand the development of a radical personality, the author begins by examining the 'red-diaper baby' and the 'radical-rebel' theories, and finds both inadequate. From these hypotheses he moves to a broader interpretation of the forces which combine to produce the particular set of radical-personality traits. . . . If the book has a serious flaw, it is that Keniston under-emphasizes the importance of actual social conditions in America as an explanation of the new radicals. . . . Nonetheless, [he] gives about the best available definition of the ideology of the New Left. . . . [The book's] greatest usefulness in the long run may be as an historical analysis of a particular faction of a larger movement."

Yale R 58:XXXVIII O '68 800w

KENNAN, GEORGE F. Democracy and the student left, by George F. Kennan and students and teachers from: Barnard [and other colleges]. 239p $5.75 Little

378.1 Students—U.S.—Political activity, Right and left (Political science) 68-30875

The New York Times Magazine of January 21, 1968, contained an article entitled Rebels Without a Program, based on a speech which George Kennan had delivered at the dedication of a new library at Swarthmore College. In this book, "letters of response from the campus and the older generation are sandwiched between the original article and Kennan's reply. It was Kennan's charge that students involved in violent campus rebellions are shallow, immature, dangerously undemocratic and blindly anti-without constructive programs of their own. Largely the responses from students attack Kennan for fuzzy-mindedness, Puritanism and a failure to grasp the pressures of time that motivate the young. Letters from the older generation (many of them professors) disagree strongly with Kennan's views on civil disobedience." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by G. C. Keller
Book World p6 O 13 '68 1750w
Christian Century 85:1220 S 25 '68 50w

Reviewed by Florence Casey
Christian Science Monitor p5 D 26 '68 320w

Reviewed by Norman Podhoretz
Harper 237:104 O '68 1900w

"This is a lucid and timely statement of the issues involved in the current student confrontation on American college campuses of the establishment and the new student radicals. . . . [Kennan] acknowledges the massive errors of the powers that be—on Vietnam, civil rights, ad nauseam—but sees no justification therein for a constant 'state of being enraged.' The other participants in this unplanned dialogue . . . are lucid in their expositions of their views, if not necessarily persuasive. Altogether this is a valuable presentation, both of the 'embittered pseudo-revolutionary nihilism' (Kennan's phrase) of the student activists, and of the 'stagnation, complacency' (student's description) of much of academe in America today. A necessary purchase for academic libraries, and useful for large public libraries." E. M. Oboler

Library J 93:2992 S 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Vincent Miller
Nat R 20:1119 N 5 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Alasdair MacIntyre
New Statesman 76:713 N 22 '68 400w

"Unlike student radicals, Mr. Kennan is a Calvinist, a puritan, a pessimist and a temperamental conservative. His sense of priorities ultimately harkens back to an image of an older, small-town America. . . . As their letters make clear, the students whom Mr. Kennan criticizes are too young ever to have known that world, or even to be able to understand it. . . . In the end, then, there is no meeting of minds . . . but rather a restatement of basically opposed positions. . . . What is poignant about this confrontation is that Mr. Kennan emerges from it as no less a 'victim' of modern history than are the students he criticizes." Kenneth Keniston

N Y Times Bk R p10 S 29 '68 1200w

"Judging by the intellectual quality of [the students'] letters, Princeton historian-playwright Martin Duberman, who is one of the 'older generation' correspondents (W. H. Auden is another), is scarcely exaggerating when he calls these students the 'best generation our country has yet produced.' Although it is unlikely to change many of their minds, Kennan's closely reasoned, meticulously argued elaboration of his position amounts to the most trenchant defense of classical liberalism in the current controversy between radicals and liberals. . . . Unhappily from the students' point of view Kennan's arguments simply will not do . . . because they do not even remotely apply to the most clamorous of contemporary realities. . . . The arguments on both sides are far from exhaustive, but for readers of goodwill who have been mystified by the seething on campus, they offer an ample and disturbing introduction to some of the tensions, and with school days upon us again let everyone take heed." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 72:104D S 23 '68 650w

KENNAN, GEORGE F. From Prague after Munich; diplomatic papers, 1938-1940. 266p pl maps $6.50 Princeton univ. press

943.7 Czechoslovak Republic—History—Sources. Munich four-power agreement, 1938-. Jews in the Czechoslovak Republic 66-26587

"Written 30 years ago when [the author] was a young diplomat, this is the story of his . . . reports to the Department of State, and entries in his diary, on the fall of Czechoslovakia to Nazi Germany, and of the first 18 months under the heel of the German Protectorate." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by B. D. Williams
Best Sell 28:115 Je 1 '68 360w
Choice 5:856 S '68 120w
Economist 228:45 Ag 31 '68 700w

"Whenever George Kennan writes a book, he commands attention: two Pulitzer prizes and a National Book Award put him in a class by himself. Now he has produced a book with little fanfare but great effect. . . . These are important recollections, dated as they may seem, because they break new ground. Writing objectively and expertly in 36 reports, letters, memos and dispatches, Kennan details the tragic dissolution of the Czechoslovak Republic and the German occupation with its traumas, betrayals and national shame. To the best knowledge of this reviewer, no other book of such professional, firsthand objectivity by a non-Czech or Slovak exists on this period of World War II. It is recommended generally." R. F. Delaney

Library J 93:2510 Je 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by A. J. P. Taylor
N Y Rev of Books 11:20 O 10 '68 550w

Reviewed by G. L. Mosse
N Y Times Bk R p12 Je 30 '68 650w

"While preparing [his Memoirs, 1925-1950, BRD 1967, Kennan] found many papers that he had written from Prague in 1938 and 1939 . . . [and] decided to publish [them] as a separate volume. . . . More than a quarter of a century has passed since he wrote these letters and reports, yet they hold up. . . . Above all, Kennan was aware of what he now describes as 'one of humanity's oldest and most recalcitrant dilemmas: the dilemma of a limited collaboration with evil, in the interests of its ultimate mitigation, as opposed to the uncompromising, heroic but suicidal resistance to it.' . . . That is, indeed, the theme of this book—the tragedy of post-Munich Czechoslovakia, where everyone connected with it was faced in one way or another with a cruel choice." L. L. Snyder

Sat R 51:32 Je 22 '68 1300w

"[Mr. Kennan's] dispatches have a dual value which make them unique: they make a contribution to the history of central Europe for which there is no parallel, and they are full of sober lessons for those who have to handle the new crisis thirty years afterwards."

TLS p1167 O 17 '68 1000w

Reviewed by G. A. Craig
Va Q R 44:665 autumn '68 1600w

KENNAN, GEORGE F. Memoirs, 1925-1950. 583p $10 Little

327.73 World politics. U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Diplomatic and consular service 67-23834

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Smith Simpson
Ann Am Acad 337:161 My '68 1300w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 220:146 D '67 1650w

Reviewed by T. S. Martin
Canadian Forum 48:58 Je '68 1650w
Choice 4:1428 F '68 120w

Reviewed by George Kateb
Commentary 45:21 Ja '68 5500w

Reviewed by W. C. McWilliams
Commonweal 88:25 Mr 22 '68 3100w
Economist 226:41 F 3 '68 1100w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:77 Ja '68 550w

Reviewed by Douglas Gill
New Statesman 75:207 F 16 '68 1300w
TLS p97 F 1 '68 3700w

KENNEDY, EDWARD M. Decisions for a decade; policies and programs for the 1970s. pref. by George F. Kennan. 222p $4.95 Doubleday

973.923 U.S.—Politics and government. U.S.—Foreign relations 68-20486

The author "projects the next ten years of American life . . . [and suggests] the changes that must occur in public attitude for solutions [to national problems] to be accepted.

KENNEDY, E. M.—Continued

... [He proposes] new techniques to reverse the rise in crime, [and] a thorough reform of the selective service system and ... discusses the growing rift between the races. In discussing foreign policy he shows how America can help end the Cold War in Europe, prevent chaos in Latin America, guard against new involvements such as the one in Vietnam and help alleviate the growing conflict between rich and poor nations." (Publisher's note)

Choice 5:1041 O '68 160w

Reviewed by John Lustig

Library J 93:1640 Ap 15 '68 170w

"The senior Senator from Massachusetts has generally sensible—if unexceptionable—suggestions about foreign and domestic issues. ... A slap at 'oligarchs,' a friendly hand for the democratic left, but a sharp eye for 'revolutionary movements, subject to Communist influence.' ... At home, the outlook is similarly Sixties Liberal." M. L.

N Y Times BK R p28 Je 23 '68 190w

"Mr. Kennan, in his penetrating and pessimistic preface, does hint that Senator Edward Kennedy does not go as deeply into the crisis as an academic like himself can and should go. And the tact des choses possibles results in the Senator's natural refusal to pursue his own analysis to the alarming end that it seems to call for. ... When the United States celebrates, in 1976, its second centenary, whether it will have much to celebrate will depend in great part on whether this serious and in some ways sombre book is read."

TLS p1099 O 3 '68 310w

KENNEDY, EUGENE C. Fashion me a people; man, woman, and the church. 176p $4.50 Sheed

262 Catholic Church. Spiritual life. Monasticism and religious orders 67-21914

A Catholic priest presents his "views on some of the issues involved in the process of renewal, particularly those which relate to developing the human side of men and women who make up the [Catholic religious orders]." (Library J)

"Far from being merely a compilation of exquisitely chiseled phrases, this volume contains some substantial—and jolting—statements. ... How palatable will his readers find the exotic morsels Fr. Kennedy serves up in these pages? The feeling of some Catholics that they can no longer be sure of their ecclesial leaders' guidance is one. ... Religious may regard with incredulity the author's insistence that religious communities of the future cannot exceed family size. Another statement may prove somewhat less disconcerting: that the idea that marriage interferes with dedication and productivity and/or greatness is an illusion to be dispelled once and for all. ... An excellent book—really open and genuinely balanced. It will be discussed into the early hours, especially by younger Catholics. And it ought to be." J. J. Evoy

America 117:577 N 11 '67 480w

Christian Century 84:1382 O 25 '67 40w

"Father Kennedy of Maryknoll is a professional psychologist who has lectured widely on religious renewal in the Catholic Church. ... [In this book] he shows deep understanding of the problems faced by Catholics today, and he is particularly adept at distinguishing genuine from false forms of renewal. His reflections, often incisive, will be valuable for those concerned about current Catholic problems. They will be especially helpful for members of religious orders, spiritual counselors, and those in positions of authority." W. C. Heiser

Library J 92:3645 O 15 '67 110w

KENNEDY, GERALD. The seven worlds of the minister. 173p $4.95 Harper

250 Pastoral work 68-17580

The bishop of the Los Angeles Area of the Methodist Church "here records his personal experiences as a minister. ... His seven worlds are those of preacher, administrator, pastor, prophet, theologian, evangelist, and teacher. His account includes a discussion of personal and religious engagements he has encountered in his career." (Library J)

"A profound friend of parish ministers and ministry, Bishop Kennedy has once again written a sane and urbane if not very revolutionary assessment of the minister's roles. An undertone of optimism characterizes the book's analysis and advice."

Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 40w

Reviewed by W. M. Liebenow

Library J 93:1146 Mr 15 '68 100w

KENNEDY, JOHN F. John F. Kennedy talks to young people; comp. and ed. by Nicholas Schneider and Nathalie S. Rockhill. 144p il $3.95 Hawthorn bks.

917.3 U.S.—Civilization—Juvenile literature. Citizenship—Juvenile literature 68-13204

"Selected speeches and statements of the late President grouped under major subjects with which he was particularly concerned; education, physical fitness, religion, the arts, citizenship, Peace Corps, armed forces, civil rights, conservation, and world affairs. His inaugural address is also included. ... Grades ten to twelve" (Library J)

"Lack of an index may limit the book's value, but young readers will welcome this addition to the literature that has appeared by and about the late President."

Best Sell 28:227 S 1 '68 80w

"These excerpts, with brief introductions, are designed to inspire youth with the spirit of selflessness exemplified by JFK. The book will be useful for school assignments, rather than pleasure reading, and it does not duplicate many speeches in the other JFK collections." Alibeth Howell

Library J 93:[3326] S 15 '68 90w [YA]

KENNEDY, MICHAEL. Portrait of Elgar. 324p il $10 Oxford

B or 92 Elgar, Sir Edward William, 1st Bart. 68-101411

A study of the English composer's personal and musical character. Chronological list of Elgar's works. Discography of recordings conducted by Elgar. Bibliography. Index of works by Elgar. General index.

Reviewed by Barbara Glatz

Christian Science Monitor p8 Ag 13 '68 650w

Reviewed by A. B. Skei

Library J 93:3551 O 1 '68 110w

"[The author] gives us a hypersensitive, touchy, moody, at times almost suicidally unhappy genius, with small, nervous hands, an English eccentric who loved fishing ... who practised chemistry and patented the Elgar Sulphuretted Hydrogen Apparatus, and who nursed within him a wound that never healed. The book tells its fascinating story well; comment and narrative are expertly combined. Good points are made about the music; such as that Gerontius shows a masterly command of a natural English melodic speech-rhythm, or that the two sides of Elgar cannot be separated and were not separate: the salon Elgar, Mr. Kennedy insists, was not suppressed in the major works but sublimated—in the Variations especially, but also in the symphonies." David Cairns

New Statesman 76:325 S 13 '68 370w

"[A] brilliant biography which follows [Kennedy's] no less accomplished study [The Works of Ralph Vaughan Williams, BRD 1965]. ... Elgar is no easier to capture on the page than he was to deal with in life. Yet Mr. Kennedy succeeds superbly, displacing the flabby legend of Elgar as an Edwardian musical blimp with a convincing portrait of a complex, lonely man of great gifts whose music, composed for the most part in the shadow of the Schoenbergian revolution, has never quite achieved the place it deserves. This book should not be allowed to meet with a similar fate. Of the year's literary output, it belongs in the 10 per cent that deserves to be read." D. C. Goddard

N Y Times BK R p22 S 8 '68 300w

New Yorker 44:246 N 30 '68 190w

Reviewed by Robert Jacobson

Sat R 51:42 D 21 '68 160w

"[A] swift persuasive narrative. ... As a character study it is better than a novel, since it deals with the real life of a great composer. ... On [the] relationship of man and music Mr. Kennedy is perceptive, for though he forgoes technical discussion all the main works are fully expounded and their psychological significance assessed. The book is what its author calls it, a portrait, a portrait more-over of high lights and deep shadows of an extraordinary individual, and it is painted in a mood of total engagement with its subject yet with enough detachment to recognize the petulance, the exaggerated sense of grievance, the sheer perversity of the composer in his black moods."

TLS p900 Ag 22 '68 480w

KENNEDY, ROBERT F. To seek a newer world. 233p $4.95 Doubleday

973.922 U.S.—Politics and government—1961— U.S.—Foreign relations 68-12767

"A statement of [Senator Kennedy's] politics and his points of view on six major topics of political concern: youth, the urban crisis, the Alliance for Progress, nuclear control, China, and Vietnam." (Library J)

Reviewed by P. J. Weber
America 118:42 Ja 13 '68 750w

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
Book World p6 Mr 10 '68 1400w

"Anyone who regularly reads a relatively good newspaper . . . will find very little in this book that is new. It is a random collection of essays. . . . Like other books bearing Robert F. Kennedy's name, this one is a disappointment. Perhaps Senator Kennedy has been 'overexposed,' thus causing these essays to sound terribly 'old hat.' In spite of this criticism, the book could be of value to college libraries. The essay, 'Youth,' has value to sociology as well as political science classes."

Choice 5:682 J1 '68 160w

Reviewed by S. R. Davis
Christian Science Monitor p5 D 28 '67 750w

Economist 227:51 Ap 6 '68 500w

"The book contains a substantial amount of factual information with minimal political puffery. The section on Vietnam, which runs to 60 pages, is reasonable and sobering. In sum, Senator Kennedy's material in the book rises above the level of most campaign literature (which I take it to be an example of), and is an appropriate and useful summary of present American problems. . . . Senator Kennedy has strong opinions, but his conclusions are supported with a substantial array of evidence. His style is easy and even occasionally rises to eloquence. For public and academic libraries."

E. J. Gaines

Library J 93:88 Ja 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by G. A. Harrison
New Repub 157:29 D 2 '67 2600w

"[This] book is to be read as the 1967 formulation of the position of the Kennedy faction of the Democratic party. It is the statement of a man of power seeking the Presidency and, with some minor personal variations, expresses the consensus of those who have grouped themselves under his political banner. The only distinct loss is in the opening essay, 'Youth.' . . . [Kennedy's] personal voice never breaks through the muffled prose of his ghost writers. . . . But once out of that intellectual bog, the Kennedy arguments gain rapidly in force and cogency." W. V. Shannon

N Y Times Bk R p12 D 17 '67 950w

Reviewed by Warren Weaver
Sat R 51:36 Ap 20 '68 850w

KENNER, HUGH. The counterfeiters: an historical comedy; with drawings by Guy Davenport. 174p $5 Ind. univ. press

828

68-10277

The professor of English at the University of California, Santa Barbara, suggests that "where as in an earlier day, man employed juxtaposition to reveal incongruity and affront the System, mocked by means of parody, and revealed his connoisseurship by pointing to a classic norm, today he counterfeits, quotes directly for even greater devastation, and turns to eclectic connoisseurship in a world which has become an enormous museum without walls. Sketching the rise of modern man from his roots in 17th-Century empiricism. Mr. Kenner shows him trapped in a universe of objects and machines which begin to get the upper hand." (Library J) Portions of this book have previously appeared in such publications as The Virginia Quarterly Review, and National Review.

"While witty and frequently humorous, this ultrasophisticated 'Historical Comedy' has a serious underlying purpose. . . . In developing [his] ideas, Kenner interestingly and often brilliantly discusses the art of the metaphysical poets, Swift, Pope, Wordsworth, Joyce, Beckett, Buster Keaton, Andy Warhol, and others. Indeed, as provocative as the book's central idea is, some readers will find its unique analyses of individual authors and works, especially Gulliver's Travels, even more illuminating. Among its many contributions, the book makes a convincing case for viewing the historical context of a work as part of its meaning. Highly recommended, especially for students of 18th-century literature."

Choice 5:944 O '68 240w

"In charting the course of philosophical, linguistic, artistic, and technical counterfeiting, Mr. Kenner uses such unlike materials as Swift, Pope, Defoe, Buster Keaton, Vaucanson's mechanical duck of the 19th Century, Andy Warhol, Wyndham Lewis and Charles Lee's anthology of bad verse, The Stuffed Owl, Beckett and [Waiting for] Godot [BRD 1955], and Babbage and Turing—representing the computer. Although this is a difficult book to classify, it is an easy one to recommend to those libraries recording the danger to man of his own devices." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:84 Ja 1 '68 230w

"Kenner's triumph has been to make us see that the things he connects—things presumably as disparate as Pope's Dunciad and Warhol's soup cans . . . —were always there to be connected, and pre-eminently to be connected in just this way. . . . His interest in the Counterfeiters isn't alone in those who palm off frauds on unwary millionaires, it's in the counterfeit as a cardinal emblem of the modern sensibility. The Counterfeiters is in fact a guide to the emergence of this sensibility and there is virtually no area of our public life which its perceptions do not invade." Arlene Croce

Nat R 20:143 F 13 '68 1600w

KENT, ALEXANDER. To glory we steer. 328p $5.95 Putnam

68-25444

"Discredited by a near-mutiny and suspected cowardice under fire, the crew of the British frigate Phalarope under a new captain, Richard Bolitho, sails for the West Indies during the final years of the American Revolution. . . . The crew is welded into an effective fighting force during . . . [an] attempted mutiny and a . . . battle with superior French forces." (Library J)

"Emotions and depths of feeling are not missing, but there is a glow of real inspiration as we follow the destiny of man-against-odds which culminates in success. . . . The story is replete with cannonades, heroics, stiff-upper-lip sequences. It also provides a well-researched and convincing background of the matters of conduct and attendant crises aboard a warship of the British Navy circa 1782. It is a British sea story, lovingly and directly told by an experienced writer in narration and forceful incident. . . . The inside covers (front and back) depict an attractive map of the Caribbean area for reader interest. Enjoyable and dramatic." Judson LaHaye

Best Sell 28:181 Ag 1 '68 470w

Reviewed by Phillip Marr
Library J 93:2690 J1 '68 150w

Reviewed by George Merrill
Library J 93:[3336] S 15 '68 110w [YA]

"Mr. Kent concocts a cutlass-and-cannon swashbuckler that can help one forget the invention of the steam engine and the refrigerator. If you're looking for more than the whistle of chain shot through the rigging and the call to splice the mizzen shrouds under fire—this is not for you. But if you're willing to follow the wake of Hornblower into 18th-century seas, where a crew of shanghaied valiants kicks the stuffing out of all comers, you'll find a salty testament to the mystique and the brutality of the square rigger." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p36 J1 14 '68 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:73 N 9 '68 100w

KENT, LOUISE ANDREWS. Mrs Appleyard and I. 414p $5.95 Houghton

B or 92

68-13297

In this autobiography of the author of Mrs. Appleyard's Year (BRD 1941) "we follow Louise Andrews through her growing up years in Brookline. . . . her supremely happy marriage to the editor Ira Rich Kent, her life a bride on Beacon Hill in Boston, her return to Brookline, and, in her middle and later years, her life in Vermont at Kent's Corner, a site already known to the followers of Mrs. Appleyard's fortunes." (N Y Times Bk R)

KENT, L. A.—Continued

"This book will appeal to readers who like Vermont, Boston, bird watching, restoring antiques, home views of the literary life, reminiscences of American life during two wars, parties, and a light satiric touch. Louise Kent looks back on 80 years as a New Englander. . . . Her experiences and personality belong to a woman outside Mrs. Appleyard's kitchen, as delightful and various as the kaleidoscopes Mrs. Kent makes." S. C. Gross

Library J 93:1133 Mr 15 '68 110w

"A hostile critic could quibble at the almost implacable detail with which the birth and marriage of each child, the hiring and firing of each cook, the moving into and out of each house, is recorded; but the question remains, what should the author of an autobiography leave out, if that autobiography has to rely solely on flavor and atmosphere for its interest? . . . And if she has warmth of feeling laced with a dry humor, coupled with the skill of an accomplished writer—both of which attributes Mrs. Kent can claim—then she succeeds in making her readers (more likely, one guesses, to be women than men) care. . . . She dwells in her memoirs almost exclusively on happy episodes. Her very accomplishments proclaim her particular brand of gusto. There is not only her craft of making furniture: she can quilt; she can stencil; she plays the accordion, the flute, and chess; she is a cordons-bleu cook. Back of it all is the discipline of the writer who has kept steadily at her work." Helen Howe

N Y Times Bk R p32 Ag 4 '68 700w

KENYON, KATHLEEN M. Jerusalem; excavating 3000 years of history. (New aspects of archaeol) 211p pl col pl maps $9.95 McGraw

913.33 Jerusalem—Antiquities 67-22045

"In 1961 the British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem, under the directorship of Dr. Kathleen M. Kenyon, . . . began new explorations, to determine by the most modern methods exactly what the old Jerusalem was like, and to answer questions earlier explorations had left open. . . . The discoveries formed a sound basis for a fresh interpretation of former conclusions. . . . These interpretations are [here] published." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:847 S '68 150w

"With a millepede's pace and an aesthete's eye, Miss Kenyon takes readers on an inch-by-inch, block-by-block, age-through-age tour of the Holy City. . . . The next best thing to having been there."

Christian Century 85:426 Ap 3 '68 30w

"The notes, bibliography, and index are barely adequate; but the quality and quantity of the illustrations . . . give the volume distinction. The text is brief and clear; but one must be at least an informed layman to read it with profit. A good reference work for public, high school, college, and seminary libraries." H. M. Orlinsky

Library J 93:2868 Ag '68 180w

"Dame Kathleen Kenyon has based her account on the material of her own excavations, but these excavations were thrilling and are absolutely central to the development of the city. None of the buildings of David's city were found, and nothing earlier than the seventh century B.C., but the great flowering of Jerusalem under Solomon can be followed rather closely. . . . This is a somewhat pernickety study for the general reader; he may console himself with some colour photographs and very lucid maps, but he is bound to bewail the uneven distribution of the surviving material between one century and another. Dame Kathleen proceeds continuously, but with rigorous attention to the particular evidence of excavations, both her own and the earlier ones. There is, after all, a difficult problem of method, to which if one considers, one will see that this book is an acceptable solution. . . . [The] late chapters are terribly thin and inadequate, and the book is best at the point where [the author's] own archaeological interest centres."

TLS p506 My 16 '68 400w

KERÉNYI, C. Greece in color [by] C. Kerényi; introd. by Lord Kinross; phot. by R. G. Hoegler [text and captions tr. by Daphne Woodward; extracts from poems by Goethe, Hölderlin and Rilke; tr. by Eric Peters]. (Studio bk) new ed 99p $8.50 Viking

914.95 Greece, Modern—Description and travel—Views 67-966

"The twofold purpose of this book is to offer an introduction and a series of recollections. . . . It is the work of a painter who once lived . . . in the Ionian and Aegean islands . . . and who, after years of absence, at last made a longed-for return, equipped with a camera; and of a classical scholar whose work at one time brought him nearly every year to Greece." (p.11) Originally published in 1956 as Griechenland. English edition first published in 1957.

Reviewed by R. L. Scranton

Class World 61:218 F '68 120w

"Here is the perfect volume to prepare one for his first trip to Greece as well as to refresh his memories upon return. Lord Kinross's buoyant introduction is a fitting prelude to Kerényi's brilliant treatment of the unique quality of the light only to be found in Greece, and its effect on some of the literary figures of the past. The incredibly beautiful photography of the late R. G. Hoegler captures all the incandescence of Greece. By juxtaposing vases, windmills, olive trees, fishermen mending nets beside a wine-dark sea, living people, animals, and ruined temples, he distills the very essence of this small country. . . . This book is highly recommended for both general and specialized collections." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 92:1488 Ap 1 '67 140w

KERÉNYI, CARL. Evil. See Evil

KERKEN, LIBERIUS VANDER. Loneliness and love; tr. with a foreword by J. Donceel. 142p $3.75 Sheed

128 Love 67-14817

The author has undertaken "a phenomenological analysis of love and the dynamic process of its development and placed this in a metaphysical frame. . . . [He considers] transcendence of personality, selfhood as incommunicable and the ground of the appeal and satisfying character of the beloved." (Choice) Originally published as Menselijke Liefde en Vriendschap.

"A technical, philosophic study of superior quality. Unfortunately, the title tends to place it in the category of semipopular exposés [but] Vander Kerken has significantly added to the literature on the subject. Donceel's translation renders the book clear to the professional reader in the area. Useful for advanced undergraduates, graduate students, and any scholar concerned with interpersonal relationships. No index or bibliography, but this study does not actually require them. It is a long essay revealing profound personal thinking. Other works can fill in the scholarly data in the field."

Choice 4:993 N '67 210w

"No sentimentality here; but then there isn't supposed to be, for this is an objective book, acclaimed by those who know as 'the mature work of an established scholar.' The book can certainly take its place on the ever-growing list of attempts, analyses and definitions of this elusive topic by philosophers and theologians."

Critic 25:90 Je '67 120w

KERNAN, ALVIN B. The modern American theater; a collection of critical essays. 183p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

792 Theater—U.S. Drama—History and criticism 67-25930

A "collection of essays on contemporary American playwrights and their theaters, Broadway, Off-Broadway, and Off-Off-Broadway." (Choice) These articles have been previously published in The Tulane Drama Review, The Reporter, The New York Times Magazine. Bibliography.

"Of the 12 essays, the best are those by Kenneth Tynan (Williams and Miller), Robert Brustein (Inge), Lee Baxandall (Albee), Allan Kaprow ('Happenings'), and Gordon Rogoff ('The Juggernaut of Production'). One wonders why two pieces on Thornton Wilder when one of them is as weak as Tyrone Guthrie's. . . . Kerman's own essay. 'The Attempted Dance: A Discussion of the Modern Theater,' is an excellent introduction to a course in modern drama, for which this book could be profitably assigned. Students of theater, academic or otherwise, will find the book good reading."

Choice 4:1402 F '68 160w

"It is good to have [these papers] collected in one volume. The most exciting piece is Tyrone Guthrie's 'The World of Thornton Wilder,' which includes both a keen summary of Wilder's drama and some interestingly told personal reminiscences. . . . The book offers a diversity of views on the drama and today's theater in the United States, principally New York." Paul Myers

Library J 92:3440 O 1 '67 120w

Reviewed by J. Real

Nat R 20:759 J1 30 '68 220w

KEROUAC, JACK. Vanity of Duluoz; an adventurous education, 1935-46. 280p $5.50 Coward-McCann

68-11867

This autobiographical novel traces the adventures of a young man coming of age in the American 1930s and 40s. "The book tells of Kerouac's rise (in Lowell, Mass.), his fall (on the high seas), and his moral death and resurrection in Manhattan." (Time)

Reviewed by Charles Dollen

Best Sell 27:442 F 15 '68 390w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 21 '68 600w

"Mr. Kerouac takes us through [a] period of his life in more than necessary detail, much of it fascinating. Nevertheless, as he says, 'If you don't say what you want, what's the sense of writing?' . . . The apparently slow pace of the book is sparked by flashes of brilliance which carry the reader more rapidly than he realizes. . . . It takes many things to make a writer, Kerouac tried to find them and did. Recommended for adult readers." H. L. Rosofsky

Library J 93:772 F 15 '68 220w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 10:34 Ap 11 '68 600w

"Kerouac-Duluoz clings to youth as if the end of it were death rather than the onset of full life. [In an] atmosphere tepid with accents of Whitman, Wolfe, Saroyan and castrated Henry Miller, assuming that whatever has happened to him is automatically valuable, the narrator retails his adventures. . . . Any number of incidents in 'Vanity of Duluoz' seem potentially interesting. But Kerouac, not without talent, is not interested. . . . A publisher with any real faith in the glow that occasionally generates from a page of any of Kerouac's slapdash novels would not have published this book as it stands." Peter Sourian

N Y Times Bk R p4 F 18 '68 900w

"As a story, [this] is nothing much. . . . [It] is fundamentally the story of all prodigals, and through it the book attempts to get to the heart of America as a country of wanderers.

Unfortunately, Kerouac lacks the verbal talent to match his passionate commitment to the truth in himself. He suffers from a breathless style and the frequent burble of 'fine writing.' His book must be reluctantly put down with the thought that here is another monument brave in conception but botched by clumsy chisels. . . . The strange thing is that through the dreadful indiscipline of the prose, or perhaps because of it, the innocence of Kerouac is established beyond question. . . . [However] the reader is left with the uneasy feeling that Kerouac's pilgrimage should have brought him to an understanding more profound than the discovery that 'all is vanity.'"

Time 91:96 F 23 '68 750w

KERR, WALTER. Tragedy and comedy. 350p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

309.2 Tragedy. Comedy 67-13031

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1402 F '68 80w

Economist 227:xvii Ap 27 '68 550w

Reviewed by John Bowen

New Statesman 75:420 Mr 29 '68 750w

TLS p369 Ap 11 '68 700w

KERTESZ, STEPHEN D. The quest for peace through diplomacy. 182p $4.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

327.09 World politics—1945-. Diplomacy

67-23503

"After analyzing the past successes and failures of diplomacy in dealing with major international crises ranging from the rise of self-seeking nation-states in the fifteenth century to the rise of nuclear powers in the twentieth, Kertesz focuses . . . on a new form of diplomacy—the use of large multi-national organizations, such as the United Nations, to keep the globe from splitting asunder." (Publisher's note)

"The difficulty with the book, on its own terms, is that there is too much description and too little analysis. There is no explicit theoretical framework which would allow the student to generalize new hypotheses or conclusions about the nature of . . . diplomatic activity. . . . The book, in summary, is a description . . . of Western-oriented international organizations. The implication seems to be that certain new diplomatic techniques learned in these contexts might be transferred to a more universal context. However, this is never argued explicitly, nor is there any effort to generalize about these new techniques. . . . The chief thrust of the book seems to be from a traditional cold war perspective." L. F. Brakeman

Am Pol Sci R 62:679 Je '68 700w

"Introductory chapters trace the development of European diplomacy through World War II. The major portion of the volume is devoted to a narrative of mid-20th-century international relations—Soviet diplomacy, summit meetings and personal diplomacy, the role of the U.N., regional groupings in Western Europe, NATO, and the promise of Atlantic Union. The work focuses on Europe and North America, neglecting the rest of the world. Kertesz writes from a position of authority and organizes his material well; otherwise, this work presents no new ideas or novel interpretations."

Choice 5:390 My '68 80w

Reviewed by W. E. Osgood

Library J 92:2789 Ag '67 70w

KESSEL, JOHN H. The Goldwater coalition: Republican strategies in 1964. 371p il $8.50 Bobbs

329.6 Republican party. Presidents—U.S.—Election. Goldwater, Barry Morris 68-22308

"From personal observation and from the pollsters' data on the 1964 presidential campaigns [the author] attempts to offer analyses of the candidates' strategies as well as a political theory to explain the electoral results. He defines electoral power as comprising coalitions, which are made up of groups, which in turn consist of individual voters. He employs mathematical set theory to explain his concepts and public opinion surveys to measure the voters. Mr. Kessel . . . observes that Mr. Goldwater built a narrow but effective coalition to capture the nomination, despite his . . . lack of voter appeal. His four-group coalition of Southerners, foreign policy 'hardliners,' conservative ideologists, and organization loyalists, however, was entirely too narrow to win an election." (Library J) Index.

"Although he traverses very familiar territory, Mr. Kessel offers something for everyone even mildly interested in politics: good analyses of the political 'art' for the general reader; insights into the electoral institutions for the traditional students of government; and a behavioral approach for the political scientist."

H. W. Mott

Library J 93:2885 Ag '68 280w

"Kessel, a political scientist at Allegheny College, gives . . . a cogent analysis of the Goldwater debacle, though his excellent reportage is somewhat marred by his effort to conform to current social-science fashions." W. C. McWilliams

N Y Times Bk ■ p3 O 20 '68 700w

KESSEL, JOSEPH. The horsemen; tr. by Patrick O'Brian. 469p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

68-17292

Set in contemporary Afghanistan, the "novel begins with a ferocious royal buzkashi, a tournament where maniacal chapandaz (superb horsemen) drive themselves and their beautiful horses to destruction or victory. Famous Tursen, Master of the Horse, breeds and nurtures Jahil, the Mad Horse, for the buzkashi, but age forces him to turn over Jahil to his son Uraz. . . . Near triumph in the buzkashi, Uraz breaks a leg, and, scornful medical aid, in humiliation rides Jahil on a legendary journey over the steppes in an attempt to wipe out his galling defeat. Struggling against cruel nature, treacherous companions, and ignoring his rotting leg, Uraz returns to his homeland." (Library J)

KESSEL, JOSEPH—Continued

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:106 J1 '68 60w

"Translator Patrick O'Brian has done us all an admirable service. . . . [Kessel] has conceived a brilliant novel of epic grandeur, while including a three-track story line so subtly interwoven that its shattering impact is a shimmering, glistening delight. It should rank with many of the more durable classics, as the English homilies, the long Russian novels. . . . The careful reader will delight in the intricacies of the conflicts; man against nature, in the best traditions of our literary stronghold's mountain sagas; man against self and world, with the darkest labyrinthine ways; and a father-son relationship that is searchingly beautiful in its extremities. Or again, read it for the haunting poetry of description of geographic locales and customs, making it a thing of wonder and awe, and easily the best of similar novels since they invented the National Geographic Magazine!" Judson LaHaye

Best Sell 28:129 Je 15 '68 500w

"There are some wonderful moments in the book . . . incidents in which Kessel lets the story tell itself, without frills or distractions. Most of the time he seems to find that impossible. . . . [His] confidence in his readers' memories is minimal. . . . Like many writers who know little of horses, he has his riders guide their mounts with their knees. . . . Somehow, the book does survive all this. The story itself is gripping, the battle for dominance between Uraz and the nomad girl exciting and suspenseful. Above all the terrain—so dangerous, so magical—and the glimpses of the various and extraordinary peoples that live on it are worth the reading. The trouble is that one can read the same thing in other books, better told." Cecelia Holland

Book World p5 Je 16 '68 500w

Reviewed by G. O. Carey
Library J 93:2020 My 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi
N Y Times Bk R p5 Je 16 '68 700w

"The book, which has been a best-seller in France since its publication there last year, is a gripping adventure. . . . [It] has few static moments. Hyperbole, Kessel's greatest weakness, abounds. . . . Pathetic fallacies, flaws of syntax, clumsy sentences, semantic inaccuracies, historical and statistical errors are also too many and diminish excellence. . . . The translator may have been at fault. . . . Kessel obviously labors in places, and here and there the framework of the story shows. The prologue is superfluous because it says nothing that is not expressed better later on, irritating because it takes the edge off subsequent discovery, and debatable because it contains several factual improbabilities. . . . Nevertheless, The Horsemen is a masterfully presented tale of men triumphant over nature at its cruelest; it makes crystal clear the dichotomy between reason and truth." Glen Wright

Sat R 51:34 Je 1 '68 600w

KETTELKAMP, LARRY. Dreams; written and il. by Larry Kettelkamp. 94p $2.95; lib bdg $2.94 Morrow

154.6 Dreams—Juvenile literature 68-14803

This account "includes a history of attitudes toward dreams, from ancient Egypt to modern psychoanalysis; a . . . report on contemporary sleep research; a discussion of parapsychology; and some practical suggestions for the interpretation of one's own dreams. [Index.] Ages ten to fourteen." (Commonweal)

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:308 My 24 '68 170w

"[This book] suffers from oversimplification, and elementary school youngsters may find the sections on Freud and Jung hard to comprehend. The material on dream symbols and the drawn-out instructions for recording one's own dreams are of dubious value in a science book for the intermediate grades." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 93:3971 O 15 '68 80w

"Dreams a topic important to all of us, is treated somewhat superficially here. This account explains their historical, psychological and social significance and gives brief mention to the symbolism used in their interpretation. It is in this last area that the book misses (probably on purpose) the major factor, sex. Because sex—at least to Freudians—is the dominant theme in dream symbolism, the subject (symbolism) might better have been ignored than covered inadequately in deference to the young age group."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 My 5 '68 100w

"[This] simple, lucid book . . . isn't comprehensive, but it is a good summary of the experiments that have been made and the facts that have been established." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:40 My 11 '68 50w

KETTELKAMP, LARRY. Song, speech, and ventriloquism; written and il. by Larry Kettelkamp. 96p $2.95; lib bdg $2.94 Morrow

612 Voice—Juvenile literature. Ventriloquism—Juvenile literature. Speech—Juvenile literature 67-277

Beginning with a "chapter on the anatomical structure that produces the human voice, [the author] goes on to tell the reader how he makes the various vowel, consonant, and other speaking sounds by using tongue, lips, throat, etc. In a separate chapter the author treats the singing voice with the purpose of instructing the person learning to sing. The last chapter is on ventriloquism. [Glossary. Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"In this combination of scientific text and how-to-do it manual, the interrelationships between the two parts are not always made clear. However, the book would be very useful to those interested in the subject, and the illustrations and charts admirably support the text." John Graham

Library J 92:2030 My 15 '67 120w

"The mechanisms of speech and voice are taken apart for readers in the upper grades, with sensible model experiments and the tricky tests you can make with the black box of your own speech. Then the whole sense of understanding is put to real use, by building up a rationale from which anyone who will try hard, and practice, can become a genuine ventriloquist. There are even a few lines of properly old jokes. Original and intriguing, and possibly a low-key means of improving one's speech." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:151 D '67 170w

KEYNES, GEOFFREY, ed. The letters of Rupert Brooke. See Brooke, R.

KEYS, ANCEL, jt. auth. The benevolent bean. See Keys, M.

KEYS, MARGARET. The benevolent bean [by] Margaret & Ancel Keys. 192p $3.95 Doubleday 641.6 Cookery—Beans 67-12853

A collection of some 200 recipes featuring "not only many of the innumerable varieties of beans, but also the more common legumes: peas, lentils, chick peas, soybeans, and peanuts. Culled from all over the world, the recipes range from the French cassoulet . . . to whole-meal dishes which can be prepared in a few minutes; from hearty soups to summer salads; from old Roman cookery to new soybean products soon to be on the market. . . . Each recipe includes values for calories, proteins, fats and poly-unsaturates. There are also notes on the worldwide lore and legends of the . . . bean." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A fascinating history of the bean. Cautionary calorie counts, recipes from Imperial Rome round out the collection. A variety of cold bean salads . . . make a succulent accompaniment for cocktails." Gloria Levitas

Book World p7 My 12 '68 40w

"The recipes have been gathered from many books and from the minds of the authors. Lunches, suppers and dinners will be marked with a new attitude toward the vegetable known as the 'poor man's meat' when some of the recipes are tried. Here is an interesting and enlightening book that might well be in all collections." K. T. Willis

Library J 92:2158 Je 1 '67 120w

KHAN, HASHIM. Squash racquets; the Khan game, by Hashim Khan with Richard E. Randall; foreword: Arthur B. Sonneborn; current phot: George Gellatly; diagrams: John C. Dunning. 161p $6.50 Wayne state univ. press

796.34 Squash rackets

68-12250

"This book is Hashim Khan's story. . . . Hashim never learned to write English, or even to speak it in the textbook fashion. So he 'talked' the book . . . with Richard E. Randall, one of his students and a professional writer. [He gives] . . . detailed instruction on the Khan grip, stroke, stance, court strategy, ploys, and favorite combination shots, plus . . . observations of fitness, stamina, gamesmanship." (Publisher's note)

"Khan is recognized as the greatest squash player of all time; e.g. he won the British Open seven times. When he grew older he also became one of the greats in American squash. His life history is extremely interesting. . . . He pulls no punches commenting on opponents through the years. Most of the book is meant to be instructional and points out the importance of time and pressure in squash. The sequence pictures are inadequate, however, and the drawings showing winning shots are dominated by a drop shot off a poor cross court. . . . The life story of this great sportsman far overshadows the mediocrity of instruction."

Choice 5:524 Je '68 150w

"The major portion of the book is a manual which includes numerous photographs and helpful diagrams and is designed to help players improve their game. . . . Some may find the style a little disconcerting or distracting. . . . [but it] may charm some. This handsome looking book should find a place in all but the smallest sports collections." Norman Horrocks

Library J 92:4519 D 15 '67 290w

KHAN, MOHAMMAD AYUB. See Ayub Khan, M.

KHAYAAM, OMAR. See Omar Khayaam

KHERDIAN, DAVID. Six poets of the San Francisco renaissance: portraits and check-lists; introd. by William Saroyan. 183p $17.50 Giligia press

016.811 American poetry—20th century
—Bio-bibliography. Poets, American 67-24557

Kherdian has compiled "the bibliographies of the six poets from the San Francisco area that he believes are destined to survive our age: Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Gary Snyder, David Meltzer, Philip Whalen, Michael McClure, and Brother Antoninus. In each bibliography he includes books, broadsides, fugitive pieces and ephemera, magazine and newspaper appearances, anthologies, foreign editions, recordings, tapes, and criticism. He also includes along with each poet's photograph a . . . description . . . styled to the individual poet." (Library J)

"These 'renaissance' men . . . receive sensitive handling. . . . The portraits are interesting but too much of the character sketch genre (except Antoninus') and are uneven as a result. The partially descriptive bibliographies will be useful to American poetry collections. But considering these are only six of the S. F. poets (La Mantia and Rexroth are missing, for example) and of unequal importance, the price is unreasonably high."

Choice 5:464 Je '68 100w

"Anyone interested in one or all of these poets will be delighted with Mr. Kherdian's book, and he may have selected the six best poets. Who knows? If he has, every good reference collection will need this volume." G. A. Cevasco

Library J 92:3985 N 1 '67 140w

KHOURI, FRED J. The Arab-Israeli dilemma. 436p $10 Syracuse univ. press

956 Jewish-Arab relations

68-20483

This book analyzes various "phases of and the divergent points of view on the Arab-Israeli problem from its origin to the early part of 1968. . . . Emphasis is given to the attitudes and feelings of the Arabs and the Israelis and to those policies and developments which contributed significantly to the intensification of Arab-Israeli mistrust, fear, and hostility. . . . The views, policies, and actions of the contending parties [are evaluated] as well as the roles played by the major powers." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

Christian Century 85:1109 S 4 '68 40w

Reviewed by David Shavit

Library J 93:3146 S 15 '68 120w

"Khouri is critical of both sides in the dispute which he describes in detail, and with some insight. But [his] main interest is with the part played by the United Nations. Every U.N. resolution and paper on the Middle East, however inconsequential, is listed indiscriminately, without highlighting the really important issues." Walter Laqueur

N Y Times Bk R p65 O 20 '68 140w

"Research for this lucid analysis of the Middle Eastern problem includes extensive background interviews with many heads of state and national officials. . . . Khouri's book tries to speed . . . policy changes by offering the policymakers both a clear account of events in the Middle East . . . and an impartial analysis of the defects in the policies of the Arab states, Israel and the Western Powers. . . . Though Khouri is always a model of objectivity in dealing with a subject not conducive to that quality, the weight of his evidence eventually amounts to a tacit indictment of the policies of Russia and the United States." T. G. Plate

Newsweek 72:89 S 1 '68 750w

"[This book] should contribute to American understanding of the situation in one important aspect. [It] explores with compassion and understanding the nature of the changing Arab world and the Arab case against Israel. Such exploration is long overdue. . . . [It is] a methodical, well-researched history . . . written with insight and objectivity. . . . Unfortunately, [the author] tends to deal with his subject more in terms of what this statesman said or that United Nations committee did or didn't do . . . rather than in human terms. Nevertheless in so explosive a situation the dry, academic approach may be best. . . . Khouri's insistence on Israeli withdrawal from the occupied lands and territories . . . will offend many radical Israelis and Zionists . . . but his demand should be considered in the context of his masterly last chapter, in which he presents his conclusions on a solution. . . . [The basic criticism] of Professor Khouri's well-thought-out process of evolutionary development in the Middle East is that there just isn't the time." Drew Middleton

Sat R 51:35 S 7 '68 850w

KIDSON, PETER. The medieval world. 176p il col il $5.95 McGraw

709.02 Art, Medieval. Architecture, Medieval 67-11796

This volume covers the history of the pre-Romanesque, Romanesque, and Gothic art in western Europe between the years 400 and 1400 and includes such categories as architecture, sculpture, painting, metal works, manuscripts, reliquaries and ivories. Chronological chart of the principal political, religious and artistic events in the medieval world. Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"Mr Kidson's volume . . . is the best of the [Landmarks of the World's Art] series. He manages miraculously to make it a continuous essay, written with wit and clarity, without sacrificing comprehensiveness."

Economist 227:viii Ap 27 '68 90w

KIDSON, PETER—Continued

"The most valuable aspect of this book is the author's knowledge of history. He has avoided the temptation to discuss art in a vacuum and has made clear its relation to social and political factors. The book is copiously and beautifully illustrated in color and black and white. Notation is made in the margin when illustrations are referred to in the text. This is a very fine piece of work." I. M. Berger

Library J 92:1917 My 15 '67 200w
 TLS p888 Ag 22 '68 50w

KIENAST, GUNTER W. The medals of Karl Goetz. 284p il $25 Artus co.

737 Goetz, Karl. Medals 67-21457

"Goetz studied art and completed an engraver's apprenticeship in his native Germany. In 1904 he settled in Munich, where during his remaining 46 years he executed most of his medallic work. Using this medium to record and interpret historical events, Goetz produced what amounts to a medallic history of the major political and military incidents which took place during and between the two World Wars. Of his [more than 600] medals, all of which are listed in this catalog, more than 25 per cent are of a satirical nature. In his introductory chapters, [the author] offers an historical commentary on these pieces." (Library J)

"Should be the definitive work for a long time to come. While Goetz has not generally been considered in the front rank of medalists, this comprehensive volume should ensure a dignified place for this skilled craftsman. . . . Very little has been written about Goetz, but the author's exhaustive research has turned this first monograph into a comprehensive and scholarly edition. Most of the . . . medals executed by Goetz have been uncovered by Kienast, and, while the photographs are of uneven quality, the author has wisely included all available material for the sake of complete documentation. The reading audience will be limited for this book, but it will be a valuable addition to the numismatic library."

Choice 5:1124 N '68 140w

"Among the features which add to the usefulness of this book are its comprehensive, descriptive catalog, the numerous translated inscriptions, and the more than 430 illustrations. Recommended for numismatic libraries." Francis Campbell

Library J 93:2474 Je 15 '68 200w

KIERKEGAARD, SØREN. Søren Kierkegaard's journals and papers; 5v; v 1, A-E; ed. and tr. by Howard V. Hong and Edna H. Hong, assisted by Gregor Malantschuk. 539p $15 Ind. univ. press

198 Philosophy 67-13025

"This is the first of five proposed volumes of Kierkegaard's journals to be translated from the Danish edition of 20 volumes that is not itself complete. . . . [The] professor of philosophy at St. Olaf College has arranged the volumes topically and within the topic by chronology." (Library J) "Notes by Gregor Malantschuk . . . summarize the doctrinal position of the major topics discussed in the journal itself." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Notes, commentary and topical bibliography. Volume four will contain an index to the first four volumes. Volume five will contain autobiographical material.

"[This work] signifies the entrance into the field [of] an English translation of Kierkegaard's Papirer comparable to Cornelio Fabro's marvelous edition in Italian and the Hirsch edition in German. English students have for years needed more extensive reference to Kierkegaard's notes than is found in Dru's excellent translation of Kierkegaard's Journals [BRD 1939]. Hong's work is structurally unique. It is arranged alphabetically according to topics. In this way one will be able to find in one spot the major notions with which Kierkegaard dealt throughout his lifetime. . . . [However,] Hong's arrangement requires some work if we wish to find the context of these various entries. [This is the] most important contribution to Kierkegaard research in English in the 1960's."

Choice 4:1254 Ja '68 190w

"The quality of translation is excellent. Our congratulations to Indiana University for this undertaking. For all college and large city libraries." R. L. Perkins

Library J 92:2784 Ag '67 170w

"I was disconcerted . . . by the Hongs's decision to group the material of the Journal and Papers not chronologically but according to subject matter. . . . There is no doubt that such an arrangement is useful in many ways. . . . [But] I would have preferred to be alone with Kierkegaard . . . to discover for myself the interruptions and innovations which the man came upon in the daily work of his own idiosyncrasy. . . . We must, however, be grateful to the Hongs for their enormous labor. Even in alphabetical order, Kierkegaard's Journals and Papers are worth having for angry days, or 'inward' days; especially when they have been translated in as lively and sensitive a manner as are the texts in this first volume." Paul Zweig

Nation 207:283 S 23 '68 1800w

Reviewed by W. H. Auden

New Yorker 44:141 My 25 '68 6400w

KIESEL, STANLEY. The pearl is a hardened sinner; notes from kindergarten. 76p $3.95 Scribner

811

68-12495

A book of poems by a kindergarten teacher who "assesses the blame of parents, teachers, and society for the plight of children." (Library J)

Choice 5:1308 D '68 110w

"In these poems, which blaze with irony and anger, Mr. Kiesel . . . never takes his eyes off the children who teach him so much. 'God grant long life to your rages, Joey; Our bruises belong to you if nothing else.' His poems hurt. Children are seen helpless in a hurtful world. . . . He says many perceptive things about [them]. Recommended for professional collections in school systems, college, and public libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2009 My 15 '68 100w

"[This is a book for] teachers, especially the young, turned on college students and graduates who have recently become involved in pre-school and primary education because they have discovered that it is one of the keys to radical reform in our society. . . . [And, it] might become a favorite in the portable library of VISTA volunteers. Most of the poems are portraits of pupils, and there are few such galleries of flesh-and-blood people in modern verse. . . . Kiesel fights with the kids against education that merely socializes, that trains people to fit in and belong. [He] is probably a good teacher as well as a good poet; he knows that his outrage and shrewd analysis and whiplash phrasing lead less to reform than to the tragic passivity of understanding." Judson Jerome

Sat R 51:32 Je 1 '68 550w

KIHM, JEAN JACQUES, jt. auth. Jean Coc-teau: the man and the mirror. See Sprigge, E.KILBRACKEN, JOHN RAYMOND GODLEY, 3d Baron. Van Meegeren: master forger [Eng title; Van Meegeren; a case history]. 197p il $6.95 Scribner

759.9492 Meegeren, Han Van. Forgery of works of art 68-17337

"This is an account of the Belgian painter . . . who succeeded in duping many experts by imitating the style of Vermeer . . . and mulcting such a pseudo-expert as Goering." (Best Sell) Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 119:572 N 30 '68 80w

Best Sell 28:170 J1 15 '68 220w

"Lord Kilbracken is too good a writer to neglect any reader-delighting detail, but his book is more than a simple rehash of the trial that made a small stir even in 1945-46 when stirring trials were in good supply. He wants us to understand the whole business of the fakes—why van Meegeren began the whole bad business, how he made a fake and how he became one. He also has some worrying comments on the whole question of art values. Pains-taking research and carefully explained reasoning make his version of van Meegeren's action convincing. Where evidence is lacking, his deductions ring true. [He] explains how right van Meegeren was in his choice of subject, where the imitation's strengths and weaknesses lie, opening our eyes not only to the artfulness of van Meegeren but to the art of Vermeer." Pamela Marsh Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 27 '68

700w

"Whether or not Lord Kilbracken has added anything to the knowledge of this man and his obsession, he has produced in some detail a description of his technique. This makes more absorbing reading than the guesswork about van Meegeren's aims and motives."
Economist 225:iii D 1 '67 280w

New Yorker 44:95 Ag 10 '68 190w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:116 S 14 '68 40w
TLS p124 F 8 '68 500w

KILBRACKEN, LORD. See Kilbracken, J. R. G.

KILLIAN, LEWIS M. The impossible revolution? black power and the American dream. 193p $5.95 Random house

323.1 Negroes. Negroes—Civil rights. U.S.—Race relations 68-10845

"Basing his analysis on historical sources, the author traces the development of Black Power and shows how the increasing demand for power to gain a share of the American dream is met with increasing resistance. His conclusion is that the warnings of continued and greater violence to come are likely to be fulfilled." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Despite its brevity this is a carefully reasoned and important book. . . . Mr. Killian believes that moderate Negro leaders, although still in the ascendancy, are losing ground because of the inherent racial bias in American society that most white Americans refuse to concede exists beyond the area of civil rights. He also believes that unless Congress allots a massive budget, which he regards as most unlikely to relieve the impoverished, angry, frustrated and alienated masses of the urban slums, disaster looms for white and black American alike." Edward Margolies
Library J 93:2467 Je 15 '68 190w

"A hard look at the cities, both from a sociological and a military standpoint, and at the ideas current among some young Negroes, makes it seem at least possible that revolution will not always remain the empty rhetoric of would-be rebels. Lewis M. Killian has reached this conclusion, in his new book, the most substantial of the latest group of instant exegeses of black power. . . . [He] relies on three projections, none of which is inevitable. But neither are they implausible." Simon Lazarus
New Repub 158:37 Je 8 '68 430w

KILPATRICK, SARAH. Ladies' Close. 192p $4.50 Doubleday

68-11794

In this first novel, "a middle-aged teacher at an English college has a touch of nervous breakdown, after the end of an affair with one of her girl pupils [Carol], and goes to a bucolic retreat to recuperate—only to learn that things at Ladies' Close are almost as pesky as they were back at school. Chloe Whitehead is followed to her hideaway by a . . . student in search of human warmth. ('You see, I don't like men. And the other girls all do.') Emmy, the . . . young girl, threads her way among the other inhabitants of the colony, tugging Chloe along with her, and making her unwilling companion eventually unhappier than ever." (N Y Times Bk R)

"In the course of the book the reader has seen revealed Miss Whitehead's view on life and love. There is some self pity . . . and yet she feels that the limitations imposed by the convention of marriage are a waste. She refers to married people as being 'legally lost.' . . . [As the novel ends, Chloe] slips away from the Close by dark from a farewell outdoor Bacchanalia. Where have we, the reader, been? Despite a clever turn of language and well-wrought imagery, we have not been much of anywhere, really." Anne Keehan
Best Sell 28:83 My 15 '68 400w

"A few years hence this may turn up at art theaters as a restrained, elliptical mood piece about an aging lesbian and communication will finally be achieved. Miss Kilpatrick has written a sober, nonsensational account of Chloe's loneliness. . . . [The author] employs such reticence, such monotony of tone, and such sluggish prose that the reader, while admiring her restraint, almost begs for a little human emotion—if not sensationalism, a modest hair-pulling. Nevertheless, this first novel has a haunting quality which recommends it to all large fiction collections." Barbara Nelson

Library J 93:1162 Mr 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p31 Ap 14 '68 100w

"Here is a novel . . . with a vaguely academic setting—in so far as the narrator, Chloe, is a middle-aged Eng.Lit. don at Oxbridge—but which quickly reveals itself as a titillating excursion into lesbian and heterosexual mores. . . . Miss Kilpatrick has a certain joky facility when dealing with the taboos and preoccupations of donnish spinsterhood, but grows more preposterously unconvincing page by page."
TLS p101 F 9 '67 200w

KIM, RICHARD E. The innocent. 384p $6.95 Houghton

68-31587

This novel of "a military coup d'état in Korea . . . [centers on the narrator,] Major Lee, a member of the Command Group which is engineering the coup. . . . Major Lee's antagonist is Colonel Min, the leader of the insurgent officers [who opposes the Major's desire] . . . for a bloodless coup." (Christian Science Monitor)

"The story of the coup is told with vivid insight and tremendous suspense. . . . [This] is a truly artistic development of the theme of righteousness over against ruthlessness. Toward the development of this theme there is included the portrayal of a deep and beautiful friendship between two men torn apart by their temperaments and convictions. [Kim] writes with a particularly vivid dialogue that moves action and plot, and develops themes. . . . [An appealing feature] is the clear, hard-headed, natural American descriptive passages and dialogue. Kim's Korean officers talk and act like American professional soldiers." R. E. O'Brien
Best Sell 28:288 O 15 '68 800w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wolff

Book World p10 D 29 '68 750w

"The coup is successful, but if the old regime deserved its fate, the reader is an innocent victim. . . . We have read [this book] before, a thousand times, . . . and Mr. Kim has given us nothing new. . . . We find ourselves rooting for Major Lee. He, after all, has been chosen as the story's narrator. We suspect that he is the author's vehicle—but it does not come off. Colonel Min carries all the weight. He is somewhat more believable, articulate, and sympathetic. . . . If Mr. Kim wants to delineate ideological and moral positions, he must convince us by creating believable characters." Donald Gropman
Christian Science Monitor p13 O 31 '68 430w

"It is hard to imagine many library patrons reading this political novel. It has little action, background, or development, and it is made up almost entirely of long, stilted conversations on ideology. The characters are a faceless pack of colonels and generals. . . . If Mr. Kim is giving us an important social document about actual Korean politics, . . . [he is] misguided in presenting it as the dullest of novels." Collin Clark
Library J 93:3578 O 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by R. M. Elman

N Y Times Bk R p4 N 10 '68 700w

"Talk and reminiscence in [this novel] . . . may stretch for pages without substantial advance in plot. That is a pity, for while the story is fleshed out with suspense, it lacks the mythic significance that justified the flat, unemphatic language of [Kim's] The Martyred [BRD 1964], which reappears here. . . . Not as impressive as The Martyred, [this] is nevertheless a worthy successor to it." H. A. Simpson
Sat 51:66 N 23 '68 600w

KIMBALL, PENN. Bobby Kennedy and the new politics. 214p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

973.92 Kennedy, Robert Francis. U.S.—Politics and government—1961- 68-18934

The purpose of this book "is not to tell us what the Senator thinks but how he operates, particularly within the author's definition of what currently passes for charisma among the electorate. The book . . . examines Kennedy as an exemplar of five elements of this new politics: money, fame, power, youth, and experience." (Sat R) Index.

KIMBALL, PENN—Continued

"The polarity of [RFK's] personality extremes is what makes this book interesting reading. The author weaves a narrative around his subject matter in such a way that the New Politics seems to be an attendant circumstance. His vignettes on the Kennedy staff and RFK'S relationships to LBJ and Senator McCarthy are especially valuable in a national election year. While the author intimates that Robert F. Kennedy may one day seek the Presidency . . . this reviewer still feels that the main thrust of the Kennedy movement is to control the party machinery so that it can be adapted to a new generation of voters in 1972. . . . This book should be read by all who want to understand the meaning of American politics in our own day and age. It would do well if the professional politicians gave it some attention." T. H. Scully

Best Sell 28:51 My 1 '68 900w

Reviewed by A. L. Fessler

Library J 93:1489 Ap 1 '68 280w

Reviewed by Dorothy English

Library J 93:2135 My 15 '68 70w [YA]

"[This book] went to press when its subject seemed far too realistic to consider attempting to unseat an incumbent President of the same party. Kimball's sensitive and well-written effort to discuss the new political practices in terms of their most notable practitioner is barely able to take note in four paragraphs of the fact that Senator Eugene J. McCarthy, an agent of the new, new politics, entered the lists late last November. . . . [But the book] tells us a good deal more about [RFK] the man and the politician, than any routine biography, and considerably more about modern electioneering too." Warren Weaver

Sat R 51:36 Ap 20 '68 850w

TLS p611 Je 13 '68 500w

KIMCHE, DAVID. The sandstorm; the Arab-Israeli war of June 1967: prelude and aftermath, by David Kimche and Dan Bawly. 319p pl maps $6.95 Stein & Day

956.94 Israel-Arab War, 1967- 68-25637

"The Israeli authors concentrate . . . on the political aspects of the war, its causes and consequences." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 119:560 N 30 '68 60w

"[This is] a wide-ranging collection and analysis of facts that do more to obscure the issues than to illuminate them. . . . It faithfully reflects the line of the Israeli hawks and, indeed, finds fault with the Israeli government only for being too tentative in the early days of the crisis. . . . Yet for all its glossy 'insider-dopester' approach to history, this book does contain a mass of supposed evidence—such as that regarding American thoughts and actions—that should not be ignored. And there is an effort to make some sense—although a party-line sense—of the period after the war. . . . But let the reader beware."

Economist 227:48 Je 28 '68 290w

Reviewed by David Shavit

Library J 93:3135 S 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler

Nation 207:443 O 28 '68 200w

"Shrewd and well-informed, economically and incisively written, illustrated with clear and well-designed maps, this is easily the best work so far published on the six-day war." Elie Kedourie

New Statesman 75:802 Je 14 '68 550w

"[The authors] are handicapped by their natural loyalties, which colour the whole of their book. . . . By taking up the story only in the last few years it precludes any real presentation of the Arabs' case. . . . This is not to suggest that the authors are simply Israeli propagandists. . . . They are by no means totally unsympathetic to the Arabs and they have done a lot of homework. . . . They appear to have picked the brains . . . of Israeli intelligence sources:

and they have produced a workmanlike job in that curious stylistic blend of certainty and anonymity that is so characteristic of journalists working in teams. . . . They sound as if they always knew what really happened, even when . . . they are actually admitting doubt. In short, they are the compleat contemporary journalists."

TLS p701 Jl 4 '68 340w

KIMCHE, JON. The unfought battle. 168p $5.95 Stein & Day

940.532 World War, 1939-1945—Diplomatic history 67-25619

Maintaining that "many of the most relevant facts in the official files of the Allied cabinets were deliberately suppressed [and] some were deliberately falsified, [the author proceeds to examine] . . . reasons for the French and British governments failing to act decisively when they were in a position to overrun the German lines and probably finish the war during the first weeks of September 1939. . . . [He attempts to] show how the Allied diplomatic and intelligence systems foundered and why, with these same systems, there can be no effective prevention of war. . . . Mr. Kimche has been military correspondent for the London Evening Standard, correspondent for the Observer and Reuters, and editor of the Tribune." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1354 D '68 160w

Economist 226:42 F 10 '68 270w

"Mr. Kimche's declared thesis, that the 'unfought battle' of 1939 was the greatest strategic blunder committed by the Allies in World War II, is sound enough in itself, although it is not novel. More debatable, however, is his true argument, that faulty intelligence and imperfect communications were the principal factors in the decision not to intervene on behalf of an embattled ally. . . . [The author] fails to examine adequately the moral condition of Europe between the wars, specifically, in this instance, the extreme aversion to a repetition of the debacle of World War I, shared by nearly all of the statesmen and generals of both sides. . . . This book is an interesting contribution to the history of diplomacy, but is not an authoritative one." E. G. Hamann

Library J 93:989 Mr 1 '68 300w

"[The author does not] always make it clear from what sources he draws his evidence. . . . There are many cases where he asserts that 'we know' things which were not known in 1939, but without supporting evidence. These things are important in a book which relies heavily on intricate interpretations of minute points of fact. There is much reliance, too, on chains of argument which begin: 'Could it be that . . . ?'—and proceed to take it for granted that it is so. Faults of technique do not, however, obscure the fact that Mr. Kimche has opened up an interesting and important argument."

TLS p226 Mr 7 '68 1000w

KIN, MIRI. The comeuppance of Emile the drummer; adapted; il. by Françoise Webb. unp $3.95 Walker & co.

398.2 Folklore, Flemish—Juvenile literature 68-12358

Adapted from a Flemish folk tale. "When Emile the drummer was dismissed from the regiment, nobody shed tears. He was a scoundrel who dropped worms in the cook's soup and rolled everyone in the barracks awake with his drum. . . . [His downfall occurs] when Emile mixes with a peasant and his wife and almost succeeds in exchanging his 'talking' drum for the peasant's entire savings." (Christian Science Monitor) "Grades two to three." (Library J)

"Not a bad story—it zips along—but no appealing characters here. There are strong and crisp drawings by Mrs. Webb." Elinore Standard

Book World p16 (children's issue) My 5 '68 30w

Reviewed by Sherry Petchul

Christian Science Monitor pB3 My 11 '68 50w

"There is admirable comic vigor in both story and pictures." M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:304 My 24 '68 20w

Reviewed by Virginia Haviland
Horn Bk 44:408 Ag '68 110w

Reviewed by M. A. Wentroth
Library J 93:1303 Mr 15 '68 50w

"Some scoundrels are amusing, but Emile the drummer amuses no one. . . . [He] is so unattractive that this tale would leave one slightly morose were it not for Françoise Webb's illustrations. Happily, Mrs. Webb plunged into the story with a bright palette of red, yellow, and black; drawing the characters with grand boldness, and infusing comedy into a situation which, in the long run, isn't awfully funny." Barbara Wersba
N Y Times Bk R p28 Je 9 '68 70w

KINDLEBERGER, CHARLES P. Europe's post-war growth; the role of labor supply; written under the auspices of the Center for Int. Affairs, Harvard university. 270p $6.50 Harvard univ. press

331 Labor supply. Europe—Economic conditions. Economic development 67-14342

The author "analyzes the significance of labor mobility and its capacity to relocate, with particular stress on . . . large-scale migration from Italy, Spain, Portugal, Greece, and Turkey into Switzerland, Germany, and France. Beginning with a description of the 'Lewis Model of Growth with Unlimited Supplies of Labor,' [he] surveys the various nations of Europe to show to what extent this model applies to each of them. He then discusses the diverse sources of labor and demonstrates how, in spite of a considerable amount of labor immobility within particular countries, migration contributes markedly to the establishment of a single, cohesive European labor market. . . . [The author is] Professor of Economics at M.I.T." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[Kindleberger] pieces a great number of varied facts together in a skillful and usually persuasive way. . . . In some respects, as the author disarmingly admits, this book is several works between one pair of covers. Thus the main contribution is the treatment of the various Western European countries . . . but there are also some very illuminating if general chapters on labor migration in Europe . . . while the last two chapters are a sort of afterthought on some economic aspects of the United States. Some chapters (e.g. Ch. X on the Costs and Benefits of Labor Migration) could well stand alone as journal articles. Neglecting these caveats, [the book], with its special reference to differences in extra labor supply from country to country, rewards careful reading. It is brimful of selected data." Stephen Enke

Am Econ 57:1331 D '67 700w

"This is a think piece rather than a monograph. There is no real attempt at quantitative verification of the main thesis or the many subtheses in which the book abounds. Exceptions are analyzed away. . . . Kindleberger argues that the raw manpower statistics understated the true increase in labor inputs on a number of counts. . . . I am inclined to believe that he is right, but the rules of the game would then require him to examine closely the countries that apparently conform to the model to make certain that the data and the underlying reality do, in fact, coincide. [This book is however] an eminently readable summary of recent economic trends in Europe, and one can go through it with pleasure and profit." Walter Galenson

Ann Am Acad 375:243 Ja '68 360w
Choice 5:98 Mr '68 130w

"Well organized and thoroughly documented, this work is recommended for libraries serving professional economists." H. H. Bernt
Library J 92:1924 My 15 '67 170w

"Kindleberger meets the old problem of the social sciences—no controlled experiments but a multiplicity of correlations, if not causal connections—quite well. He does not argue that an elastic labour supply was a causal factor, although it may well have been. . . . But he does contend that it was either a necessary, or at least a benign, permissive factor [and he demonstrates] . . . that the character and the rate of growth have now critically changed with the drying up of the pools of unemployment on the Mediterranean coasts. . . . [His book is] valuable as economic history rather than economic forecasting." Roger Opie

New Statesman 74:592 N 3 '67 300w

KING, C. WENDELL. Economic growth and development. See Morris, B. R.

KING, CLYDE S. Horace Mann, 1796-1859; a bibliography. 453p $12.50 Oceana
016.370 Mann, Sir Horace—Bibliography 66-11926

A bibliography of the "educator, secretary of the Massachusetts State Board of Education, reformer, legislator, journalist, writer, and college president. . . . [arranged under] Manuscript Collections; Writings by Mann; Books and Pamphlets; Periodicals and Serials; Dissertations and Theses; Newspapers; and Miscellany." (Choice) Index.

"The references seem to be accurate. The book is reduced, typed MS.; there are some typographical errors. The critical and explanatory comments on the items are extremely valuable. A fitting tribute from the librarian of a New York school named in Mann's honor. Highly recommended for university libraries and graduate students in education, sociology, and U.S. history. Valuable for undergraduates wanting quick access to the voluminous literature, primary and secondary."

Choice 4:638 S '67 160w

"This excellent bibliography is a tremendously important contribution to professional education and to scholarship in general. Although Clyde King emphasizes in his preface that there is more bibliographical work to be done on Horace Mann, this work deserves to be called complete. . . . A brief and somewhat inadequate index attempts to tie the whole together by referring to numbered items. The abbreviations are somewhat confusing and the reader will need to spend some time in learning how to use the book effectively. The subject headings, also, are unfamiliar. On the whole, however, the book is a valuable addition to knowledge. All libraries which attempt to serve scholars will want this book." J. C. MacCampbell

Library J 91:5378 N 1 '66 160w

KING, EDMUND J. Comparative studies and educational decision. 182p il $6 Bobbs
370.19 Education 67-29489

The author "puts forth a . . . case for comparative education, with its place in the study of human affairs, as a way to keep professional leaders in the mainstream of decision making in education. He discusses comparative studies as a method of honest inquiry and as an instrument of public reorientation and feels they must have a part in future educational and cultural change." (Library J)

"In this very academic presentation . . . nearly all [the] references, studies, examples, and selected bibliography items are from programs and writers in England. [The] analysis of comparative study seems comprehensive but would be hard for the layman to understand. This book could be used in college education collections and only in public libraries for scholars and specialists." E. W. Cummings
Library J 93:3780 O 15 '68 120w

"Dr. King's task is to show that there is a discipline of comparative education. This he does by attempting to illustrate that comparative education is an academic specialism in itself."

TLS p604 Je 6 '68 180w

KING, LARRY L. . . . and other dirty stories; foreword by Willie Morris. 236p $5.50 World pub.

817 U.S.—Civilization—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. 68-18256

These essays, many previously published in periodicals, discuss such subjects as "Sugar" Ray Robinson, Louis Armstrong, William F. Buckley, Senator Joseph McCarthy and the

KING, L. L.—Continued

House Un-American Committee [and] professional football." (Library J)

"All through the book, King is at his best when he is on familiar turf. L.B.J. is served up with spicy quotes. Fundamentalism at Bob Jones University in South Carolina not only convinces the reader that God is alive but that He might be making a comeback. . . . The most beautiful piece in the book [is] 'Requiem for ■ West Texas Town.' Other pieces don't hold up so well. His article on a party at Norman Mailer's is nothing more than a chatty, over-precious New Yorker column. . . . But King's successes far outweigh his failures. . . . His best writing is in a solid American literary tradition—he is fine when boyhood is recalled, when familiar faces and accents spur memory, and when his feet reach native soil." Joe Flaherty

Book World p4 S 29 '68 700w

"[These essays are] full of humor and cutting satire, in ■ style reminiscent of old prose. . . . King is committed to American values and obviously has faith in the nation. . . . You cannot judge this book by its sensational title—it has a definitely serious undertone and is well recommended for public libraries." S. J. Riccardi

Library J 93:3787 O 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 207:540 N 18 '68 120w

"[King] is at his best when dealing with the non-event, the vapid individual, or the blatantly boring. . . . [His] specialty involves putting on the persona of the 'poor-Texas-countryboy', . . . and striking out at what he believes to be the foibles of the snobs and simpletons of this world. He . . . occasionally writes an interesting essay. That is, as long as he's not selling his own rigidly dogmatic brand of politics. . . . He is one of the better pop-journalists. . . . [Many of the pieces] were good reading when they appeared in Harper's, and will probably be of some interest to those readers interested in fugitive literature; but whether they warranted re-publication in book form remains to be seen." P. P. Witonski

Nat R 20:1075 O 22 '68 250w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff
NY Times Bk R p16 N 3 '68 800w

KING, MARIAN. Mary Baker Eddy: child of promise; il by David Hodges. 184p $4.50
Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Eddy, Mary (Baker)—Juvenile literature 68-11942

A "biography of the founder of the Christian Science Church . . . to the age of 45 when she began her healing and teaching. . . . The author attempts to demonstrate the spirit of the woman and to trace the influences which resulted in the book Science and Health. [Index.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"[This book] is designed for the 12-year-olds and up, but in its careful presentation of detail and its scrupulous concern for the facts of Mrs. Eddy's life before 1867, it offers an excellent guide for readers of any age. In the final chapter Miss King takes the poetic license of permitting Mrs. Eddy to reflect back on the growth of Christian Science from the impetus of her discovery to her last public act, the establishing of The Christian Science Monitor. . . . [The author] intrudes little of her own creativity as a writer. She allows the facts to speak for themselves, and one finds again, in reading these pages, that such details have a unique interest all their own. There is also an old-fashioned quality of serenity that recapitulates a more leisurely New England." Henrietta Buckmaster

Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 2 '68 250w [YA]

"This adulatory and stereotyped biography . . . does not mention any of the controversy surrounding [Mary Baker Eddy's] life and work. The account of her childhood years growing up in a devout home as the youngest of six children discusses her ill health, but neglects to mention the hysterical seizures which have been referred to by other authors. . . . Few young people who do not already have an interest in Mary Baker Eddy's faith will want to plow through the many pages of family and personal trials and tribulations. Libraries would do well to wait for a more complete, less partisan account." E. P. Hawley

Library J 93:[3317] S 15 '68 220w

KING, MARTIN LUTHER. Where do we go from here; chaos or community? [by] Martin Luther King, Jr. [Eng title: Chaos or community?] 209p $4.95 Harper

323.4 Negroes—Civil rights. U.S.—Race relations 67-17072

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1416 F '68 150w

Economist 227:51 Ap 6 '68 280w

Reviewed by Edmund Ions
New Statesman 75:384 Mr 22 '68 420w
TLS p394 Ap 18 '68 1700w

KINGDON, ROBERT M. Geneva and the consolidation of the French Protestant movement, 1564-1572; a contribution to the history of Congregationalism, Presbyterianism, and Calvinist resistance theory. 241p $8
Univ. of Wis. press

284 Huguenots. France—Church history 67-24373

"In the present book, a sequel to his earlier Geneva and the Coming of the Wars of Religion in France, 1555-1563, the author concentrates on the . . . two problems which dominated Protestant activity in France. . . . One was the problem of how the Reformed Church should be organized; the other was the problem of how the Reformed Church should deal with the French state." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The author has] added considerably to our knowledge of the precise ways in which Geneva, particularly as represented by Theodore Beza, influenced the formation of the Reformed Church in France. . . . Most unfamiliar, even to specialists in the field, will be the blow-by-blow account of the quarrel that threatened to disrupt the Huguenot church during these years, a quarrel between those who favored a democratic, congregational form of church government and the Genevans, led by the indomitable Beza, who wished to impose the rigid discipline and coherent organization that characterized the Genevan church. . . . The second problem to which Kingdon devotes his attention, that of the influence of the Genevan pastors on the Wars of Religion, seems to arrive at no decisive solution. Here, as in the preceding account of the controversy over church organization and discipline, Kingdon relies heavily upon material drawn from the unpublished records of the Geneva Company of Pastors." W. K. Ferguson

Am Hist R 73:1562 Je '68 480w

"Kingdon, an established Reformation historian, has produced an excellent study of the French Protestant movement from Calvin's death in 1564 to the disruption of the St. Bartholomew's Day massacres in 1572. Thoroughly documented by significant new research in the libraries and archives of Geneva and Zurich, it should be added to any collection concerned with the Reformation."

Choice 5:1150 N '68 150w

KINKEAD-WEEKES, MARK. William Golding; a critical study. by Mark Kinkead-Weekes and Ian Gregor. 257p $4.95 Harcourt

823 Golding, William Gerald 68-12579

"An essay on the art of fiction and a detailed analysis of Golding's first five novels, The Lord of the Flies [BRD 1955], The Inheritors. Pincher Martin [BRD 1957], Free Fall [BRD 1960], and The Spire [BRD 1964]. The influence of history, myth, and fable in Golding's work is appraised." (Choice)

"A good book of literary analyses, but the neophyte should ■ Golding plain."
Choice 5:624 J1 '68 200w

"[A] sound and illuminating book." A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 73:761 Je 2 '67 950w

"It is the distinguishing merit of [this study] that it is not at all refuted or undermined by the arrival of a bad novel by Mr. Golding. The book defines a remarkable sequence of fictions in terms congenial to the nature of Mr. Golding's art. It is therefore bound to become a standard work on the subject." Denis Donoghue
N Y Rev of Books 9:23 D 7 '67 40w

KINNELL, GALWAY. Body rags. 63p $4; pa $1.95 Houghton

811

67-23756

In this third collection the poet "focuses on our painful attachment to the minimal shreds of our mortality, our 'body rags.' In our last moments, and even in those instants when we have intuitions of harmony, peace or transcendence, we are involved with the decaying and desiring body." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Samuel Hazo
Commonweal 89:226 N 8 '68 300w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson
Harper 237:76 Ag '68 40w

"[When] Kinnell's first book of poetry, What a Kingdom It Was [BRD 1961] was published, he was hailed as an accomplished poet, which indeed he was. His The Avenue Bearing the Initial of Christ into the New World was probably the best long poem written that year. . . . His second book [Flower Herding on Mount Monadnock, BRD 1964] did not crackle and spark, but it did prove that his technique was sure. In this latest book some earlier themes—alienation, death, the skull beneath the skin, the violence of 20th-Century America—are more fully explored from their dark side. . . . This is disturbing poetry and not for all large collections." John Demos
Library J 92:3427 O 1 '67 140w

Reviewed by John Logan
Nation 207:244 S 16 '68 2100w

Reviewed by John Thompson
N Y Rev of Books 11:36 Ag 1 '68 220w

"Kinnell's third volume adds to his growing reputation as a superior lyric poet. There are many fine poems in Body Rags, and the most impressive thing about them is the distance they travel inward from beginning to end. Sometimes there are vaguenesses or rhetorical flourishes (and one poem, 'The Correspondence School Instructor,' goes on nine lines beyond its natural and brilliant conclusion), but the poems move deeper line by line, without any heavy breathing on the poet's part. We are kept in an easy commerce with the outer world—until we discover that the inner world has spoken." Michael Goldman
N Y Times Bk R p12 F 18 '68 210w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 44:63 D 28 '68 30w

Reviewed by Michael Benedikt
Poetry 113:188 D '68 1050w

"I often wish Kinnell would restrain his steaming imagination and concupiscent vocabulary. His third book of poetry is awash in the green language of fertility that springs from scum, of joy and disgust. I relish the relatively restrained poems such as 'Night in the Forest.' . . . But how powerful Kinnell is when his strengths all work together! In 'The Bear,' which I recommend for the anthologies, he imagines himself an Eskimo planting a sharpened bone wrapped in blubber for a bear, tracking the animal for days and living on its spilled blood, finally gorging himself on the fallen beast, wrapping himself in its skin, and dreaming of himself as a bear." Judson Jerome
Sat R 51:33 Je 1 '68 200w

"This collection is a good one; the poems are hard and lean, and the bones are sound. But the expected is here too: the poem about SAC bombers and suffering Asians (certainly a proper subject for any poet, but today a cheap subject for too many poets), the new mystical leaps into the concrete, the sad tries for shock and communion with the poor and out by means of the quick vulgarity." Va Q R 44:ciii summer '68 200w

Reviewed by Laurence Lieberman
Yale R 58:137 O '68 480w

KINNEY, JEAN. What does the tide do? Il. by Cle Kinney. unp $3.95; lib bdg $2.96 Scott, W.R.

551.4 Tides—Juvenile literature. Fishing—Juvenile literature 66-17574

Young Damon lies prone on a dock on Cape Cod "and below him he sees the wet sand with a scuttling crab but no water for fish. All day he spends as he has determined to do, watching the sea flood in, first green and then blue, bringing with it [a procession of] fishes of the deep, before it ebbs once again at the end of his long watch." (Sci Am) "Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"Excellent picture-story. . . . A brief scientific explanation of tides follows the story. The illustrations in pen and ink and color wash of the ocean and the fish are attractive, but the little boy is very wooden." E. T. Dobbins
Library J 91:4314 S 15 '66 100w

"With colorful drawings and an inviting story to read or to listen to, this is a first-rate introduction to science, to watching and thinking about how the world works." Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 217:142 D '67 110w

KINSELLA, THOMAS. Nightwalker, and other poems. 102p $4 Knopf 821 68-12673

"Thomas Kinsella's new collection is made up of poems written since 1961. His subject in general, and more specifically in two long poems, is a developing view of life as ordeal. . . . The poems in the final section are from the book Downstream, which was published in Dublin and London in 1962. Wormwood and the poem 'Nightwalker' have appeared only in limited editions." (Publisher's note)

"Mr. Kinsella's poetry searches out the sights, sounds, and feelings of helplessness and deterioration in the human condition. He sees man as a victim of a senseless life force which is incapable of any spiritual or intellectual certainty. . . . The volume contains poems commemorating W. B. Yeats, Austin Clarke, and others, but man's hopeless condition is paramount throughout the collection." Walter Waring
Library J 93:1148 Mr 15 '68 170w

"Kinsella [is] probably the most accomplished, fluent, and ambitious Irish poet of the younger generation. American readers have already been introduced to his work in 'Poems and Translations' but it has achieved more humanity since. . . . The more relaxed aspect of his talent reappears in lyrics like 'Dick King' and 'Chrysalides'; the latter must be one of the most gracefully fluent modern poems. If there is no one thing that Kinsella does better than anyone else, there is very little that he cannot do." John Montague
N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 18 '68 750w

Reviewed by Louis Bogan
New Yorker 44:63 D 28 '68 60w

KINSEY, ANTHONY. Introducing screen printing. 95p il $6.95 Watson-Guptill

764 Silk screen printing [68-10050]

The author, a teacher of art in England, seeks "to describe the materials and equipment required for [silk screen printing] . . . and to suggest some experiments which will provide a basis of experience from which further work can proceed." (Introd) Bibliography.

J Home Econ 60:679 O '68 20w

"[This is a reliable book with] stimulating illustrations and . . . reasonably priced. . . . The author describes practical aspects of the specific techniques, presents work of good quality and indicates the American and British suppliers. . . . Recommended for art teachers, students, crafts leaders, and the libraries which serve them." Delores McColm
Library J 93:2474 Jl 15 '68 20w

KIRBY, D. P. The making of early England. 320p pl $9 Schocken

942.01 Great Britain—History—To 1066 68-11534

"The author first provides a chronological account of the course of English history before and after the arrival of the Vikings. The Anglo-Saxon Conquest, the spread of Christianity, the Heptarchy, the Viking settlements, the monastic reform movement, and the Danish Conquest are outstanding aspects of a period that includes such varied personalities as Alfred the Great, Ethelred the Unready, Cnut, and Edward the Confessor. The second half of the book . . . is concerned with the practical realities of daily living, with the geography behind history. Individual themes include the social structure, administration, art, architecture, learning, agriculture, towns, and industry, and the surprisingly close contacts between England and the rest of the world." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Kirby writes well and with empathy for his topic and encourages the reader to consider his views without shutting off other avenues of intellectual pursuit. The book contains an adequate map, excellent integrated illustrations and a good selected, annotated bibliography. . . . Strongly recommended for the undergraduate library.

KIRBY, D. P.—Continued

Choice 5:1029 O '68 110w

"The specialist will find [this] a scanty and undocumented study; the general reader will find the allusions opaque, the style awkward, and the geographical references (particularly if he is an American) confusing. On the other hand, Professor Kirby is to be commended for a sophisticated use of sources, and for his willingness to attempt writing such a book with formidable and well-known competitors in the field such as P. H. Blair and F. M. Stenton. Recommended for university and advanced college libraries only." D. K. Fry

Library J 93:1396 My 1 '68 130w

"A sincere and competent restatement of a well-worn theme. . . . The earlier chapters narrate the political history of England between the departure of the Romans and the coming of the Normans. This account of endless warfare is frankly dull, but it is relieved by an interpolated chapter on the monastic revival in tenth-century England. . . . When he turns to consider 'Government and Society' and 'Cultivation and Commerce', Dr. Kirby becomes more interesting. . . . On the relations between land and people and on the everyday conditions of Anglo-Saxon life he is at his best. His book, which is finely illustrated, contains little that has not already been better said elsewhere, but he has courageously attempted a synthesis."

TLS p296 Mr 21 '68 200w

KIRBY, E. STUART. Economic development in East Asia. 253p $10 Praeger

330.95 East (Far East)—Economic conditions 67-26565

"This book reviews the economic development from 1945 to 1965 of . . . fifteen countries of East Asia. . . . Except where otherwise specified, all figures and statements are from official sources." (Introd) Index.

"This brief study is both rewarding and disappointing to the reader. Mr. Kirby, professor of economics in prewar Japan and in postwar Hong Kong, presents a well-organized summary of the region's characteristics and its development policies, and he illustrates with a profusion of statistical tables from standard sources. Unfortunately, the text and the tables are frequently repetitive; the data is all too often out of date; problems of data interpretation are largely neglected; and the statistics that are presented are used in a descriptive rather than in an analytical manner. Nevertheless, the extensive data gathered here will be useful to undergraduate social science majors." R. E. Will

Library J 92:4499 D 15 '67 140w

"The handling of statistics is as careless as their selection. Comparisons of untypical years replace proper trend analysis; index-numbers lump together trends of changing relative importance. . . . A lengthy discussion of 'the world's adverse balance of commodity trade' (with Mars?), and of the underdeveloped nations' share therein, is based on a statistical illusion. . . . On those occasions when Professor Kirby passes beyond the indigestible masses of unreliable data, his judgments are banal or wrong."

TLS p574 Je ■ '68 550w

KIRCHSHOFER, ROSL, ed. The world of zoos: a survey and gazetteer; Introd. by Bernhard Grzimek. 327p il col il $10.95 Viking

590.74 Zoological gardens 68-15015

"A scientific assistant at the Frankfurt Zoo, Germany, presents . . . behind-the-scenes aspects of zoos and zoo management. There are chapters on the zoo director, the zoo inspector, the zoo veterinarian, the difficulties in maintenance of certain mammal species, and some . . . biology of animal territoriality and space requirements." (Library J) A gazetteer section lists and describes country by country, zoos, aquariums and wildlife preserves in every part of the world. Originally published in 1966, under the title Zoologische Gärten der Welt.

"Each chapter is written by a person of experience; the discussions are informal and include personal experiences and anecdotes. The many pages of photographs and captions are excellent features of the book. . . . While each topic is covered superficially, several chapters will make enjoyable reading for animal lovers." J. H. Zar

Library J 93:1911 My 1 '68 120w

"Although the major features of operating a zoo are covered, the topics are treated somewhat unevenly. More than a hundred pages are devoted to a gazetteer of the world's major zoos, with extensive, but occasionally opinionated, descriptions of the larger ones; this section will be of less interest to all but the most confirmed zoo buffs. The major essays contain very few factual errors . . . but typographical errors abound, as if proof had been read by someone whose first language is not English. The volume is profusely illustrated with color." J. A. Davis

Natur Hist 77:72 Ag '68 450w

"As Dr. Grzimek says in the introduction, probably no more than one per cent of zoo visitors actually want to learn more about the animals and the problems of keeping them. This book seems to be aimed at that one per cent. . . . The style is generally light, the translation excellent, and the articles seem to deserve a more 'popular' audience than the price of the book will command. The chapter on the role of zoos in saving species from extinction is both topical and heartening. . . . Zoos are on the increase, a fact brought out well in the excellent gazetteer . . . in which much interesting information is compressed. Train and bus routes, opening times, facilities, details on animals (even the pet names), staff and research work are listed for all present-day zoos of considerable value to Dr. Grzimek's one per cent."

TLS p730 Jl 11 '68 850w

KIRILINE LAWRENCE, LOUISE DE. See Lawrence, L. de K.

KIRK, RUSSELL. The political principles of Robert A. Taft; by Russell Kirk &amp; James McClellan; a project of the Robert A. Taft inst. of government. 213p $6.95 Fleet press corp.

328.73 Taft, Robert Alphonso 67-24073

"This is not a biography so much as a topical examination of Senator Robert Taft's political philosophy. . . . [The authors] credit Taft with developing a coherent conservative political philosophy that is still useful today. Senator Taft's main effort, they say, was to protect democratic government and the individual from being overridden by pressure groups, both governmental and private. He strongly supported civil liberties and favored carefully administered government aid in education, housing and health. The authors also claim that Taft's aim in foreign policy was to serve the national interest, preserve peace, oppose the development of an American empire and maintain civilian control over military policy." (Library J) Chronology. Index.

"In praising Taft, Mr. McClellan and Mr. Kirk ignore important incidents. . . . Nevertheless, on the whole, this is a good exposition of the views of a usually constructive Conservative leader. As such it should be in all large public and academic libraries." George Schoyer

Library J 92:3648 O 15 '67 240w

"[The authors] traverse the major episodes of Taft's career, demonstrating throughout the Senator's careful method of building up a practical political position in keeping with first principles. Included are Taft's early battles with the New Deal, his criticism of TVA, his position on the '46 railway strike, his debates with Prof. T. V. Smith, the battle for Taft-Hartley, the Nuremberg controversy, and countless other issues. In each case, Taft's major qualities emerge with clarity and force: high intelligence, hard work, fidelity to conviction." M. S. Evans

Nat ■ 20:351 Ap 9 '68 1200w

"Although [this] is described on the jacket as being 'vigorously and impartially written', it is neither, it is a pious panegyric and, one suspects, not the kind of panegyric that so tough-minded a man as Senator Taft could be expected to like. Professor Kirk and Mr. McClellan admit that, in the academic sense, Taft was not a political theorist. Indeed, . . . he accepted and advocated state intervention in a way that should have scandalized Professor Kirk and Mr. McClellan (or at any rate should have distressed a Goldwater supporter like Professor Kirk). . . . Taft had, and earned, many admirers in both parties. . . . He was a good lawyer; he was an important Senator. He was upright and courageous. . . . But he could not afford to be as 'integer vitae scelerisque purus' as is asserted here. . . . No series of quotation from Burke will make of Taft a serious conservative thinker."

TLS p176 F 22 '68 550w

KIRKENDELL, LESTER A., jt. ed. Sex in the adolescent years. See Rubin, I.

KIRKENDALL, RICHARD S., ed. The Truman period as a research field. 284p $6 Univ. of Mo. press

973.918 U.S.—History—1945-1953. Truman, Harry S. 67-19500

"This book is a product of a conference [held in the Truman Library] of historians, political scientists, and archivists held in April 1966 to take stock of scholarly work on the Truman administration. The volume brings together papers by six of the participants in the conference, and the editor's introductory essay discusses opportunities for research. The other essays deal substantively with the Truman administration: foreign and military policies, by D. S. McLellan and J. W. Reuss; economic policies, by B. J. Bernstein; social welfare policies, by R. O. Davies; civil rights and civil liberties, by W. C. Berman; and the Truman presidency, by E. E. Cornwell, Jr." (Am Hist R) Chapter bibliographies. Bibliography. Index.

"The papers are generally good, though one or two are somewhat perfunctory and another is rather too concerned with the deficiencies of earlier research. . . . [These scholars] destroy some old stereotypes, challenge a number of earlier interpretations, and advance several fresh hypotheses. A few of the writers, particularly Bernstein, reflect an incipient 'revisionism' that questions the necessity and value of the containment policy and is more critical than previous interpretations of Truman's failure to accomplish more in domestic affairs. . . . The book can be read profitably as a critique of earlier scholarship. . . . Also, several of the essays, particularly Kirkendall's cogent survey of the conference recommendations, provide many suggestions concerning research needs and opportunities." D. W. Grantham

Am Hist R 73:1677 Je '68 400w

"Bernstein's 'Economic Policies' is the best chapter for bibliography and decisive judgments, but even it is marred by its author's desire to mention all his published and unpublished writings. . . . Bibliographical coverage is sloppy. . . . The unpublished material lists are more indicative of the Ph.D.'s granted by the authors' own universities than the national output. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 5:608 Jl '68 160w

"The essays in this volume are of uneven quality. All, however, utilize the most recent scholarship in judging the Truman administration. . . . Particularly outstanding is the essay dealing with Truman's foreign and military policies. In a detailed analysis, the authors present a conceptual framework within which the cold-war policy was formulated. . . . Some of the essayists in their zeal to list suggestions for research have created, it would seem, the misleading impression that the task of dissecting the Truman administration has hardly begun. . . . Surely such works as [J.] Jones' The Fifteen Weeks, [H.] Westerfield's Foreign Policy and Party Politics, [H.] Price's The Marshall Plan and Its Meaning [all in BRD 1955, and C. Crabb's Bipartisan Foreign Policy, BRD 1958] deal substantively with these and related questions. Nevertheless, in citing and discussing the literature already available and placing it in perspective, this volume is indispensable to the scholar." Sidney Warren

J Am Hist 55:181 Je '68 460w

KIRKMAN, JAMES S. Men and monuments on the East African coast. 224p 11 maps $7.50 Praeger

916.7 Africa, East—Description and travel. Africa, East—History. Africa, East—Antiquities 66-18745

The author "has been Warden of the Coastal Historical Sites of Kenya for the past sixteen years. . . . The book shows the turbulent history of the area through the monuments and relics of the past that have survived. It reveals also the cultural unity of the coast with its common Arab-African language, Swahili, and its Muslim faith and culture. . . . The sites on the coasts of Somalia, Kenya, and Tanganyika and on the islands of Zanzibar, Pemba, and Madagascar, where historical monuments have survived, are described. The monuments the author discusses are mainly mosques, palaces, forts and the pillar tombs which are peculiar to East Africa. The men are principally Arabs and Portuguese." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"One third of the pages are devoted to Mom-basa—particularly Fort Jesus, [the author's] headquarters—and Gedi, which he excavated. . . . This book is not about Africa but is concerned with outside elements and perpetuates the millennia-old scorn for things African. Almost nothing is said about the contact situations. Because the book is intended for popular consumption, we have no footnotes. . . . There is a very rudimentary bibliography. . . . Synthesis or analysis is largely confined to occasional, puckish comparisons with the modern world; and the kindest word that can be used for the index is 'adequate.' The book shows how much is available for study on the East African coast and also demonstrates how much additional investigation is needed of the foreign settlements and, more important, of their impact upon the African population and vice versa." Conrad Reining

Am Anthropol 69:535 O '67 600w

"From Somalia to Mozambique the narrow coastal strip has been settled and resettled by a variety of visitors since before the birth of Christ, leaving the remains which are the source materials of archeology. These remains are now being unearthed and studied, revealing a richness of quality and amount little suspected until recently. Mr. Kirkman's interesting account brings the record up-to-date." Harold Lancour

Library J 91:3719 Ag '66 100w

KIRKMAN, WILLIAM PATRICK. Unscrambling an empire; a critique of British colonial policy, 1956-1966. 214p maps $6.50 Humanities press

960 States, New, Africa—Politics. Great Britain—History—20th century. Great Britain—Colonies [66-75195]

The "former African correspondent for The Times [London] . . . points out many of the faults of Great Britain's policies in granting independence to former colonies. . . . The greater part of the book deals with Africa, particularly central Africa. Other areas such as Malaysia, the West Indies, and southern Arabia are included." (Choice)

"A rather depressing work. . . . Two of the best chapters are entitled 'More Federal Polities' and 'The Commonwealth—Fact and Fiction.' Since the work is devoted primarily to an area which is not well known to most people, a glossary of abbreviations and of names of people prominent in African politics would be greatly appreciated by the reader. In addition, there are many places where the author could, with only a few words, identify people more clearly. . . . With more background and explanation, this book could be even more valuable. Recommended, especially for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:390 My '68 90w

"The Empire, in important respects, is unscrambled. The unscrambling process lies in that twilight world between present politics and history. Mr Kirkman's book would have been better if, recognising this, he had written less urgently and more reflectively. . . . Yet there is no doubt that [he], in sympathy with the general pattern of policy but highly critical of its particular applications, has some shrewd comments to make. . . . There is a scrappy and rather unconvincing chapter on the Commonwealth and also chapters on the West Indies and South Arabia. But the substance of the book is rightly and inevitably African. Much of it is based on firsthand observation of transfers of power and the writing is enriched by personal experience. And while Mr Kirkman has clear opinions, his judgments are balanced, at times penetrating."

Economist 221:576 N 5 '66 240w

TLS p951 O 20 '66 330w

KIRKPATRICK, LYMAN B. The real CIA, by Lyman B. Kirkpatrick, Jr. 312p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

351.7 U.S. Central Intelligence Agency

68-10629

The author "served for 18 years in the CIA in prominent positions, including that of inspector general and executive director. . . . He deals mainly with the organizational and administrative developments of the CIA [and] also sets forth his ideas on the role of the CIA and its director as supplier of intelligence to the Government's policy makers. He does not discuss the operational activities of the CIA, with the exception of the Bay of Pigs incident." (Library J) Index.

KIRKPATRICK, L. B.—Continued

"A scholarly tome. . . . [The author] is understandably partisan in his views and he vigorously defends [the] service from attacks that are constantly being made upon it. . . . The book seems more like a learned thesis than a readable essay and it is filled with documentary references that often become boring or even tiring to any except a highly interested reader. Names are liberally sprinkled throughout the work; the reader is introduced into stories about the blunders at the Bay of Pigs, as well as the many petty and jealous inter-departmental feuds smoldering within the newly-born CIA. . . . [However] the book does not make the easiest reading in spite of its fascinating title and theme. Kirkpatrick tells the strength as well as the weakness of the agency and for that reason it is valuable. All in all, a reader will set down the book with the feeling that the CIA is well managed." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 27:408 Ja 15 '68 650w

Choice 5:1041 O '68 160w

Economist 228:47 J1 27 '68 430w

"The great amount of criticism and adverse publicity which the CIA has received in recent years [is] partially due, in [the author's] opinion, to lack of accurate information available to the public. . . . [His concern here is] the necessity, organization, and future of the intelligence system in a democratic society. As one of the few books which provide a favorable opinion of the CIA this should be added to the collections of both public and academic libraries." David Shavit

Library J 92:4512 D 15 '67 200w

New Yorker 44:183 Ap 13 '68 200w

"Most of the information Kirkpatrick provides here was already in the public record. The book's greatest value is its validation of certain facts about the CIA's rather obscure organizational history. From this insider's story much is to be learned about bureaucratic infighting and departmental jealousies. Kirkpatrick's opinions and observations deserve serious consideration because they derive from a thoughtful mind and unique experience. Nevertheless there are important and perhaps crucial questions on which he offers little enlightenment." H. H. Ransom

Sat R 51:33 Mr 16 '68 650w

KIRKUP, JAMES. Tokyo. 178p il $5 Barnes A.S.

915.2 Tokyo—Description

66-24927

A visiting professor at Japan's Women's University has written a social, topographical, economic, religious and artistic account of life in Tokyo today. Index.

"The inconsistencies of tone, the numerous errors, and the capricious spelling of Japanese words stress the outlandish aspects of Tokyo at the expense of the genuinely human side of life. . . . True, the author shows some ability at straight reporting, as when he describes interviews with a kabuki actor, a teacher of the Japanese dance, and a master of calligraphy. There is charm in Kirkup's directions on how to get lost in Tokyo and then find yourself again. But other descriptions, such as that of a no practice session, lack insight and chiefly reveal a desultory groping attempt to cover the subject completely. But despite its many faults, [the book] is readable, if you can stomach someone's private jokes, always esoteric, coy, and a shade off color." L. M. Zolbrod

Pacific Affairs 41:107 spring '68 300w

"This is decidedly the best book of its kind since the appearance, some thirty years ago, of George Calger's Tell Me About Tokyo. . . . Kirkup, a true Yedokko by adoption, has explored most of the ground, including many byways surely unknown to most residents. He understands and loves the city with discrimination and good sense. . . . As his earlier work (These Horned Islands [BRD 1963]) implied, [the author] is very much at home in Japan, perhaps because he is receptive, non-didactic, and blessed with the eyes and ears of a poet and the gumption of a north country man. His book, then, is wise and practical; and no traveler to the Great Wen of the Orient should be without it. It will save him expense, double his enjoyment."

TLS p740 Ap 18 '66 400w

KIRKWOOD, JAMES. Good times/bad times; a novel. 347p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

68-25750

"'Headmaster Brutally Slain by Student' read the headlines, and this is young Peter Kilburn's story of the crime in the form of a letter written to his lawyer from prison. Gilford Academy is an unfashionable private school where Peter is spending his senior year. Having lived a lonely life at home, he is looking forward to finding a 'best friend,' which seems impossible until the belated arrival of Jordan Legier, a sophisticated boy from a wealthy family. Their special relationship is threatened by the headmaster, a man deeply shaken by a homosexual scandal that had almost wrecked the school a few years before." (Library J)

"The difficult years of adolescence are chronicled by a brilliant young author in his second novel. . . . In excellence it certainly approaches J. D. Salinger's 'Catcher in the Rye' [BRD 1951], a novel with which it will inevitably be compared. . . . Academic libraries which have good collections of modern literature will want to order this book and will want to keep their eyes open for future books by [the author]." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 28:330 N 15 '68 600w

"The saving grace of the first-person narrative must be a grace of style: The narrator must have a voice, unique and unmistakable, as Tristram Shandy has, and Huck Finn, and Holden Caulfield. Mr. Kirkwood's narrator does not quite have that. I found his book readable; exciting, even melodramatic. . . . But I didn't really know his central figure, and because I didn't there was a hollowness at the middle, and his sufferings did not move me as they should have." Patrick Crutwell

Book World p18 N 24 '68 300w

Reviewed by Barbara Pfrogner

Library J 93:3799 O 15 '68 130w

"Just as Holden Caulfield (whom Mr. Kirkwood's hero dangerously resembles) has apparently failed to turn on new generations of readers and remains a unique phenomenon of the fifties so is there something Salingerish old-fashioned about this rather slick novel. . . . It may be O.K. for the movies (it has already been sold to Hollywood), but [it is] oddly unconvincing." Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:603 D 2 '68 100w

Reviewed by Richard Bradford

N Y Times Bk R p77 D 8 '68 750w

KIRSCH, ROBERT. West of the West; witnesses to the California experience, 1542-1906; the story of California from the conquistadores to the great earthquake, as described by the men and women who were there, by Robert Kirsch and William S. Murphy. 526p pl maps $10 Dutton

979.4 California—History

66-21298

In this history of California over four centuries, the authors have combined the accounts of eyewitnesses with their own narrative text. Bibliography. Index.

"A readable popularization of California's pre-20th-century history. . . . [with] a live, almost three-dimensional feeling. . . . The presentation is extremely uneven. The heroic period of California's history comes off best. . . . The gold rush era and the last three decades of the 19th century are treated superficially."

Choice 5:257 Ap '68 200w

"Ten dollars seems a bit steep, but the story should appeal to the general reader and to the student. The bibliography provides a guide for building up California collections. Public and college libraries will find this book useful." Marco Thorne

Library J 92:4502 D 15 '67 150w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus

N Y Times Bk R p6 F 25 '68 900w

"The compilers have accomplished two important objects: they have put together in a well-fashioned mosaic the story of the Far West

... and they have recovered much neglected material from early books, archives, old magazine files East and West, and other sources. Their bibliography is full of titles familiar only to the specialist, and their pages contain long passages of quoted material that will be of enduring value to the student and strike the ordinary reader as fresh. Some will question the compilers' decision to exclude selections from Californian and Western fiction. . . . But the reason was sound. . . . Every part of this treasury [is] completely trustworthy. . . . [and is] not merely the material of good history but of sober, scholarly history. . . . In short, the book can be prized as an addition both to history and to Western literature." Allan Nevins
Sat R 51:46 F 24 '68 950w

KIRSCHT, JOHN P. Dimensions of authoritarianism: a review of research and theory [by] John P. Kirscht and Ronald C. Dillehay. 168p $6 Univ. of Ky. press

301.15 Personality. Attitude (Psychology) 67-17850

The authors "review and analyze the research and criticism that has developed around The Authoritarian Personality [BRD 1950] and the 'F Scale' to measure authoritarianism since their appearance. The authors have arranged the material in sections dealing with [the study] itself and aspects of the concept of authoritarianism in its relation to personality, to beliefs such as religion and politics, and to social behavior. In the text they discuss the relationships of the individual studies analyzed, and they include each study in a list of references. Their conclusions seem to be that the concept of authoritarianism is complex and that the possibilities of continued research are infinite." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Although this is a useful book as it stands, it promises more than it delivers. [It] leaves the reader with the feeling that a much better contribution could easily have been made had the authors extended its depth and scope. . . . Relatively little attention is given. . . . to other approaches to authoritarianism, such as Roach's dogmatism. The book also gives very little coverage to research done outside the United States or to cross-cultural studies. Consequently, [it] is far from a comprehensive and definitive review of research. Poor organization and inconsistent classification of research studies also mar its usefulness. . . . Despite its weaknesses, the book does provide a quick and accurate reference source for research on authoritarianism. It would seem to offer particular benefit to students just being introduced to the concept." D. D. Smith

Am Soc R 33:483 Je '68 500w

Reviewed by H. A. Scarr
Ann Am Acad 376:203 Mr '68 290w

"One of the most controversial, yet persistently interesting strands of social science research in recent decades has been the many studies stimulated by [T.] Adorno, et al. The Authoritarian Personality. . . . Basically the notion is that certain individuals exhibit personality characteristics which form an internalized syndrome involving needs to be deferential to superiors and punitive toward subordinates, perceptual rigidity, hostility toward 'out groups,' and other distinctive traits. This volume provides a convenient, sensibly organized summary of about 250 studies (including the various previous summaries of the literature). It brings the study of 'authoritarianism' up to 1966. It is a useful volume."

Choice 4:1286 Ja '68 170w

"The book is well documented and presented in a manner familiar to behavioral scientists, however, the lay reader will not find it easily rewarding." Sophie Mitrisin

Library J 92:2590 Jl '67 140w

KIRST, HANS HELLMUT. The wolves; tr. from the German by J. Maxwell Brownjohn [Eng title: The fox of Maulen]. 447p $6.95 Coward-McCann

68-11881

"Alfons Materna, a wealthy farmer of Maulen in East Prussia, begins his plans for revenge the day his eldest son is murdered by the National Socialists. Since he cannot fight back openly, he seems to join with 'the wolves' as Nazism takes over Germany. He and a few others sabotage, harass, humiliate, and undermine the party, their leaders and their plans. Along the way he sacrifices his other son, his daughter, and his wife to the lust and greed of the party." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:106 Jl '68 30w

"There is about the story an aura of unreality because it does not seem to take into account the thoroughness and brutality of the Nazi regime and does not seem to recognize the totality of the second world war. . . . The venality of the Nazi bureaucrat is believable and so is the revolt, by a few good men, against a brutal regime. Yet there are just too many able-bodied youths floating around when the Germans are presumably scraping the bottom of the manpower barrel; there is too much delight in smuggling Jews into Poland where their fate would be at best dubious. These are sagging inconsistencies; . . . what is good is the presentation of some real heroes and the insistence on the presence of decency in the midst of moral squalor. The translation, 'is remarkably smooth and colloquial.' W. B. Hill

Best Sell 28:160 Jl 15 '68 900w

"Enlivened by earthy humor, busty women, lusty men, and pompous, stupid party leaders, the book is a serious, bitter, humorous, ironical tale and is highly recommended for public and academic libraries." S. S. Swanson

Library J 93:2259 Je 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by David Haworth
New Statesman 76:146 Ag 1 '68 300w

"This is the kind of writing that is the death of satire—which, I assume, is Kirst's intention. (After all, he is the creator of Gunner Asch, and wrote 'The Night of the Generals') [BRD 1964]. It is the kind of writing that makes it unimportant whether or not the author agrees with the Hitlerite sentiments of his character. History, in the hands of novelists such as this, makes a mockery of all that has happened in this bloody century (historically) and all that has happened in this wonderful century (artistically). No one you or I know would sit through a movie on Germany done in this manner. Why must the novel be the last refuge of pseudo-historical nonsense?" Daniel Stern

N Y Times Bk R p29 Ag 4 '68 430w

Reviewed by Richard Plant
Sat R 51:25 Jl 20 '68 430w

TLS p841 Ag 8 '68 240w

KIRZNER, ISRAEL M. An essay on capital. 147p $5 Kelley

339 Capital 66-22632

In this "discussion of certain aspects of traditional capital theory, . . . [the author] presents a basic point of view about capital and from this point of view evaluates and criticizes existing theories of capital. Kirzner's fundamental view is that capital goods are intermediate goods that result from earlier planning." (Am Econ R) Bibliography. Index of authors.

"A number of rather interesting discussions of topics related to capital theory appear in the book. I shall mention only two of these. The first is the idea that in economics 'bygones are bygones.' . . . [However] to elevate this observation to a general principle, as Kirzner appears to do, raises difficulties. . . . The modern theories of investment and of the consumption function, for example, suggest that past events have a continuing influence on expectations. . . . [He also raises] the problem of whether waiting should be considered as a factor of production. . . . Surely this discussion of waiting as a factor of production is a tempest in a teapot. . . . There can be little doubt that Kirzner's basic point of view is significant in capital theory and enables him to make some interesting evaluations of other theories. But is it the magic wand that makes all mysteries disappear? I doubt it." R. W. Pfouts

Am Econ R 58:196 Mr '68 1150w

Choice 4:1021 N '67 200w

J Pol Econ 76:157 Ja '68 270w

KISHON, EPHRAIM. Unfair to Goliath; tr. from the Hebrew by Yohanan Goldman. 232p $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

892.4 Israel—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. 68-13692

A book of humor by the Israeli newspaper columnist.

"Kishon's comic treatment is light and humorous, it is not unique or original. His subject matter, locale, and style are all in the current taste and his humor should have popular appeal." Sophie Mitrishin

KISHON, EPHRAIM—Continued

Library J 93:752 F 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:2741 J1 '68 40w [YA]

"[What Kishon] thrives on, as this new collection of essays makes clear, are day-to-day absurdity, commonplace pretentiousness and the hilarity of living in a country with high ideals but only average human instincts. . . . Mr. Kishon is even witty about the kibbutz. (Take it from me, that is not easy.) In short, everything is grist to his sharp-bladed but essentially benign mill." Rinna Samuel

N Y Times Bk R p12 Ap 14 '68 700w

KITAGAWA, DAISUKE. Issel and nisel; the internment years. 174p $5.95 Seabury

301.453 Japanese in the U.S. World War, 1939-1945—Evacuation of civilians. Concentration camps 67-21035

The author, an immigrant Japanese Episcopal clergyman, has written "the story of the evacuation and internment of 110,000 people of Japanese descent during World War II. Issel (those born in Japan) and Nisel (those born in America) were put into 10 camps scattered throughout the United States. First describing the Issel and Nisel in pre-war rural Washington, their attitudes toward each other and toward Japan and America, Dr. Kitagawa then shows how the war and camp life altered these feelings." (Library J) Bibliography.

Choice 5:258 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by M. E. Marty

Christian Century 85:26 Ja ■ '68 600w

"Mr. Kitagawa has performed a valuable service in compiling this deeply personal, yet highly representative, account which belongs in public and education libraries." R. D. Johnson

Library J 92:3638 O 15 '67 340w

"There is some description of daily life in camp, but the emphasis is on the psychological and emotional effects of life behind barbed wire. The author's observations are keen, and he warns that laws that are now standing would allow this history to repeat itself." Sumika Yamashita

Library J 92:4638 D 15 '67 120w [YA]

"[Mr. Kitagawa] makes it plain that our camps resembled the Nazi ones only in so far as they were places of imprisonment, under military guard and surrounded by barbed wire. . . . Camp officials showed decency and understanding. So, too, does Mr. Kitagawa in relating his 'personal experiences within the context of corporate experience of the Japanese Americans . . . in their forced internment years, 1942-1944.' Actually, he shows too much of the spirit of Christian charity. Only in his epilogue does he make judgments, and they have a terrible relevance to today. . . . From Mr. Kitagawa's book one draws the inevitable conclusion that the internment was cruel, vicious, and unnecessary. . . . One of the saddest lessons of the internment camps is that even men of good will can become infected with the virus of hate on racial grounds." Leo Katcher

Sat R 51:89 Ja 13 '68 650w

KITAGAWA, JOSEPH M., ed. Folk religion in Japan. See Hori, I.

KITAGAWA, JOSEPH M., ed. The history of religions; essays on the problems of understanding, by Joachim Wach [and others] ed. by Joseph M. Kitagawa with the collaboration of Mircea Eliade and Charles H. Long. 264p $6.95 Univ. of Chicago press

200 Hermeneutics. Religions 67-20574

"This volume inaugurates a new series on contemporary theology, written by graduates or faculty members of the University of Chicago Divinity School, to be published under the general title Essays in Divinity. It marks the 100th anniversary of the founding of the Divinity School and the 75th for the University. . . . This initial volume . . . consists of 11 essays on the problem of religious understanding or hermeneutics as seen by a group of specialists in the history of religions. . . . [Contributors include] Paul Tillich, Mircea Eliade, and . . . Thomas J. Altizer." (Library J) Index.

"[Most of the articles here were presented at] the conference on the present state of the history of religions held in the fall of 1965 at the University of Chicago. . . . [This] is for the most part a joy to read. . . . It begins and ends with pieces by established masters, now dead. . . . In between there is a generally excellent series of articles by . . . Kitagawa, C. H. Long . . . and others. All of the essays, except perhaps the specifically descriptive paper by Jerome Long, attack the fundamental problem of hermeneutic—of understanding and interpretation—in the history-of-religions field. This is a helpful book for all those concerned with the need to understand the complexities of man's religious life. It contributes both insight into the discipline of the history of religions and clues to the assistance that discipline may give the practicing theologian in the classroom and pulpit." J. C. Cooper

Christian Century 85:115 Ja 24 '68 300w

"The essays are on the whole very well written, and the subject matter should interest students in several allied areas such as anthropology, history, and philosophy. Recommended for college, university, and larger public libraries." J. A. Clarke

Library J 92:2580 J1 '67 230w

KITSON CLARK, G. The critical historian.

214p $5.95 Basic bks.

907 Historiography 67-21492

"A reader in constitutional history at Cambridge compares the methods of history with those of the legal profession and those used in natural sciences. . . . [He explains] what constitutes historical fact . . . [and] the techniques of [criticism]." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Allan Nevins

Book World p6 My 5 '68 800w

Choice 5:1018 O '68 220w

Christian Century 84:1382 O 25 '67 60w

Reviewed by Max Beloff

Encounter 30:88 Ja '68 550w

"The principles of historical criticism set forth here will be familiar to professional historians. Writing in a clear and lively style, Kitson Clark . . . describes some of the classic cases of forged and altered documents and bad editing, as well as some of the far more subtle instances in which bias has led brilliant English historians to misuse evidence. . . . For American students of American history the material on historical criticism in A. Nevins' Gateway to History [BRD 1938] probably remains more directly useful, but Clark's volume will also have interest and value." Walton Bean

J Am Hist 54:867 Mr '68 200w

"[The author] draws examples [illustrative of historical methods], which are plentiful and extremely interesting, almost completely from modern history. This book should appeal to educated laymen, high school seniors, college freshmen, and secondary school history teachers." Judah Adelson

Library J 92:4500 D 15 '67 170w

"A thought-provoking, valuable and in some respects infuriating book. . . . [intended] to warn us against the many traps, sophistications, negligences and downright dishonesties of which the reader of history should be aware in satisfying his curiosity about the past. [Clark's] method is to analyse a number of sources of error, illustrating them with examples drawn from a considerable range of historical study. . . . The book betrays the vices as well as the virtues of the academic mind. . . . The law on which [Clark] draws so frequently . . . tends to be English law, which is concerned with establishing particular propositions, and not with motives and explanations. . . . The analogy between history and the descriptive sciences treads still riskier ground . . . [for] the truth [is] that observation in the scientific sense is not possible for historians writing about the past. . . . [This is a] stimulating book."

TLS p1041 N 2 '67 1050w

KITSON CLARK, G. S. R. An expanding society; Britain, 1830-1900. 188p $5.50 Cambridge

942.081 Great Britain—Politics and government—1837-1901 67-13257

The author "describes the expansion and structural change of society in Great Britain under the impact of the population explosion, the Industrial Revolution and the 'liberal revolution' . . . [and] analyses the origins of the problem of Imperialism and the fate of so-called Liberalism in Great Britain. The last section is devoted to a discussion of the varied intellectual and spiritual life stimulated by the forces of expansion—Romanticism and the Evangelical Revival. The final chapter deals with the increase in the regulative powers of the state and its increasing range of responsibilities. This study is complementary to, and an extension of, the author's previous book, The Making of Victorian England [BRD 1963]. (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Originally a series of lectures delivered in Melbourne in 1964, the book is at times disappointingly thin in content; nevertheless, it contains many intriguing hypotheses and helpful suggestions for further research. . . . Two of the most interesting chapters in the present volume are those on imperialism and the Victorian administrative state. In the former [Kitson Clark] indicates the difficulties for historical understanding involved in the use of the 'masked' word 'imperialism.' The latter chapter is the longest and most important in the book, and indicates a stronger inclination toward a 'Tory interpretation' than was shown in his earlier administrative studies. Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 5:547 Je '68 200w

"Mr. Kitson Clark, one of the safest guides across the shifting sands of Victorian England, has given us in [this book] . . . an instructive and stimulating sketch of [the] times, though the word 'sketch' may give a rather thin reflection of the wisdom and learning in his pages. . . . The theme running throughout them all is the expansion of England in the nineteenth century, and the improvisation to meet it which has to be made by Parliament and by the private exertion of individuals. . . . This book reminds us how much the steady flow of social legislation in this period sprang less from party than from 'individual ministers, individual members of Parliament, individual civil servants and members of the public' reacting as best they might to contemporary problems. . . . It is on such and many other topics that the reader will find Mr. Kitson Clark an understanding and thought-provoking companion."

TLS p395 Ap 18 '68 800w

KLASS, PHILIP J. UFOs—identified. 290p pl $6.95 Random house

629.13 Flying saucers

67-22622

The "senior avionics editor for Aviation Week and Space Technology presents a new scientific explanation of Unidentified Flying Objects (UFO's) [suggesting] that legitimate UFO's have all the characteristics of freak atmospheric electrical phenomena. With his theory he explains the behavior and characteristics of UFO's other than that they are extraterrestrial spacecraft. He uses John G. Fuller's Incident at Exeter [BRD 1966], and Flying Saucers, a Look publication, as a basis for the beginning of his plasma-UFO theory. The majority of the Exeter UFO's were seen near high tension power lines. Conditions surrounding the sightings included the location near the ocean and the weather, which made it ripe for electric discharge. He makes a comparison between corona discharges, which produce 'kygelblitz' or ball lightning, and UFO sightings." (Library J)

"With 30 glossy illustrations (but no index or bibliography), the book is easy reading, but Klass seldom gives the physical theory behind his explanations, eloquent descriptions, and quotations of expert opinion. Readers will learn little science unless they have mastered college sophomore physics. . . . Klass is firmly convinced that no UFO's are extraterrestrial, but he is reserved in his criticism of the opposite view, and attempts to build a good dialectical case for his atmospheric plasma theory. In a few places his physics is misleading or incorrect . . . but [his] treatment of selected sightings is . . . a fairly good example of the objective scientific approach."

Choice 5:1157 N '68 190w

"This book will certainly disappoint simple trusters in the little green men. And it spares no punches in answering such prominent ufologists as Drs. Hynek and McDonald, the Lorenzens, and John Fuller. One awaits with interest their riposte. But Mr. Klass is no spoil-sport. His identification may or may not turn out to be the final answer. But he deserves the fullest credit for recording a thoughtful and thoroughly documented scientific investigation covering all the principal ufological areas, incidents, and personalities, and then coming up with an equally well-documented scientific explanation. And all successfully combining technicality with readability, not to overlook his own strong vein of humor." P. J. Henniker-Heaton

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 14 '68 380w

"Ball lighting is a mysterious phenomenon which occurred long before UFO's were noted. Many of these were seen in various parts of the world in the 18th Century and in the 19th Century. Mr. Klass contacted experts in many fields to ascertain the theories for causes of these happenings; he did not leave anything to chance in his investigations. He cites many reports within the text in which individuals have seen the UFO and have experienced burns and irritations. He says that if the UFO's are plasma, persons viewing them at close range for any length of time could receive ultraviolet causing symptoms of 'ordinary sunburn.' Because of its completeness and Mr. Klass's clear presentation, the book will be useful not only to the research but also to the general reader. This book should be a part of any library having even one book on the subject." M. B. Wenger

Library J 93:198 Ja 15 '68 220w

Time 91:104 Mr 29 '68 180w

KLAW, SPENCER. The new brahmins; scientific life in America. 315p $6.50 Morrow

502 Science as a profession. Science—U.S.

68-31960

"The aim of this book is to portray the scientific community in the United States: to convey a sense of what it is like to be a scientist in America in a time when science has become a form of established religion, and scientists its priests and ministers." (Pref) Appendix: Why social scientists don't fit in. Bibliography. Index.

"The 'new brahmins' are the American scientists of today who are rapidly moving as a group toward an elitist status. . . . [Klaw's] book is based not only on the standard sources pertaining to the subject but also on his personal interviews with 125 men of science. The anonymous statements gathered from the interviewed scientists bring a sense of immediacy to the text; at the same time, they frustrate the reader who would like to know more about each speaker so that he could evaluate his remarks. . . . [The author] provides a clear picture of the nature and structure of the scientific enterprise in 20th-Century America." George Basalla

Library J 93:3148 S 15 '68 130w

"[This book] is a meritorious contribution to non-reverential but responsible scrutiny of the scientific community. . . . [It describes] what it is like to work or study today in various parts of that vast and amorphous entity conveniently referred to as 'the scientific community.' And, in contrast to the evangelical literature that the scientific community pours forth to attract new recruits, the impression that emerges is that for many of the community's inhabitants, scientific life today can be quite unpleasant [and] . . . not particularly rewarding financially or intellectually for the bulk of its practitioners. . . . One of the strengths of Klaw's book is that he not only takes us through the affluent environs of the community, but also through the heavily populated back alleys and ghettos [of] . . . industry, where [the science and engineering graduates who lack the Ph.D.] 'become part of an intellectual proletariat.'" D. S. Greenberg

N Y Times Bk R pl N 17 '68 1600w

"The novelty of this book is . . . the method of inquiry. . . . It is not clear why Klaw gives so little weight to European opinion. . . . The treatment [of the role of the national scientists in chapter 9] is exceedingly sketchy, and the reader learns too little about the contributions of American science to political decisions and the continuing international dialogue which is taking place (by means of the Pugwash conferences, for example) in the attempt to find solutions for some of our global problems. . . . [Klaw] owes it to the readers of the next edition of an otherwise stimulating and level-headed book to reveal more completely the full measure of social responsibility which the bulk of American scientists are prepared to assume for the good of mankind." R. E. Marshak

Science 163:60 Ja 3 '69 2750w

KLEIN, DEANA T., jt. auth. Discovering plants. See Klein, R. M.

KLEIN, H. ARTHUR. Great structures of the world, by H. Arthur Klein and Mina C. Klein. 288p $4.95; lib bdg $4.86 World pub.
721 Architecture—Juvenile literature. Civil engineering—Juvenile literature 68-14699
This book describes the construction of structures ranging from the Ziggurat of Ur to the United Nations headquarters which "reveal more than . . . engineering skill—they also express the spirit of the society that produced them." [It describes the building of the Tower of Babel, the Pyramids of Egypt, the Great Wall of China, the Parthenon, the Colosseum of Rome, . . . Machu Picchu, . . . Santa Sophia, the Grand Coulee Dam, the Netherlands Reclamation Project, [the Taj Mahal, the Panama Canal and the Empire State Building]. (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to ten." (Library J)

"Excellent for high-school library purchase."
Best Sell 28:227 S 1 '68 270w

"Emphasis is on the social origin and impact of each structure. The facts are accurate but the writing is pedestrian, and the information is available in other works on the individual cultures." Terry Myers
Library J 93:1812 Ap 15 '68 90w

KLEIN, HERBERT S. Slavery in the Americas; a comparative study of Virginia and Cuba. 270p $6.95 Univ. of Chicago press

301.45 Slavery in Cuba. Slavery in the U.S. Virginia—Social conditions 66-23692

The author "deals with the years 1837-65, [comparing] Cuba with Virginia and [suggesting] why North America looks worse than its southern neighbors so far as this subject is concerned." (Christian Century) Index.

Reviewed by K. M. Stampp
Am Hist R 73:769 F '68 850w

Reviewed by Robert Blauner
Am J Soc 73:648 Mr '68 700w

Reviewed by S. W. Mintz
Am Soc R 33:471 Je '68 1350w

Reviewed by F. J. Klingberg
Ann Am Acad 337:197 My '68 250w

"Contributes to historical discussion intended to clarify the meaning of race relations in the Americas. . . . Using primary and secondary materials, [this work] emphasizes colonial conditions but keeps modern problems and conditions in view. Though well written, it is likely to prove most serviceable to scholars in the field, rather than general or undergraduate readers."

Choice 4:1045 N '67 120w

Christian Century 84:838 Je 28 '67 20w

Reviewed by Harry Bernstein
J Am Hist 54:894 Mr '68 500w

"Professor Klein teaches Latin-American history at the University of Chicago. He traveled as far as Spain to see the relevant original documents on this subject. He has verified the finds of Dr. Kenneth Stampp on the harshness of slavery in Virginia, and, by so doing, has exposed the subjective work of the pro-slavery apologist, U. B. Phillips. By comparison, the author has shown the relatively better treatment of Cuban slaves under Spain. The aftermath of slavery in Virginia finds today's Negro treated much worse than contemporary Cuban Negroes. This probably definitive and clearly-written work should be acquired by larger libraries." R. F. Kugler
Library J 92:237 Ja 15 '67 100w

"Whatever criticism it is necessary to make in detail of Dr Klein's work, his comparative approach will surely inaugurate a new era in studies of slavery, and everyone will salute his courage in embarking on this difficult but most worthwhile field. Salutations over however, it is regrettable to have to admit that Dr Klein's book has a number of defects which I can only attribute to a romantic regard for the Roman Catholic Church. This leads him to depict the homogeneity of Cuban slave society in glowing tones; to rely on 19th-century statistical evidence . . . of dubious authenticity; to treat the four hundred years of Cuban slave history almost as if they were contemporaneous; . . . to ignore a vast accumulation of facts on the steadily declining status of Cuban negroes throughout the 19th century; . . . and, finally, to commit the elementary error of supposing that because a humane law was promulgated in Madrid, this had any effect whatever on what was done in Cuba." Hugh Thomas

New Statesman 74:646 N 10 '67 500w

Reviewed by E. B. Smith
Social Studies 59:280 N '68 320w

"Objections to Professor Klein's study cannot be confined to . . . verbal excesses. Both his acceptance and employment of basic assumptions must be questioned. . . . [His book] is inadequate in its methodology, use of the findings of other historians, employment of language, and proof-correction. The damage inflicted by differing systems of slavery still awaits accurate assessment."

TLS p1170 N 30 '67 300w

Va Q R 44:xxviii winter '68 230w

KLEIN, HERBERT T. The police; damned if they do—damned if they don't. 252p $5.95 Crown

363.2 Police. New York (city)—Police 68-20474

"An anecdotal reminiscence of a former New York City police lieutenant. . . . For Klein, the policeman is the general practitioner of the ghetto who goes about taking care of the poor and disabled. [He maintains that] the constitutional guarantees upheld by the courts create a situation in which 'the rights of society as a whole are being ignored in the attempt to protect the rights of a small, but very dangerous, element of the community.'" (Newsweek)

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey
America 119:562 N 30 '68 60w

"A veteran of 25 years on the New York Police Force, Herbert Klein knows what he is talking about and talks about it well, with vigor and humor. He is understandably irked, even outraged, by the bleeding-heart cries of Police Brutality, Police Indolence, Police Incompetence; and he has felt frustrated and disturbed by the tendency of courts to be lenient to criminals in the name of civil rights. . . . at the expense of society's right to protection from crime and the responsibility of the police to enforce the peace, under law. A good sound book that should be read as antidote to a sensational press which often gives the police a hard time."

Best Sell 28:123 Je 15 '68 200w

"[This book] displays such economic, social and judicial ignorance, such paranoic insularity and such latent prejudice that it reveals much more than it intends about the modern police mentality—or at least Klein's. His intellectual talents, as presented in his book, are largely reflexive. Ideas flash like bumper stickers across every page. Welfare is a handout to lazy minorities. Review boards 'meddle.' . . . Klein writes of being so busy in his Harlem precincts that he often had to throw the 'local inhabitants' out of his station house. . . . After 50 pages, [his] handcuffed prose becomes a joy. One begins to conjugate irregular police verbs. 'I commence, you respond, he and she proceed.'" Nicholas Pileggi

Book World p5 Je 23 '68 410w

Christian Century 85:820 Je 19 '68 50w

Reviewed by Sophie Mitrising
Library J 93:2637 Jl '68 140w

Reviewed by T. Crawford
Nat R 20:970 S 24 '68 230w

"One senses in Klein's collections of cases solved and unsolved that he was a fair and overtly unprejudiced administrator of street justice. [But he has a] sentimental view of the policeman who, in the course of a riot, 'might well have been stoned and shot at by the same youth he had helped bring into the world,' and . . . [he also has a] conspiratorial view of a society out to undermine the police." P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 71:92 Je 17 '68 550w

KLEIN, MINA C., jt. auth. Great structures of the world. See Klein, H. A.

KLEIN, RICHARD M. Discovering plants; a nature and science book of experiments, by Richard M. Klein and Deana T. Klein; pub. for the Am. mus. of natural history. 124p il col il $4.50 Natural hist. press

581 Botany—Juvenile literature 68-14178

This is a book of scientific experiments "in the growing of living [plants. The text.]

... charts and drawings illustrate plant movements, growth, the need of water, mineral nutrition, metabolism, hormones, and plant diseases. An Appendix lists sources of laboratory supplies, books on plant experiments, artificial lighting of plants, and balances." (Best Sell) Some of the material in this book was previously published in Nature and Science. Chapter bibliographies. Index. "Age twelve and up." (Commonweal)

Best Sell 28:277 O 1 '68 130w

"Simple experiments, designed to help the reader learn botanical basics in an active and concrete way, are carefully detailed in this useful book. Most of the experiments can be implemented with materials at hand or readily obtained. Many will yield dramatic results that will delight young scientists." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:292 N 22 '68 50w

"Teachers and students looking for science projects will find [this] extremely helpful. Twenty-seven outlined investigations, most of which are not duplicated in other juvenile books, feature explorations in plant physiology. Experiments are presented in open-end fashion and require quantitative measurements. Equipment requirements are simple, theory is clearly stated." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:4732 D 15 '68 90w

KLETTE, IMMANUEL J. From Atlantic to Pacific; a new interocean canal; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 143p maps $4.50 Harper

386 Canals. Panama Canal 67-15968

A "resumé of the history and operations of the present canal, and an . . . analysis of the major questions entailed in decisions on a future canal—methods of construction, economic and political aspects, and options and prospects." (Library J) Index.

"This short book is well worth having in any large library. . . . Most obvious omission (not Klette's fault) is a more detailed examination of the current dispute and discussions between the U.S. and the Republic of Panama."

Choice 4:1428 F '68 90w

"Three years at Headquarters, U.S. Southern Command, Panama Canal Zone, informed the author about the area and its problems, and convinced him of the need for greater public awareness of the issues involved in the U.S. commitment to a new sea-level transisthmian waterway. . . . Highly recommended for all concerned with world problems of particular significance to the United States." Robin LeSueur

Library J 92:2789 Ag '67 110w

KLINK, J. L. Bible for children; v 1. The Old Testament with songs and plays [songs and poems ed. by J. W. Schultz Nordholt; plays ed. by C. M. De Vries; collaborators: Jan van Biezen and others] il. by Piet Klaasse; tr. by Patricia Crampton. 313p $4.95 Westminster press

220.9 Bible. O.T.—Stories—Juvenile literature 68-10178

This "narrative of the Bible has been planned by author and artist as an integral whole to convey the spirit of the Scriptures through prose, verse, song, drama and illustration." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to seven." (Library J)

"Some of what Dr. Klink says in her interpretations may well lead to creative disagreement and then open discussion; this is one of the book's many values. The plays are suitable for family as well as school production, and the songs are musically valid, with none of the saccharine quality often found in 'pious songs for children.' The simple accompaniments are well within the range of the amateur musician." Madeleine L'Engle

Book World p13 Ag 4 '68 120w

"A Dutch minister has freely and forcefully retold [many] of the Old Testament's most dramatic incidents. Comments by way of clarification or amplification are skillfully interpolated and are without apparent doctrinal bias. . . . Fifteen poems and songs and four brief plays, most of them translated from the Dutch, add interest and provide fresh material for church programs. Black-and-white drawings filled with strength, spirit, and movement, together with the open, inviting format make this the handsomest such collection available." Elva Harmon

Library J 93:2734 J1 '68 100w

KLOTZ, S. D. Guide to modern medical care. 365p $7.95 Scribner

362 Medical care. Medicine 67-24066

In this volume of "practical advice for the layman about all phases of medical care, [Dr. Klotz] discusses such topics as: how to choose and evaluate a doctor; the responsibilities a doctor has toward his patient, and those of the patient toward his doctor; how to find the hospital best suited to particular needs, and how to ascertain its quality; the various types of health insurance; . . . how to choose a dentist, a pharmacist, a psychiatrist; what to do about medical care while travelling, both here and abroad; and many more." (Publisher's note) Appendixes: American specialty boards; Health and medical organizations; National voluntary health organizations; Laboratory and radiologic charges. Annotated bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"[The author] liberally intersperses information with opinions and anecdotes culled from his practice as an internist; in any area of doubt, he favors the traditional idea of the physician's autonomy and minimal third-party intervention. Some of his statistics, for such variables as fees, insurance coverage, and hospital cost, will soon be out of date. For the large public library, if there is a demand not satisfied by government publications." Catherine Brosky

Library J 92:3653 O 15 '67 150w

"[This Guide] tells nothing about the body as such. Its purpose is to outline the functions and malfunctions of the practitioners . . . as well as to advise the layman how to choose and work with the physician and the hospital. Fees, lab charges, insurance, and travel come under the author's knowing scrutiny, right through old age, death, and burial." D. M. Glixon

Sat H 51:64 My 18 '68 70w

KLUGER, RIVKAH SCHARF. Satan in the Old Testament; tr. by Hildegard Nagel. (Studies in Jungian thought) 173p $5.50 Northwestern univ. press

235 Devil. Good and evil 67-15935

"A study of the figure of Satan from the point of view of Jungian psychology. . . . Kluger believes that Satan represents the result of a process of development within the divine personality itself, as God becomes more aware of the dark, destructive side of his own nature. She analyzes the ideas of God and Satan, not as theological concepts, but as psychological phenomena, 'primal images, archetypes of the human psyche.'" (Choice) This is a translation of the author's thesis, Zurich, 1948, published under the title: Die Gestalt des Satans im Alten Testament. Published also as part III of C. G. Jung's Symbolik des Geistes.

"A difficult book for undergraduates because of presuppositions of Jungian psychology, detailed exegesis of Old Testament passages, and compressed style. Useful, however, as a cross-disciplinary study. Should be compared with more recent studies of the problem of evil in the Bible."

Choice 5:360 My '68 210w

"[For] scholars and specialists in both depth psychology and biblical studies. Dr. Kluger's rich background in Semitic languages makes the book an authoritative one for experts, but too technical for the casual or general reader. . . . A fascinating book for those who know either Jung or the Old Testament." T. A. Greene

Library J 92:4506 D 15 '67 170w

KNACHEL, PHILIP A. England and the Fronde; the impact of the English Civil war and revolution on France; pub. for the Folger Shakespeare library. 312p $7 Cornell univ. press

942.06 Great Britain—History—Civil War and Commonwealth, 1642-1660. Fronde. Great Britain—Foreign relations—France. France—Foreign relations—Great Britain 67-11114

There are three "chapters on court opinion, public opinion, and propaganda use of the English Revolution in France, but the major portion of the book is devoted to the diplomatic maneuvering among Mazarin, the Commonwealth, the Royalists in exile, and the Frondeurs." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

KNACHEL, P. A.—Continued

"Knachel's discussion of this matrix of events is well done, and yet it falls apart into a series of monographs more or less related to each other but without a central theme. . . . The scholarly apparatus . . . is impressive. . . . Had [Knachel] also consulted the series Hollande Paysbas he would not have missed the French-Dutch problem that may have been responsible for Mazarin's unwillingness to become involved in war with England during Cromwell's war on the Dutch. In any case, however, this is a good study, a welcome addition to the growing shelf of books written by scholars from the United States dealing with seventeenth-century France." J. B. Wolf

Am Hist R 73:1135 Ap '68 550w

"The author offers several noteworthy conclusions: that the execution of Charles I caused the Frondeurs to stress their own attachment to legitimate monarchy; that Mazarin's policy of friendship with England after 1653 stemmed from his fear of further civil turmoil in France; and that Mazarin's slowness in deciding on such a policy cost France dearly. Supplements rather than supplants the standard works; the extensive research provides the specialist with much useful information. Not a necessity for most undergraduate libraries. . . . Extensive, valuable bibliography."

Choice 4:1166 D '67 160w

KNAPP, LEWIS M., ed. The expedition of Humphry Clinker. See Smollett, T.

KNEBEL, FLETCHER. Vanished. 407p $5.95 Doubleday

68-10591

At the start of a presidential election campaign, "Stephen Greer, a Washington lawyer and close friend of the President, . . . disappears under mysterious circumstances. As Washington and the nation looks on, FBI agents, CIA agents, and enterprising newspaper reporters join in the search. . . . For the most part, the tale is told through the eyes of Gene Culligan, the White House Public Relations man." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 27:401 Ja 15 '68 380w

"The mystery of the disappearance is unraveled with skill. Vanished is one of those books which, once started, is hard to put down. Only with the denouement does one feel cheated, realizing that all the suspense was not integral to the story but was just a mechanical fabrication of the author. . . . There are compensations for the disappointment of the plot. . . . [The] glimpses of Washington in action, particularly the press corps, have authenticity; [the] politicians seem to be very real. . . . When he turns to science and scientists, the author is on less sure ground." Jane Wilson

Bul Atomic Sci 24:28 S '68 420w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:98 Ja 1 '68 80w

"'Vanished' is by all odds the best thing that Knebel has written. . . . The style is clean and literate; the characters solidly conceived and convincingly drawn. . . . There is no violence, no sex to speak of, no pornography, no gods from the machine, no hare-brained adventures—in short, no 007's to jerk us into disbelief. [Knebel operates] strictly within the ground rules of the possible; his expertise in government, military intelligence and political know-how is lively and wide-ranging; and his story . . . is just implausible enough to be convincing." David Dempsey

N Y Times BK R p34 Ja 21 '68 600w

"A long novel of political intrigue that has for much of the way the pace and tension of a thriller. . . . [Mr. Knebel's] settings are designed with taste and understanding. The result, though a little heavy at the end—like so many fictions of its kind—is a satisfactory work of entertainment."

New Yorker 43:134 F 17 '68 140w

Reviewed by Howard Junker

Newsweek 71:100B F 12 '68 260w

Time 91:80 Ja 5 '68 180w

KNEPLER, HENRY. The gilded stage; the years of the great international actresses. 347p pl $7.50 Morrow

920 Bernhardt, Sarah. Duse, Eleonora. Félix, Elisa Rachel. Ristori, Adelaide 68-23912

A professor of English at the Illinois Institute of Technology presents an account of the lives and careers of Rachel Félix, Adelaide Ristori, Sarah Bernhardt and Eleonora Duse, the four women who dominated the stage from the 1840's to the 1920's. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Sister Gregory Duffy

Best Sell 28:294 O 15 '68 900w

"The pity is that [Mr Knepler's] style does not match his theme. It is not only that he omits much that a more scholarly historian of the theatre would have put in; it is just that his writing is not equal to the task of giving life to the figures he has chosen to decorate his particular stage. . . . [However, this] is never less than an interesting book; it could have been much more."

Economist 229:42 D 21 '68 440w

"A skillful, succinct, and stimulating account. It is also an enlightening commentary on the manners, morals, and social-cultural-political amenities of an era that has since become legendary. Dr. Knepler has, in effect, woven a magnificent tapestry of individual artistic evaluation, comparative stage styles and techniques, and sociological discourses through means of dedicated research and literary talent. His psychologically oriented portraits of these diverse but kindred souls of the theater are [enticing]. . . . A highly readable and informative work that makes a notable addition to any library." L. A. Rachow

Library J 93:3796 O 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Brooks Atkinson

N Y Times BK R p6 S 29 '68 550w

KNETSCH, JACK L., jt. auth. Economics of outdoor recreation. See Clawson, M.

KNIGHT, DAVID C. Comets. 85p il $2.65; lib bdg $1.98 Watts, F.

523.6 Comets—Juvenile literature 68-16015

"Against a background of their historical appearances and explanations, the structure, composition, motion and identification of comets are discussed." (Library J) Index. "Grade five and up." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[This is] interesting, informative, and probably would please many youngsters. . . . If only the author had put more color into his writing, this could be an outstanding book. He has brought together a lot of good material, including some fascinating old pictures of myths about comets, and sketches of actual comets. But his style lets him down with its matter-of-fact dryness. . . . Yet this may be only a quibble, for it is generally quite a good book." R. C.

Christian Science Monitor p14 N 14 '68 100w

"Black-and-white diagrams, photographs and reproductions aid in comprehension of the text. The concise presentation, with adequate index and table of contents, makes it suitable for those seeking capsule information, and the book is more inclusive and more suitable for older boys and girls than [H.] Zim's Comets [BRD 1957]." Georgia Charleston

Library J 93:4420 N 15 '68 80w

"The schoolish appearance of this book makes it look as though it were meant for fifth-graders, who indeed can grasp it, but the richness of its text, photographs and diagrams extends its readability and interest upward many years. Much is owed to the paintings of famous comets from the American Museum of Natural History . . . and the excellent astronomical photographs from the big telescopes." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:126 D '68 100w

KNIGHT, DAVID C. Let's find out about insects; pictures by Henry S. Gillette. 59p $2.65 Watts, F.

595.7 Insects—Juvenile literature 67-3267

This book provides elementary information about a variety of insects in text and drawings. "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"The text is concise, the pencil illustrations are clear, and the print is large, making it especially useful for schools." E. T. Dobbins

Library J 92:3207 S 15 '67 40w

"As a science primer, [this] skips about over too much ground and its random facts are not always clarified by the illustrations. Drawings are labeled with terms not explained in the text ('carboniferous,' 'triassic'); insects are inexplicably drawn out of proportion (a mosquito on a girl's hand is the size of a hummingbird); and in the sequence on the metamorphosis of a butterfly, the larva shown belongs to one species, the chrysalis and imago to another." Paul Walker

N Y Times Bk ■ pt 2, p56 N ■ '67 90w

KNIGHT, DAVID M., comp. Classical scientific papers: chemistry; arr. and introduced by David M. Knight. 391p il $11.75 Elsevier pub. co.

540 Chemistry 68-109118

This volume contains "31 facsimile reproductions of famous scientific papers . . . on the development of 19th-century chemistry, specifically on theories of matter. It chronicles . . . the vicissitudes undergone by the atomic theory in the course of its development from [1808 to 1910]. . . . Among the authors of the selections, which include not only journal articles but also lectures, excerpts from books, and one encyclopedia article, are . . . Dalton, Thomson, Wollaston Berzelius, Davy, Liebig, Faraday, Dumas, Graham, Kekulé, Williamson, and Ostwald." (Science)

"The compiler has been able to make one feel an onlooker, if not a participant, in the discussions over the various theories of matter appearing after Dalton's atomic theory had been announced. The plates are well reproduced. While hardly suitable for high school libraries, the book should be well received by college and other libraries."

Choice 5:1164 N '68 160w

Reviewed by Phillip Rochlin

Library J 93:3794 O 15 '68 170w

"Reading these polemical papers will give [the reader] a deeper appreciation and understanding of the nature of scientific progress, which in this book is portrayed not as a spiral ascending steadily upward but as a series of ups and downs. . . . This is not just another anthology of discontinuous selections. The papers are intimately linked. . . . Thus a continuous story with drama and excitement emerges. A few admittedly minor but annoying shortcomings mar this otherwise handsome volume. Although the authors, titles, and complete references for each selection are cited in the table of contents, this information is not repeated at the heads of the individual papers. . . . [More seriously] pertinent material such as footnotes . . . has been inadvertently omitted." G. B. Kauffman

Science 162:110 O 4 '68 340w

"[Dr. Knight has] avoided the temptation to present only the winning arguments. Carefully selecting from the writings of only the best chemists of the century, he leaves us in no doubt that a chemistry not based on the atomic theory was at all times a strong possibility. . . . The only evident bias of the selection is towards writings available at the time in English. . . . The volume is a companion to the collection of papers edited by Stephen Wright [Classical Scientific Papers: Physics, BRD 1965]. . . . This collection . . . makes few demands on the reader's knowledge of chemistry and will be useful to students of many sorts of intellectual history. The papers have been printed very attractively. . . . The book is deficient in only one respect: . . . it is completely bereft of an index."

TLS p686 Je 27 '68 480w

KNIGHT, G. WILSON. Shakespeare and religion; essays of forty years. 374p il $7.50 Barnes & Noble

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Religion and ethics 67-8735

This volume includes "various radio talks, an . . . interpretation of an Inca play, and numerous other articles and reviews on Shakespeare from 1927 to the present." (Choice) Index.

"Knight's reputation as an interpreter of Shakespeare's symbolic imagery and action is unquestioned. . . . [This volume] makes clear, especially in the fine lengthy introduction, Knight's focus has always been on poetic correspondences rather than theological ones. . . .

A valuable book for all undergraduate Shakespeare collections, both as a readable and stimulating volume for students and as an index to Knight's thought elsewhere."

Choice 4:1380 F '68 150w

"Mr. Knight is enthusiastic, engaged, and certainly informed. But for all of his intense and immediate engagement with the plays as experiences in a theater . . . he is busy discovering and confirming private visions which rather derive from than illuminate the plays." James Sandoe

Library J 92:4504 D 15 '67 90w

TLS p1049 S 19 '68 240w

KNIGHT, GEORGE WILSON. Poets of action; incorporating essays from The burning oracle. 302p $8 Barnes & Noble

821 English poetry—History and criticism [68-81427]

This consists of "some of the essays that first appeared in a book published by Professor Knight in 1939, The Burning Oracle [BRD 1939] . . . along with an abbreviated version of yet another book, Chariot of Wrath (on Milton) and a lecture on Byron." (TLS) Index.

"The college teacher . . . has mixed feelings, remembering Knight's undoubted appeal to the undergraduate imagination, the easy detection of plagiarism from this self-discovered source, 'interpretation' getting out of hand. New 'Prefatory Notes' offer a curious and eclectic annotated bibliography as well as a concise statement of Knight's familiar position: 'Western man is becoming more and more keenly aware of his own more dangerous compulsions. . . . Sexual psychology is related to politics, the link being the sadistic instinct, which may be regarded as an extreme of the itch to power.' Footnotes are few but substantive, and those added in this edition are so marked. The index is satisfactorily complete and cross referenced, and includes material notes."

Choice 5:954 O '68 180w

"[These] commentaries on, and paraphrases of, various works by Spenser, Milton, Swift and Byron are enthusiastic but too often pedestrian. We are a long way here from the revelations of the symbolic interplay of Shakespeare's imagery with which Professor Knight first impressed the world in The Wheel of Fire [BRD 1930] and The Imperial Theme [BRD 1932]."

TLS p1049 S 19 '68 240w

KNIGHT, HAROLD V. With liberty and justice for all; the meaning of the Bill of rights today; introd. by Roger Baldwin. 301p $6 Oceana

323.4 Civil rights 66-26725

The author's "commentaries cover each of the amendments in the Bill of Rights and later amendments affecting civil liberties, as well as recent laws such as the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 ('shared time'). He notes the increasing responsibility of the Federal government for the implementation of civil liberties." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Knight's book is more than adequate, albeit quite pleasantly biased in the A.C.L.U. direction on civil liberties. . . . [It] includes brief but interesting sections on such rather hard-to-find topics as student rights, academic freedom, and the rights of individuals in private corporations. It is good on recent constitutional decisions such as Miranda, Escobedo, and Mapp. . . . [It] would serve as a secondary school honors text. It is written with the layman in mind and might be acquired for introductory reading by non-government majors."

Choice 4:1177 D '67 130w [YA]

"Mr. Knight, long associated with the American Civil Liberties Union, has had considerable experience in the practical application of the Bill of Rights. He writes lucidly, in popular yet precise language . . . [and] has written an important reference book, elucidating problems concerning civil liberties. It is admirably adapted for the layman and deserves a place in all public libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 92:2387 Je 15 '67 130w

KNIGHT, JAMES A. For the love of money: human behavior & money. 184p $4.95 Lippincott

332.4 Money. Psychology 67-15032

This book deals with "the psychological meaning and emotional uses of money, in normal, deviant, and adaptive behavior" [and] notes the important challenges in child-rearing of introducing the child to money. . . . [It discusses how family ties are often] fashioned of money or heavily influenced by it. The motives, meanings and methods of giving are discussed [as well as] . . . the moral implications of man's concepts of money." (Pref) Chapter bibliographies, Index.

"Take note readers, this is not a book on money management. . . . Knight, a minister and psychiatrist, . . . directs the book to 'the professional as a ready reference of psychological wisdom about money' and to the 'layman as a contribution to understanding himself.' His discussion covers such topics as emotional security, status, immortality as related to attitudes toward money; an analysis of the compulsive spender, the miser, the gambler, and the manipulative uses of money. . . . Although Dr. Knight burdens the final chapters on giving, altruism, and morality with moralistic overtones, he makes some salient points about the motives of givers and the development of social concern as an index of mental health. His book is recommended for psychology collections." Annette Hirsch

Library J 93:1908 My 1 '68 210w

"The notion that money is the root of all evil is so pervasive in American folklore that it is startling to rediscover the equally venerable American conviction that wealth, used as a means to an end, is a sign of grace. It is this assumption that underlies Dr. James Knight's lucid and pragmatic analysis of the multifarious meanings of money. . . . By providing a blueprint for a more rational approach to money, Dr. Knight affirms his conviction that money can be divested of its exploitative symbolism and returned to its role as servant—not master—of man." Gloria Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p38 My 26 '68 360w

KNIGHT, JULIE, jt. ed. Caste and race. See De Reuck, A.

KNOLL, ERWIN, jt. auth. Anything but the truth. See McGaffin, W.

KNOWLES, DOROTHY. French drama of the inter-war years, 1918-39. 334p 11 pl $6 Barnes & Noble

842 French drama—History and criticism 68-31976

This book is "a classification of all the playwrights and producers of any significance, and a kind of dictionary of dramatic works. . . . Of her twelve chapters, Dr. Knowles devotes one to theatres and producers, seven to the different varieties of . . . studio theatre, . . . two to 'boulevard theatre' . . . and one to the early attempts to create a 'people's theatre.'" (TLS)

Choice 5:1154 N '68 200w

"Unfortunately, Dorothy Knowles's book is only a kind of factual résumé, or rundown, of many names. . . . Some are merely mentioned; some get a paragraph or two; the more famous get several pages. . . . The book resembles a Who's Who, and it is, in fact, a kind of textbook. It does not look like a textbook, but it very clearly reads like one. . . . We get the basic information, and that is about all. Of course, this kind of book will have a limited but definite value for students and others interested in French drama and literature. But it is not a book for casual reading. The illustrations are not exciting. The index will be useful for those looking for specific names." A. C. Willers

Library J 93:3796 O 15 '68 200w

"[The author] has produced the most exhaustive account of the subject that has so far appeared in English. . . . If the book is treated as a dictionary it supplies interesting and relevant information about all aspects of the inter-war theatre, but it is rather less enlightening if one wishes to understand dramatic theories in depth. . . . Dr. Knowles's groupings are often rather arbitrary, as indeed they must be if so many authors are to be dealt with in so short a space. . . . Dr. Knowles herself often disrupts her classification by her individual remarks. However, she is perhaps more of an enthusiast for the theatre in general than a critic with a clearly defined set of values. . . . It would be interesting to know in greater detail how she justifies her likes and dislikes."

TLS p460 My 2 '68 900w

KNUDSEN, LYNNE, ed. Lullabies from around the world; special arrangements by Carl Bosler; il. by Jacqueline Tomes. (Rutledge bk) 144p $4.95; Titan ed $4.99 Follett

784.6 Lullabies. Folk songs 67-17358

This book contains seventy-six songs with simple piano accompaniment and notations for the guitar. The introductory paragraph with each song includes, in most cases, the country of origin. Indexed under country of origin.

"The wide range and the inclusion of lesser-known songs make this a welcome volume. It includes, 'Greensleeves,' Welsh melodies, and music by Beethoven, Brahms, and Schubert." V. H.

Horn Bk 44:188 Ap '68 100w

"Each of [the songs] is well within the vocal range of an elementary-school child. . . . An important inclusion is an index of the origin of the contents; namely, the United States plus 21 nations in Europe and Asia. Appropriate line and wash drawings appear throughout the volume. Although some of the songs will be familiar to music-loving adults through such handsome volumes as [Engvick's] Lullabies and Night Songs [BRD 1965], the duplication is minimal. The prospective purchaser may prefer the trade edition of this particular title, as the library one does not stay open on the piano." Harriet Quimby

Library J 92:4244 N 15 '67 200w

KOBLER, JOHN. Luce: his Time, Life, and Fortune. 296p $4.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Luce, Henry Robinson. Time, inc. 68-11033

A senior editor of the Saturday Evening Post has written this "biography of the missionary's son who invented a new kind of journalism, [and] created a publishing empire. . . . [He gives an] account of the [Time] magazine complex, its internal feuds, its loyalists and rebels, Luce's thwarted political ambitions, and the activities of . . . Clare Boothe Luce, playwright, congresswoman and U.S. Ambassador to Italy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 118:618 My 4 '68 50w

Reviewed by T. L. Vince
Best Sell 27:480 Mr 15 '68 550w

"Kobler is a professional, a quality one comes increasingly to cherish in a writer, and he is amused and critical and never righteous. . . . On occasion—the famous New Yorker profile of Time and Luce by Wolcott Gibbs is an example—Kobler has a penchant for a well-told tale. But even for the alumnus there is a lot that is new. Unfortunately, the book has some of the faults of the journalism he describes. The Time Inc. files must be vast. Kobler only skimmed the cream. . . . He leaves the problem of Harry Luce at least partly unsolved. He shows what few have realized, that Luce was a very good businessman even though he always pictured himself to himself, his staff and the world as an editor. . . . The author tells also of the legendary Luce curiosity, although he could have pressed its consequences a bit further." J. K. Galbraith

Book World p1 Mr 3 '68 950w
Choice 5:760 S '68 90w

"This is not a good book, although in its uffish way it tries hard. The subject it attempts is of some interest to American and perhaps even to British readers: the sad story of a great success. . . . Mr. Kobler's little book—and it is a little book, though it whistles up some questions I cannot answer—tries to tell the story of a man who turned into a corporation, a harder job than telling the story of a lady who became a fox. Like Time's 'cover stories' it falls between two stools, ending up in an unsatisfactory position. [This] portrait of Luce is as much of a caricature as Edmund Wilson found Time's travesties of the human beings it puppeted." T. S. Matthews

Encounter 31:66 O '68 2000w

"[This] is not a hurried piece of writing rushed into print following Mr. Luce's death last year. True, the final chapter on the last days of the man does appear to be 'tacked on' and most of the statistics are several years old, making it seem as though Mr. Kobler were caught with a half-finished manuscript. Luce the man and Luce the corporate entity emerge again and again throughout Mr. Kobler's treatment. He manages to convey the power that the Time, Inc. empire has over foreign affairs, but he falters in attempting to show too much of the daily routines. Recommended for public and academic library collections and especially for a male audience." Stan Oliner

Library J 93:543 F 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Andrew Kopkind

N Y Rev of Books 11:23 S 12 '68 6050w

Reviewed by Penn Kimball

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 3 '68 1150w

"Mr. Kobler's biography is based on a series of articles written three years ago while Luce was alive; it gains in readability and suffers in coherence accordingly. . . . Although on the back cover of this book the publisher has assembled a number of antagonistic comments on Time by Edmund Wilson, Marshall McLuhan and other pundits, this may be only an exercise in bet hedging. So far from being an essay in derogation, the book itself is a fair and friendly appraisal of a talented newspaper-man and the Frankenstein he created."

TLS p779 J1 25 '68 950w

KOCH, ROBERT A. Joachim Patinir. (Princeton univ. Princeton monograph in art and archaeol) 98p 92pl $12.50 Princeton univ. press

759.9493 Patinir, Joachim de. Art, Flemish 68-10392

In this study of "authentic, ascribed, and related works, [Koch] establishes [Patinir's] own work, that of his workshop, and of other followers. He defines the landscape oeuvre of the 'Master of the Half-Lengths,' often erroneously attributed to Patinir." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is probably the first book-length study of Joachim Patinir. . . . An oeuvre catalog with extensive bibliographical notes and very satisfactory black-and-white illustrations revises the earlier catalog prepared by Max J. Friedländer in volume 9 of his Altniederländische Malerei and presently being reissued in English [Early Netherlandish Painting, v 1, BRD 1968]. Mr. Koch's important scholarly study is for research collections in the history of Western painting or the history of ideas of the Northern Renaissance." J. L. Dewton

Library J 93:2848 Ag '68 170w

"Mr. Koch's catalogue lists only nineteen paintings as certainly Patinir's and another twelve as products of his workshop. The reasons for this selectivity are clearly and persuasively stated in the text, which thus serves the double purpose of collecting all known information about Patinir and identifying his work."

Va Q R 44:[clxxviii] autumn '68 210w

KOENIG, ALLEN E., ed. The farther vision; educational television today; ed. by Allen E. Koenig and Ruane B. Hill. 371p $7.50 Univ. of Wis. press

371.33 Television in education 67-25946

A collection of articles by authorities in the field who "discuss major types of stations, and examine the development and uses of instructional television. They deal with the current problems of ETV, particularly financing and research, and the area of training ETV personnel, and offer suggestions for future applications of ETV." (Choice) Index.

"The contributors are all experts in their areas and the information they present is of great value to anyone interested in ETV or ITV. The summary by Hill is particularly good."

Choice 5:105 Mr '68 130w

"The peculiar mixture of commercial and nonprofit TV, which is the uniquely American way of using the air, has certainly not up to the present proven satisfactory on either a cultural or an educational basis. For an up-to-date, well-documented, thorough study of a potential permanent 'oasis' in what must still, unfortunately, be described as 'a vast wasteland,' get this one. It is suitable for large public and most academic libraries where it will appeal to the informed layman and specialists in the field." E. M. Oboler

Library J 92:4408 D 1 '67 120w

"Should prove useful to anyone seriously involved with either technique or technology of cathode-tube teaching. For consumer and producer alike, contributing authors with impressive academic credentials furnish [these] essays. . . . John M. Kittross's view of 'Meaningful Research in ETV' ought to ensure the early advent of more such interesting reading, should students of visual education dare pick up his gauntlet." John Calam

Sat R 51:80 Mr 16 '68 100w

KOERNER, JAMES D. Reform in education; England and the United States. 332p $8.95 Delacorte press

370 Education—Great Britain. Education —U.S. 67-24818

The author of the Case for Basic Education (BRD 1960) presents an "analysis of the problems in British and American education. . . . [He] begins with an overview of the present situation in European and English education. He describes the . . . political side of the English educational scene and the controversy over the change from 'selective' education . . . to 'comprehensive' secondary education. . . . [He then discusses] problems, such as teacher training, comparing the results of 'normal' schools and university training both in England and the U.S.; state-maintained and independent schools; and public examinations in England. . . . The chapter on English universities stresses recent reforms and controversies. . . . The concluding chapter enumerates three . . . lessons for American educators." (Publisher's note) Some of this material appeared as articles in the Saturday Review. Index.

Economist 227:51 Je 1 '68 900w

"Though his book deals primarily with the schools of Great Britain, Koerner includes a perceptive chapter comparing English and U.S. education, an appendix on Swedish education, and many observations on education in other European nations. . . . [He] is best known to American educators as a harsh critic of American public schools and particularly of American teacher education. A decade ago that was indeed his role . . . but he has moved on. Readers of his new book will note that while he has not lost his critical faculty (or his excellent prose style) he has gained a deeper understanding of the social forces that mold the schools both here and abroad. . . . [This] is a mature and thoughtful book which interprets educational change in the perspective of history. It is probably the best volume available for Americans who want to understand the schools of a nation with which they share many traditions and a common language." Paul Woodring

Sat R 51:69 Ap 20 '68 1200w

"One of the best parts of the book is Sir Edward Boyle's lucid and brief introduction which gives perhaps the best statement so far of his educational philosophy. . . . All in all, Sir Edward takes seriously Mr. Koerner's view that it is time that the sights of English education were raised. . . . [The author] reserves his most fundamental and devastating attack for the original Newsom Report and its progressive (second definition) tone. . . . [His] most important chapter concerns the status and training of teachers. Mr. Koerner is an 'educator', that is to say a person professionally engaged in the teaching of education, so that he speaks with authority and (what is more rare) experience and good judgment. . . . All in all, this book is a most distinguished and important analysis of the educational system in this country and in America."

TLS p469 My 9 '68 3000w

KOESTLER, ARTHUR. The ghost in the machine. 384p il $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

828

68-10630

In the author's view, "the creativity and the pathology of the human mind are, after all, two sides of the same medal coined in the evolutionary mint. The first is responsible for the splendor of our cathedrals, the second for the gargoyles that decorate them to remind us that the world is full of monsters, devils, and succubi. They reflect the streak of insanity which runs through the history of our species, and which indicates that somewhere along the line of its ascent to prominence something has gone wrong.' This book is an attempt to determine the causes of that deficiency. . . . [Koestler's] hypothesis, based on neurological evidence, suggests, in essence, that the explosive growth of the human brain resulted in a faulty coordination between ancient and recent brain structures, creating a pathological split between emotion and reason." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

KOESTLER, ARTHUR—Continued

Reviewed by N. J. Loprete
Best Sell 28:38 Ap 15 '68 500w

Reviewed by Walter Karp
Book World p4 F 25 '68 950w
Choice 5:762 S '68 200w

Reviewed by G. M. Schurr
Christian Century 85:899 Jl 10 '68 500w
Economist 225:295 O 21 '67 350w

"Koestler's endeavour is to rescue us from 'atomorphic' psychology and philosophy while remaining within a strictly biological framework. . . . This new conception is what the first part of the book is about, worked out in detail, with remarkable parallels and analogies. . . . An appendix which gives a complete abstract of his holon-hierarchy argument [is] . . . completely clarifying and the summaries [at the end of chapters, are], particularly for easy back-reference, obliging and helpful. . . . [Unfortunately, Koestler's] identification of 'human beings' with their Species . . . makes the conclusion of [this] book—a minor section which contains his proposed treatment for 'our predicament'—unsatisfying." Kathleen Nott

Encounter 30:76 F '68 4200w

Reviewed by Harold Bloomquist
Library J 93:1153 Mr 15 '68 200w
Natur Hist 77:64 My '68 1400w

Reviewed by Leslie Fiedler
New Statesman 74:548 O 27 '67 2200w
N Y Rev of Books 10:16 Ap 11 '68 5000w

"[Koestler's] thesis has an everything-falling-into-place aura, as it accounts for things that do not fall into place; it may therefore appeal to those who still believe, or wish to believe, that all truths, scientific or otherwise, are simple ones. But as an explanation for 'modern man's predicament' . . . this arbitrary dichotomy of the bad old brain and the good new one is a misrepresentation of the way man's brain and mind work, and a neurological retreat from his psychology and history. . . . There are flashes of brilliance in Koestler's ambitious explorations . . . but the book's erratic combination of unfocused and over-focused argument eventually renders it tedious." R. J. Lifton

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ap 7 '68 1900w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff
Newsweek 71:84B Mr 4 '68 650w

"[This] is a bold examination of the human predicament at the present moment. . . . Koestler spends half the book in clearing the ground by attacking the Behaviorists in psychology and the neo-Darwinians in biology. . . . [He] shows how inadequate their theories are, and in doing so he offers subtler and more persuasive explanations of the development of the species, and the formation of the mind. . . . Whatever else may be true, Koestler is a master of exposition. He uses the jargon of the specialized scientists only when it is essential to do so, and then he explains his terms. He tells fascinating stories to illustrate his points." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:39 F 24 '68 1000w

Reviewed by John Lear
Sat R 51:39 F 24 '68 1900w

Reviewed by David Krech
Science 160:649 My 10 '68 1800w
Time 91:85 Mr 1 '68 700w

"[This book], like its predecessor The Act of Creation [BRD 1964], reveals its author's Rabelaisian appetite for scientific learning derived from half a dozen branches of human inquiry, and results, as he admits, in some difficulty for the reader who wants to see the connexions between the chapters. . . . Mr. Koestler's remedy is heroic. Medical science must devise prophylactic stabilizing drugs by the aid of which 'an artificially stimulated adaptive mutation' might be brought about 'to bridge the rift between the phylogenetically old and new brain,' between 'instinct and intellect'. The genetic implications of this proposal are not explored. . . . Fortunately, The Ghost in the Machine is well worth reading without [this] final section.

. . . Mr. Koestler has a keen nose for challenging points of view which serve his general purpose, but he does not aim . . . to reveal the technical difficulties which a specialist who provides these views may be grappling with."

TLS p1028 N 2 '67 2350w

KOGINOS, MANNY T. The Panay incident; prelude to war. 154p il $4.75 Purdue univ. studies

327.52 U.S.—Foreign relations—Japan. Japan
—Foreign relations—U.S. Panay (Gunboat)
67-64073

In this monograph the author attempts to show that the Japanese attack on the gunboat Panay in 1937 "was a 'vital turning point in Japanese-American relations.'" (Am Hist R)

"The limitations of this study are inherent in the author's sources. His reliance on American diplomatic records prevents him from probing very deeply into the critical question of Japanese motivation and leaves his final conclusion, that 'an elite inner group of Japanese military extremists' arranged the assault on the Panay to force the United States out of China, completely unsupported. He summarizes American editorial opinion at great length . . . but he offers little analysis of the ideas expressed and their possible impact on American policy. He is more successful in analyzing the conflict within the administration between the diplomats." R. A. Divine
Am Hist R 73:1673 Je '68 400w

Reviewed by Shen-Yu Dai
Ann Am Acad 378:150 Jl '68 750w

"There are no surprises for informed readers and the chief value of this study is probably in its survey of press reactions. Only if Japanese army and navy files are extant and explored is it likely that something new can be said about the origins of the attack on the Panay. The obvious typographic errors are too frequent." W. L. Neumann
J Am Hist 55:180 Je '68 360w

"A succinct and well-documented account of the incident and of world reactions to it. There are some good illustrations of the actual sinking." F. C. Jones
Pacific Affairs 41:418 fall '68 260w

KOGOS, FRED. A dictionary of Yiddish slang & idioms. 167p $5 Citadel 492.49 Yiddish language. English language—
Dictionaries—Yiddish 67-18084

The Yiddish words are printed in Roman letters in this dictionary, and English equivalents are provided. A pronunciation guide is included.

"This book is for native American Jews, a majority of whom cannot read the Hebrew characters in which Yiddish is usually written, and for the interested non-Jew. It is a pioneering, surprisingly comprehensive, accurate work by an amateur lexicographer. . . . Although . . . intentionally limited [in] scope, . . . it is well worth adding to any library with a large Jewish clientele or to academic libraries as a help in reading the current large crop of Jewish fiction." E. M. Oboler

Library J 93:1610 Ap 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:48 My 18 '68 70w

KOHL, HERBERT. 36 children; il. by Robert George Jackson, III. 227p $5 New Am. lib.
370.19 Negroes—Education. New York
(City)—Public schools 67-26240

This is an account of the author's experiences with a sixth-grade class in a Harlem school. Included are short novels, drawings, stories, poems and essays by the students. A second short section follows the careers of the children after leaving sixth grade in 1963.

Reviewed by L. J. Lennon
Best Sell 27:417 F 1 '68 450w
Choice 5:842 S '68 180w
Christian Century 85:86 Ja 17 '68 30w

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry
Christian Science Monitor p11 F 8 '68 850w

Reviewed by Peter Schrag
Commentary 45:71 Ja '68 1350w

Reviewed by Nat Hentoff
Commonweal 89:359 D 6 '68 30w

Reviewed by Frances Hawkins and David Hawkins
Harvard Ed R 38:617 summer '68 2550w

"[Mr. Kohl] demonstrates the latent prejudice behind terms such as 'they,' 'culturally deprived,' and 'disadvantaged' with which educators tend to classify school children of the ghetto. . . . [This] is required reading for anyone who is—or should be—concerned with meaningful education." Patricia Schuman
Library J 92:2921 S 1 '67 180w

Library J 93:896 F 15 '68 70w [YA]

"A simple and direct narrative . . . [this] is one of the best books by a teacher I've read. It gives an honest and illuminating description of how a teacher works, and it explores the process of change he has to undergo as he and his children respond to each other and he begins to gather his nerve to alter his way of teaching. . . . [Mr. Kohl's book] provides American teachers, parents, and the public with the kind of thing they desperately lack: concrete examples of what a really good job of teaching might look like. . . . [His] cumulative portrait of the New York City schools is devastating, but the portrait emerges slowly, and it is done with justice and a certain amount of pity, as well as rage. . . . The book is tragic, but it is its triumph to demonstrate the stubborn individuality of these children, who, with their intelligence and their promise are so much bigger than the small, mean fates stalking them." Joseph Featherstone
New Repub 157:23 D 23 '67 1600w

Reviewed by Edward Blisken

New Statesman 76:290 S 6 '68 330w

"This sometimes heartbreaking book is as much by the children as by the author. Starting with simple descriptions of their surroundings, some progressed to the perceptive stories, fables and poems that comprise about half the text. . . . What Mr. Kohl and the reader learns . . . is that 'one good year isn't enough.'" Greta Walker
N Y Times Bk R p46 Ja 14 '68 370w

Reviewed by Nat Hentoff

New Yorker 44:166 Mr 16 '68 1500w

Time 91:34 Ja 19 '68 800w

KOHN, BERNICE. All kinds of seals. 81p il $1.95; lib hdg $2.39 Random house

599 Seals (Animals)—Juvenile literature. Walruses—Juvenile literature 68-14484

"The author begins by describing the evolution of seal species and goes on to give basic general facts about seals and sea lions. Subsequent chapters describe the different types of seals and sea lions, their modes of life, and their enemies. The final chapter describes a close relative, the walrus. An appendix gives the scientific names of seals, sea lions, and walrus. [Index.] Grades three to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by Gillian Charters

Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 1 '68 100w

"The good-sized type and the attractive format with many clear photographs should make this equally useful for third-grade readers and reluctant readers in the fifth and sixth grades." A. D. Schweibish

Library J 93:1800 Ap 15 '68 110w

"The aim here seems to be dissemination of unfocused, generalized information to a mass audience: The photos are plentiful and the seals pictured are appealing—but the text suffers from a lack of involvement on the author's part. Unlike the best nature writers, she merely lists facts—how seals care for young, find food, migrate, escape enemies. Occasionally, she injects an almost chummy anthropomorphism—e.g., 'She [the seal] had just completed a journey of several thousand miles and she was heavy with child.'" N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p50 My 5 '68 100w

KOHN, BERNICE. The bat book; il. by Ann A. Fischer. 63p $3.50 Hawthorn bks.

599 Bats—Juvenile literature 67-3382

The author tells "where to find bats, their strange roosting and family habits, how they get their food, and even how they helped an army to fight a war." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades three to five." (Library J)

"The facts are there—at least most of the obvious ones—and they are, mostly, correct. But [this] is a pedestrian job, lacking grace or charm. . . . I particularly resent the statement (twice) that The American Museum of Natural History checked the illustrations. What good that could have done is beyond me since most are fuzzy sketches and the few technical ones could simply enough be checked in any standard scientific work. . . . What is being implied is that the Museum has somehow approved this work. Of course the question comes up as to why the Museum was not asked to check the text as well and weed out the crop of errors." Peter Farb

Book Week p22 (spring children's issue) My 7 '67 240w

"Sidelights of superstition and legend from Aesop to Batman are used to motivate interest in bats, and, according to the dust jacket, the book will distinguish between scientific fact and 'made-up stories.' Although the text is readable, and the literary references and anecdotes do add interest, the book's second objective fails, ironically because of a number of errors and misleading statements, which were checked for [this] review by an eminent zoologist whose special field of research is bats. . . . A better treatment of the subject is [C. L.] Ripper's Bats [BRD 1954], while Silent Visitor by [T.] Brauner [BRD 1963] is effective for developing interest and appreciation for this widely misunderstood mammal." Della Thomas
Library J 93:292 Ja 15 '68 180w

KOHN, BERNICE. Ferns: plants without flowers; il. by Penelope Naylor. 78p $3.75 Hawthorn bks.

587 Ferns—Juvenile literature 68-13199

"Given here are the history and nature of ferns; descriptions of each fern family; and instructions for raising ferns, indoors and out, for cooking and eating them. [Glossary. Index.] Grades three to six." (Library J)

"Although this book is intended for the very young it should find a place in the high school library by virtue of its clear text and fine illustrations."

Best Sell 28:114 Je 1 '68 60w [YA]

Reviewed by A. D. Schweibish

Library J 93:13307 S 15 '68 50w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:68 N 16 '68 100w

KOHN, BERNICE. Raccoons; pictures by John Hamberger. unsp $4.25 Prentice-Hall

599 Raccoons—Juvenile literature 68-14548

"The habits and behavior of raccoons are simply presented. . . . Grades one to three." (Library J)

"A competent text enhanced by attractive illustrations reproduced in warm colors. The book should prove useful for nature study or for recreational reading." Helen Armstrong
Library J 93:2730 Jl '68 60w

"Those who have never lived near woods nor read Sterling North's 'Rascal' [BRD 1963] may need an introduction to the raccoon. Bernice Kohn describes him for younger readers, from the tip of his ringed tail to the end of his inquisitive nose. . . . Life-like illustrations show how this remarkable little fellow can worm his way into your heart as easily as into your picnic hamper."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p50 My 5 '68 100w

KOHN, HANS. Prelude to nation-states; the French and German experience, 1789-1815. 416p $9.75 Van Nostrand

320.1 Nationalism 67-27980

The author concentrates "on the brief but crucial era when the nation-state emerged on the European continent, and presents an . . . analysis of major trends and key figures . . . [including] Wilhelm von Humboldt, Baron vom Stein, Fichte, Arndt, and Jahn." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This book bridges the gap between Professor Kohn's major work, The Idea of Nationalism [BRD 1944], and his subsequent smaller volumes on the nationalisms of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Based on amazing, exhaustive reading of the literature, the book describes the sentiment of nationalism through Kohn's usual approach: illustrative short sketches of leaders and their views. Social psychologists, anthropologists, political scientists and economists will find basic historical information for their generalizations, but they will not find the behavioral or quantitative analyses so dear to many of them nor, except indirectly, the Weberian models they hope to establish for predictive purposes." B. C. Shafer

KOHN, HANS—Continued

Am Hist R 73:1512 Je '68 460w

Reviewed by R. R. Palmer
Ann Am Acad 337:172 My '68 650w
Choice 5:1348 D '68 90w

"This erudite, yet lucidly written book, will fascinate students because of Hans Kohn's wisdom and his many timely observations. An essential purchase for college and university libraries of all sizes and for larger public libraries." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 93:560 F 1 '68 270w

KOHNER, FREDERICK. Kiki of Montparnasse. 222p $5.95 Stein & Day

B or 92 Prin, Alice

67-25153

"In the years following the first World War there lived in the Montparnasse section of Paris an artist's model and nightclub entertainer known simply as Kiki. . . . [In this] memoir, Frederick Kohner recalls the time, the place, and the girl, having known and loved all three." (Publisher's note)

"[Kohner] has written a deeply felt book of stunning banality. . . . His portrait of Kiki, with her coarseness and her sumptuous body, is an arresting one. But he has taken 222 pages to tell, in pudding-like prose, a story that Maupassant would have told in six, and Toulouse-Lautrec in a dozen pencil strokes." Irving Marder

Book World p4 D 24 '67 650w

"[This] account is more like a sentimental fictional confession than a memoir. . . . Mr. Kohner's treatment of background material is superficial; his story is satisfying but not compelling; as fiction, perhaps it would have more readers. Recommended, with these reservations, for the general reader." F. N. Jones

Library J 92:3990 N 1 '67 180w

KOLAKOWSKI, LESZEK. The alienation of reason; a history of positivist thought; tr. by Norbert Guterman. 230p $4.95 Doubleday

146 Positivism

68-12157

The author traces "the origins of positivistic thought in ancient Greek philosophy to its full flowering as a philosophy of modern empiricism. The positions of major thinkers and general currents of thought are . . . summarized." (Library J) Index. Originally published in 1966 entitled Filozofia Pozytywistyczna (od Hume'a do Kola Wiedenskiego).

"[The] treatment is nontechnical and the text is without footnotes or bibliography. Mr. Kolakowski, a professor of modern philosophy at the University of Warsaw, . . . remains objective in his exposition and criticism of positivistic doctrines. Recommended generally for academic and public libraries." T. M. Bogie

Library J 93:756 F 15 '68 100w

"Kolakowski is undoubtedly the most talented person to grow up as a Marxist within the new system. He began his studies in 1945 under Kotarbinski, and the marks of a rigorous Polish philosophical education are evident in [this book, which] . . . was originally called 'Positivistic Philosophy, from Hume to the Vienna Circle' and its new title is a little grandiose. It is a fairly short, lucid survey, designed for the general reader. . . . The story is presented in a rather neutral way; . . . there are occasional Marxist aperçus, . . . but for the most part this is a thoroughly professional survey." Anthony Quinton

N Y Rev of Books 10:22 Ap 25 '68 800w

KOLKOWICZ, ROMAN. The Soviet military and the Communist party. 429p $9 Princeton univ. press

355.03 Russia—Armed Forces. Communist party (Russia). Russia—Politics and government—1953-

67-14410

"In probing the relations between the military and the Communist party of the Soviet Union (CPSU) . . . [the author devotes] approximately one-third of the book [to] the nature of institutional conflicts including an examination of the structure, instruments, and methods employed by the CPSU to control the military establishment. Another third deals with specific issues of conflict that developed in the period 1953-1963. Finally the rise of the new technology and its present and possible future effects are discussed." (Am Hist R) Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Kolkowicz is not exactly breaking new ground, but his book represents the most thorough, up-to-date, and sophisticated treatment of this fascinating subject. . . . [It] is based on an extensive examination of books, pamphlets, newspapers, and periodicals printed in the Soviet Union, in Eastern Europe, and in the West. . . . [Kolkowicz's] method is more analytical than historical. . . . The organization of material and the methodology employed . . . have the advantage of achieving comprehensiveness and depth of treatment that would otherwise be difficult to achieve; they have, on the other hand, the disadvantage of producing a certain amount of repetition and redundancy. . . . The book, nevertheless, is apt to be a landmark in the growing literature on civil-military relations in the Soviet Union." H. L. Coles

Am Hist R 73:864 F '68 450w

Choice 5:670 J1 '68 230w

"[This fascinating study] could have benefited from sharper editing to reduce repetition and improve the English. . . . The most provocative issues raised in [it] concern the rapidly changing composition of the Soviet officer corps. Today more and more officers are technicians whose rank derives from their expertise in nuclear physics, computers, electronics, and the like. Competition and stress between them and the more traditional officers . . . is inevitable. . . . This volume was written for the RAND Corporation, whose connection with the Air Force is well known. The absence of any major comparison of the Soviet tensions with those between professional military leaders of this country and their current very strong—and very unpopular—Secretary of Defense is therefore understandable. But Mr. Kolkowicz's reticence has left an opportunity for someone else to take his rich material and use it in a comparative study of the Soviet and American situations." Harry Schwartz

Sat R 50:40 J1 22 '67 600w

KOLLEK, TEDDY. Jerusalem; a history of forty centuries, by Teddy Kollek and Moshe Pearlman. 287p il pl col pl maps $12.95 Random house

956.94 Jerusalem—History

68-28550

In "chapters illuminated by 64 color plates and 150 black-and-white photographs, maps and drawings, the authors have . . . [described the city's development from its beginning to] the establishment of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel." (Best Sell) Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by C. J. McNaspy

America 119:658 D 21 '68 50w

"The preparation of the book must have been a labor of love as well as an exercise of scholarship for the authors . . . [who have written] in rather dense but clear prose. . . . Not only a good historic survey but also a gift item that should be much treasured."

Best Sell 28:310 N 1 '68 190w

"[A] sumptuous picture-cum-history book. . . . Mr. Kollek, who is the present mayor of Jerusalem, has become internationally known for his wish to accommodate the two other faiths that hold Jerusalem to be a Holy Place. He and Mr. Pearlman pay both their due in their text and in marvellous photographs but their last chapters will strike some readers as prematurely sanguine about the fulfilment of this praiseworthy aim."

Economist 229:vii N 9 '68 210w

Reviewed by H. M. Orlinsky

Library J 94:71 Ja 1 '69 120w

Reviewed by Caskie Stinnett

N Y Times Bk R p99 D 1 '68 70w

Reviewed by Rochelle Girson

Sat R 51:45 N 30 '68 180w

KOMISAR, B. PAUL, ed. Psychological concepts in education; ed. by B. Paul Komisar [and] C. J. B. Macmillan. 255p $6; pa $3.95 Rand McNally

370.15 Educational psychology

66-19449

The editors, "both in the education department (Temple), have compiled a collection of 16 essays designed to 'examine psychological concepts from a philosophical perspective and clarify these concepts according to the way they are actually used in education." (Choice) Most of the papers in this volume have appeared previously in such publications as Educational Theory and Harvard Educational Review. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The authors fail to live up to their goal of establishing a bridge between the psychology of education and educational philosophy. Only three of the essays are original contributions. Not recommended for the undergraduate." Choice 5:842 S '68 100w

"[This] will attract all whose avocation is to guide young people to maturity. Trenchant essays on achievement, transfer of training, adjustment, character, thinking, learning, perception, knowing, and behaving serve to warn the pedagogical dabbler of the abandon with which such terms can be tossed about. Opening with Edward Best's paper on the suppressed premise in educational psychology, including Jonas F. Soltis's provocative treatment of the language of visual perception, and closing with James E. McClellan on B. F. Skinner's philosophy of human nature, this splendid collection is a tribute to the intellectual efforts of scholars committed to a high degree of precision in matters educational." John Calam

Sat R 51:73 Ap 20 '68 100w

KOMIYA, RYOTARO, ed. Postwar economic growth in Japan: selected papers of the first conference of the Tokyo Economic Research Center; tr. by Robert S. Ozaki. 260p $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

330.952 Japan—Economic conditions. Economic policy. Finance—Japan 66-22706

"This collection of papers, which were first presented in Japan in 1963 at the Conference on Japan's Economic Growth, were written by a number of young Japanese economists. . . . [The] papers with some critical comment are included under five major topics: 'Public Finance and Monetary Policy,' 'The Balance of Payments,' 'Income Distribution and Savings,' 'Business Fluctuations and Stabilization Policy,' and 'Management.'" (Library J) Translated from the Japanese. Bibliography of Japanese sources with their English titles. Index.

Choice 4:559 J1 '67 100w

"The technical nature of many of these papers will limit their audience, but the volume is recommended for larger collections and for those specializing in economics or Asian studies. The translations are excellent and deserve special mention." C. W. Stucki

Library J 92:108 Ja 1 '67 160w

"This volume by 11 non-Marxist economists has two unusual advantages: firstly, it provides Japanese views of their own economy prepared for domestic rather than foreign consumption; secondly, all the papers are followed by comments from other participants in the original seminar, and a considerable element of discussion is thus reproduced. . . . There is much valuable information on many of the factors which have produced Japan's boon: the very high savings among all social strata, the pattern of income distribution, investment, employment policy and the structure of the labour force." Jon Holliday

New Statesman 74:735 N 24 '67 170w

KONINGSBERGER, HANS. Along the roads of the new Russia. 195p $4.95 Farrar, Straus 914.7 Russia—Description and travel 68-23745

"During several months last year, [the author] drove from north to south through European Russia in an old Italian army truck, steering clear of the Intourist guides and observing all sorts of Russians—in the . . . villages and in the . . . cities of Leningrad, Moscow, Kiev, and Odessa. He writes about peoples and scenes. . . . visits to the estates of Tolstoy and Turgeniev, . . . churches and religion, restaurants and hotels, vacationing and shopping, how the young people think about America, about the literary freeze, and about the changing landscape." (Publisher's note)

"Koningsberger is that rarest of travelers, a painter in words. . . . He is sophisticated, unquarrelsome, and gregarious, liking people, measuring what he sees by what he has read and by what he experiences on the spot, and always vigilant to discover how human nature adapts itself to the inexorable changes of this century. . . . His chapter on the idealism and rebelliousness of the young people is illuminating, as is his speculation of what will happen when the Russians get the cars they yearn for. He works in vignettes, and in place of maps and itineraries he uses the human touch. As with other fine travelers, Freya Stark and Alan Morehead, I trust his judgment and enjoy his company." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 222:142 O '68 460w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:577 O '68 230w

"Koningsberger has not been content merely to stay on the surface of Soviet life. On occasion he has tried to go beyond what he can see with his own eyes, to venture some observations that require more than a quick look and that demand some study. And here he has now and then erred. . . . [He] did get inside one Soviet institution—'Intourist,' the Soviet foreign-tourist agency. He saw the failings of that institution clearly, and his chapter on it is a classic that should be read by every would-be traveler to the U.S.S.R. . . . Yet for all its failings [the book] succeeds. . . . The reader will complete his literary journey with almost as much misinformation about the Soviet Union as the average Western tourist usually brings back from an actual trip there—but with a sense of how it really feels to take such a trip." T. P. Whitney

N Y Times Bk R p87 N 17 '68 900w

"Readers familiar with Koningsberger's sensitively observed book [Love and Hate in China, BRD 1966] will be delighted by some of the softly lighted passages in this book, which succeeds in flashes in bringing glimpsed life and people into true relation with their landscape; but they will in general be disappointed by this too brief, thin and insubstantial volume. A faithful and dauntless traveler, Koningsberger drove along a 2,000-mile arc stretching from the Finnish-Russian border to the borderland between Russian and Rumanian Moldavia. . . . Yet little emerges from [his] book to convey the actualities of the nation and people he undertakes to chronicle." S. M.

Newsweek 72:100B S 16 '68 600w

KONORSKI, JERZY. Integrative activity of the brain; an interdisciplinary approach. 531p il $15 Univ. of Chicago press

612 Brain 67-16776

The author "provides a theoretical framework for the interpretation of the data of psychology and neurophysiology. . . . [He] deals with the organization of innate reflexes, conditioning and the psychophysiological mechanisms of perception, learning and memory. He draws empirical support for his theoretical position from widely diverse types of data, e.g. human subjective experience, clinical observations, behavior of lower animals, and neuronal activity." (Choice) Index of Russian names. Index.

Choice 5:1048 O '68 190w

"Konorski's treatment of the kinesthetic system is perhaps the most original and interesting aspect of his theorizing about perception. . . . His English is . . . pleasurable to read. [His introspections] enliven the text. Konorski's theory is open to criticism on many specific counts. The physiology is often oversimplified and usually consists of loose extrapolation rather than demonstrated mechanism. The principles of learning occasionally conflict with recent findings. . . . Yet such criticism is rather picaresque and irrelevant given the broad aim of the book. In spite of the scarcity of data available today, Konorski has formulated an intriguing account of how the brain is likely to work. It cannot help stimulating its readers." C. G. Gross

Science 160:652 My 10 '68 1700w

KORMAN, GERD. Industrialization, immigrants, and Americanizers; the view from Milwaukee, 1866-1921. 225p il $4.50 State hist. soc. of Wis.

331.1 Industrial relations. Labor and laboring classes—Milwaukee. Milwaukee—Social conditions 67-63001

The author provides "detail on the development of factory welfare, safety, and educational programs that eased the adjustment of immigrants to American industry between the mid-1860's and the turn of the 1920's and that anticipated later industrial relations techniques. . . . [He covers] worker recruitment (in Milwaukee), attitudes and practices of individual employers, and the influence of state agencies and organizations such as the Wisconsin Industrial Commission and the Wisconsin Loyalty Legion on local developments." (Am Hist R)

KORMAN, GERD—Continued

"Korman's writing reveals a good understanding of Milwaukee's history but his tendency to be overinclusive prevents him from focusing, as fully as he might, on the extent to which factors peculiar to the Milwaukee environment were responsible for the developments he discusses. Nor is the influence of local and outside forces differentiated as sharply as would be desirable." Bayrd Still
Am Hist R 73:610 D '67 420w

"The research which is here described establishes a pattern for studying and understanding other industrial centers, especially if they have had a large German immigration followed by other nationalities. . . . This is a study primarily from original sources, which are heavily cited. The immigrants, and even Milwaukee, occasionally fade from view; but the author just as regularly gets back to them. . . . The book concerns the industrial response to large-scale use of non-English-speaking labor more than the title might lead one to expect; but it is also less than one might hope for as a study of industrialization, immigration, or Milwaukee urban development." G. B. Engberg
J Am Hist 54:681 D '67 470w

KORNILOVICH, KIRA. Arts of Russia; from the origins to the end of the sixteenth century; tr. from the Russian by James Hogarth. 185p 51 il 57col il $29.95 World pub.

709.47 Art, Russian—History. Architecture, Russian—History 67-24469

This book describes the architecture, mosaic and fresco work, painting, pottery, metalwork and textiles from the sixth century B.C. to the flourishing of Kiev, Vladimir, Novgorod, Pskov and Moscow. A second volume is scheduled for publication.

"[This handsome survey] is illustrated by 57 color plates of remarkable clarity and 51 black-and-white plates, placed in the text sufficiently near enough to comment made about them to be identified. . . . [However] the plates are not identified in the body of the book, not even numbered. Identification is made by a List of Illustrations. . . . The author is an authority in [her] subject and has had the good fortune to find an able translator. For libraries, certainly."

Best Sell 27:468 Mr 1 '68 230w
Choice 5:766 S '68 170w

"This pretentious and expensive book will attract the art lover by its rich illustrations. Yet, they are very uneven: architectural photographs are generally superior to the reproductions of icons and jewelry. Some photographs are excellent, others badly blurred. The idea of doublespread reproductions is unsatisfactory, and the center foldout of the beautiful Rublev Trinity, from the viewpoint of book layout and handling, is indefensible; it will not stand up to library use. Kira Kornilovich, professor at the Repine Art Institute in Leningrad, has written a text with popular appeal. Sometimes melodramatically, she deals with [her subject]. . . . Although an index is badly needed, there is none." J. L. Dewton

Library J 93:1887 My 1 '68 170w

"Mrs. Kornilovich has surrounded the many illustrations with a text which is always interesting, descriptive, and explanatory, a feat which is far from easy. The illustrations . . . are large enough to allow detailed study, careful and convincing in color, and so selected as to give a picture of the field, which increases enormously the reader's interest."

Va Q R 44:cxxvii summer '68 200w

KOSA, JOHN, ed. The home of the learned man; a symposium on the immigrant scholar in America [by] Franz Adler [and others]; foreword by Edward M. Kennedy. 192p $4.50 College & univ. press

917.3 U.S.—Intellectual life. Learning and scholarship 68-22380

In a collection of articles, eleven scholars attempt to "assess the brain drain, its causes, and its effect upon American learning. They discuss such topics as the wandering of scholars, the psychological adjustment of immigrants, the Americanization of the psychoanalyst, the political role of the foreign-born physicist, the problems of mass scholarship, the administrative system of our educational institutions, the teaching of English, and the place of the foreign student on our campuses." (Publisher's note) Index.

"How does America look to the immigrant scholar? What has been the immigrant scholar's role in this country? These are some of the main questions raised and discussed in this many-faceted book. Some of the contributors go back to early American history; others report their personal experiences. . . . The majority of the contributors are sociologists. . . . All have found teaching positions and a modicum of happiness and fulfillment in the United States. . . . The significance of the book consists not only in its analysis of immigrant scholars' activities in this country and on the role of the immigrant intellectual. It also shows how certain American attitudes favor the foreign student who seeks to adapt himself to an affluent society with the result that often enough 'personal adjustment takes precedence over intellectual excellence.'" Paul Wohl
Christian Science Monitor p9 O 16 '68 1150w

"[The authors] ten Europeans and one Asian . . . spell out the end of tribal wisdom and national scholarship. . . . For collections about scholars (professors) in higher education." J. W. Stein

Library J 93:3781 O 15 '68 100w

KOSINSKI, JERZY. Steps. 147p $4.95 Random house

68-28544

The author "continues his study [begun in The Painted Bird, BRD 1965] of evil, of the bestiality that seems to be basic to mankind. In a series of episodes . . . [an anonymous narrator] recounts acts of violence, perversion, and macabre retribution; a soldier caught cheating in a game gets his genitals crushed between stones, a lover 'experiments' with his partner, a punished child feeds ground glass and fishhooks to a playmate." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. J. McAleer
Best Sell 28:316 N 1 '68 380w

Reviewed by Paul West
Book World p18 N 3 '68 750w

Reviewed by Martin Tucker
Commonweal 89:319 N 29 '68 800w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 237:160 N '68 100w

"Steps will not have the wide appeal of the earlier novel, for it lacks the central symbol of human endurance . . . which surmounted the horrors in The Painted Bird. But, on the other hand, Steps is a more experimental work, subtle and structurally sophisticated, a surrealistic study of absurdity rather than of morality. Recommended for modern literature collections." Arthur Curley

Library J 93:3156 S 15 '68 230w

"There is no attempt here to tell a sequential story; the individual stories construct a cosmos. . . . Almost all of them are stories about the narrator, self-contained but thematically cumulative. . . . All are touched with sexuality or violence or both. . . . Kosinski's style [is] simple and precise, not overtly emotional. It is a style made of small, deceptively plain, exploding capsules. Except for the narrator, there are no characters, only figures who perform clarifying functions. The steady coolness of the book and its very brevity . . . add to its power. . . . A few of the episodes show the bonus of contrivance. . . . [A few of them] yield insufficient resonance. . . . But in the main, this small book is a very large achievement. Through all its smoke and fire and pain, a curious pride persists." Stanley Kauffmann
New Repub 159:22 O 26 '68 1850w

Reviewed by Hugh Kenner
N Y Times Bk R p5 O 20 '68 950w

"More than a novel, this is a collection of erotic reminiscences, a log of the outrageous that seems at first to be reality itself. Although Kosinski attempts to open the mind of the reader to a world where the restraints of conscience have been removed and where free sexuality and unbridled violence reign, he does not try to build up a climax of horror. . . . It is the very casualness of his approach which leads the reader to wonder whether Kosinski's 'Steps' are not, indeed, leaps of self-indulgence, or just a haphazard collection of fantasies. . . . Whatever the truth, these terse, ghoulisish episodes will return to the memory at unexpected moments, stirring up uneasy images, disturbing the reader in the very depths of his own fantasies." F. Y. Blumenfeld

Newsweek 72:104 O 21 '68 750w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:29 O 19 '68 550w

KOSLOW, ARNOLD, ed. The changeless order; the physics of space, time and motion; ed. with introductions by Arnold Koslow. 328p $7.50 Braziller
530 Physics 67-24207

"An anthology of writings centered on the theme of the physics of the motion of middle-sized, non-atomic bodies. The first part of the book contains excerpts from the writings of Plato, Descartes, Galileo, Newton, Kant, Mach, Einstein, and others; these deal with space, time and motion, and . . . the law of inertia. In the second part of the book Faraday, Maxwell, Helmholtz, Leibniz, and Wigner are represented. Excerpts from their writings cover conservation—including heat, electrical charge, motion, energy, and symmetry." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:650 J1 '68 160w

"As in the case of any scientific anthology, one can cite some authors and ideas which have been omitted; in general, however, the selection is logical and presents an excellent picture of the cumulative nature of scientific knowledge. Although all the material is available in other publications, this collection will be useful for students of physics and of the history of science. Recommended for academic and public libraries." J. K. Luckner
Library J 92: 4514 D 15 '67 200w

KOSTELANETZ, RICHARD, ed. Beyond left & right; radical thought for our times; ed. and with an introd. by Richard Kostelanetz. 436p $7.95 Morrow 901.9 Technology and civilization. U.S.—Civilization 68-22431

The 36 essays in this volume are grouped in eight sections: Man and his future; Technology and society; Enterprise and remuneration; Architecture and city planning; People and resources; Education; Defense and diplomacy; Redesigning society. Contributors include Kenneth Boulding, R. Buckminster Fuller, Robert Theobald, Marshall McLuhan, and Leslie Fiedler. This anthology "is based in the present, but focused in the future. It concentrates upon the threats and opportunities implicit in new technologies . . . as well as the basic problems and possibilities that decades ago were either nonexistent or unknown. [Most of] the essays included here were published in the sixties [in various periodicals]." (Pref) Bibliography.

"Cabbages and kings and a hundred other things are the subjects of these futurist essays by . . . [men] who like to play games about tomorrow. Some good fun, some good sense, but all the dazzle is ultimately a bit wearying, and the book lacks focus. Parts, sf. Whole, no." Christian Century 85:1245 O 2 '68 70w

"The men who wrote these pieces . . . already have one foot planted in the 21st Century, and . . . seem to be more concerned with it than with the current scene. . . . Guaranteed income, algeny (genetic alchemy), ekistics (the science of human settlements), and the deliberate manipulation of human behavior by means of drugs or genetics are a few of the ideas examined here as accepted coin of the future. Incidentally, this future as they see it, is a fairly happy one. Unwarranted as this optimism may appear to those of us still solidly entrenched in the present, these men are not mere visionaries. Isn't it therefore surprising that what [they] have been saying is strangely absent from the political hassles of the movement?" A. L. Fessler
Library J 93:2841 Ag '68 250w

Reviewed by Richmond Crinkley
Nat R 20:1329 D 31 '68 600w

KOSTELANETZ, RICHARD. The theatre of mixed means; an introduction to happenings, kinetic environments, and other mixed-means performances. 311p il $6.50 Dial press

792.0973 Theater—U.S.

68-10828

The author and eight members of the "avant-garde movement in art discuss their purposes and processes: John Cage, Ann Halprin, Robert Rauschenberg, Allan Kaprow, Claes Oldenburg, Ken Dewey, La Monte Young, Robert Whitman, and USCO (the name of an artists' collective). . . . [The author then offers an] interpretation of the new theatre in terms of its historical, social, and aesthetic meaning." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book covers some of the ground explored in other recent studies—M. Kirby's Happenings [BRD 1965] . . . [and] A. Kaprow's Assemblage, Environments, and Happenings [BRD 1967]—but it brings together enough new and provocative comments on mixed-media principles and practices to be self-justifying. . . . [It] should be on a well stocked theater shelf, along with those mentioned above."

Choice 5:801 S '68 210w

"More and more people are going to be exposed to [this form of art] . . . if not in a pristine state, then in diluted forms in more conventional theater—and . . . Kostelanetz is an invaluable, if somewhat self-conscious, guide to what to expect. . . . The larger part of the book consists of edited conversations in which [the author's] informed questions bring out the intentions and, to a varying extent, the personalities of eight individual innovators plus the communal group known as USCO (Us Company). The comments range from the banal to the outrageous, with much that is stimulating in between. There is a fascinating concern with process rather than products. . . . The conversations convey a sense of movement, of people tuned in to the idea of change." Roderrick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p11 Mr 28 '68 700w

"[The author] defines 'mixed means' as various noises and sights—people shuffling along the street, electronic beams, even the noise of many butterflies being released from a bag—which constitute a special kind of theater when these accompany some sort of dramatic happening, no matter where it may be presented, in a street, field, hall, or theater. . . . The mixed means Mr. Kostelanetz describes are often used, or are happening, at the same time as the plot (if there is one). . . . To an old theatergoer who wants to find some meaning in a dramatic action that has a beginning, middle, and end, mixed means may not seem to be theater at all, but another form of art. This question is among the many Mr. Kostelanetz discusses. . . . For those with open minds about what 'theater' means, this book is instructive and interesting." Marguerite McAneny
Library J 93:1497 Ap 1 '68 300w

KOTT, JAN. Theatre notebook, 1947-1967; tr. from the Polish by Boleslaw Taborski. 268p $5.95 Doubleday

792 Theater. Drama—History and criticism

68-22632

The author of Shakespeare, Our Contemporary (BRD 1964) discusses "Polish drama from Alfred Jarry's 'Ubu Roi' (1896) to Slawomir Mrozek's 'Tango' (1968). Then [he comments on] . . . live spectacles of Soviet theater, Chinese theater and opera, Marcel Marceau's miming in Paris, the Spoleto and Edinburgh Festivals, productions in Tunis, Rome, New York and a dozen other . . . locales." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Kott, one of the foremost of today's theater critics, provocatively presents in this volume essays on theater over the last 20 years. The emphasis is, of course, on the theater of Poland but he also turns his attention to Shakespeare, the contemporary dramatists of the United States, and theater artists in all parts of the world. Mr. Kott is not among the easiest writers to read: some of this difficulty may be the translation. There is much in [this book] worth struggling over. A considerable amount of the material on the theater of Poland is imparted herein for the first time to theater students in this country." Paul Myers
Library J 93:4304 N 15 '68 110w

"Jan Kott is a theatre critic after my own heart. He discerns the play as a whole, the stage presentation as part of the total dramatic context. Still more important he believes that 'a critic should first of all know, and sense, the points at which political and social events, tradition, history, and the present intersect with art . . . [In these notebooks] he clownes a bit, plays the chameleon, flirts with too many divergent notions. . . . For all that . . . he ends by capturing me. . . . Kott is theatrical in both senses: exciting and slightly frivolous. . . . He feels theatre in his every fiber; his senses stir. He is truly cultivated and generously informed. He possesses an alert mind, a cosmopolitan background, a canny spirit. We must follow him carefully to ascertain where he is merely being cute and where genuine. He is always arresting and fun; one of the finest theatre critics to be read in English." Harold Clurman

KOTT, JAN—Continued

Nation 207:634 D 9 '68 900w

Reviewed by Julian Mitchell

New Statesman 76:376 D 20 '68 900w

"[Jan Kott is] the most sprightly and original of theater companions. . . . [He is] a tireless and wakeful observer, with his own catholic theory of esthetics, who seems never to have missed an opening night, an open book, or a closed opinion that could not be reopened. . . . With a kind of playful high-seriousness, Mr. Kott seems to relate the theater to every aspect of the human condition, so that his book, which at first appears casual and even disorganized, finally assumes a masterful inner logic and form." Stanley Young

N Y Times Bk R p5 O 13 '68 1100w

KOYRÉ, ALEXANDRE. Metaphysics and measurement; essays in scientific revolution. 165p $7 Harvard Univ. press

501 Science—History. Mensuration 68-4841

In this collection of six papers, all previously published in periodicals, the author analyzes "the scientific revolution of the seventeenth century, the contrasting roles of experiment and imagination in the production of the new physics, . . . the beginnings of measurement and precision in scientific thought . . . [and deals] with such central figures as Galileo, Pascal, and Gassendi." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Koyré is concerned with the roles of theory and experiment in the science of Galileo's time; his conclusion is that, contrary to the popular idea, Galileo was more of a theoretician than an experimenter, even on the question of falling bodies. [This] book should be compared to Max Born's Experiment and Theory in Physics. Some of the essays were written in English, some translated; the style in either case is unfortunately pedantic."

Choice 5:1332 D '68 110w

"Koyré's studies of the creators of the scientific revolution during the first half of the seventeenth century is, in my opinion, his most important contribution to the history of science. . . . No one reading him can doubt his immense learning or his passionate respect for human intelligence. . . . [However,] one may feel, sometimes, that Koyré's fine-spun reconstructions verge on the tenuous." A. R. Hall

N Y Rev of Books 11:22 Ag 1 '68 1000w

"No single work has done more to shape the history of science as it is now practiced than Koyré's Études galiléennes. . . . [These essays offer] a résumé, as it were, of the longer work. . . . I shall not attempt to review the essays, much less to criticize them. The very discipline of the history of science as it now exists testifies to their quality. . . . There is no better introduction to the intellectual challenge of the subject." R. S. Westfall

Science 162:553 N 1 '68 500w

KOZOL, JONATHAN. Death at an early age; the destruction of the hearts and minds of Negro children in the Boston public schools. 240p $4.95 Houghton

370.19 Discrimination in education. Boston—Public schools. Negroes—Education 66-19838

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:536 Je '68 120w

Reviewed by Peter Schrag

Commentary 45:71 Ja '68 1350w

Reviewed by S. V. Roberts

Commonweal 87:510 Ja 26 '68 950w

Reviewed by E. M. Eddy

Harvard Ed R 38:366 spring '68 2100w

Reviewed by Florence Shelton

Harvard Ed R 38:370 spring '68 1800w

Reviewed by Nat Hentoff

New Yorker 44:166 Mr 16 '68 700w

Reviewed by A. D. Black

Record 69:804 My '68 1100w

KRAMER, CHARLES. The negligent doctor; medical malpractice in and out of hospitals and what can be done about it. 255p $5.95 Crown

340 Medicine—Practice

68-20468

The author, "an attorney specializing in medical negligence cases, hopes in this book to 'alert the victims of medical negligence that they may seek redress in the courts,' and to remind the medical profession of its noble calling. In early chapters he deals with the nature of medical malpractice and the laws governing it. Further chapters cite cases of malpractice by hospitals and by physicians in the areas of anesthesia, orthopedics, diagnosis, obstetrics, gynecology, urology, and surgery." (Library J) Glossary.

"Kramer's cases are well detailed. Important segments of direct and cross-examination are quoted and tied together with succinct summaries of what must have been tedious proceedings. Furthermore, he makes us privy to his thoughts as the testimony develops and illustrates his techniques of legal examination. If he takes a bit of pleasure in his virtuosity, the reader shares this pleasure. This book should not be identified with the current crop of shrill diatribes against the medical profession. Mr. Kramer's goals are reached through example, not through polemics, and his book is better for it. Recommended for general and medico-legal libraries." Harold Bloomquist

Library J 93:2518 Je 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Matt Clark

New Repub 159:21 Ag 3 '68 550w

KRAMER, JERRY. Instant replay; the Green Bay diary of Jerry Kramer; ed. by Dick Schaap; phot. by John and Vernon J. Biever. 286p $5.95 World pub.

796.33 Green Bay, Wisconsin. Football club (National League). Football 68-31469

From tape recordings he made during the 1967 season, the author, a professional football player, presents his daily thoughts and observations "to show exactly what it's like for me—an offensive lineman, a right guard, definitely not one of the glamour positions—to struggle through a professional football season. . . . I want to show what it's like to push yourself almost beyond endurance for a coach [Vince Lombardi] who considers pain only something that you must shrug off." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Joe Flaherty

Book World p6 Ja 12 '69 250w

"This book will be popular in both young adult and adult collections, and is recommended to public libraries." George Whitbeck

Library J 93:3795 O 15 '68 100w [YA]

"It has long been my contention that professional football, for better or worse, is an infectious disease. . . . Kramer's diary supports the contention. His insights and his doubts are found in several places. They are refreshing because most books written by athletes or 'as told to' their Boswells, have no depth at all. They merely record triumphs. Only 'Paper Lion' [BRD 1966 and 1967] of last year has come close to the Kramer book, and its author, George Plimpton, was not an athlete, albeit a fine reporter. . . . The Packers had an extraordinary season in 1967. But along the way there were many crises and the constant driving of coach Lombardi. He is found all through this book as he was all through Kramer's daily life. . . . [This] book is something special." W. N. Wallace

N Y Times Bk R p48 S 15 '68 550w

"[This book] deserves more than a first glance, because the Green Bay Packers of 1967 were no ordinary team and, more important, because Jerry Kramer is an extraordinary right guard—thoughtful, literate and highly observant. Kramer gives you the guts of interior line play, but he sees it through an unusually detached eye. . . . Not many pro football players are as interested—or as interesting—as Kramer. . . . In the end, the book is most fascinating in its revelation of the unique love-hate relationship between the Packers and their coach, Vince Lombardi." Pete Axthelm

Newsweek 72:98 S 16 '68 550w

Reviewed by R. L. Tobin

Sat R 51:40 O 12 '68 800w

Time 92:102 N 22 '68 650w

KRAMER, SAMUEL NOAH. Cradle of civilization, by Samuel Noah Kramer and the eds. of Time-Life books. (Great ages of man: a hist. of the world's cultures) 183p il col il maps $3.95 Time; lib bdg $4.95 Silver

913.35 Mesopotamia—Civilization 67-29528

A survey of "the history and culture of the Mesopotamia of the Ubaidians, Sumerians, Babylonians, and Assyrians. . . . In addition to describing the great historical forces and the contributions of early Mesopotamia to the cultural, political, scientific, and religious growth of civilization, [the author includes] pictures of the individual rulers from Hammurabi to Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and Nebuchadnezzar." (Library J)

"The best features of Kramer's book are its clarity, simplicity, and good illustrations. The section dealing with our inheritance from Mesopotamia is a good justification of why that area can be called the 'cradle of civilization.' Best on the shelves of high school libraries as it is a good introduction."

Choice 5:1196 N '68 150w

"This volume contains an excellent survey of one of the great periods of mankind. . . . The many well-chosen illustrations that accompany the text include the magnificent reliefs from the royal palace at Nineveh, the reconstruction of Babylon, the portraits of Sargon and Gudea, the rock of Behistun, and many significant examples of cuneiform writings." F. M. Wassermann

Library J 93:186 Ja 15 '68 160w

Library J 93:1828 Ap 15 '68 40w [YA]

KRANZBERG, MELVIN, ed. Technology in Western civilization; ed. by Melvin Kranzberg and Carroll W. Pursell, Jr. 2v; v 1, The emergence of modern industrial society, earliest times to 1900; v2, Technology in the twentieth century. 802;772p il set $27.50; text ed ea $8.50 Oxford

609 Technology—History. Technology and civilization 67-15129

These books grew out of a study course jointly prepared by the United States Armed Forces Institute and the University Extension University of Wisconsin. Volume one is world-wide in scope; and covers the emergence of modern industrial society from earliest times to 1900. Volume two focuses primarily on American development as the dominant technological influence on the world. Bibliography. Subject index. Name index.

Choice 5:364 My '68 170w

Christian Century 84:1440 N '67 60w

"[This is a very handsome edition], well printed and bound, and profusely illustrated with line drawings, photographs, and good reproductions of original design drawings, and old prints. . . . This comprehensive survey preserves the individual styles, emphases and interpretations of the various scholar-contributors, while molding them into a coherent, unified narrative. The book should be included in social history as well as technology collections." Robin LeSueur

Library J 93:562 F 1 '68 100w

"Volume 1 can be read with interest and profit by anyone concerned with the origins of technical processes. It supplies an enormous amount of information about technological developments. . . . One of the most fascinating chapters is [Lynn] White's discussion of the remarkable advances in the Middle Ages and the rapid and often unexplained spread of the knowledge of certain inventions and techniques throughout the known world. . . . [However] in the condensation required for the vast amount of information packed into these chapters, some oversimplification occurs, and many statements cry out for further explanation. . . . Although specialists will find many statements throughout this volume with which they may not agree, few will fail to profit from reading it from beginning to end." L. B. Wright

Science 157:1295 S 15 '67 750w (Review of v 1)

"The second volume is social science ■ well ■ history. . . . [However] not all of the social scientists writing for this volume appear to have read either the first volume of this set or the historians in this one. . . . [T. M. Smith's] history of aviation and his other chapter on the origins of the computer demonstrate an impressive competence. . . . Some of the survey chapters such as Richard Hewlett's on atomic energy since the war, Bruce Netschert's on developing the energy inheritance, Bernard Finn's on wireless, and Eduard Farber's on materials clearly present significant information about invention, development, and innovation. Yet, despite the imagination of the editors in moving beyond 'how and what things are done,' the bold concepts of some of the contributors, and the informed surveys of others, the second volume of this work is a troubling comment upon the state of the history of technology and the study of technological affairs. The thin narratives, and significant subjects ignored, should be obvious to many readers." T. P. Hughes

Va Q R 44:150 winter '68 1500w

KRARUP, AGNES, comp. The school day begins; a guide to opening exercises, grades kindergarten-12; comp. by Agnes Krarup [and others]. 3d ed 249p $4 Hobbs, Dorman

371.2 School assembly programs 67-23660

This book is a guide to opening exercises of the Pittsburgh public schools. Bibliography.

"[This book] is filled with a kind of sickly sentiment, chauvinism, and overworked piety. . . . Now all America can enjoy Pittsburgh's prosperity: programs for opening exercises, arranged for children of different ages and taken from—well, the words of just about anyone you may know to be great and wise. . . . The poems do not have titles that are likely to sadden or worry a child or make him feel un-American." Robert Coles

New Repub 157:17 N 4 '67 750w

"[This work] seeks constructively to counterpoise the 1963 Supreme Court decision declaring classroom prayers and Bible reading unconstitutional. Correctly premising that school days should get off to a good start, the work collects nearly 300 surrogate devotionals. Variety abounds. Keeping company on two random face pages are Leigh Hunt, John Donne, William Wordsworth, Omar Khayyam, Alfred Lord Tennyson, John F. Kennedy, and Thomas Jefferson. Thoughts for the day, a calendar of special days and weeks, suggested music for opening exercises, and a useful bibliography round out a thorough editorial job." John Calam

Sat R 50:74 D 16 '67 80w

KRASKE, ROBERT. Crystals of life; the story of salt. 144p il $3.50 Doubleday

553 Salt—Juvenile literature 68-22470

The author describes "the way salt has been mined and the value man has placed upon it down through the centuries. [Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"A tightly written, factual and well-researched book on a highly technical topic. . . . [However it excludes] the interesting chemical and physical properties of the mineral. R. Froman's The Science of Salt [BRD 1967] covers the latter field adequately, so the Kraske book will be useful additional material despite its one minor flaw: the brief passage on man's physiological need for salt confuses rather than explains. The book contains many illustrations connected with the mining process which make it of further use to students wishing information on this specific area." C. G. Wood

Library J 93:4420 N 15 '68 110w

"Here is a forthright depiction of [salt's] origin, history and many of its 'fourteen thousand' present day uses, accompanied by instructive photographs."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p56 N 3 '68 70w

KRASLOW, DAVID. The secret search for peace in Vietnam, by David Kraslow and Stuart H. Loory. 247p $5.95; pa $1.95 Random house

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 68-28543

A review of unofficial and semiofficial Vietnam peace negotiations from 1964 to now. The authors have combined available, admitted evidence of peace feelers with statements from anonymous officials of the United States government to show that the United States has been poorly organized to seek peace and that it missed several opportunities. Index.

KRASLOW, DAVID—Continued

"[The book] leaves unanswered many questions that naturally arise relevant to the complete picture. What role, for example, did the other side play in sabotaging talks that from time to time seemed imminent? The book nevertheless establishes the fact that more than one effort was made in the period to achieve a peace breakthrough." V. S. Kearney

America 119:560 N 30 '68 110w

Reviewed by Edward Cutler

Library J 93:3543 O 1 '68 300w

"Reporters Kraslow and Loory, indefatigable investigators, traveled through a dozen capitals in their own search for the secret story of peace maneuvers. They conducted hundreds of interviews with diplomats. . . . They accumulated 150,000 words of notes, from which they sifted an exciting story that moves with the speed and drama of a spy thriller. . . . [They] describe in detail every link in the decision-making machinery. . . . This is not a record of a true search for peace, as the title inadequately and not quite accurately promises. It is a story of diplomatic chess-moves but, much more important, a case-history of how decisions are made, not made or unmade in Washington. . . . If war is too serious a business to leave to generals, then the search for peace is also too serious a business to leave exclusively to diplomats or Presidents. Reporters Kraslow and Loory have made a valuable contribution to this kind of positive, participatory democracy." David Schoenbrun

N Y Times Bk p1 J1 7 '68 2250w

"Mr. Kraslow and Mr. Loory use too many adjectives . . . considering that they are sorting out more hearsay and gossip than eyewitness reports or unimpeachable historical source material. But one point, at least, is plain: the secrecy on which both the United States and the Democratic Republic of Vietnam have insisted during all the peace feelers was a mistake, since it inhibited communication and, frequently, any understanding of what was being communicated."

New Yorker 44:119 Ag 24 '68 180w

Reviewed by H. L. Smith

Sat R 51:36 S 7 '68 1000w

KRAUS, HENRY. The living theatre of medieval art; foreword by Harry Bober. 248p 135il $15 Ind. univ. press

709.44 Art, Medieval. Art, French—History. Art and society 67-24004

This study of "medieval art in relation to social history . . . [is illustrated by] 135 photographs of architecture, sculpture, and stained glass. . . . [The author discusses] the eight invisible reliefs at Notre-Dame Cathedral and the puzzling tympanum at Beaulieu-sur-Dordogne . . . the varying depictions of Eve and the Virgin reflecting woman's changing status during the period; the flowering of 'donor art' in church reliefs and stained glass which signalled the emergence of the artisan class and bourgeoisie; reflections of medieval anti-Semitism in sculptures of biblical figures; and the vivid depictions of Church Sacraments which served as propaganda in the clergy's war on heresy." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"An attempt to present an overall view of Medieval French art . . . embracing a wide variety of material usually excluded by the professional art historian. . . . Kraus is a journalist, editor, and author by profession, but it is clear to the reader that his knowledge of the literature of Medieval art, and of the works themselves, is substantial. . . . Well written, [this book] is strongly recommended to the general reader. Good index, useful chronological tables of the major historical and literary events of the Middle Ages, as well as a list of monuments arranged in chronological order (which, unfortunately, contains errors)." Choice 5:188 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by Julia Sabine

Library J 92:4400 D 1 '67 200w

"Those whose only language is English, or who do not have access to a scholarly library will have reason to be grateful to [Kraus:] and most people will find details of information with which they were previously unfamiliar. . . . The text does contain an argument, and the footnotes should provide the evidence for the argument. It is at this point that doubts gather. In very few cases indeed do these footnotes lead back to any sort of original sources. . . . There are numerous occasions on which the given text does not quite prove what the author says it proves."

TLS p722 J1 11 '68 1650w

KRIEGER, LEONARD, ed. The responsibility of power; historical essays in honor of Hajo Holborn; ed. by Leonard Krieger and Fritz Stern. 464p $6.95 Doubleday

320.1 Power (Social sciences). History, Modern. Holborn, Hajo 68-10559

"Holborn's students and friends have written a set of essays covering the modern period from Machiavelli to Marcuse. . . . Analytical essays in the history of political and social theory dominate in the first section, which focuses on 'the formation of sovereign power' in the 16th and 17th centuries. The second section is concerned with political variety and special episodes in the mainly 19th-century 'liberal critique of power.' The third considers 'the dilemma of power in the democratic age.'" (Choice) Index.

"A Festschrift with a good deal more thematic unity than is usual. . . . The quality of the essays is generally very high, though the thematic absorption with the tension between power and responsibility is often strained to encompass discourse of such differing character as that offered on the one hand by Hanna Gray in her analysis of Machiavelli, or Gay in his discussion of Burckhardt, and on the other hand more narrative treatments such as Fritz Stern's discussion of Bethmann-Hollweg (good) and William Scott's consideration of Neville Chamberlain (less good). The dense epilogue-essay by the editors would have made a better introduction. . . . The book will find use in college libraries as a source of collateral reading on a variety of topics, and as a fine sampler of the best of contemporary modern European historical writing."

Choice 5:1193 N '68 250w

"Like any work of this type the essays are of uneven quality. Two of the most interesting are those by Roland H. Bainton, 'The Responsibilities of Power According to Erasmus of Rotterdam,' and '1848' by Theodore S. Hamerow." Judah Adelson

Library J 93:73 Ja 1 '68 100w

KRIEGER, MURRAY. The play and place of criticism. 256p $7.50 Johns Hopkins press

801 Literature—History and criticism. Criticism 66-24405

In this collection of critical essays the author first discusses "the role of the critic in relation to the poet and his readers. . . . [He defines] his critical position. . . . relates it to other schools of criticism and applies its methods to the analysis of works by Shakespeare, Pope, Arnold, Hawthorne, and others." (Publisher's note) The essays were previously published in literary journals and volumes of literary criticism. Index.

"For Krieger, an aesthete, criticism should be an imaginative extension of the poem. In this, he joins G. Wilson Knight and a host of sententious commentators who have made it their business to charge their writing with emotive and lyric force. Krieger's language is not at home with rhapsodic response; too often is it convoluted and obscure. . . . The ideas are usually stimulating in spite of the laborious style. Recommended for graduate study."

Choice 5:778 S '68 200w

"[Krieger] shows a passion for systematizing the whole enterprise of literary study. . . . Although he identifies himself with the 'contextualists', . . . he still blames them for not having pressed aggressively enough toward an all-embracing poetic-aesthetic theory. . . . In short, Krieger is the professional critic through and through. His book creates the impression that there are three distinct literary 'cultures': the creative, the critical, and the scholarly. If poets are to find in what Krieger is doing something that is valuable for what they are doing, they must take the initiative. Clearly they have not been invited to the discussion in this book." Ernest Sandeen

Poetry 112:358 Ag '68 490w

"This collection of essays is another reassessment of the critic's rôle, but beyond that, and more importantly, it traces the development of 'existentialist-personalist' out of contextual criticism. . . . With customary vigor and clarity, [Mr. Krieger] reports on what is central and essential in the contemporary idea of literature."

Va Q R 43:clxiv autumn '67 90w

KRIEGHBAUM, HILLIER. Science and the mass media. 242p $6.95 N.Y. univ. press 070.4 Journalism, Scientific 67-25044

The author, who teaches journalism at New York University, has written this book "for those with a concern or interest in the public understanding of science, technology, and medicine. It is hoped that the audience will include those scientists, engineers, and physicians who are not satisfied to work at research and development without thinking of the consequences of their activities; those practitioners, teachers, and students of journalism who want to know more about this phase of contemporary reporting; and those considering a career in science journalism." (Pref) Index.

"[Krieghbaum] attempts to relate the importance and complexities of science journalism. He is long on information but short on interest (repetition and copy that would not hold the public's attention). . . . [However, he] knows his subject and is especially engaging in a 'case study' chapter. . . . Students interested in bringing the 'two cultures' together should try to read this book."

Choice 4:1230 Ja '68 130w

"The book should have a wide audience among scientists, writers, and that segment of the public interested in how news is presented or—sometimes—not presented. Science writers and reporters who must be able to effectively communicate to the lay public will gain most from this timely and absorbing study." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 92:4503 D 15 '67 110w

KRISLOV, SAMUEL. The Negro in federal employment: the quest for equal opportunity. 157p $5 Univ. of Minn. press 331.6 Negroes—Employment. Civil service—U.S. 67-22017

A professor of political science at the University of Minnesota "surveys the history of Negro employment in the federal civil service, the effects of World Wars I and II on such employment opportunity, federal organizational arrangements for promoting Negro employment, the record of several of the principal federal departments in employing Negroes, and the present situation and problems in Negro employment under civil service. The study is based on interviews conducted in . . . federal departments and [in agencies] supervised by the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author] successfully supplies an analysis and evaluation of today's problems of civil rights and civil service. . . . Providing for equality of opportunity, even within the ranks of federal government employees, involves complex institutional and programmatic problems which demand detailed consideration. Professor Krislov has treated these problems with the sophistication and realism which they deserve. The book should be recommended to students and required of administrators." Richard Claude

Am Pol Sci R 62:637 Je '68 850w

"[A] thoughtful and judicious book. [However,] the third section is too brief, especially in its summary evaluations of the equal employment programs of each major Federal agency. The book is focused on the public sector, whereas other literature on Negro employment deals primarily with the private sector of the economy. . . . For libraries with special interests in the Negro, the labor force, or the civil service."

Choice 4:1445 F '68 200w

"An overly ambitious project, resulting in a sketchy, disjointed volume. . . . The chapters presenting the historical background, drawn almost wholly from secondary sources, suffer from omission. For example, Woodrow Wilson bears the brunt of responsibility for 'Jim Crowism' in federal employment during his presidency, while 'Lily-white' chief executives Harding and Hoover, escape almost unnoticed by Krislov. Despite its shortcomings, the work's firsthand information relating to current practices . . . is valuable as an introductory study." Andrew Buni

J Am Hist 54:722 D '67 190w

"Perhaps of greater importance than [Krislov's] progress report are his discussion of the merit principle and his analysis of the role and requirements of the public service. . . . A thoughtful, scholarly weighing of the evidence bearing on the resolution of a very significant aspect of the race problem in this country. For larger public and university libraries."

William Gibelman

Library J 92:2410 Je 15 '67 160w

Reviewed by L. C. Thurow

Pol Sci Q 83:466 S '68 260w

KROCK, ARTHUR. Memoirs; sixty years on the firing line. 508p $10 Funk

B or 92 U.S.—Politics and government—20th century. Presidents—U.S. 68-26106

